Suddenly she decided that she hated mazes and all that pertained to them. She would hurry back to the hotel and lie down for a few moments before the coaching party. She was absurdly nervous and unstrung. Still she excused her weakness on the ground that there is something disconcerting in the sudden apparition of a person whom you have every reason to believe thousands of miles away. If by any chance you have ever been engaged to the person in question that, of course, adds to the complications.

Lettice quickened her pace. She walked with a rapidity that brought the color to her cheeks and rendered her breathless. She was reflecting that she did not realize she had followed the winding path so far when she again found herself face to face with the young man whom she had met ten minutes before. On this occasion, however, she did not cry "Jack!" or give similar indications of weakness. She drew back and looked him over with an air divided between surprise and contempt.

"If you will allow me to say so," Lettice began, "I should hardly expect you to take advantage of the situation to stop my footsteps in this way."

"And if you will allow me to say so," returned Jack, with more spirit than he had evidenced on the previous occasion, "it is like your customary injustice to accuse me of such a thing. So far from dogging you, I am only interested in getting out of this wretched place."

"Perhaps you will allow me to pass, then," said Lettice, with great dignity.

"Certainly," Jack replied. Again he flattened himself against the evergreen, and again Lettice swept past him.

"Your customary injustice!" What a disagreeable phrase it was, and yet perhaps not undeserved! She had condemned him unheard. Possibly if she had given him a chance to explain the past two years would not have been so difficult and sad. To smile when your heart is heavy, to laugh when sighs are crowding to your lips, to hide a bitter regret under the pretense of gayety, is not an easy programme to carry out. Lettice gave way suddenly to the luxury of self pity, and the blinding tears ran down her cheeks.

Half an hour later a young man, flushed and frowning, came face to face with a young woman who held her handkerchief to her eyes. Both stood still. The only break in the silence was a little muffled sob, and at the sound the young man's face contracted as if he were in pain.

"Lettice!" he exclaimed. "Oh, Lettice! Why are you crying?"

It was a moment before a stifled voice replied, "Because I can't find my way out."

"Is that all?" This time the silence was longer than before. "Is that all?" Jack hesitated. "Tell me, dear."

"No-o." The uncertain syllable was so faint that Jack bent his head to be sure. Then he put his hand gently over the girl's trembling fingers.

"Dearest, you wouldn't give me a chance to set myself right with you. My letters came back unopened. I went to see you, and you had left for Europe the day before. You wouldn't listen"—

Lettice looked up at him. Through her tears something bright and beautiful looked out, like the sunshine sifting through the raindrops.

"I'll listen now," she said.

It was some time before the desirability of leaving the maze occurred to either, and then they could not agree as to the direction in which the exit lay. Lettice, however, was sweetly submissive.

"I've had my own way long enough," she said. "Now I'll follow you wherever you choose to take me." And Jack, who had found her bewitching even in her willfulness, could only doubly adore her in her enchanting new role.

A few minutes later they walked into a circular space, where a bench stood back against the hedge. The two looked at each other.

"We've got to the center," Lettice cried happily. "And now we're farther from getting out than ever." She regarded the bench with approving eyes. "It looks so comfortable," she said.

They were still discovering new charms in their circular paradise when an elderly man with stooping shoulders came into view.

"I beg your pardon," he said, addressing the pair on the bench. "But will you tell me how to get out of this confounded trap?"

The lovers looked at him and then at each other.

"We haven't the least idea," Lettice acknowledged in tones of extreme cheerfulness.

"The fact is," Jack confessed shamelessly, "we're not in any hurry to get out."

"I see, and I beg your pardon," said the elderly man. And he obligingly vanished. Again they were alone with their happiness, and the mystery of the maze kept guard.

Felicitous.

An Iowa man says that shortly after the election of a governor of that state some years ago the governor paid an official visit to the state prison, in the course of which he was ushered into the chapel where the convicts were assembled in a body.

Before the governor could realize what was going on the chaplain had presented him to the company, with the remark that he would doubtless have something to say.

"But my dear sir," whispered the startled governor, "I haven't anything to say, and I couldn't say it if I had! You know what a wretched speaker I am!"

The chaplain could only reply, "I beg your pardon, sir, for being so premature, but as I have committed you so decidedly I see no way out of it and feel confident that you will not mind addressing a few remarks to the men."

Whereupon, with a sigh of apprehension, the governor delivered himself as follows:

"Ladies and gentlemen— No, no, I don't mean that! Gentlemen and fellow citizens— No, I don't exactly mean that either, but—but—well, men and fellow prisoners, I can't make a speech. I—I don't know how to make a speech—and so—so—well, about all I can say is that—that I'm very glad to see so many of you here!"—Harper's Weekly.

Cold Storage.

How long it is possible to keep meats in a frozen state is unknown, but in chemical and microscopic examinations of beef and poultry W. D. Richardson has detected no alteration after a year and a half. As muscular tissue cools to just above 30 degrees F., the water separates as ice, contracting the fibers and forming an armor that it is impossible for bacteria to penetrate. The solution remaining in the fiber becomes very concentrated, so that bacteria already present cannot multiply or remain active, and it is almost certain, though not absolutely proved for all cases, that all germs artificially introduced into frozen meats must lose their vitality and die. Muscular tissue returns to its normal appearance when thawed slowly, though the meat must look changed if the thawing is rapid

With "Indifference" Unconquered Church Will Perish

By the Rev. Dr. CHARLES F. AKED of New York.

THE QUESTION OF THE DECREASING MEMBERSHIP AND WANING INFLUENCE OF RELIGION—THE CHURCHES—IS NOT A DENOMINATIONAL QUESTION. IT IS NOT A NATIONAL QUESTION. IT IS A QUESTION AS WIDE AS CHRISTIANITY ITSELF.

Conditions in America are, broadly speaking, the same as in England and in England as in the rest of Europe. The danger is not from direct attack on religion. The denial of belief—that is, ATHEISM—HAS SPENT ITS FORCE. What the churches have to fear is a MORE INSIDIOUS DANGER—INDIFFERENCE.

THE MAN IN THE STREET SAYS THE CHURCH IS A BACK NUMBER. HE FEELS THAT HE CAN DO WITHOUT IT.

If you ask him whether he believes in God, in the existence of an infinite power superior to man, the chances are that he will say "Yes." But questions of dogma, distinctions of creed, do not interest him, and he refuses to concern himself about them. HE HAS MADE UP HIS MIND THAT HE CAN GET ALONG WITHOUT RELIGION—that is, religion as it has been expounded to him. But that does not mean necessarily that he is irreligious.

It seems to me that this indifference is MORE PRONOUNCED IN AMERICA than in England, just as orthodoxy is more strictly defined and more unyielding over here. And where there is indifference to the church I can form no other conclusion than that the CHURCH ITSELF IS TO BLAME. Yet the need of religion never has been greater in any age or country than in this country and in the day we live.

CHURCHES EXIST AND PREACHERS ARE MAINTAINED TO REMIND MEN AND NATIONS OF THE ETERNAL LAWS THEY MUST OBEY AND THE ETERNAL LOVE IN WHICH THEY MAY REST.

And in the United States they may yet be needed as the mainstay of social order. Either the churches have got to live up to the task of KEEPING THE SOUL OF THE NATION ALIVE OR THEY WILL PERISH.

Preparation For War Is Guaranty of Peace.

By JAMES S. SHERMAN, Republican Nominee For Vice President.

WE ARE TODAY IN A CONDITION OF PROFOUND PEACE WITH ALL THE WORLD. Would that condition might continue without end, but the most sanguine can hardly have such expectation. It is appropriate and natural that in time of peace we give thought to INDUSTRIAL PROBLEMS. We do give thought MAINLY TO COMMERCIAL PROGRESS, and yet a glance at our annual appropriation bills shows that year after year we are placing our army and our navy on a FIRMER FOUNDATION, for we are CONSTANTLY PREPARING FOR A WAR which we hope will never come.

[Copyright by Harris & Ewing.]

WE BELIEVE THAT OUR SUREST GUARANTY OF PEACE IS FOUND IN PERFECT PREPARATION FOR WAR. WE SHOULD AT ALL TIMES MAINTAIN SUCH AND ARMY AND SUCH A NAVY AS WILL BE THE SURE GUARANTY OF THE PROTECTION OF AMERICAN CITIZENS AND AMERICAN RIGHTS EVERYWHERE AND BE AT THE SAME TIME AN OMEN OF PEACE.

Airship Impracticable For Commercial Use.

By ORVILLE WRIGHT, Successful Inventor.

THE time may come when aerial craft will be used for commercial purposes, but I doubt it. I don't want to go on record too emphatically on this question. Those of us who have made some progress in aerial navigation know that the SCIENCE IS STILL IN ITS INFANCY.

WE HAVE A LOT TO LEARN, AND WE ARE LEARNING MORE AND MORE EVERY DAY, THEREFORE IT WOULD BE FOOLISH TO SET LIMITATIONS AT THIS EARLY STAGE UPON WHAT MAY HAPPEN IN THE FUTURE.

BUT, AS A GENERAL PROPOSITION, I THINK IT SAFE TO SAY THAT THE CARRIAGE OF PASSENGERS AND FREIGHT BY AIR CRAFT WILL NOT BECOME PRACTICABLE FOR A LONG TIME, IF IT EVER DOES. IT WOULD BE ENTIRELY TOO EXPENSIVE TO COMPETE WITH RAIL OR WATER TRANSPORTATION.

You know a bird expends MORE ENERGY IN FLIGHT than a quadruped does in walking. It is the same way with airships.

IT TAKES MORE ENERGY TO PROPEL AN AIRSHIP THAN IT DOES TO PROPEL A TRAIN OR A SHIP—WATER VESSEL. THEREFORE IT WILL BE SO EXPENSIVE TO OPERATE AIRSHIPS FOR SOME TIME TO COME, AND I REALLY THINK FOR ALL TIME, THAT NO TRANSPORTATION COMPANY WOULD FOR AN INSTANT CONSIDER THE ESTABLISHMENT OF A LINE OF AIRSHIPS AS A COMMERCIAL VENTURE.

Then there is another point. We do not know yet HOW BIG WE CAN BUILD AIRSHIPS OR AEROPLANES. We know, however, that they will in time be made much larger than ours and will fly successfully. But here is an interesting feature of the aeroplane:

THE LARGER THE AEROPLANE THE HEAVIER IN PROPORTION MUST BE THE ENGINE WHICH PROPELS IT. THEREFORE, WHEN WE BUILD AN AEROPLANE LARGE ENOUGH TO CARRY FREIGHT, THE ENGINE WILL BE SO HEAVY THAT THE ALLOWANCE FOR LOAD CARRYING WILL BE MUCH SMALLER, AND A GREAT BIG MACHINE CAPABLE OF LONG FLIGHT AT A HIGH RATE OF SPEED WOULD BE ABLE TO CARRY ONLY A VERY SMALL LOAD IN PROPORTION.

To my mind the most valuable features of future flying machines will be their ability to attain A HIGH RATE OF SPEED and their ability TO REACH OTHERWISE INACCESSIBLE PLACES.

Oakland School Roll of Honor.

The following pupils of the Oakland Public Schools were neither late nor absent during the month of October.

U. G. PALMER, Principal.

FIRST GRADE.

Elizabeth Mitchell, Isabel Wilt, Dorothy Pritchard, Leah Maffett, Cora McRobie, Lucy Trickett, Audrey Trickett, Harry Glodfelty, Carl Kale, Harry Newman, James Carney, James Hart, Carleton Hinebaugh, Dent Feather, David Slabaugh, Robert Weimer.

OLIVE DEWITT, Teacher.

SECOND GRADE.

Charles Whetsel, Wyant McRobie, Alvay Johnson, Arthur Wilt, Ralph Robinson, Hugh Maffett; Vincent Hessen, Percy Davis, Inez Workman, Rebecca Workman, Mary Martin, Katy Lauer, Ruth Robinson, Ethel Naylor, Bessie Maloney.

JENNIE L. MILLER, Teacher.

THIRD GRADE.

Cecelia Hart, Helen Hart, Florence Carney, Gertrude Carney, Iona Johnson, Mary Wiseman, Winona Whorton, Louise Harned, Katherine Porter, Ada Glotfelty, Winifred Weimer, Gladys McRobie, Bessie McRobie, Mary West, Martha West, Irene Shartzer, Reva Davis, Helen Helbig, Lillian Helbig, Edgar Helbig, Cletus Griffith, Julius Littman, Prentiss Porter, Edward Kahl.

ZAIDA BROWNING, Teacher.

FOURTH GRADE.

Carlton Trickett, John Collins, Gordon McRobie, Fred Cogley, Mabel White, Lois Fraley, Regina Helbig, Norine Ault, Kathleen Helbig, Ada Murphy.

BEULAH LOUGHRIDGE, Teacher.

FIFTH GRADE.

Leah Sincell, Julia Rowan, Rachel Johnson, Bessie Hendricksen, James Stemple, Donald Maffett, Lamark Ward.

ORLEY V. DUNHAM, Teacher.

SIXTH GRADE.

Bernadette Hart, Francis Shaffer, Joseph Trickett.

SEVENTH GRADE.

Madge Workman, Wade Mason, Frank Bush, Chester Browning.

ELIZABETH B. LEARY, Teacher.

HIGH SCHOOL.

Irma Workman, Mary Jamison, Gildeon Whorton, Clyde Shartzer, Marguerite Hart, Mary Harsh, Paul Workman, Clarence Murphy, Bessie Ault, Earl Smith, Neil Fraley, G. E. Newman.

W. E. BISHOFF, Vice Principal.

Card of Thanks.

To the Editor of The Republican:

The family of A. F. George, deceased, desire to express, through the columns of your paper, their appreciation and thanks to their many friends and neighbors for their kindness, consideration and assistance in this their sad hour of affliction and distress. May the God of the widow and the fatherless be with you all, is our prayer.

MRS. A. F. GEORGE AND FAMILY.
Swanton, Md., Nov. 1, 1908.

Honor Roll of Gauer School.

The following named pupils of the Gauer school have made 95 per cent. in attendance and 100 per cent. in deportment for the month ending Oct 30, 1908:

Fifth Grade—Viola Lathrum, Hazel Mosser, Bessye Gnegy, Nina Lathrum, Oda Gnegy, Vernie Gnegy, Kirk Lathrum, Harry Enlow, and Russell Roth.

Third Grade—Laura Sisler, Mabel Lathrum, Marguerite Roth, Hilda Mosser and McKinley Gnegy.

First Grade—Elmina Sisler and Ernest Gnegy.

LLOYD K. FIKE, Principal.

ORDER NISI.

Jacob S. Miller, Mortgagee, vs. C. J. Yoder and wife.

No. 1565 Equity. In the Circuit Court for Garrett County, Maryland.

Ordered this 21th day of October, in the year nineteen hundred and eight, by the Circuit Court for Garrett county, sitting in equity, that the sale made and reported in the above cause by Jacob S. Miller, Mortgagee, be ratified and confirmed, unless cause to the contrary thereof be shown on or before the 16th day of November, 1908; provided a copy of this order be published in some newspaper published in Garrett county, once a week for three successive weeks before the 14th day of November, 1908.

The report states the amount of sale to be $3300.00

E. Z. TOWER, Clerk.

True Copy—test:
E. Z. TOWER, Clerk.

PUTTING UP PRESCRIPTIONS

Is the most exacting part of our business—a task we do not shirk. Giving you just what your doctor orders, never filling it with something "just as good," we deserve, and by means of this advertisement ask, your patronage. Everything in the drug and chemical line you'll want is here, too

OAKLAND PHARMACY
JOS. E. HARNED, Proprietor,
OAKLAND, MD.

SHIELD'S RUN.

Not seeing any items from this place in your valuable paper, I will pen you a few to keep you busy until you have the news about the election of Mr. Taft. Hurrah for him

Mr. James Aronhalt is busily engaged in the lumber business at present.

School at this place is progressing very nicely under the able management of Miss Edna Welch.

Mr. C. Allison, of Wildell, called Miss Annie Nine last Saturday and Sunday.

Messrs. John and Alfred Aronhalt and Henry Nine attended preaching at Lone Star last Sunday night.

Mr. James Aronhalt made a business trip to Oakland last Friday and Saturday.

People in this vicinity are preparing to go to the election, hoping to see Mr. Taft gain the victory.

Mr. William Aronhalt attended preaching at Bayard last Sunday night.

Miss Isabel Aronhalt called on Miss Annie Nine last Sunday.

Mr. G. W. Simmons, of Eglon spent last Thursday night at the home of Mrs. Sophia Nine.

Wishing THE REPUBLICAN good success.

BLUE EYES.

Order of Publication.

Alice Armstrong vs. John Armstrong.

No. 1532 Equity. In the Circuit Court for Garrett County, Maryland.

The object of this suit is to obtain a decree, a vinculo matrimonii, the plaintiff from the defendant.

The bill states that the plaintiff and defendant were married by the Rev. Harris in Tucker county, West Virginia, at Easter, 1895, and that they resided together in the State of West Virginia, until the month of March, 1908, and that though the conduct of plaintiff toward the said John Armstrong, her husband, has always been kind, affectionate and above reproach, the said John Armstrong, in the month of March, 1908, without just cause or reason, abandoned and deserted her, while they were living in Nicholas county, West Virginia, and has declared his intention to live with her no longer, and that such abandonment has continued uninterruptedly for at least three years and is deliberate and final, and the separation of the parties beyond any reasonable expectation of reconciliation, and that immediately after such abandonment and desertion, the plaintiff removed to Garrett county, Maryland, where she has since made her home and supported herself and three children by manuel labor, and the bill further states that the plaintiff and defendant have had three children born to them from said marriage, the oldest, Mary, A., now past sixteen years of age; Charles, past thirteen years of age, and Sarah J., now past ten years of age, the custody of which youngest child the plaintiff prays may be awarded to her. The bill then prays that the plaintiff may be divorced, a vinculo matrimonii, from the said defendant, John Armstrong, for the custody of said youngest child of the plaintiff, and for general relief, and an order of publication against the defendant, who is alleged to be a non-resident of the State of Marylddd.

It is thereupon, this 22nd day of October 1908, ordered by the Circuit Court for Garrett county, in Equity, that the plaintiff, by causing a copy of this order to be inserted in some newspaper, published in Garrett county, once in each of four successive weeks before the 21st day of November, 1908, give notice to the said absent defendant of the object and substance of this bill, warning him to appear in this Court, in person or by solicitor, on or before the 8th day of December, 1908, to show cause, if any he has, why a decree ought not to be passed as prayed.

E. Z. TOWER, Clerk.

True copy, test:—E. Z. TOWER, Clerk.

Notice to Creditors.

This is to give notice, That the subscriber, of Garrett county hath obtained from the Orphan's Court of Garrett county, in Maryland, letters of Administration on the personal estate of

WILLIAM FRUSH,

late of Garrett county, deceased. All persons having claims against the deceased are hereby warned to exhibit the same, with the vouchers thereof legally authenticated to the subscriber, on or before the 14th day of April, next; they may otherwise by law be excluded from all benefit of said estate. All persons knowing themselves indebted to said estate are requested to make immediate payment.

Given under my hand this 14th day of October, 1908.

JOHN W. FRUSH,
Administrator,
R. F. D., Oakland, Md.

Examiners' Notice.

Notice is hereby given, that the undersigned, appointed by the County Commissioners of Garrett County, to view the lands through which the new county road is to be located. Said new road to begin at a point on the county road leading from Thayersville to Altamont, near the residence of Solomon Hogue, running between the lands of Henry Myers, S. O. Clark, Thomas Garrett, Abel Dewitt, Martin Filsinger and Mrs. E. Fundenberg to intersect the Deer Park road at a point near Mrs. Fundenbergs farm, to extend a distance of about one and one half miles, which is now a private road but used by the public, and examine whether said road shall be located as a county road, will meet on the 16th day of November, 1908 for such purpose, and to determine whether the public convenience requires the said road, and if so, to locate the same and perform their duty in the premises.

ANDREW SHARTZER,
JOHN W. HANEY,
P. J. LOHR,
Examiners.

Notice to Creditors.

This is to give notice, That the subscriber of Garrett County, in Maryland, hath obtained from the Orphans' Court of Garrett county, in Maryland, letter Administration on the personal estate of

J. RUSSELL BROWNING,

late of Garrett County, deceased. All persons having claims against the deceased are hereby warned to exhibit the same with the vouchers thereof legally authenticated to the subscriber on or before the 29th day of April next; they may otherwise by law be excluded from all benefit of said estate. All persons knowing themselves indebted to said estate are requested to make immediate payment.

Given under my hand this 29th day of October, 1908.

M. A. BROWNING,
Administratrix,
Kitzmiller, Md.

Notice to Creditors.

This is to give notice, That the subscribers of Garrett county, hath obtained from the Orphans' Court of Garrett County, in Maryland, Letters of Administration on the personal estate of

JOHN W. BOWERS,

late of Garrett county, deceased. All persons having claims against the deceased are hereby warned to exhibit the same, with vouchers thereof legally authenticated to the subscriber, on or before the 29th day of April next; they may otherwise by law be excluded from all benefit of said estate. All persons knowing themselves indebted to said estate are requested to make immediate payment.

Given under my hand this 26th day of November, 1908.

FLORENCE M. BOWERS,
Administratrix,
Bedson, Md.

THE REPUBLICAN.

VOLUME 32. OAKLAND, MARYLAND, THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 12, 1908. NUMBER 37

JUDGE BOYD QUALIFIES

Takes Oath For Another Year As Chief Justice.

Andrew Hunter Boyd, who has served 15 years as Chief Judge of the Fourth Judicial Circuit of Maryland, qualified as Chief Judge for another year, or until the next general election, before John W. Young, Clerk of the Circuit Court of Allegany, Saturday morning. Judge Boyd also qualified as Chief Judge of the Court of Appeals.

Judge Boyd was appointed Chief Judge in May, 1893, by Governor Brown to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Judge Richard H. Alvey, who had accepted the appointment to the Chief Judgeship of the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia. After the death of Judge McSherry Governor Warfield designated Judge Boyd Chief Judge of the Court of Appeals. Formerly under the constitution there was an election for Judges in the year of the expiration of their term, but in order to prevent the election of Judges from takplace at a Presidential or Congressional election, the constitution was changed so as to provide for the appointment of Judges by the Governor for a year. It was thought that by this change the election of Judges would be removed as far as possible from partisan environment and influence.

The oaths were administered Saturday morning in the courtroom in the presence of nearly every member of the bar and a number of business men from the city and county. Immediately afterward ex-City Attorney Robert W. McMichael presented Judge Boyd with a magnificent bouquet of chrysanthemums. Upon doing so Mr. McMichael said: "The members of the Allegany county bar, in presenting you with this beautiful bouquet of autumn flowers testify to not only their affection for you, but to their loyalty as well. God has sprinkled the earth with flowers which fade and die after a season, but the high affection in which you are held by the members of the bar is a tie as strong as that of our very lives, and will last as long."

Judge Boyd, when he arose to reply to Mr. McMichael, said: "I appreciate this beautiful gift very much. I had not anticipated anything like this I had supposed that I would qualify in a very quiet way, but I want to express my gratitude to the loyal manner in which the members of the bar in the county and the State have stood by me during the last 15 years. I would not be human did I not feel flattered by the courtesy shown me by the bar. While I appreciate the general good will of the people, I most necessarily appreciate that of the loyalty of the bar of the State, as I am constantly thrown in contact with them, and a Judge cannot well succeed without the co-operation of the bar. I have had some disagreeable duties to perform during the last years as Judge, but I have adhered closely to my duty as Ihave seen it. I certainly appreciate your presence here this morning, and the kind expressions that have fallen from your lips."

Judge Boyd's remarks were received with applause, and at their conclusion he was warmly congratulated. It was one of the most impressive scenes ever witnessed in the Courthouse.

Mr. Young forwarded certified copies of Judge Boyd's qualification to Garrett and Washington counties.

THE DEATH RECORD.

HEZEKIAH LOW.

On Nov 4th, 1908, at the Soldiers' Home, Hampton, Va., Hezekiah Low, aged 74 years, 4 months. Mr. Low was a native of West Virginia, in which state the greater part of his life was spent. In 1866 he married Mary E. Smouse, of Oakland, who preceded him to the Spirit world twenty-five years ago. Mr. Low had been a great sufferer for the past five years but in the last three he suffered intensely. He was buried on Saturday from the M. E. church at Terra Alta. The G. A. R. of which he was an active member, had charge of the services. The following children survive him: Mrs. Lee Forman; Charles P., of Morgantown, W. Va.; Herbert W., of Parsons, W. Va.

MRS. WILLIAM C. WILDESEN.

With much pain we announce the death of our dear friend and neighbor, Mrs. William C. Wildesen, of Oak Grove. The deceased was wife of Mr. Wm. C. Wildesen, who survives her. Mrs. Wildesen died Oct. 24, aged sixty-seven. During her illness she was tenderly cared for by her husband, children and many friends and relatives. Mrs. Wildesen was a loving, patient, faithful mother; a loyal and earnest supporter of the church, being a Presbyterian, and a much beloved friend and neighbor. She is survived by her husband, one brother, Isaac Thompson, two sons and six daughters. We all feel that a dear one has gone from among us. To you, dear mourners and bereaved ones, we extend our deepest sympathy in this, your deepest and greatest sorrow.

A.

HUTTON.

J. L. Snyder, of Wellsboro, Pa., spent a day or so at the tannery last week.

Lee Schrader, of Canton, Pa., is the guest of his cousin, Miss Marie Grusendorf.

U. G. Palmer after a residence of 15 years here, has moved his family to Oakland and will occupy Mrs. Burke's house on Liberty street.

Martin Carney, of Carney nnd Pendergast, will occupy the house for the winter vacated by U. G. Palmer.

Miss Blanch Miller and Miss Marion Leary, teachers here, spent Saturday and Sunday at Mt. Lake Park and Oakland, respectively.

DEMOCRATS GAIN IN NATIONAL HOUSE

Results Assured Domination Of Next Congress By Speaker Cannon.

SOUTH HARD HIT BY REPUBLICANS

Three G. O. P. Representatives Chosen in North Carolina—Losses in Middle West to the Republicans.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 9.—The House of Representatives of the Sixty-first Congress will be Republican by a majority of 41, Speaker Cannon will be re-elected to preside over the House, and the minority leadership will, in all probability, rest upon the broad shoulders of Champ Clark of Missouri. From the latest reports available, the Republicans have elected to the House 216 and the Democrats 175.

This is a gain for the Democrats, but not sufficiently great to alter the power of the Republicans to control absolutely the legislation in the House. In the present House the Republicans number 224 and the Democrats 167, in the elections just over the Republicans made gains in seven of the State delegations and the Democrats made gains in six. But the gains made by the Democrats were more decisive in some of the States, and their total gainsin the State delegations were 20, while those of the Republicans were 12.

In other words, there will be just eight more Democrats in the coming House, than there are in the present House, and just eight fewer Republicans in the coming House than in the present House. This reduces the Republican majority, which is now 57, to 41.

The House of Representatives in the Sixtieth and Sixty-first Congresses is and will be made up as follows:

	Sixtieth Congress.		Sixty-first Congress.
States.	R.	D.	R.	D.	Gain R.	Gain D.
Alabama		9		9
Arkansas		8		7
California	8	8		8
Colorado	3			3		3
Connecticut	5		5
Delaware	1		1
Florida		3		3
Georgia		11		11
Idaho	1		1
Illinois	22	5	19	6		1
Indiana	9	4	2	11		7
Iowa	10	1	10	1
Kansas	8		8
Kentucky	1	7	3	8		1
Louisiana		7		7
Maine	4		4
Maryland	3	3	3	3
Massachusetts	11	3	11	3
Michigan	12		12
Minnesota	8	1	8	1
Mississippi		8		8
Missouri	4	12	6	10	2
Montana	1		1
Nebraska	5	1	1	5		4
Nevada		1		1
New Hampshire	2		2
New Jersey	6	4	7	3	1
New York	26	11	25	11
North Carolina		10	3	7	3
North Dakota	2		2
Ohio	16	5	12	9		4
Oklahoma	1	4	3	2	2
Oregon	2		2
Pennsylvania	35	7	25	5	2
Rhode Island	1	1	2		1
South Carolina		7		7
South Dakota	2		2
Tennessee	2	8	2	8
Texas		16		16
Utah	1		1
Vermont	2		2
Virginia	1	9	1	9
Washington	3		3
West Virginia	5		5
Wisconsin	9	2	10	1	1
Wyoming	1		1
Total	224	167	216	175	12	20

In the Congressional elections several of these opponents of the Speaker in the Republican ranks failed to be re-elected and it will matter but little in the Sixty-first Congress whether they approved of the course pursued by "Uncle Joe" or whether they did not. This is true of the Republican members of the delegation from Nebraska, who received very rough handling at the polls, four of them failing to win re-election. The Republican members of this delegation were said to be pledged to oppose the re-election of the Speaker, but only one of them, Edmund H. Hinshaw, has pulled through. Representatives Pollard, Boyd, Norris and Kinkaid of Nebraska, well-known figures in the House, will not return to Washington in 1909.

The States in which the Democrats made their gains were: Colorado, 3; Illinois, 1; Indiana, 7; Kentucky, 1; Nebraska, 4; Ohio, 4. Those in which the Republicans gained were: Missouri, 2; New Jersey, 1; North Carolina, 3; Oklahoma, 2; Pennsylvania, 2; Rhode Island, 1; Wisconsin, 1. There were several States, including Maryland, in which the Republicans lost in certain districts and won in others, thereby maintaining the same ratio to the Democrats.

As the returns are brought in from the outlying and closely contested districts the large number of votes polled by the Republicans in the sunny South grows more and more apparent. The Fifth, Eight and Tenth districts in North Carolina have gone Republican, breaking up the solid Democratic delegation from North Carolina and making a gain of three for the Republicans. It seemed incredible that Charles H. Cowles and J. G. Grant, both Republicans, had won out in the Eighth and Tenth districts; but their elections have been confirmed, and the news comes that J. M. Moorehead, Republican, has defeated A. L. Brooks, in the Fifth district. Greensboro is in this district, and was formerly represented in the House by William Walter Kitchin, who has been elected Governor of the State.

Several standpatters in the Republican ranks lost out in the elections including Col. "Pete" Hepburn of Iowa, and Representative Jesse Overstreet of Indiana, who was one of the strongest members of the Cannon regime. Overstreet, it is said, lost out through no fault of his own, but because of the unpopularity of the Marion county ticket, to which his name was attached. The city of Indianapolis is in this county, and the county administration has been harshly accused of corruptness.

James T. McCleary of the Minnesota Second district was defeated at the polls. He was beaten two years ago becaus his pronounced high-traiff views did not suit his constituents. The President appointed him Second Assistant Postmaster General, which office he resigned to enter the campaign for re-election to the House. But he was unable to convince the people that the Republican party was any more inclined to tariff revision than it was two years ago.

SHORT RUN.

Miller Bros. are operating their saw mill at this place now, and the people are busy cutting and hauling logs.

We are having plenty of wind and frost here, but water is very scarce. One of our prophets says if rain doesn't follow this high wind that fair weather will.

Misses Jane and Delca Wilson spent a pleasant day in Blaine last week.

Miss Lois Harvey was in Piedmont Thursday last.

Messrs. Scott and Allen Moon, who are staying at Dan'l Wilson's, spent Sunday at Kitzmiller.

Messrs. Stanley and Guy Miller spent the latter part of last week at Crellin.

Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Moore were visiting at Daniel Wilson's Sunday.

Mr. Richard Tasker recently returned from a trip to Baltimore.

Mr. E. A. Harvey is building a residence in Kitzmiller, where he will move in the near future.

Mr. T. R. McRobie is staying at Mr. J. H. Wilson's at the present time.

Mr. W. Moon was visiting Mrs. S. E. Harvey Sunday.

Bert and Jane Wilson were visiting Abel DeWitt last week.

The majority of the people in this vicinity are very much pleased over the the election, and think that matters could not be bettered, except "Dick," who says in a sorrowful voice, "Poor Debs."

? ? ?

BITTINGER.

On the morning after the election, a farmer's pretty daughter came into the kitchen and smilingly announced that the cows had given a gallon more milk that morning than upon any previous morning during the campaign, whereupon the good farmer tossed up his hat and cried "Hurrah for Taft."

F. M. Bittinger has purchased a new gasoline engine and chopping mill which he has on the ground and will set up at his coal mine and will operate in connection with is coal business and will soon b prepared to do grinding regularly.

Thomas B. Wiley made a business trip to Oakland early this week.

Thomas H. Bittinger, of Grantsville, was here last Monday placing a monument in the village cemetery to the memory of the late Elenore Cunningham.

Mr. and Mrs. Elias Orendorf returned last Tuesday from a few days' visit to Washington and other points.

Charles Engle, of Frostburg, completed the concrete work on Levi Resh's new residence last week and returned home.

Charles Sechler is arranging to move his family from Accident to this village in the near future.

The drouth in this section becomes daily more threatening and springs that were always considered unfailing are very low.

Exchange.

The Ladies' Aid Society of the Presbyterian church will conduct an exchange at the store of H. Creutzberg on Alder street every Saturday afternoon until further notice, beginning at 3 o'clock. Fresh bread, pies, cakes and candies will be on sale, and your patronage is solicited.

REPORT OF S. S. CONVENTION

Held at Loch Lynn Heights Saturday and Sunday, Oct. 31 and Nov. 1.

The annual convention of the Maryland Sunday School Association for Garrett county convened in the U. B. church at Loch Lynn Heights on Saturday morning, October 31st, for a two days' session.

This convention was not so largely attended by visiting delegates as some previous ones have been, but there seemed to be a genuine enthusiasm throughout the sessions, and several features of Sunday school work which are new to workers in our county were discussed and plans were laid for their operation.

County President Harvey N. Cuppett was in the chair and conducted the exercises throughout the sessions. State General Secretary Dr. Chas. Roads, of Baltimore, and Rev. G. E. Metger, of Frostburg, President of the Association for Allegany county, were among those from other communities who rendered valuable aid. Others who took active parts were: Rev. J. B. Workman, of Oakland; C. M. Miller, of Swanton; Rev. C. W. Hudson, Rev. J. O. Bolton and Capt. Jas. A. Hayden, of Mt. Lake Park; Rev. L. B. Hensley and Scott T. Jones, of Oakland; Rev. W. H. Clary, of Deer Park.

Officers were elected for the ensuing year as follows: President, Harvey N. Cuppett, Mt. Lake Park; Sec.-Treas., W. E. Bishoff, Oakland; Vice-Presidents Dr. M. C. Hinebaugh, Oakland; C. J. Otto, New Germany; Enoch Clark, Deer Park; Supt. Teachers' Training, Dr. W. W. Davis, Mt. Lake Park; Supt. Home Department, Rev. C. W. Hudson, Mt. Lake Park; Supt Elementary Grades, Mrs. T. J. Peddicord, Oakland; Supt. Adult Bible Class, Rev. O. Stoneking, Mt. Lake Park; Supt. Temperance Work, Rev. J. B. Workman, Oakland; District President for District No. 1, C. M. Miller, Swanton; No. 2, Orval Welch, Friendsville; No. 3, John L. Augustine, Grantsville; No. 4, W. H. Barnard, Bloomington; No. 5, J. C. Beeghley, Accident; No. 6, Wm. Callis, Hoyes, No. 7, E. C. Cuppett, Mt. Lake Park; No. 8, N. B. Harvey, Deer Park; No. 9, B. F. Michael, Grantsville; No. 10, H. A. Hardesty, Deer Park; No. 11, David Merrill; No. 12, Jonas Bittinger, Bittinger; No. 13, M. A. Browning, Blaine, W. Va.; No. 14, Rev. E. Manges, Oakland.

It was noted in the convention that there is a lack of co-operation on the part of the various Sunday schools of the county and that it is extremely difficult for the county secretary to obtain statistics from these schools. Many report blanks were sent out to superintendents which were never returned. We, therefore, call attention of the above officers, especially the district presidents, to the following resolutions submitted to the convention by the Committee on Resolutions and Plan of Work and so adopted:

Recognizing the need of closer contact between the county organization and the individual schools, we recommend that the various district presidents be and are hereby urged to hold district conventions in their several districts previous to the holding of our next county convention, and thus assist in gathering reports, statistics, etc., as to create interest in convention work.

Also recognizing the need of a more complete organization of Sunday school work in the county, we recommend that wherever practicable the various schools of the county organize and maintain a Teachers' Training Class, the organized Adult Bible Class, the Home Department and the Cradle Roll.

Furthermore, that the presidents of the various districts correspond with each school in their respective districts with this end in view.

Also, that these various movements be presented in the district conventions.

We recommend further, that the schools of the county be encouraged to aid in a financial way so that the county association shall be able to give to the State association twenty-five dollars ($25) for its work, and as much more, at least, be given to the county association work.

J. B. WORKMAN, President.
C. M. MILLER, Secretary.

Now, county officers and district presidents, we can carry out the plan of work adopted by this convention if we all do our respective duties. Will we do it? Superintendents and secretaries of schools, we can have a better organization, leading to more inspiring work in every school in Garrett county, if we all put our shoulder to the wheel and send in our reports, giving condition of work in our schools to the county secretary or to the district presidents, and this can be done with little effort on the part of each one. Shall it be done? Try it, and let every one do his work on time. Let us see how much improvement can be made in one year; how many Home Departments we can have in working order; how many Teachers' Training Classes; how many Adult Bible Classes; how many Cradle Rolls.

WM. E. BISHOFF, Secretary.

The new Baptist church known as Ferndale, on the Hooppole road, about four miles north of Oakland, will be dedicated on Sunday, Nov. 22. Several visiting pastors are expected to be present and take part in the exercises, which will begin at 10 a. m. and continue through the afternoon.

The pastor and people extend a hearty invitation to all to be present.

C. W. HUDSON, Pastor.

Call for Your Letters.

Miss Annie Lewis, Mr. Frank Pillard, Miss Daisy Wise.

Subscribe for The Republican.

DIXON & KELSO

Dixon & Kelso
Will Want
Ten Tons of Poultry for Thanksgiving
Will Give Prices in Next Week's Paper

Yours to Please. DIXON & KELSO.

E. A. WEIMER.

Something Good

I HAVE IN STOCK A NICE ASSORTMENT OF THE CELEBRATED

Elite Petticoats

AT

$1.00 $2.00
$3.00 AND $5.00

COME AND SEE

Yours Truly. E. A. WEIMER.
NEXT DOOR TO THE POSTOFFICE OAKLAND, MD

Paulton's Prisoner.

By W. F. Bryan.

Copyrighted, 1908, by Associated Literary Press.

Absurd as it may seem, Edith Mortimer had run away from happiness.

Realizing that Guy Paulton was determined to marry her, she had looked into the commanding eyes and surveyed the determined chin and had fled in a panic to the mountains after artfully announcing that she was bound for the shore.

This was not because she did not want to marry Paulton. To the contrary, the prospect thrilled her with tender delight, but what she did want was another social season without ties of any sort. She did not want to retire to the ranks of engaged girls and wallflowers after only one year's triumph as the belle of the season.

Guy, on the contrary, seemed determined to be married at once, and as a last resort she had fled to escape his proposal. From babyhood Guy had had a masterful way, and Edith knew that if she stopped to argue she was lost.

Her old chum, Belle Manton, who was going to Beach Haven, forwarded Edith's mail and otherwise helped to maintain the polite but obvious fiction.

Loyally she strove to protect her friend's secret, and, though Paulton alternately begged and threatened, he could gain no hint of Edith's whereabouts. Edith smiled at the desperate letters he wrote, but she carefully saved them in her little rosewood traveling desk, and could Paulton have seen the tender light in her eyes as she reread them in the quiet of the summer nights he would have been content. The trouble was that Paulton could not see, and he was putting in a most uncomfortable summer.

Oddly enough, Edith was really enjoying her runaway vacation. She had stumbled on a quaint village far from the haunts of fashion. In simple gowns and with her hair in braids she rejoiced at the freedom from dress and social routine that had been her portion all winter. In her gingham sunbonnet she might have passed for the daughter of a farmer, and for the moment Guy Paulton took her to be such when he came upon her in the little woodland where Edith spent most of her time. Her back was turned to him as he parted the bushes and trampled down the ferns.

"ALL'S FAIR"—

Edith started at the sound of his voice, but promptly drew the all concealing bonnet down in front and managed to stammer an answer to his question if she had seen any soldiers about.

For the first time she noticed that he was in uniform, and she immediately realized that the rough service dress was most becoming. Paulton was built in heroic mold, and, though he looked well in the conventional dress of a man of fashion, the heavy blue shirt, open to display his fine throat, and tight fitting riding trousers emphasized the good lines of his powerfully muscled figure.

Edith shook her head.

"You are certain that there have been no soldiers about," he asked again, "no chaps in brown uniform?"

"Haven't seen any," denied Edith in nasal tones. "You're the first soldier I've seen since the county fair. Is it a parade?"

"It's a game of war," explained Paulton. "They divided the militia into two armies. The browns must beat the blues to win, and of course we blues are anxious to see that they don't, I am supposed to be scouting."

"Like real soldiers?" she asked innocently.

"Of course," was the impatient reply. "That is the whole idea, to train us like the regulars."

Edith giggled in a very good imitation of Dolly Spence, the village flirt.

"I didn't know that real soldiers stopped to talk to girls when there was a war on," she suggested as she raised her hand to the bonnet the better to adjust its shade.

The movement was fatal to concealment. Paulton noticed that her hand was unusually white for a girl who worked about the farm, and the next instant he recognized the slight filigree band that circled one of the slender fingers. It had been his mother's, and how often he had suggested to Edith to wear it!

"We are like regular soldiers also because we are not above a pleasure little flirtation," declared Paulton smilingly. "I believe that a regular soldier would kiss such a pretty face as yours!"

"How do you know that it is pretty?" demanded Edith from the security of the sunbonnet's shade. It hurt her to think that Guy would flirt with any girl he met, but she was determined to carry the game as far as she dared.

"I'll take the face on trust," announced Paulton calmly. "All's fair in love and war, they say, so your face must be fair, since this is mimic war."

"Maybe it's only make believe fair, since this is make believe war," suggested Edith coquettishly.

"To the contrary, this is very real war," declared Paulton, "and I am obliged to place you under arrest."

"What for?" demanded Edith, not without some alarm. "You cannot draw country folks into your games."

"You are wrong," retorted Paulton. "It is the soldier's duty to take into custody those enemies of his country whose sentiments threaten the success of a campaign."

"But I am not your enemy," protested Edith. "I won't be taken prisoner."

"Perhaps," assented Paulton, "but a stern duty confronts me. I must take you a prisoner and hale you before a court martial unless"—

He paused tantalizingly.

"Unless?" She told herself that if he demanded a kiss as the price of her freedom she would never believe in men again.

"There is but one way out of it," continued Paulton. "Prove your loyalty to your country by marrying one of its protectors. There is a parson just beyond here. I passed a church not very long ago. We will slip over there and get married, and then I shall be certain that you are not an enemy to the country."

"And if I refuse?" asked Edith loftily, in her anger dropping her vocal disguise.

"In that case," answered Paulton, "I am afraid that you will be thrown into the guardhouse until you change your mind."

"I shall report you to the colonel," cried Edith angrily. "He will not tolerate such conduct."

"I am quite certain that the colonel will approve my conduct," said Guy placidly. "Coming up on the train he told me that I ought to marry, and I assured him that, through no fault of mine, bachelorhood was my lot. I am sure that he will be pleased at the promptness with which I have acted upon his suggestion when I bring my bride into camp."

"I won't be your bride!" stormed Edith. "You are rude and ungentlemanly to take unfair advantage of a woman."

"All's fair in love and war," reminded Paulton, "and this is both love and war. I am doing the loving and you have been doing the warring. Do you think it was fair to run away as you did and never give me a hint of your address?"

"You know me?" gasped Edith.

"Most assuredly," declared Paulton. "I was not positive until I saw that you were wearing the little ring I gave you and which you never would wear in town. Then I knew that perhaps there was a chance. Will you marry me, Edith?"

"Not now," protested Edith in sudden panic. "Guy, don't make me marry you right away. You have your scouting to do, and—I never did like the minister of that little church," she added inconsequentially. "Dr. Miron is much nicer."

"May I come back when this cruel war is over—next week?" asked Guy tenderly. "Then I'll ask Dr. Miron to marry us, and we'll have our friends up to see the prisoner of war marry her captor, just as they do in historical novels."

"I think that I'll just have to marry you," assented Edith. "You are such a persistent torment."

"All's fair"— Paulton began his favorite quotation, but the rest was lost in the pasteboard tunnel of the sunbonnet as he claimed a kiss.

The Larynx.

The larynx has been compared to a wind, a reed and a stringed instrument. The comparison of it to a violin gave rise to the not very accurate phrase "vocal chords" as the name of the two cushions which are its most prominent features. But no string so short as those vocal chords could produce a musical bass note. In fact, the comparison of the larynx to any instrument which produces only musical tones is inadequate to begin with. There is no instrument but the larynx which produces both song and speech, and as those comparisons view the larynx merely as a producer of musical sounds we have no further concern with them at present. Besides, the voice can be trained for speech, elocution and oratory without a knowledge of the physiology of the larynx.

We have the power of adjusting the larnyx, of varying the tension of its cords, cushions or ligaments, as they have been variously called. We can do these things without scientific technical knowledge of how they are done, without any knowledge at all of vocal physiology, and it is the work of the trainer of the voice to teach the pupils how to do them.—Chambers' Journal.

The Reward of Beauty.

"What a beautiful little girl!" said the woman.

"Yes," replied the man, "and some day it may be necessary for her father to pay millions in order to get some scrawny little foreigner with bowlegs and watery eyes and a receding chin to marry her."—Chicago Record-Herald.

Govern your passions, otherwise they will govern you.—Horace.

Public Should Not Interfere With Railroad Management.

By THEODORE P. SHONTS.

THE PEOPLE SHOULD BE EDUCATED TO HOLD THEIR DIRECTORS, THE MEN WHOM THEY ELECT TO ENACT THEIR LAWS AND CONDUCT THEIR AFFAIRS, TO THE SAME RESPONSIBILITY THAT STOCKHOLDERS IN A PRIVATE CORPORATION DEMAND OF THE DIRECTORS WHOM THEY ELECT. IT IS NOT SUFFICIENT THAT PUBLIC OFFICIALS BE SIMPLY HONEST. THEY MUST DISPLAY WISDOM AND FORESIGHT THE SAME AS IS REQUIRED IN PRIVATE LIFE.

Honestly conceived laws to compel a service that will meet with the reasonable approval of the patrons of a road and prevent discriminations, stock watering and stock jobbery are right and proper, but to go far beyond that and impose UNREASONABLE BURDENS AND UNFAIR RESTRICTIONS looks to the defeat of the very purpose which it is sought to attain.

WE STILL HAVE HOPE THAT WE ARE GOING TO BE LET ALONE AND ALLOWED TO RUN OUR OWN BUSINESS. DESTROY THAT HOPE AND WE WILL HAVE IN THIS COUNTRY AN ERA OF MISERY THAT WILL SEND TO ETERNAL DAMNATION THOSE WHO ARE RESPONSIBLE FOR IT. THE SMOKELESS CHIMNEY, THE SILENT FORGE AND THE IDLE HAMMER WILL SPELL THE STORY.

GOVERNMENT INTERFERENCE, which has led the railroad heads to fear that the operation of the roads is to be taken out of their hands and turned over to commissions, is THE GREATEST MENACE TO THE COUNTRY'S GROWTH TODAY.

Let Children Be Children.

By Professor MICHAEL VINCENT O'SHEA of Wisconsin University.

OVERESTIMATION IS THE BIGGEST PROBLEM THAT CONFRONTS US IN THE EDUCATION AND BRINGING UP OF OUR CITY CHILDREN. DEGENERACY AND MENTAL DEFICIENCY IN A FEW GENERATIONS WILL BE THE RESULT OF THE PRESENT SYSTEM OF LIFE IF WE DO NOT CALL A HALT TO THE NERVOUS STRAIN AND UNHEALTHY AMUSEMENTS THAT WE NOW SUBSTITUTE FOR CHILD PLAY.

We have the example of the old world to warn us against our present course of OVERSTIMULATING OUR GROWING CHILDREN. There are more mentally deficient and degenerate persons in Italy than in any other country, and that is because the YOUNG LEAD AN ADULT LIFE AND ARE EARLY FORCED INTO MATURITY by the life lived in the noise and publicity of the streets.

GERMANY HAS FORGED AHEAD AS A NATION BECAUSE IT HAS SOLVED THE EDUCATIONAL PROBLEMS BY KEEPING ITS CHILD LIFE SIMPLE, BY CULTIVATING NATURAL AND INDUSTRIAL TENDENCIES AND BY SAFEGUARDING HEALTH.

What we need in America is to DRAW OUR CHILDREN AWAY FROM THE NERVE DESTROYING AMUSEMENTS, PROVIDE THEM WITH AMPLE PLAY FACILITIES remote from the confusion of the streets, and in school emphasize the industrial, manual and artistic rather than the MERELY TECHNICAL.

Intercourse With United States Always Beneficial.

By JOAQUIM NABUCA, Brazilian Ambassador.

MUCH as the future generations will wonder at the progress of our time they will wonder still more that the two great sections of our continent remained so late in history almost UNKNOWN TO EACH OTHER. The United States, with its high civilization, CAN DO NO WRONG TO ANY NATION. Intimate contact with you will, under whatever conditions, BRING ONLY GOOD AND PROGRESS TO THE OTHER PARTY.

THE ONLY CERTAIN EFFECT I CAN SEE OF A PERMANENT AND INTIMATE INTERCOURSE OF LATIN AMERICA WITH YOU IS THAT IT WOULD BE SLOWLY AMERICANIZED—THAT IS, THAT IT WOULD BE IN DIFFERENT MEASURES PENETRATED WITH YOUR OPTIMISM, YOUR SELF RELIANCE AND YOUR ENERGY.

National Degeneracy Our Chief Menace.

By Dr. ALLAN McLANE HAMILTON, Insanity Expert.

NATIONAL degeneracy, I am afraid, is our chief menace. I take New York as a fair example of general standards. OUR BOHEMIANISM IS BRUTAL, VULGAR. It has no fellowship or camaraderie in it. It is a region of cafes and restaurants, where men and women prey upon one another. OUR SOCIETY IS IMITATED WITHOUT ORIGINALITY, with absurd exhibitions of loud taste and ill proportioned artistry.

WE ARE FREE TO THE VERGE OF OPEN REVOLT AGAINST THE LAWS OF MOSES, THAT ARE NEEDED, BUT IGNORED.

We have all the license of foreign decadence, with a UNIQUE DEGENERACY OF OUR OWN that no foreign city would endure because OF ITS CRUELTY, ITS SAVAGERY. We read chiefly false exaggerations of science and outrageous exposes of forbidden crimes. Of course, press censorship is impossible in the present state of political conflict.

I CONSIDER THAT A LARGE PART OF THE SO CALLED EMOTIONAL INSANITY THAT LEADS TO CRIME IN NEW YORK IS DUE TO THESE SENSATIONALLY FALSE AND BLATANT EXPOSURES IN CERTAIN NEWSPAPERS OF DISASTERS THAT WE NEVER HEARD OF BEFORE AND WOULD NEVER HEAR OF AGAIN EXCEPT FOR THEIR IMPRESSION UPON HALF FORMED MINDS AND YOUNG PEOPLE.

Our novels—where can you get one that's WORTH READING? It is either a wildly improbable problem or a silly colonial story. WE ARE AFFLICTED WITH BATHOS, BUT WE HAVE NO TIME FOR PATHOS.

The Ride of Nelson's Jim.

By CLARISSA MACKIE.

Copyrighted, 1908, by Associated Literary Press.

"Here you, Jim! Harness up and take Phoebe over to Sheldon's!" Seth Nelson snarled sardonically at the whitening face of his farm hand. "Git a move on you, now. Phoebe and Owen are going to town this afternoon to buy wedding trumpery. Owen's too busy to come after her, so do you harness up and take her over."

The farm hand slowly clinched his big, brown hands, while the muscles of his strong neck hardened into rigid cords.

"So you're going to let her marry that—that—" he panted between his teeth, when the older man interrupted him angrily.

"Shut up! It's none of your business. You ain't no kin to her! This sister and brother business ends right here! When I took you out of the 'sylum I took you to help with the work and not as a member of the family. Don't you dare to open your mouth to Phoebe till you git to Sheldon's. She's tickled to death to git him," he added cruelly as he walked away.

Without another word Jim—commonly known as "Nelson's Jim"—walked toward the barn. Presently he drove around to the side entrance of the house where Phoebe Nelson awaited him, shy and fluttering, her delicate cheeks alternately flushing and paling as he helped her into the buggy.

"AND—WELCOME!" HE REPLIED, WITH A WRY SMILE

"Goodby, ma," she called in a high treble voice, waving her hand at the dining room window.

Mrs. Nelson's motherly face appeared for an instant, clouded with anxiety.

"Take good care of her, Jim!" she called after them.

Jim turned and nodded grimly at her. And then, lips set in a hard, straight line, as if he would repress the speech that had been forbidden him, he flung out his whip with a stinging lash across the mare's flank.

Phoebe uttered a frightened cry.

"Be careful, Jim! You know Bess won't stand the whip, and I'm afraid!" She turned an appealing glance toward him, but his eyes were fixed straight ahead between the pointed ears of the little black mare.

"What's the matter, Jim? You act so queer! I suppose you're mad about Owen and me, but I couldn't help it—pa just settled everything without asking me, and—and—I hate Owen Sheldon! I don't want to marry a widower!" Her voice broke suddenly, but his stern young face did not relax. Still he made no reply.

"Jim! What's the matter?" she cried again.

No reply.

"Oh, dear!" she was crying softly now under the wide brim of her flower trimmed hat. "I don't want to go—you know why, and ma knows, Jim—she likes you best—you're awful mean to make me tell it!"

Nelson's Jim turned tender brown eyes upon the young girl, and the hard lines about his mouth softened. His lips parted for an instant and then shut with a little click of his teeth. They had not yet reached Sheldon's farm.

There was a long silence then. The little black mare plunged bravely through the sand of the shore road and emerged into the highway at a point opposite the long lane of locust trees which led to Sheldon's. At this point Jim again plied his whip, and they flashed past the entrance to the lane and whirled away down the hill toward town with a shimmering stream of golden sand pouring from the tires and settling in their wake.

"Oh, Jim," cried Phoebe with a frightened gasp. "What are you doing? Pa will kill me, so he will! And Owen—he's got a terrible temper!" She clutched his arm frantically.

Then Jim spoke.

"I got a terrible temper myself," he said savagely. "I been holding it in for twelve years because I was waiting to grow up, so I could meet your father on his own ground. He's twitted me with being a 'sylum boy and having no name. I've found out all about it. I ain't no lost heir, Phoebe, but I've got a name. It's Browning. All my folks are dead long ago. I've saved money, and I can take care of you. I'm going to the Baptist preacher's now. Is it all right, Phoebe, or shall I take you back to Owen?"

Phoebe hid her blushing face on his shoulder. "I'll go with you, Jim," she whispered, "and I guess I ain't afraid of pa and Owen after all."

* * * * * * * *

Three hours later Nelson's Jim drove through the farm gate with his pale little wife clinging to his arm. Seth Nelson was raging around the yard with a shotgun in one hand, while his wife thrust a frightened face from the kitchen door.

With a quick leap Jim reached the ground and grasped the barrel of the weapon as Nelson raised it to his shoulder.

"It ain't loaded, you old fool!" he shouted as he wrested the gun from the farmer and leaned it against the wood shed. "Now, you listen to me, Seth Nelson. If you open your mouth before I tell you to, I'll knock you down!"

The old man's face worked savagely. He glanced toward the carriage and raised his fist against the shrinking girl. He opened his mouth as if to speak.

"Shut up!" commanded his son-in-law authoritatively. "Now, see here, my name's Browning!"

The farmer stared incredulously.

"My name's Browning," repeated Jim emphatically. "This here lady is my wife! Mrs. Browning is her name—Mrs. James Browning. It's a nice name—eh?"

Seth Nelson scowled sullenly at his farm hand.

"If you want to be a father to her and a father-in-law to me, you can act decent about it! We love each other and we got married. I got $900 in the bank, and I can take care of her. We'll board here, and I'll work for you—hands is scarce—but you've got to remember we won't be bullied!"

"You—you—you"— stuttered the farmer wildly, but his son-in-law cut him short with a wave of the hand and climbed into the buggy and turned it around. As they drove toward the gate Nelson strode after them. He cast one look around the barnyard, the unfinished chores, then away across the swelling acres waiting for the mowing machine, and the anger settled into chagrin.

"Say, you, Jim—Browning—you and your wife can board here if you want to," he said reluctantly.

"And—what?" demanded Jim Browning curtly.

Seth Nelson saw the tearful face of his wife in the doorway, and his grim face softened.

"And—welcome!" he replied, with a wry smile.

Grateful Rejected One.

"I am truly sorry to give you pain, Mr. Hankinson," said the young lady, "but please do not allude to this subject again. I can never be your wife."

"That is your final answer, Miss Irene?"

"It is."

"Nothing can induce you to change your decision?"

"My mind is finally and unalterably made up."

"Miss Irene," said the young man, rising and looking about for his hat, "before coming here this evening I made a bet of £5 with Van Perkins that you would say 'No!' to my proposal. I have won. It was taking a risk, but I was dead broke, Miss Irene," he continued, his voice quivering with emotion, "you have saved a despairing man from the fate of a suicide and won the lifelong respect and esteem of a grateful heart. Good evening."—London Answers.

Brilliant Alpine Flora.

Comparisons made by Dr. Dufour show that the superior purity and splendor of floral colors in the Alps are not imaginary or a mere effect of contrast. The reds, blues and yellows of the mountain blossoms are much more intense than those of the same species of flowers grown at ordinary levels. The leaves also have a deeper and richer green, and microscopic examination shows that chlorophyl is more abundant in Alpine plants than in those of the plains. One fact which seems quite natural, yet is very interesting, is that on the mountain plants have relatively small aerial organs and larger subterranean ones. Thus a graceful flower which in the plains is seen nodding at the summit of an aspiring stem will be found high on the mountain slopes hugging the soil, anchored by comparatively heavy roots and beaming up with accentuated beauty from the ground.—Pearson's Weekly.

Sheep or Goat?

Nan's mother heard her crying after she had gone to bed and upon inquiry learned that the child, having heard for the first time the parable of the sheep and the goats, was in terror lest she should be a goat.

Her grandfather, a clergyman, tried to comfort Nan and finally succeeded in convincing her that if she led a "godly, righteous and sober life" she need not fear the objectionable classification. However, the next night Nan was again the victim of her emotions, and her mother insisted that the scene of the previous night must not be repeated.

"But, oh, mamma," sobbed the child, "this is different. Grandfather explained all about me, and I am not afraid for myself now. But, oh, mamma, what if you should be a goat?"—Delineator.

A Possibility.

"Suppose women should vote, what would be the result?"

"Oh, I don't know," answered Sirius Barker petulantly. "Perhaps we'd have hand painted ballots."—Washington Star.

KICKER'S DEAD ONES

Victim Nineteen Placed at Rest In Editorial Graveyard.

NO FEELING OF ELATION.

On the Contrary, Helso Is Grieved Over the Outcome—Nitric Jim's Overweening Confidence In Himself and the Sad Result.

[Copyright, 1908, by T. C. McClure.]

Fourteen years ago, when we made our debut at Giveadam Gulch, we were a poor and humble coyote of the dust. We hadn't a cent of cash in our pocket and only a pint of type in a cigar box. We were hungry and ragged and had only our boundless ambition to depend on. For the first five nights after our arrival we slept on the grass and gnawed an old boot leg for sustenance.

Had any one predicted that we would ever kill a man a shudder would have set in at the back of our neck and worked clear down to our heels and back. We doubted if we had the nerve to throw a rock at a coyote. We had been brought up in a cheese factory, where there is nothing to encourage the latent ferocity in mankind.

"WE TOOK COVER BEHIND HEADSTONE NO. 10."

Two weeks after our arrival at the gulch we had to lay Rocky Mountain Pete away. It was a case of kill or be killed. He heard that we were going to establish the Kicker, and he called to pop us out of existence. With an old revolver which we had found in the grass we popped first, and Pete was laid away. When the thing had been done we sat down and wept over it.

As time went on and we prospered other men came around to pop or be popped. We found that it was a great deal more convenient to pop them. We learned also that if we didn't take care of ourself no one else would. We simply fell into line and adopted the customs of the wild and woolly.

After the third year we bought an acre of ground and laid out a private editorial graveyard, the only one ever established in this or any other country. Our "patients" then numbered five. Each one was given a grave and a headstone. A year ago, when we gave the list of the dead, it numbered eighteen. The list had not been added to for a year or more, and it will be remembered that we expressed the earnest hope that the deal had been closed and that no other galoot would insist on occupying a grave on our lot. On that occasion we further stated that we had neglected at least twenty chances to add to the population of the cemetery by dodging bullets or running away. We never had a hankering for gore. We had much rather sit down to a ham sandwich and a glass of beer.

Three days ago we awoke at our usual hour and were glad that we were alive. We were also glad that everybody else was alive. We had no bone to pick with any man on earth, and we could not say that we had an enemy. We had decided to spend the day redecorating the eighteen graves and feeling glad that we had stopped at that number, and we felt more tender hearted than usual. No premonition of what was about to occur entered our mind. For a moment we even thought of leaving our guns behind.

Surprised by a Stranger.

We were driven out to our cemetery and had been at work trailing the arbutus over the various mounds for an hour or so when a bullet suddenly whizzed past our ear. A man who has lived within sight of the Rockies for fourteen years makes no mistake between the whiz of a bullet and the whir of a stone. As we looked up in surprise it was to see a stranger crouched down beside headstone No. 8. This stone marks the last resting place of Wildcat Ned. He was one of the holy terrors of earlier days, and after successfully adding to the population of several new graveyards he took the contract of gathering us to our fathers. His gun caught in his pocket, and he went the long trail.

As we caught sight of the stranger he fired again, and his bullet plastered the straw hat on our head. We should have preferred to argue the case and see if he was not riding under a misapprehension, but there was no time. We took cover behind headstone No. 10, belonging to Grizzly Jim, and another bullet grazed our arm as we fired our third shot, and at our fifth the unknown rolled over and was no more when we reached him. There were over a score of spectators on the fences when the man fired the first shot. He had taken pains to spread the news that he was going to remove us to other climes.

An investigation by the coroner and his jury proved the following facts:

The name of the deceased was Nitric Acid Jim.

His residence, if he had any, was Salt Lake.

For months he had been sending us anonymous letters to the effect that he intended to wipe us off the face of the earth.

He had arrived at the Gulch that morning armed with two guns and a big knife and had called at both the Kicker and the postoffice before coming in search of us at the graveyard.

He did not intend to give us a chance for our life, as his firing from ambush showed, and he had hitched his broncho near at hand in order to make a quick and safe escape.

When half a dozen witnesses of the affair had been sworn the jury returned the following verdict:

"We find that Nitric Acid Jim came to his death from a bullet fired from the gun of Mr. Jim Helso.

"And that in the firing of said bullet the said Mr. Helso was legally and morally justified.

"And that, while we sympathize to an extent with the disappointment that the said Nitric Acid must have suffered, we feel it our duty to warn all others of a like kind that the said Mr. Helso is lightning on the draw and a crack shot.

"And that the only way to successfully kill him is to get him to stop at some hotel and coax him to blow out the gas on himself.

"And that we shall continue to look upon it as one of the mysterious puzzles of Providence that the man bent on assassination should come to the very spot where he was to be himself interred.

"And that we recommend Mr. Helso to follow his usual course in this instance—that is, to plant the deceased at his expense and ride at the head of the funeral procession when it comes off."

Followed Suggestions by Jury.

We at once set about following out the suggestions of the jury. Nitric Acid Jim's casket cost us $40; we turned out five carriages at $5 each; the gravedigging was $10, and the drinks for the mourners the same sum. The headstone will cost thirty and the shrubbery five more. He was laid away yesterday with all honors, and we can do no more for him. We do not believe that another editor in the world would have done as much.

There is no feeling of elation on our part that we have planted our nineteenth. On the contrary, we are grieved—grieved that we have had to do it. Nitric Acid Jim had a name to conjure with. He could have been cock of the walk in some other town. He might have been a candidate for office and found no one bold enough to run in opposition to such a name. He might have even entered journalism and ripped things to ribbons.

The man had heard of us. He should have known of the other eighteen. He shouldn't have had such overweening confidence in himself. There is always a sadness in seeing a fellow man go out to shear and come back without his own wool.

The broncho and the weapons belonging to Nitric Acid Jim will be held by the coroner for sixty days while waiting for any relative to arrive and claim them. If none show up they will be sold at auction for the benefit of the widow and orphan fund. If father or brother arrive we hope for the privilege of sitting down with them and telling them just how it happened and then taking them out to the graveyard and pointing the moral. We can speak without the slightest feeling against the deceased. He was simply one of the thousands who make daily mistakes. It looked like the easiest thing in the world to drop into town and fill us full of lead and then drop out again, but it just didn't turn out that way.

M. QUAD.

Made Her Blush.

"Oh, Tommy Brown, ain't you awful!"—Browning's Magazine.

She's Away.

Yes, she's away. You would not guess
If from the way I've made my bed,
Nor could you know the absence by
The bird, for twice a day he's fed.
The rubber plant is moist all time.
I am attending to her wishes.
And yet you're sure that she's away
Because you see those dirty dishes.

Yes, she's away. I've fed the cat,
I've even dusted the chairs,
And, though she is not here, you'll find
No burned out matches on the stairs.
The sweet peas daily I have plucked—
That was but one of many wishes—
And yet there's proof that she's away.
Behold that stack of dirty dishes!

Yes, she's away. I'm "keeping bach."
The curtains in the front are drawn,
Yet you'd not guess that I'm unbossed.
Three times a week I cut the lawn,
The ice each morn I carry in.
I change the water for her fishes,
And yet [illegible]

SUPPOSE you were cast up on an uninhabited tropical shore with nothing but a penknife and a magnifying glass? How would you go about getting a living? How would you manage to defend yourself from the wild beasts and the wilder elements?

These are problems that Tom Blake and the beautiful Miss Leslie and Winthrope had to solve. How they did solve them is told in

INTO THE PRIMITIVE

BY ROBERT AMES BENNET ILLUSTRATIONS BY RAY WALTERS

The beginning was at Capetown, when Blake and Winthrope boarded the steamer as fellow-passengers with Lady Bayrose and her party—which included the beautiful Miss Leslie. Three days later the ship went to pieces in a cyclone on a wild and isolated coast, and these three—the American engineer, the Englishman, and the heiress—were the only survivors. And when highly cultivated civilization was brought face to face with the primitive, what law could prevail but the survival of the fittest? It is a story full of vigorous strength and unusual charm.

It will be printed serially in these columns. The opening chapters to appear in the near future. You will not want to miss it.

When You Need Printing Done

You want it to be of the very best kind. As you expect your printed matter to make business it is necessary it should do the talking for you. Poor or indifferent printing cannot do this as it lacks the strong points required to gain and hold the interest of the patron.

¶ In this particular line of work we excel, for several reasons, viz: 1st; we have the largest and best variety of up-to-date type to be found in the western part of the state. 2nd; we carry only the very best grades of papers; and 3rd; the know-how with which to create original and attractive tye display.

¶ You make no mistake when you come to us with an order of printing

The Republican Job Printery

Benj. H. Sincell, Prop.,

Okland, Md.

Four Per Cent. Interest.

The First National Bank, Friendsville, pays four per cent. interest on time deposits. Place your money in this bank where its earning capacity will be greater than in any other banking institution in the county.

THE FIRST NATIONAL BANK
Friendsville, Md.

Dissolution Notice.

This is to give notice that the firm of Reams & Browning, doing general mercantile business, has been dissolved by mutual consent, Mr. Browning retiring. The business will be continued by Mr. Reams.

REAMS & BROWNING.

Swallow Falls, Aug 8, 1908. 3t

A Hint to the Wise Is Sufficient.

Special Sale on
2-qt Blue Enamel Saucepan.
2-qt Blue Fnamel Pudding Pans.
2-qt Blue Enamel Preserve Kettles.

We have just received over 1500 lbs. of our famous 10c Candy.

SUNDAY SCHOOL SUPPLIES.

TAKE our advice—buy now, don't wait, but come and see

THE Little Man

and you will save money on all your Holiday Goods,

Toys, Candies, Novelties, Fancy Goods.

Baumgartner.

CAPITAL $25,000.00

The First National Bank
Of Grantsville, Md.
Safe deposit vault boxes for rent.

SURPLUS $12,500.00

The Savings Department takes care of your money when waiting other investment. The money earns interest from the day it is deposited. It can be withdrawn at any time.

Its Advantages

Any amount from One Dollar up can be deposited, and interest added to principal twice a year. Pass books are issued to every depositor.

We Pay 3 Per Cent. Interest.
Open Daily except Sundays and Holidays, 9 a. m. to 4 p. m.

OFFICERS.
C. H. JENNINGS, - - - President
U. M. STANTON, - Vice-President
J. O. GETTY, - - - Cashier

DIRECTORS.
C. H. Jennings, U. M. Stanton,
G. C. Keller, Eli Stanton,
W. A. Hitchins, Frank Watts,
J. O. Getty.

A. D. NAYLOR & COMP'Y

You can buy at Reduced Prices
Grain Drills, Harrows and Plows
AT NAYLOR & CO.'S

Big Stock to select from.

Have the Farmer's Favorite Drills, the Thomas, the Superior Hoe and Disc Drills.

We have the Syracuse, the Imperial and the Wyard Plows.

Also the wood frame Harrows, the wheel and lever Harrows; also the Disc Harrow, all at reduced prices.

We also have a nice line of Spray Pumps.

Muco-Solvent is an indispensible household remedy because it is a preventive as well as a cure, and because it arrests development of all contageous germs and bacterial diseases. It cures croup, colds, tonsilitis with its associated ills and all inflamed and catarrhal conditions of the mucous surface. It is a harmless vegetable preparation that may safely be administered to the tenderest babe. If not for sale in your neighborhood, write to

THE PIEDMONT SUPPLY CO.,
Sole Agents for Muco-Solvent. Piedmont, W. Va.

Real Estate Bargains

I offer for sale

FARM OF 147 ACRES, 3 miles from Oakland; good 6-room House; plenty of water; over 50 acres cleared; about 25 acres of grass; 2 Orchards, bearing; over 75 acres of White Oak Timber; R. F. D. mail service.

COTTAGE OF 6 ROOMS for sale at Mt. Lake Park.

HOUSE AND LOT on Oak Street, Oakland, for sale or rent. House of 6 rooms—Lot 50x150 feet, with Stable and all necessary Outbuildings.

FOUR VERY DESIRABLE BUILDING LOTS situated on Liberty Street, in Oakland. Also 3 DWELLING HOUSES on Liberty Street, with good water and all necessary outbuildings.

HOUSE AND LOT on Wilson Street. House of 10 rooms; good water. Lot 150 feet front. Best Outbuildings in Oakland.

A VERY GOOD FARM 1 mile from Oakland—all under fence; containing 32 acres; about 25 under cultivation; 2 fine Orchards, and about 2½ acres in small Fruit; 2 Houses, a very good Well and a never failing Spring. A very desirable place for Truck and Poultry Farming. Can be bought at a low price just now.

I have for sale 18 of the very best Building Lots in the town which I will sell for cash—or $5 down and $5 per month.

150 ACRES OF VALUABLE COAL LAND situated less than two miles of Oakland which can be bought at a great bargain. The surface would make fine farming land. This land is well watered with a stream and several good springs.

12 MORE CHOICE BUILDING LOTS at $5 down and $5 per month.

If you want cash for your Real Estate, or Real Estate for your cash, let me hear from you.

For further particulars call on or address

James A. Sincell, Real Estate Agent & Surveyor

THE REPUBLICAN

BENJ. H. SINCELL, EDITOR.

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 12, 1908.

HOW BRYAN HELPED.

An indirect service, but an important one, that Mr. Bryan has contributed by his successive campaigns, particularly his latest, has been to further the tendency toward intelligent thinking on the part of the voter. The tremendous victory of Mr. Taft was contributed to by a multitude of votes that the Democratic party lost through the leading of its candidate. Especially in the Solid South is the spirit of emancipation from hard and fast Democratic affiliation noticeable. Mr. Taft went into the stronghold of the enemy and carried from it a magnificent tribute of admiration. He has done more than any other man to nationalize the South. This was not seen in any spectacular breaking away of states, but in the great gains he made in many of them.

Mr. Bryan's antagonism of the interests of the South made it easier for Mr. Taft to secure the splendid vote given him in that section. Democrats the country over have been taught to think and act independently. This was markedly shown in New York city, where the business element supported the candidacy of Taft and where multitudes of Democratic workingmen also helped Taft make his marvelous record. During the 12 years of Bryan's domination of the party, thousands of young voters who would otherwise have voted with the Democratic party, have formed the habit of voting for the party that represents advance rather than grievance, progress rather than petulance. Their optimism and enthusiasm have been caught by the splendid record of the Republican party and its candidates. So that Mr. Bryan has wrought better than he intended, by his calamity campaigns. The people who do not believe in his powers of prophecy any more than in his political wisdom, will not follow the party under his lead. Many voters who might otherwise be regularly Democratic study the signs of the times and the records and characters of the candidates, and cast their ballots for the truly national and progressive principles of government.

TO IMPROVE THE CONDITION OF COUNTRY LIFE.

The first meeting of President Roosevelt's Country Life Commission, held at the Maryland Agricultural College, on Monday, brought forth an interesting discussion and will go far to impress people with the possibilities for good which lie in that commission. The idea of the commissioners seems to be rather to gain information to submit in their reports than to give instruction to the people. If by these public discussions the commissioners can gain a correct knowledge of such unfavorable conditions in country life that call for amendment, and direct public attention to them, an admirable work will be performed and the way prepared for practical remedies. It is likely that in addition to the well-informed common-sense men who may respond to the call of the commission there will come a number of "cranks" and faddists. These will try the patience of the commission, but probably they will do no real harm.

Two things have been suggested which it is believed by those who advocate them, would tend to improve conditions. One of them is the establisament of postal savings banks for the promotion of thrift in rural districts where there are no savings banks and no places for safekeeping of small sums. It is the practice in many remote country places to hide money away in the homes, and it is believed by the advocates of postal savings banks that they would add largely to the amount of available currency in circulation.

The other suggestion for the betterment of country life is the parcels post, which is enjoyed by the people of nearly all civilized countries except the United States. There are two strong influences opposing this. The principal one is, of course, the express company, which has a hold on Congress. The other is the country store keeper, who erroneously believes that the parcels post would bring the city store in direct competition with him. It is not likely that the country store keeper would be injured by this competition. The effect would be to give the country people access to the city stores for those commodities which the country store does not ordinarily keep. It would also open up the city market to farmers for small products which now go to waste, because of the poor service and prohibitory rates of the express companies, and the people would get more money to spend at the country stores.

The president of the Maryland Agricultural College, in his remarks before the commission, discussed the deficiencies of rural schools. These deficiencies are obvious and largely due to the lack of sufficient funds. Not only should the schools be improved, but the country schoolhouse should be made the gathering place of the young people of the community for all objects of improvement, for the reading club, the village debating society, the Dorcas society and what not. This would go largely to remove the complaint of loneliness, which drives so many young people from the farms. The improvement of the roads, and the use of electric lights to illuminate them in winter, would also tend largely to promote this object. The country school boards could also make provision for practical and instructive lectures in the rural schoolhouses on winter evenings, dealing with those subjects which might be brought to the front by the Country Life Commission.

THE MYTH OF THE PRESENT.

Some of the philosophers of the early modern period sought to find a basis of necessity for mythology, alleging that the continuity of myths was not merely an incident, but a necessity of the development of thought, particularly religious thought. The subject is beyond the compass of a brief article, but furnishes suggestion for a consideration of the character of present-day myth. It is so often said that the times are advanced that one needs to check off the statement by the facts. Certainly there is little change in the nature of the credulities of mankind. To the children are passed on the myths of an earlier age that, when vital, were most influencing factors in the lives of all persons, but at the same time the elders are engaged with myth construction that will awaken the smiles of generations to come. This being the case, why should not mythology be accepted as one of the common and most influential vehicles of truth; why should it not be be accorded a recognized and respected place as one of the ever-determining molders of human thought and faith?

Anything that entered vitally into thought is truth to the extent that it is productive in life. Anything that enters into human thought that is productive of loftier ideals and higher aspirations, as well as better efforts, is not only truth, but truth of a most exalted nature. The question of Pilate remains unanswered "What is truth?" The common method of replying by enumerating the things that are not truth does not answer. This is a practical age; even religion has taken on a quality of practicality, with practical ethics and benevolence in the foreground. But what of the myth-makers? For if they were not at work, the chronicles of the times would be but dry husks and the continuity of credulity that sometimes sprouts into creeds and at other times passes into mere fancy will be broken.

It is hardly venturing too much to affirm that the mythmakers are as busy as ever and are as unconscious of the real nature of their work as they have ever been. The particular form of myth that seems to be characteristic of the times is that which relates to the occult, so called. The repudiation that might be offered to this claim would be that for the first time the occult is receiving scientific treatment. So thought Mesmer, in a way the formulator of the science of applied occultism, and who lived in the early part of the eighteenth century. Physical magnetism was agitating the minds of the scientists and speculators of his day, and he saw in certain unaccountable influences of mind upon mind a new aspect of the same thing, and evolved his theory of animal magnetism. It is curious to note the modernity of his statement of what it would accomplish: "It may strengthen the activity of the muscular fiber, regulate the functions depending on it, and by such means infuse harmony in the internal parts and members of the human body." This would come fairly close to a definition of what is expected of the modern system of mental healing. Mesmer believed that he had struck the high note of science in his application of "mesmeric," or magnetic power for the curing of disease, as much as does any of the present day claimants of the same kind. The medieval philosophy with regard to magetism in relation to healing found its most prominent exponent in Paracelsus.

The following extract from that writer might be paralleled by some of the very latest contributions to the subject of spirit manifestation. In 1603 he wrote: "It is possible that my spirit without the help of the body and through a fiery will alone can stab and wound others. It is also possible that I can bring the spirit of my adversary into an image and then double him up and lame him according to pleasure. The exertion of the will is the great point in the art of medicine. If we rightly understood the mind of man nothing would be impossible to us on earth." The table-rapping and topsy-turvy antics of so-called spirits are met with in the literature of the middle ages exactly as presented in the present-day investigations. It may be even questioned whether the mythology relating to the occult had not then better formulation than at present.

There is no disparagement here to the spirit of modern investigation, even if that investigation is but a resuscitation of past efforts in somewhat new forms. It only indicates how ancient is the testimony of the psycho physical; that in one and another form has greatly influenced the lives of men, shaping their faith and coloring their science. The process is continuing today, and doubtless will continue so long as the race lasts.

When in town don't pass me by but come in and see Baumgartner.

MR. TAFT'S FAITH.

Just why President Roosevelt thought it necessary to make the controversy of Mr. Taft's religious belief in the recent campaign, the basis of a letter on religious toleration in America when Mr. Taft's election plainly evidenced that the people of the United States fully recognize this cardinal principal in the Constitution, is, of course, known to himself. "It must appear, however," to quote the Baltimore American of yesterday, which discusses it under the editorial caption, "Roosevelt on Religion," that there is absolute dearth of originality in the discussion of the subject of personal freedom in matters of religion. It would seem, therefore, that the suoject would not be particularly attractive to President Roosevelt. Following, however, his practice of giving an expression upon every subject that assumes any degree of interest to the people, he gives to the public a letter written to someone during the campaign who criticised Mr. Taft upon the grounds of his Unitarian faith—a letter that the President says was not given out before, because he did not want to influence the election. That there was no influential number of persons who stooped to the plane of religious prejudice in casting their ballots is sufficiently evidenced by the result of the election. So that it would seem to be rather superfluous to enter a defense of the successful candidates's faith because some infinitesimal number of persons object to it. The grounds of freedom of conscience are so settled in this country that it would seem to be the part of wisdom to ignore any pretty abullition of the intolerant spirit.

Mr. Roosevelt's position is, however, entirely orthodox, sensible, sound and American. It is the position of all his fellow-countrymen with the exception of the peculiar man who bears a ratio relation to the rest of the population of an inconsequential nature. Mr. Roosevelt is entirely right in branding as an outrage—if the necessity for notice exists at all—any attack upon a candidate upon the grounds of his religion. He believes that the individual—Catholic, Protestant or what not—should be on an equal plane of eligibility for the for the highest office in the land. Here in Maryland, where the subject of religious toleration as between believers in Jesus Christ was settled from the beginning, there is a very large Catholic population, and, in fact, all denominations flourish within the state's confines. So that the religious question never disturbs the people in their political action. It certainly should be so in the country at large. But all the reiteration of axioms that could be made by Mr. Roosevelt or anyone else would not convince the occasional bigot. So what is the use of stirring up religious controversy.

THINK BETTER TIMES.

The citizen very properly desires to forget politics and to return to the important business of speeding the return to good times. There is abundant evidence that prosperity, which is already plentiful, will soon be more generally shared. Confidence in the banks has been restored. The stock market indicates renewed activity. Business generally must soon "pick up," and with its improvement will come more work for the unemployed, more trade to the merchant, more money out or safe deposit vaults and into general circulation. But today and in weeks to come the business men of the county must remember that a complete restoration of prosperity rests with them. Think better times, talk better times and better times will become a fact. Every employer who is able to do so should make it his business to find more work for idle men. He will profit by their labor as much as and more than they do. Every man can help his neighbor and himself by pitching into his own work harder than ever, expanding it and making it more a necessary part of the business of the nation. Let business men and professional men, employers and employed, work to the same purpose.

MOUNTAIN LAKE PARK.

Mr. W. C. Dunnington has moved into the Baumgardner cottage for the winter season.

Supt. Davis visited the Park yesterday.

Mr. and Mrs. Warren Rathbun took into their home another boarder this morning. She weighs ten pounds and "Hick" thinks he weighs a ton.

The principals and witnesses in the insurance case of King & Martin for the insurance on their stock of merchandise, destroyed with the postoffice building last winter, went to Cumberland yesterday morning where the case is on trial.

An acetylene light plant is being put in by Messrs. Willetts, Winchell, Friend and J. L. Echard to light their cottages. By this means they will have light in the winter when it is most needed. If the price of electric lights should be advanced next season as has been intimated, other plants of the former kind will follow.

FOR RENT.—The Rectory on Alder street; house contains 14 rooms; stable and other outbuildings on the property. Apply to BOWIE JOHNSON, Oakland. 3t

WHY NAMED SEQUOIA

Origin of the Title Given to California's Big Trees.

In California's wonderland nothing is more interesting or wonderful than the Sequoia gigantea, which grows along Sierra Nevada's slopes, and its lesser cousin Sequoia sempervirens, inhabiting the lands near the coast around Santa Cruz. "What is the meaning of sequoia?" I asked a judge. "It is undoubtedly of Latin derivation, but I fail to remember its significance," was the judicial reply. The physician declared it "well chosen scientific nomenclature" and stopped. A man on the street said he "guessed it was the name of the fellow that discovered the trees," so I came to the conclusion tha but few know, and yet the story is interesting.

A long time ago, as the story books say, there lived near famous old Fort London, in east Tennessee, not far from the Georgia line, a very great man of whom not one American in a hundred ever heard. Joseph Guess, or Sequoia, a half breed Cherokee Indian, was born in 1760 and possessed qualities which would have made him great at any period and among any people in the world's history. Combined with a powerful creative intellect were indomitable energy, application, persistence, that no discouragement could affect, and a firm confidence in his own ability to overcome obstacles. In his youth he acquired distinction in his tribe as a craftsman in silver, his handiwork showing not only technical skill in execution but unusual ingenuity and originality of design.

It was not, however, until 18 9 that he began the work that was to entitle him to a place among the earth's truly great. In that year Sequoia's ambitions was fired by the knowledge that the whites had a method of communication by means of writing and books and set out to devise a written language for his own people. When it is realized that Sequoia was illiterate, knew not a single letter of the English alphabet, had no basis in his own language to build upon, the stupendous difficulties of the task he set for himself may well be imagined. He began his great work without a doubt of his ultimate success, with the superb faith that belongs only to the great. From an old English spelling book he copied all the letters, giving to each a sound, modified some of the letters he found, invented others until he had eighty-five characters, by means of which might be expressed every sound in the Cherokee language. Not only would this have been impossible with our alphabet, but so simple was the system that any one speaking Cherokee might within a week or two learn to read and write it. There are not lacking learned and distinguished philologists who unhesitatingly declare that Sequoia's alphabet is the most perfect ever devised for any language.

He had at first the usual experience of inventors. Shafts of ridicule were aimed at him, and he even received violent abuse from many of his tribesmen for his attempts to introduce this remarkable innovation, but his triumph came in 1821 in California. He was then sixty-one years of ago, when a council of Cherokee chiefs formally adopted his invention. Soon a printing press was established, and quite a large and varied literature was its fruit, while even a newspaper was printed in Cherokee by the aid of Sequoia's alphabet.

The desire for learning among the Cherokee was remarkable, so much so that in a very few months after the invention was given to the nation thousands of its members could read and write. Considering the difficulties of his undertaking, I think we are safe in writing the old chief who died full of honors far from home in Mexico one of the greatest of Americans.

Tennessee has given to the world many great men. Presidents Jackson, Polk and Johnson standing in the forefront. The nation they served has become one of the first of the earth, and so their names are known of all men. The people toward whose uplifting Sequoita spent his life are scattered to the four winds of heaven. Only a remnant remains, and in a few more generations they will be but a memory, and his achievement will be known only to the curious.

The old chief's life work was not in vain. No life of unselfish devotion ever is. A great American scientist with a soul attuned to the fitness of things Latinized the Indian name to Sequoia and gave it to California's great trees. And what name for the greatest of American growths could be more appropriate than that of one of the greatest of America's early race?

Scientists tell us some of these trees are thousands of years old. Everything that lived in all the earth when they were young has long since passed away. But there are young ones coming onunder the shadow of their elders, and so is it beyond the range of probability that a doz n centuries hence some broken and discouraged traveler resting under the shade shall ask the reason for the beautiful name Sequoia and, hearing, become uplifted and stimulated to do noble things through the story of the humble red man who by unselfish devotion became great?—John D. Rose in Los Angeles Times.

Special 10-qt. tin water buckets 10c at Baumgardner's.

See our 5 and 10c glassware. Baumgartner.

The Lonaconing Savings Bank Of Allegany Couuty.

Capital Stock . $20,000
Surplus and Undivided Profits . $60,000
Deposits . . $625,000

3 PER CENT. Interest Paid Upon all Savings Accounts.

GIVE THEM A START

The New Year is rapidly approaching. This would be a good time for you to start your young folks on the road to Success.

Early training in the practice of self-denial; instruction as to the use and value of money; opportunities for earning and saving money; all these tend to fix and fasten the children in the ways of thrift and prosperity.

We most gladly assist the young people in getting started.

One Dollar opens an account and entitles the depositor to one of our Savings Banks.

We shall be pleased to have our Garrett County friends call and receive a 1908 Calendar.

DAVID SLOAN, President. R. R. SLOAN, Treasurer.

The First National Bank

FRIENDSVILLE, MD.

Capital, $25,000. Surplus and Undivided Profits, $24,000.

OFFICERS:

L. E. Friend, President. J. W. McCullough, V. P.
R. C. McCandlish, Cashier.

DIRECTORS:

L. E. Friend, Merchant,
J. W. McCullough, Lumber and Coal.
W. W. Savage, Merchant.
D. S. Custer, Merchant.
H. M. Rumbaugh, Farmer.
W. H. H. Friend, Pension Agent and Surveyor.
Horace R. DeWitt, Treasurer of Garrett County, Md.
R. C. McCandlish.

We will issue time or demand certificates of deposit and pay you 4 per cent. interest if your money is left with us.

In all its dealings this Bank combines absolute safety with satisfactory service and never loses sight of either.

SAFETY DEPOSIT BOXES FOR RENT.

GORTNER.

Simon Slabach, of Bloomington, Ill., is calling on his many friends at this place.

R. D. Becker was calling on his sister at Hauser last Sunday.

Jonas Yoder, of Meyersdale, Pa., is rusticating in this vicinity at present.

Miss Elizabeth Lichty, who recently returned from Ohio, is visiting relatives at Aurora this week.

Services next Saturday and Sunday evenings by the Mennonites, and Sunday morning at 10-30 by the German Baptists. A cordial welcome to all.

WILLIE.

Last Notice to Delinquent Tax-Payers

The undersigned, as County Treasurer for the years 1906 and 1907, hereby notifies all who have not paid their taxes that they must do so immediately, otherwise I shall be compelled to advertise the property of such delinquents, consequently costs will be added.

I have been as lenient with delinquents as I possibly could be; the county's debts must be paid and I am expected to pay all orders upon presentation. This I cannot do unless I have the funds on hand with which to meet the obligations of the county. There is yet outstanding several thousand dollars of uncollected taxes. The money is due the county and should have been paid months ago. I make this last appeal to the tax payers and request that they respond at once, otherwise the law will be invoked.

Let me hear from you.

Yours respectfully,
HORACE R. DEWITT.
tf Late Treasurer of Garret County.

Telephone Service Excellent.

In the rush of matters claiming the attention of the publisher of this paper last week, credit for the excellent service rendered by the Bell Telephone Company as well as the Garrett County Telephone Company, was overlooked. The former company ran a special wire into THE REPUBLICAN editorial rooms, where the returns on the night of the election were received from every state in the union. At 9 o'clock that evening, by reason of this service, it was apparent that the country had gone Republican but as news pleasing to the Republicans continued to come the wire was kept busy until 2 the next morning. The manager of the Company informed us that the returns from Election District No. 8 of this county were among the first complete returns received in New York City from any section of the country. This was accomplished by the transmission of the figures via the Garrett County lines to this office and thence over the long distance. To the local company, therefore, credit is due for the service rendered, which was incomparable, returns from every district in the county having been received and tabulated before 11 o'clock of the night of the election.

WOOD'S SEEDS.
Best qualities obtainable.

Winter or Hairy Vetch

makes not only one of the largest-yielding and best winter feed and forage crops you can grow, but is also one of the best of soil-improvers, adding more nitrogen to the soil than any other winter crop.

Wood's Descriptive Fall Catalogue gives full information about this valuable crop; also about all other for Fall planting. Catalogue mailed free on request. Write for it.

Farm & Garden Seeds

T. W. WOOD & SONS,
Seedsmen, - Richmond, Va.

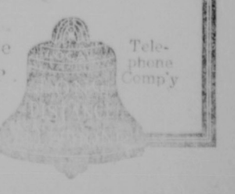
PUTTING UP PRESCRIPTIONS

Is the most exacting part of our business—a task we do not shirk. Giving you just what your doctor orders, never filling it with something "just as good," we deserve, and by means of this advertisement ask, your patronage. Everything in the drug and chemical line you'll want is here, too

OAKLAND PHARMACY
JOS. E. HARNED, Proprietor,
OAKLAND, MD.

DOES IT PAY?

to tramp errands, lose time and suffer inconvenience—to save the cost of a telephone message.



The Telephone Co.'s Comp'y

A Meritorious Institution

Established as a State Bank in 1888 with a capital of $25,000.00; changed to a National Bank in 1903 and capital increased to $50,000.00; TODAY with a capital and surplus of $85,000.00 and total resources of over $500,000.00

BETTER, BIGGER AND STRONGER

than ever. During the 20 years of our existence, our aim has been to extend to our patrons the best possible service. Our steady growth is evidence that the banking institution, which throws the greatest safeguards around its business in order to protect its depositors merits the confidence of the public. If you are not a customer of this Bank let this be your invitation to become one; our relations will be mutually profitable.

Garrett National Bank

Of Oakland, Maryland.

Garrett County Official Election Returns.

NOTE—An error appearing in subjoined table last week necessitates its republication to-day.

DISTRICTS.	TAFT, R.	BRYAN, D.	PEARRE, R.	LEWIS, D.
No. 1—Swanton	133	93	133	80
No. 2—Selbysport	252	93	225	86
No. 3—Grantsville	242	149	238	134
No. 4—Bloomington	95	68	88	63
No. 5—Accident	116	126	124	116
No. 6—Sang Run	154	34	147	28
No. 7—Oakland, East	158	107	153	97
No. 8—Ryan's Glade	153	93	149	83
No. 9—Johnson's	42	54	31	54
No. 10—Deer Park	154	54	149	51
No. 11—Elbow	69	29	68	27
No. 12—Bittinger	118	32	111	29
No. 13—Kitzmiller	93	19	87	22
No. 14—Oakland, West	279	170	268	164
Totals	2055	1121	1981	1034
Majorities	934	....	947	....

Mr. Oliver Heyward, of Bond, was a business visitor here this morning.

Misses Annie and Edith Bolden spent Saturday and Sunday in Cumberland with friends.

Miss Nell Offutt went to Baltimore last Thursday where she will remain for an indefinite time.

Mr. A. Workman, of Huntington, W. Va., is here as the guest of his son, Rev. J. B. Workman, of St. Paul's M. E. church.

Dr. A. J. Mason and Mr. R. C. McCandlish, of Friendsville, were in Oakland Tuesday night attending the Masonic lodge.

Col. John E. Woods and family, who have resided for a year at Congers, N. Y., are now in New York City, where they will spend the winter.

Mrs. E. Manges left Oakland this morning for York, Pa., where she will remain indefinitely visiting her daughters, Misses Catherine and Anna.

Attorneys John T. Mitchell and Edward H. Sincell and Surveyor A. C. Mason went to a point near Grantsville Monday where they are engaged in some land work.

Mrs. Belle Duval and sister, Miss Sallie Jarboe, who spent a few days in Cumberland last week with friends, returned to their home in Oakland Saturday afternoon.

Mr. Thomas A. Gonder, manager of the Mountain Pharmaceutical Company, returned Thursday night from a business trip to Kalamazoo, Mich., where he went in the interests of the local concern.

Attorneys F. A. Thayer, Thomas J. Peddicord, Stuart F. Hamill and Gilmor S. Hamill are attending court in Cumberland this week, where they are engaged either as principals or attorneys in the removed cases from this county.

The new court house for Garrett county will be turned over to the Court House Commission on next Tuesday by the contractor, Mr. W. A. Liller, of Keyser, West Va., as his work will be completed on the building by that time.

Mr. and Mrs. George N. Numsen, of Baltimore, spent Sunday in Oakland as the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Gilmor S. Hamill. Mr. Numsen is President of the First Branch of the City Council of Baltimore and a prominent business man of that city.

CAPITAL $50,000.00 — SURPLUS AND PROFITS $29,000.00

THE First National Bank

OAKLAND, MD.

GOVERNMENT DEPOSITORY.

One of the Largest and Best Equipped Banking Houses in Maryland.

Vaults absolutely Fire and Burglar proof.

Safety Deposit Boxes for Rent

Every courtesy extended consistent with sound banking.

Pays 3 Per Cent. on Time Deposits—Compounded Semi-Annually

Home Savings Banks Free. $1.00 will start an account.

The Depositor with a Dollar account receives the same consideration as the largest depositor.

PEOPLE WILL GIVE THANKS.

President Roosevelt Has Issued The Annual Thanksgiving Proclamation.

President Roosevelt has issued his annual Thanksgiving proclamation, which is as follows:

By the President of the United States of America.

A PROCLAMATION—Once again the season is at hand when according to the ancient custom of our people, it becomes the duty of the President to appoint a day of prayer and of Thanksgiving to God.

Year by year the nation grows in strength and worldly power. During the century and a quarter that has elapsed since our entry into the circle of independent people, we have grown and prospered in material things to a degree never known before and not now known in any other country. The thirteen colonies which struggled along the seacoasts at the Atlantic and were hemmed in but a few miles west of tidewater by the Indianhunter wilderness, have been transformed into the mightiest Republic which the world has ever seen. Its domains stretch across the continent from one to the other of the two great oceans, and it exercises dominion alike in the Arctic and tropic realms

The growth in wealth and population has surpassed even the growth in territory. Nowhere else in the world is the average individual comfort and material well-being as high as in our fortunate land.

For the very reason that in material well-being we have thus abundant, we owe it to the Almighty to show equal progress to moral and spiritual things. With a nation, as with individuals who make up a nation, material well-being is an indispensable foundation. But the foundation avails nothing by itself. That life is wasted and worse than wasted which is spent in piling, heap on heap, those things which minister merely to the pleasure of the body and to the power that rests upon wealth. Upon material well-being as a foundation must be raised the structure of the lofty life of the spirit if this nation is properly to fulfill its great mission and to accomplish all that we so ardently hope and desire. The things of the body are good; the things of the intellect better; but the best of all are the things of the soul, for in the nation, as in this individual, in the long run it is character that counts. Let us, therefore, as a people, set our faces resolutely against evil, and with broad charity, with kindness and good will toward all men, but with unflinching determination to smite down wrong, strive with all the strength that is given us for righteousness in public and private life.

Now, therefore, I, Theodore Roosevelt, President of the United States, do set apart Thursday, the 26th day of November, as a day of general thanksgiving and prayer, and on that day I recommend that the people shall cease from their daily work and, in their homes or in their churches, meet devoutly to thank the Almighty for the many and great blessings they have received in the past, and to pray that they may be given strength so to order their lives as to deserve a continuation of these blessings in the future.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the city of Washington, this thirty-first day of October in the year of our Lord, one thousand nineteen hundred and eight, and of the independence of the United States the one hundred and thirty-third.

By the President,
THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

Alvey A. Adee, acting Secretary of State.

Mr. John A. Delawder, of the Government Printing Office, who was a visitor to relatives and friends in Oakland and vicinity a few days last week, returned to his home last Saturday morning, being accompanied by Mrs. E. A. Weimer and two children and Miss Glotfelty.

At the meeting of the County Commissioners last week Oscar Notes, of Oakland, was appointed janitor to the new court house and will assume his duties in a few days. The selection made by the Commissioners is a good one, as Oscar is one of the best and highest esteemed colored men in town, faithful, honest and industrious.

The cases of John Shartzer vs. Lloyd Wilburn, S. F. Hamill vs. John Felty and the Park Grocery Company vs. Fire Insurance Co., which were removed to the Allegony county Circuit Court for trial, will be heard there this week. A number of attorneys and a large number of witnesses in the several cases went from Oakland to Cumberland yesterday, expecting one of the cases to be called.

Dr. J. Lee McComas, who went to Washington, D. C., two weeks ago, was taken suddenly ill on last Saturday with a threatened attack of appendicitis and on the following day was removed from Washington to one of the Baltimore city hospitals by his son, Dr. H. W. McComas, who was in Baltimore professionally at the time. Reports from the bedside of the patient yesterday were favorable.

Hugh Gordon pass[illegible] at Baumgart-

The Sick.

Justice Andrew B. Gonder, of Oakland, who has been suffering for some time with an affection of the kidneys, was taken seriously ill last Monday night, but this morning is somewhat improved.

Mr. Bernard Friese, the east end florist, was stricken with erysipelas of the face on Sunday and later typhoid fever developed. Yesterday his condition was considered very grave, but this morning some signs of improvement are apparent.

Mr. Jonathan White, of Loch Lynn, is confined to his bed with a recurrence of heart trouble with which he has been a great sufferer for a number of years.

Serious Fire Averted.

Last Sunday afternoon a serious fire was narrowly averted by the timely discovery of the blaze before it had gained headway to any extent, the fire being located in a barrel of trash which was left standing in close proximity to the cold storage warehouse of the Cumberland Brewing Company and which evidently was set on fire by a spark from a passsing locomotive. When the fire was discovered it had communicated to the building and was burning rapidly. A few buckets of water put it out. The storage warehouse is located adjacent to the electric light plant and had it not been for the discovery of the fire the electric plant as well as other adjoining buildings would have probably burned as a brisk wind was blowing at the time.

Church Services.

OAKLAND PRESBYTERIAN.

Services on Sunday, to which all are cordially invited, will be preaching at 11 a. m. and 7.3 p. m.

L. B. HENSLEY, Pastor.

ST. PAUL'S M. E.

Services next Sunday as follows:
Preaching 10.30 a. m.
Sunday school at 2 15 p. m.
Preaching at 7.30 p. m.
Epworth League Monday 7.30 p. m.
Junior League Wednesday 4.15 p. m.
Prayer meeting Wednesday 7.30 p. m.
Everybody cordially invited to attend these services.

J. B. WORKMAN, Pastor.

ST. MARK'S LUTHERAN.

Services next Sabbath as follows:
Sunday school at 9.30 a. m.
Preaching 7.30 p. m.
Preaching in Deer Park Lutheran church next Sunday at 11 a. m.
Everybody welcome.

E. MANGES, Pastor.

MT. LAKE AND DEER PARK M. E. CHARGE

Mt. Lake Park—Preaching Sunday morning at 11 o'clock. Sunday School at 2:30 p. m. Epworth League 6:30 p. m.

Deer Park—Preaching at 7:30 p. m. Sunday School at 10 a. m.

JOHN O. BOLTON, Pastor.

Engraved calling cards and wedding invitations may be procured by leaving your orders at this office. A very attractive and stylish line at moderate prices is shown.

HOUSE FOR RENT, possession given after October 1st; contains eight rooms; spring water. Apply to Mrs. L. F. Sincell, Oakland. Also cottage of six rooms, either furnisdhe or unfurnished.

ARTHUR TOWNSHEND

BARGAINS! BARGAINS!

TO CLOSE OUT SOME

Flannels, Blankets and Flannel Skirts

WE CAN GIVE YOU GOOD PRICES.

MEN'S AND BOYS' Overcoats AT A GOOD SACRIFICE

STILL HAVE SOME GOOD THINGS IN

Underwear, Gloves, Mittens, and Tam o'Shanters Children's Caps.

ARTHUR TOWNSHEND

H. C. Sincell & Co.

The CLOAKS and SUITS we are showing this season at

$5.50 TO $30.00

are far superior to any previous effort.

See this line before you buy and be convinced that the

Fit and Style

you get here is what you desire.

H. C. Sincell & Co.

SUPPOSE you were cast up on an uninhabited tropical shore with nothing but a penknife and a magnifying glass? How would you go about getting a living? How would you manage to defend yourself from the wild beasts and the wilder elements?

These are problems that Tom Blake and the beautiful Miss Leslie and Winthrope had to solve. How they did solve them is told in

INTO THE PRIMITIVE

BY ROBERT AMES BENNET ILLUSTRATIONS BY RAY WALTERS

The beginning was at Capetown, when Blake and Winthrope boarded the steamer as fellow-passengers with Lady Bayrose and her party—which included the beautiful Miss Leslie. Three days later the ship went to pieces in a cyclone on a wild and isolated coast, and these three—the American engineer, the Englishman, and the heiress—were the only survivors. And when highly cultivated civilization was brought face to face with the primitive, what law could prevail but the survival of the fittest? It is a story full of vigorous strength and unusual charm.

It will be printed serially in these columns. The opening chapters to appear in the near future. You will not want to miss it.

The Confidential Clerk.

By HOWARD FIELDING.

Copyright, 1908, by C. W. Hooke.

GEORGE BLAKE was a sort of confidential secretary for old Lemuel Pettus, the money lender. Everybody knows Pettus. He is not averse to a certain sort of publicity. Three or four times a year he permits himself to be interviewed at some length and held up to the young as an example of thrift, integrity and other virtues. He has a favorite interview for early summer on the folly and wastefulness of vacations, and it must be ranked among the happiest achievements of unconscious humor, for it is based upon the serious conviction that the most worthy object of human ambition is to become a narrow, scheming, selfish skinflint like Lemuel Pettus.

Blake was nearly forty and had been in the employ of Pettus for fifteen years.

In the course of his connection with Pettus, Blake had become like an old man. His life was dry as dust. He had been rather a handsome fellow, with an excellent figure and carriage, but now he was thin and shambling in gait, and his clothes were almost as shabby as Pettus'. He was a fine example of the advantages of the no vacation habit.

Pettus never took any chances. He always had two dollars' worth of unimpeachable collateral for every dollar that he put out. The reader who is familiar with such phases of life will not be surprised to learn that Blake, who existed in this atmosphere of "sure thing" finance, was himself a reckless investor. He could save and sometimes make a little money, but he could not keep it. At the time of the events which form the subject of this tale Blake had $2,000 tied up in a gold mine which was nothing but a hole in the ground, scarcely deep enough to hide the man who dug it.

This man had been a schoolfellow of Blake's and had drifted about the mining regions of the west since then. He had narrowly missed several great fortunes, according to his own story. Upon the occasion of his father's death he came east and secured a very small inheritance, which he converted into cash. He did the same for the share of the estate which fell to his half sister, who was more than twenty years younger than himself. With these two lumps of money and Blake's $2,000 he went west again to develop his mine.

The half sister, Amy Lessing, remained with a distant relative in New Hampshire, but when this relative discovered that Amy had given all her money to her brother a painful inharmony arose. Amy, in despair at this situation, wrote to Jack Lessing and addressed the letter to him at the Calabash mine, which the United States postal employees seemed unable to find. At any rate, Amy received no reply. After waiting some weeks she wrote to Blake, asking if he could find work for her in New York.

Blake had begun to entertain suspicions as to Lessing, and these were increased by learning that the man had taken his sister's money and had not mentioned it to his partner. It looked as if the poor girl might be in rather hard circumstances, and Blake felt vaguely responsible, as her cash had gone into a mine of which he owned one-half. With an awesome sense of assuming a burden that might be entirely beyond his powers, he wrote inviting her to come to New York.

"YES, SIR; I AM ENGAGED TO MISS AMY LESSING."

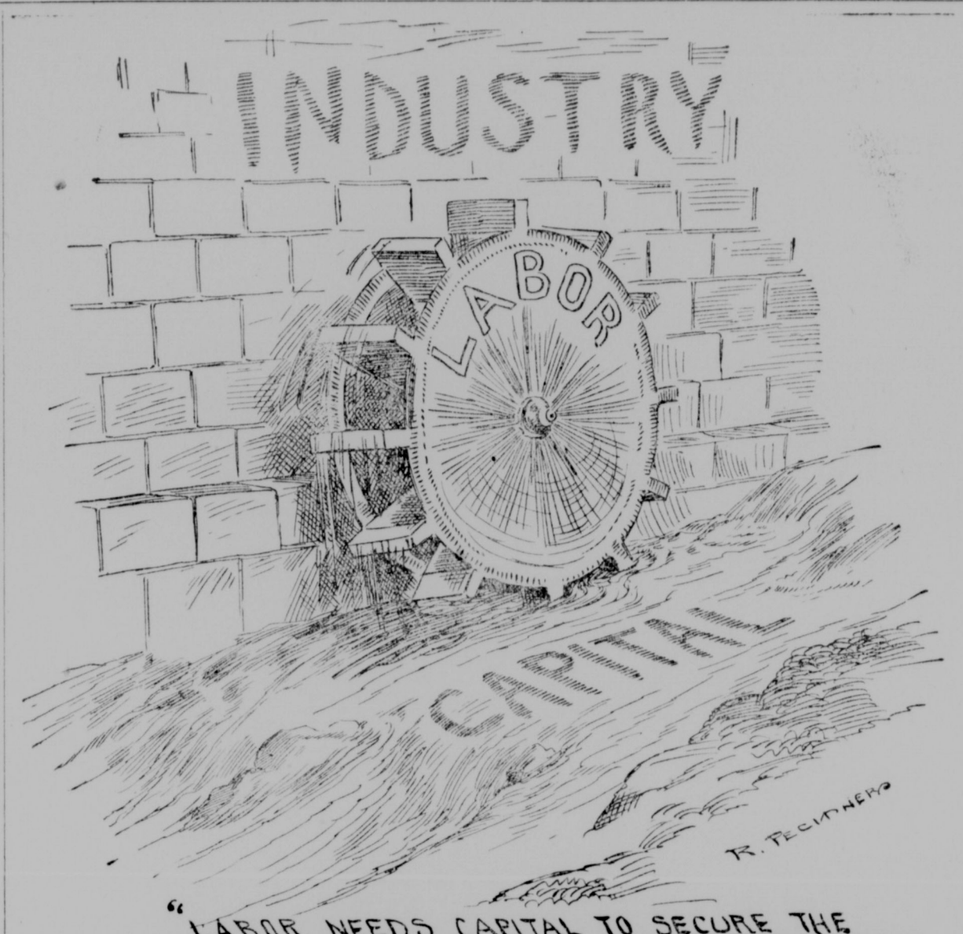
Jack Lessing had been a good fellow in his youth, and Blake had been fond of him, but Jack was not remarkable for personal beauty. He looked like an unkind caricature of Napoleon Bonaparte, and Blake unconsciously assumed that his sister resembled him. This may have been an artifice of fate for Blake's ensnarement. The girl had not an eyelash in common with her brother; she was as pretty as a rose in June.

Blake had formerly been fond of women's society, but had grown quite away from it. Pettus was a woman hater, although a married man and singularly well mated, having secured the nearest counterpart of himself that ever existed in the ranks of femininity. Perhaps because he knew that there was none like Mrs. Pettus the money lender scorned the sex and regarded with suspicion the smallest hint of a romance in the life of an employee.

One day, however, Blake appeared in the office clad in new raiment. He looked an inch and a half taller and ten years younger. The change had been taking place in him gradually during several weeks, but the new clothes were required to complete the revelation. Pettus eyed him narrowly, but said nothing. A few days later he called in one of his spies and had the matter investigated.



"I hear," said he to Blake after receiving the report, "that you have become interested in a young woman."

"Yes, sir," responded Blake. "I am engaged to Miss Amy Lessing."

For years Pettus had had Blake under his thumb, and had very nearly squeezed the human soul out of him, but Pettus had now become a pale figure on tapestry, and Amy Lessing was the one living reality and central influence of all creation. Pettus did not know this, and he proceeded to deliver a lecture against designing women. This is not regarded in polite society as the most delicate response to the announcement of a gentleman's engagement, but Pettus was a cad. His true thought was that this marriage would destroy Blake's usefulness to him, for he would never dare to trust a married man with the valuable secrets which he had been accustomed to permit his confidential clerk to know.

Blake endured a considerable length of this discourse from a mere habit of humility, the product of a gradual loss of self respect in Pettus' employ, but at last the old rascal overstepped the bounds, and Blake's temper exploded for the first time in many years. He consigned Pettus to the subcellar of the bottomless pit and walked out of the office.

Two days later Blake and Miss Lessing were married. They had less than a hundred dollars in money and no employment. Their happiness, however, was worth starving for, if such should be their fate. An intoxicating sense of freedom thrilled them with unimagined joys. Both had been buried hitherto, the girl in a gloomy home, the man under the incubus of Pettus. They had escaped into life and love, and the sun and moon sang to them from the heavens.

Blake did not anticipate any difficulty in finding work. He was known to many prominent men in the Wall street region. He had an intimate acquaintance with securities and credits. Surely he could get a better position than the one which he had left. And, indeed, this proved more easy than his rosiest dreams had pictured it, but an unexpected obstacle barred his way. Men were willing to employ him—they even sought him with offers—but he discovered that every one of them was looking for the secrets of Lemuel Pettus. The instant that Blake revealed a sense of honor in this matter all negotiations were at an end.

He had never before realized the nature of his position with Pettus, although he had occasionally been "approached" by the emissaries of moneyed interests. Now he perceived that if he should spend one week in the industrious distribution of information to those who were eager to pay for it he could live the rest of his days upon the proceeds. On the other hand, his possession of this information was so well known that no one would employ him except upon an understanding that he would do "the right thing."

Moreover, this situation had been foreseen by Pettus, and he had extended the long arm of his influence to close many doors against Blake. Discovering this fact, Blake raged the more against his former employer.

The state of the family exchequer had become desperate when Blake received a note from a lawyer named Hofnagel, who was Pettus' chief adviser. It was delivered to Blake in the tiny apartment which was now so sweet and dear a home, and the tone of the communication seemed particularly offensive in that sacred spot—"Come to my office at once," etc. This was too much for a man just clothed in brand new self esteem.

"MR. HOFNAGEL WANTS TO SEE YOU."

Blake wrote across the lawyer's letter with a heavy blue pencil, "If you have any business with me, state it, and I will take such action as the matter seems to warrant."

Hofnagel was furious, but he needed Blake, so he sent word that he desired to offer him some work which would pay well.

"I think he has quarreled with Mr. Pettus and wants your help against him," said Amy.

"It's probably crooked, whatever it is," said Blake. "I'll decline—a little more politely this time."

Late that afternoon he met one of Hofnagel's clerks on the street, apparently by accident.

"Mr. Hofnagel wants to see you," said the clerk. "There's a document in Mr. Pettus' handwriting, and nobody can read it. Pettus himself has forgotten what it is. You can make $50 in half an hour by translating that scrawl."

Blake believed that there was truth in this. It was a fact that Pettus was often unable to read his own writing and that Blake was the only man on earth who could be depended upon to perform that feat. The Pettus hand is famous.

"I'll consider the matter," said Blake, and at the moment it was his intention to see Hofnagel next day, but he was occupied with the fruitless search for work, and the matter was forgotten until too late.

Blake returned home that afternoon really disheartened, seriously alarmed. He had detected the Pettus influence strongly against him, and his heart was full of bitterness.

To his unspeakable amazement, he found Mrs. Pettus in his sitting room. The rigid, pale old woman in her cheap black gown was doing her miserable best to be affable and to give an air of the usual to this extraordinary incident.

"My husband was very sorry to lose you, Mr. Blake," said she. "He would be glad indeed if you would return to his employment, and I'm sure that all your differences could be adjusted upon a basis that would be very satisfactory to you. At any rate, you and I have no quarrel, and I'm sure you will do me this little favor."

Amy saw her husband's face hardening, and she hastened to the rescue of her guest.

"Mr. Pettus has gone away," said she, "and no one knows where. He wrote a letter to Mr. Hofnagel which doubtless explains everything, but it cannot be read. Meanwhile Mr. Pettus' sister has fallen very ill, and they desire to communicate with him at once."

The fiction of the illness of the sister did not impress Blake, but he lacked the hardihood to refuse this request under his own roof.

"Have you the letter?" he asked, and Mrs. Pettus produced it from her rusty black hand bag with the celerity of a conjurer.

Blake glanced at it, and his face became an inch or two longer than ordinarily. The letter looked as if it had been written in the dark on the back of a bucking horse. The lines ran together; the words trod upon one another's heels.

"This will take me all night," said he, "but you shall have it tomorrow morning if the thing can be read at all. I will send it to Mr. Hofnagel's office."

Mrs. Pettus departed with profuse expressions of gratitude and esteem and promises of remuneration, which were firmly set aside by Blake.

"I will take no money for this," he said. "I regret to say that my feelings for Mr. Pettus are not sufficiently cordial for either friendly or business relations."

"You wrong him; indeed you do," said Mrs. Pettus. "He is really very fond of you."

Immediately after dinner Blake sat down to his task, and for two hours he worked without appreciable result. Amy became so tired watching him that she fell asleep in her chair, and finally Blake picked her up as if she had been a child and carried her to her room.

At 4 o'clock in the morning Blake returned to that room. He was trembling from head to foot with exhaustion and excitement. His face was pale, and his eyes were sunken, but very bright.

Amy was asleep precisely where he had put her. Apparently she had not moved hand or foot. She was very beautiful in her healthy youth and stainless purity of heart.

As Blake turned up the light she stirred and spoke:

"If we can manage the rent we'll be all— Why, George, I was asleep!"

"You were indeed," said he, "and a bad dream you were having. Rent, eh? Well, well, my dear, just cast your eye on this and then talk to me of beastly bills. I guess not."

His manner was so strange that she could not think of anything else. He was obliged to force the sheet of paper into her hands and make her read. It was a copy of the letter which Pettus had written to his lawyer:

Dear Hofnagel—I'm off to Denver. Am writing this in a cab on the way to the station. See George Blake, formerly in my employ, and buy his interest and his wife's in the Calabash mine, Braisted, Colo. They have put in about $3,500 between them and will sell for less. They're hard up. Squeeze them. Make trouble for Blake somehow and force him to sell. Her brother is the other owner. He is sick in a hospital in Denver. Was on his way east. He wired Blake at my office, and I have the telegram; also a letter. I wired my man Hastings in Denver, and he says to come at once. The thing is a fortune. I may be able to get Lessing to sign something if I can fix the hospital doctors, but you must buy the other interest anyhow. Don't fail in this. Wire me Denver, care Hastings. You have several days for this, as Lessing is out of his head, I understand, and can't communicate, but don't lose any time. I'll fix you all right for this. Yours,

PETTUS.

"And at midnight," said Blake in an awestruck voice, "I was on the point of giving up the job. Amy, that letter is undecipherable; nobody can read it. I didn't read it; the Lord did it for me. Why, at midnight I hadn't even found out that my own name was mentioned. Then I got 'Calabash mine, Braisted, Colo.' You see, he made a special effort to write that plainly. From that moment I was inspired."

"We must go to Jack at once. But how? We have no money."

Blake laughed.

"My excellent friend Hofnagel would be glad to give me some," said he. "But don't worry about that. I'll raise it somehow, and we'll start on the 1 o'clock train."

They were in Denver on the third day and found Lessing already beginning to mend. Pettus, alarmed by wire from his lawyer, had fled back to his lair defeated. It was a great stake that he had lost, for the Calabash is a wonderful property. Those who are in a position to know declare that Pettus sometimes paces the floor of his office holding his head in his hands and lamenting the loss of the Calabash. He needed that gold mine, poor man, for he is worth only about $3,000,000.

JUNGLE EYES.

The grewsome jungle depths lay dark one dire and stormy eve.
The haughty tiger slunk in fear and left his lair to grieve.
For he had heard that to these parts a hunter bold had come Whose reputation, rifle made, was more than "going some."
And from the thickets he looked out with thumping heart amiss.
And nature fakirs give report his eyes they looked like this:
(O) (O) (O) (O) (O) (O)

When Teddy hit the jungle trail, his rifle in his clutch,
He plucked the tiger from his haunts, which pleased him overmuch.
Bang! bang! another spiteful shot rang on the evening air.
Click, click! his bold typewriter gave repeated echo there.
And as the night eyes glared at him his soul was filled with bliss,
And as he jotted down the facts the optics looked like this:
($) ($) ($) ($) ($) ($)

—New York Globe.

What It Cost Them.

"How much did it cost you to get into society?" asked Mrs. Newrich.

"Well, I don't know exactly," replied Mrs. Lardleaf. "My husband always keeps track of the expenses, but I think he said he put up about $50,000 to keep the Uppingtons' son-in-law out of the penitentiary that time he embezzled from one of our firms."—Chicago Record-Herald.

An Advance Thought.

Diggs—Windham thinks he has invented a successful flying machine.

Biggs—How far has he been able to fly it?

Diggs—Oh, he hasn't tried it yet. That is why he has invented a successful machine.—Detroit Tribune.

When Bill Took His Discharge.

The Powder Manufacturer—Fancy old Bill of all people going into the gunpowder shed with a lighted candle. I should have thought that that would be the last thing he'd do.

The Workman—Which, properly speakin', it were, sir.—Sketch.

Knew What to Expect.

Waiter—How will you have your steak, sir?

Guest—Have you the same steak you had last week?

Waiter—Yes, sir.

Guest—Then I'll probably have it burned.—Boston Post.

No Cause to Be Thankful.

Tammas (to McTavish, whom he has just pulled out of the water)—Man, Donal! Ye sud be lookin' happy. Are ye no thankfu' ye're life's saved?

McTavish (sourly)—I dinna see nae cause to be thankfu'. The glass o' whusky I had afore I fell intil the watter's gotten fair drooned!—Tatler

Love's Young Dream.

Together they were occupying a rustic seat on the lawn, he and she, and she at least seemed to be unconscious of the flight of time.

"How bright and shimmering the evening star appears tonight, George!" she said.

"Pardon me, my dear," replied George, "but that is the morning star!"—Chicago News.

Looking Ahead.

"I've often wondered," said the thoughtful man, "why they throw old shoes and slippers after a bridal couple, but I think I see the idea now."

"Yes?" asked the other.

"Yes. I suppose the idea is that they'll come in handy for spanking purposes in the future."—Catholic Standard and Times.

Another Thrust.

Mr. Stubb—That old chap Argus had a hundred eyes.

Mrs. Stubb—So they say.

Mr. Stubb—And I suppose, Maria, if I had a hundred eyes I could see everything too.

Mrs. Stubb—Everything but your own faults, John.—Chicago News.

Paternal Ambition.

"Is your boy Josh going to study law?"

"I don't know," answered Farmer Corntossel. "I'm kind o' hopin' that Josh 'll develop financierin' energy enough to git to be one of the fellers that hires the lawyers."—Washington Star.

Her Crowning Glory.

She stood before the mirror
In flowing robe de nuit.
"What could be more alluring,"
She cried, "than what I see—
A figure soft and rounded,
A face of beauty rare,
A neck of snowy whiteness,
A crown of golden hair?"
She paused and added sadly,
"Uneasy lies the head
That wears a crown!" She doffed it
And made a break for bed.

—Brooklyn Life.

A Business Proposition

Did you ever stop to think, Mr. Business Man, that the news of your business is as much a part of the local events as a wedding or a church fair? The ladies are just as much interested in a new fabric you have on the shelves as they are in any home happening. Your store news and announcements in these columns will reach a large circle of eager buyers. This will enable you to sell your goods while they are new and fresh and you will not have to sacrifice later at remnant counter prices. Think it over.

W. H. RAVENSCRAFT, M.D., PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON, OAKLAND, MD.
Residence on North Third street.
Office in McComas Building.

DR. J. E. LEGGE, PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON,
Offers his Services to the citizens of Oakland and vicinity.
Office in McComas Building, Second street

DR. R. F. BARTLETT, DENTIST.
Office in McComas Building, Second street, Oakland, Md.
Special attention given to bridge and crown work.

DR. J. G. ROBINSON, DENTIST, OAKLAND MD.
Office at residence on Liberty street.
GAS ADMINISTERED.

NORMAN S. HEINDELL, ATTORNEY-AT-LAW,
All business given prompt attention.
Office—First National Bank Building.
KLAND, MARYLAND.

GILMOR S. HAMILL, ATTORNEY-AT-LAW AND SOLICITOR IN CHANCERY.
Office in Garrett National Bank Building
Particular attention given to Conveyancing Investigation of land titles and collection of claims. Loans negotiated.

EDWARD H. SINCELL, ATTORNEY-AT-LAW, OAKLAND, MARYLAND.
Will practice in the Courts of Garrett and Allegany counties, the Court of Appeals of Maryland, and the adjoining counties of West Virginia.

Baltimore & Ohio R. R.

Schedule effective June 2, 1907.

OAKLAND.

* Daily. † Daily except Sunday. § Sunday only.
For WASHINGTON, BALTIMORE, PHILADELPHIA & NEW YORK, Depart *12.27 a. m., *6.31 a. m., *4.17 p. m., *8.29 p. m. Arrive *7.12 a. m., *8.33 p. m., *10.26 p. m., *11.54 p. m.
For CUMBDELAND and Way Points, Dep *10.00 a. m., *4.40 p. m. Arrive *9.26 a. m., *7.26 p. m.
For COLUMBUS & CHICAGO, Depart *11.54 p. m. Arrive *6.07 a. m., *4.17 p. m.
For GRAFTON (Accom.), Depart *9.26 a. m., *7.26 p. m. Arrive *10.00 a. m., *4.40 p. m.
For FAIRMONT and WHEELING, Depart *9.26 a. m. (local), *6.31 p. m., *11.54 p. m. Arrive *6.07 a. m., *4.17 p. m., *12.25 night.
For FAIRMONT (Accom.), Depart *7.26 p. m. Arrive *10.00 a. m.
For CINCINNATI, LOUISVILLE and ST. LOUIS, Depart *7.12 a. m., §8.33 p. m., *10.26 p. m. Arrive *12.27 a. m., §6.31 a. m., *8.29 p. m.

FOR SALE.

We will sell at private sale at our farms between Mt. Lake Park and Oakland,

1 Gasoline Engine,

8 horse-power, made by the International Harvester Co. Almost new and in perfect running order. Will be sold for $75.

1 Hay Bailer,

operated by horse-power. Makes standard size bales.

For further information call on or write to

THE H. WEBER & SONS CO.,
Oakland, Md.

Oakland Pharmacy

JOS. E. HARNED, Proprietor.

Drugs, Chemicals, Stationery, Cigars

Cameras and Photo Supplies

GETTY BROWNING, CIVIL AND MINING ENGINEERING.

Office—"Mountain Democrat Building,"
OAKLAND, MARYLAND,
Real Estate Bought and Sold.
Particular Attention Given Railroad & Mine Surveying.
Surveys made for Town Sites, Sewerage and Water Works. Prompt attention given Land Surveying. Both Phones

Land for Sale.

We have for sale the following valuable tracts of land:

One Military Lot of 50 acres, a small portion of which is under cultivation. All good land, and every acre tillable. Watered by several good springs and a never failing small run. Contains some good timber. One-half mile from R. R. siding, and one and one-half miles from Oakland.

Also part of two Military Lots containing about 50 acres. This property is directly East of Oakland, on the South side of the B. & O. R. R. siding on the North side of tracks. Contains valuable grazing land, a portion of which is in cultivation. Valuable R. R. frontage.

Also 10 acres suitable for building sites, just East of Oakland on the North side of the Oakland and Mt. Lake Park road.

For further information, address

THE H. WEBER & SONS CO.,
Oakland, Md.

THE REPUBLICAN
Job Printing Department

WITHIN the past year the increased made upon the Job Printing Department of The Republican necessitated many improvements, and to meet the requirements of our rapidly increasing business an addition of considerable proportions to our present building is in contemplation; new type and improved machinery must be purchased—but in the meantime all orders will be executed in a most satisfactory manner.

The products of our Job Printery are all models in the class—our customers are numerous and well satisfied, and wnen ordering

Statements, Vouchers,
Envelopes, Cards,
Sale Bills, Posters,
Bank Forms, Billheads,
Letterheads, Tags,
Programs, Folders,

and

Letter Press Printing of all Kinds

They are confident that the work will be Satisfactory in every particular---in WORKMANSHIP, PRICE and PAPER.

WE MAKE A SPECIALTY OF PRINTING

Lumber and Coal Companies' Forms
Bank Stationery, Hotel Prospectus,
Lodge and Society Laws,
Reports, Etc.

It will cost you nothing to submit your Printing to us. Estimates will be cheerfully furnished you free. It must be borne in mind, however, that we do not do "cheap" printing, but we do Good Printing which has a par value of one hundred cents for every dollar invested in the product of THE REPUBLICAN PRINTERY.

THE REPUBLICAN
Job Printing Departm't
OAKLAND, MARYLAND.

HUNTING THE ELK

BY

THEODORE ROOSEVELT

[Copyright, 1885, by G. P. Putnam's Sons. Published under arrangement with G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York and London.]

ONE day Merrifield and I went out together and had a rather exciting chase after some bull elk. The previous evening, toward sunset, I had seen three bulls trotting off across an open glade toward a great stretch of forest and broken ground, up near the foot of the rocky peaks. Next morning early we started off to hunt through this country. The walking was hard work, especially up and down the steep cliffs, covered with slippery pine needles; or among the windfalls, where the rows of dead trees lay piled up across one another in the wildest confusion. We saw nothing until we came to a large patch of burnt ground, where we at once found the soft, black soil marked up by elk hoofs; nor had we penetrated into it more than a few hundred yards before we came to tracks made but a few minutes before, and almost instantly afterward saw three bull elk, probably those I had seen on the preceding day. We had been running briskly up-hill through the soft, heavy loam, in which our feet made no noise, but slipped and sank deeply; as a consequence, I was all out of breath and my hand so unsteady that I missed my first shot.

Elk, however, do not vanish with the instantaneous rapidity of frightened deer, and these three trotted off in a direction quartering to us. I doubt if I ever went through more violent exertion than in the next ten minutes. We raced after them at full speed, opening fire; I wounded all three, but none of the wounds were immediately disabling. They trotted on and we panted afterwards, slipping on the wet earth, pitching headlong over charred stumps, leaping on dead logs that broke beneath our weight, more than once measuring our full length on the ground, halting and firing whenever we got a chance. At last one bull fell; we passed him by after the others which were still running up-hill. The sweat streamed into my eyes and made furrows in the sooty mud that covered my face, from having fallen full length down on the burnt earth; I sobbed for breath as I toiled at a shambling trot after them, as nearly done out as could well be. At this moment they turned down-hill. It was a great relief; a man who is too done up to go a steep up-hill can still run fast enough down; with a last spurt I closed in near enough to fire again; one elk fell; the other went off at a walk. We passed the second elk and I kept on alone after the third, not able to go at more than a slow trot myself, and too much winded to dare risk a shot at any distance. He got out of the burnt patch, going into some thick timber in a deep ravine; I closed pretty well, and rushed after him into a thicket of young evergreens. Hardly was I in when there was a scramble and bounce among them and I caught a glimpse of a yellow body moving out to one side; I ran out toward the edge and fired through the twigs at the moving beast. Down it went, but when I ran up, to my disgust I found that I had jumped and killed, in my haste, a black-tail deer, which must have been already roused by the passage of the wounded elk. I at once took up the trail of the latter again, but after a little while the blood grew less, and ceased, and I lost the track; nor could I find it, hunt as hard as I might. The poor beast could not have gone five hundred yards; yet we never found the carcass.

Soon the venison steaks were broiling.

Then I walked slowly back past the deer I had slain by so curious a mischance, to the elk. The first one shot down was already dead. The second was only wounded, though it could not rise. When it saw us coming it sought to hide from us by laying its neck flat on the ground, but when we came up close it raised its head and looked proudly at us, the heavy mane bristling up on the neck, while its eyes glared and its teeth grated together. I felt really sorry to kill it. Though these were both well-known elks, their antlers, of ten points, were small, twisted, and ill-shaped; in fact hardly worth preserving, except to call to mind a chase in which during a few minutes I did as much downright hard work as it has often fallen to my lot to do. The burnt earth had blackened our faces and hands till we looked like negroes.

The finest bull, with the best head that I got, was killed in the midst of very beautiful and grand surroundings. We had been hunting through a great pine wood which ran up to the edge of a broad canyon-like valley, bounded by sheer walls of rock. There were fresh tracks of elk about, and we had been advancing up wind with even more than our usual caution when, on stepping out into a patch of open ground, near the edge of the cliff, we came upon a great bull, beating and thrashing his antlers against a young tree, about eighty yards off. He stopped and faced us for a second, his mighty antlers thrown in the air, as he held his head aloft. Behind him towered the tall and sombre pines, while at his feet the jutting crags overhung the deep chasm below, that stretched off between high walls of barren and snow-streaked rocks, the evergreens clinging to their sides, while along the bottom the rapid torrent gathered in places into black and sullen mountain lakes. As the bull turned to run I struck him just behind the shoulder; he reeled to the death-blow, but staggered gamely on a few rods into the forest before sinking to the ground, with my second bullet through his lungs.

Two or three days later than this I killed another bull, nearly as large, in the same patch of woods in which I had slain the first. A bear had been feeding on the carcass of the latter, and, after a vain effort to find his den, we determined to beat through the woods and try to start him up. Accordingly, Merrifield, the teamster, and myself took parallel courses some three hundred yards apart, and started at one end to walk through to the other. I doubt if the teamster much wished to meet a bear alone (while nothing would have given Merrifield more hearty and unaffected enjoyment than to have encountered an entire family), and he gradually edged in pretty close to me. Where the woods became pretty open I saw him suddenly lift his rifle and fire, and immediately afterwards a splendid bull elk trotted past in front of me, evidently untouched, the teamster having missed. The elk ran to the other side of two trees that stood close together some seventy yards off, and stopped for a moment to look round. Kneeling down I fired at the only part of his body I could see between the two trees, and sent a bullet into his flank. Away he went, and I after, running in my moccasins over the moss and pine needles for all there was in me. If a wounded elk gets fairly started he will go at a measured trot for many hours, and even if mortally hurt may run twenty miles before falling; while at the same time he does not start off at full speed, and will often give an active hunter a chance for another shot as he turns and changes his course preparatory to taking a straight line. So I raced along after the elk at my very best speed for a few hundred feet, and then got another shot as he went across a little glade, injuring his hip somewhat. This made it all right for me, and another hundred yards' burst took me up to where I was able to put a ball in a fatal spot, and the grand old fellow sank down and fell over on his side.

No sportsman can ever feel much keener pleasure and self-satisfaction than when, after a successful stalk and good shot, he walks up to a grand elk lying dead in the cool shade of the great evergreens, and looks at the massive and yet finely moulded form, and at the mighty antlers which are to serve in the future as the trophy and proof of his successful skill. Still-hunting the elk on the mountains is as noble a kind of sport as can well be imagined; there is nothing more pleasant and enjoyable, and at the same time it demands that the hunter shall bring into play many manly qualities. There have been few days of my hunting life that were so full of unalloyed happiness as were those spent on the Bighorn range. From morning till night I was on foot, in cool, bracing air, now moving silently through the vast, melancholy pine forests, now treading the brink of high, rocky precipices, always amid the most grand and beautiful scenery; and always after as noble and lordly game as is to be found in the Western world.

Since writing the above I killed an elk near my ranch; probably the last of his race that will ever be found in our neighborhood. It was just before the fall round-up. An old hunter, who was under some obligation to me, told me that he had shot a cow elk and had seen the tracks of one or two others not more than twenty-five miles off, in a place where the cattle rarely wandered. Such a chance was not to be neglected and, on the first free day, one of my Elk-horn foremen, Will Dow by name, and myself, took our hunting horses and started off, accompanied by the ranch wagon, in the direction of the probable haunts of the doomed deer. Towards nightfall we struck a deep spring pool, near by the remains of an old Indian encampment. It was at the head of a great basin, several miles across, in which we believed the game to lie. The wagon was halted and we pitched camp; there was plenty of dead wood, and soon the venison steaks were broiling over the coals raked from beneath the crackling cottonwood logs, while in the narrow valley the ponies grazed almost within the circle of the flickering fire-light. It was in the cool and pleasant month of September; and long after going to bed we lay awake under the blankets watching the stars that on clear nights always shine with such intense brightness over the lonely Western plains.

We were up and off by the gray of the morning. It was a beautiful hunting day; the sundogs hung in the red dawn; the wind hardly stirred over the crisp grass; and though the sky was cloudless yet the weather had that queer, smoky, hazy look that it is most apt to take on during the time of the Indian summer. From a high spur of the table-land we looked out far and wide over a great stretch of broken country, the brown of whose hills and valleys was varied everywhere by patches of dull red and vivid yellow, tokens that the trees were already putting on the dress with which they greet the mortal ripening of the year. The deep and narrow but smooth ravines running up towards the edges of the plateaus were heavily wooded, the bright green tree-tops rising to a height they rarely reach in the barren plains-country; and the rocky sides of the sheer gorges were clad with a thick growth of dwarfed cedars, while here and there the trailing Virginia creepers burned crimson among their sombre masses.

There was a crash and movement in the timber below me.

We hunted stealthily up-wind, across the line of the heavily timbered coulées. We soon saw traces of our quarry; old tracks at first, then the fresh footprints of a single elk—a bull, judging by the size—which had come down to drink at a miry alkali pool, its feet slipping so as to leave the marks of the false hoofs in the soft soil. We hunted with painstaking and noiseless care for many hours; at last as I led old Manitou up to look over the edge of a narrow ravine, there was a crash and movement in the timber below me, and immediately afterwards I caught a glimpse of a great bull elk trotting up through the young trees as he gallantly breasted the steep hill-side opposite. When clear of the woods, and directly across the valley from me, he stopped and turned half round, throwing his head in the air to gaze for a moment at the intruder. My bullet struck too far back, but, nevertheless, made a deadly wound, and the elk went over the crest of the hill at a wild, plunging gallop. We followed the bloody trail for a quarter of a mile, and found him dead in a thicket. Though of large size, he yet had but small antlers, with few points.

The Sphinx and Success.

The ambitious young man approached the sphinx and said, "Oh, tell me, what rule makes for success?"

"I will, sir," said the sphinx, with a slight smile. "No man is a success alone. He must have his associates, his assistants. Select a capable general manager and make him responsible to you for everything. Choose for him a lieutenant, holding him responsible to your general manager. For the lieutenant get a division superintendent under command of the lieutenant, under him an assistant, and under him an assistant, and under the assistant-assistant a helper, each in turn responsible to the one above. Follow this to the last and lowest man. You yourself have no worry, no frets, and need only to draw the dividends. You may even live in Europe."

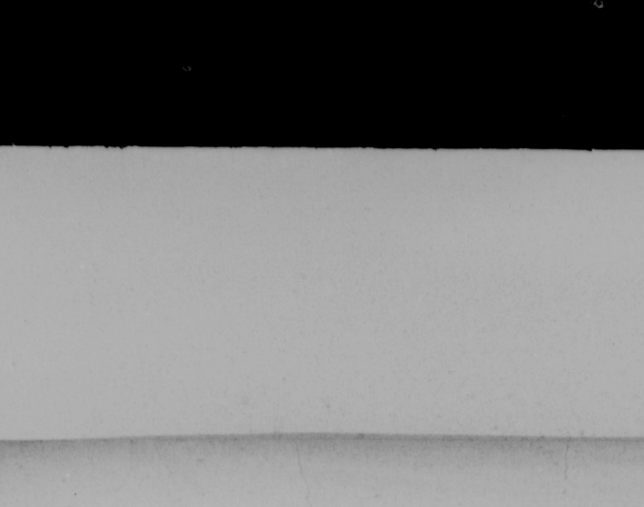
"But," asked the ambitious young man, puzzled, "how am I to be able to select the right men?"

And then the sphinx smiled broadly.

TAFT CAPTURES THE PRESIDENCY WITH 288 ELECTORAL VOTES

OHIOAN HAILED THE VICTOR WITH PLURALITIES GREATER THAN ROOSEVELT'S IN MANY REPUBLICAN STRONGHOLDS—HE HAS CARRIED PRACTICALLY THE ENTIRE EAST AND MIDDLE WEST.

THE ELECTION IS BIG WITH SIGNIFICENCE—EVERYWHERE THAT MR. BRYAN AND MR. GOMPERS MADE A SPECIAL EFFORT TO DEFEAT THE MAN HE HAD PLACED ON THE UNFAIR LIST HE CAME TO GRIEF—IT WAS THE FIRST EFFORT OF ORGANIZED LABOR TO ALIGN ITSELF WITH A POLITICAL PARTY, AND IT WILL PROBABLY BE THE LAST.



EXECUTIVE HEADS OF NEXT NATIONAL ADMINISTRATION.

New York, Nov. 4.—It is the same old Bryan tidal wave. A tidal wave swept William Howard Taft into the white house just as it swept William McKinley thither in 1896 and 1900.

Mr. Taft's majority in the Electoral college will be at least 100. Gov. Hughes has been re-elected in New York by a plurality of approximately 45,000. The house of representatives is safely Republican. Even "Uncle Joe" Cannon, despite the efforts of Mr. Gompers has snatched himself like a brand from the burning and is re-elected in the Danville (Ill.) district by a plurality between 6,000 and 7,000.

The victory for the administration and the Roosevelt policies is overwhelming. In a word, Mr. Taft has carried practically the entire east, from Maine to Virginia and from the Atlantic to the Alegnanies. He has carried practically the entire middle west. His victory in Illinois is so great that one almost fails to credit the reports. Cook county, in which the city of Chicago is situated and in which Mr. Bryan finally believed he had started a political revolution, was carried by Taft by upward of 40,000 plurality. In the state Taft beat Bryan almost two to one.

Michigan, Wisconsin and Minnesota have all gone heavily for Taft. Both the Dakotas are Republican on the national ticket.

Kansas is Republican by at least 20,000.

Taft has easily even given the Democratic nominee a close contest in the border state of Kentucky. Indeed so easily has the Republican candidate walked in that one wonders why the Republicans were so badly scared, nearly working Mr. Taft and the white house stenographer to death and generally bending every energy to make the victory so emphatic.

The election is big with significance. Speaker Cannon is re-elected; Representative Dalzell is re-elected; Representative Payne is re-elected. Everywhere that Mr. Bryan and Mr. Gompers made a special effort to defeat the man he had placed upon the unfair list he came to grief. It was the first effort of organized labor to align itself with a political party, and it will probably be the last.

Another significant thing in the election is its probable effect on the fortune of Tammany hall. Tammany has failed utterly to make good its promises to Mr. Bryan regarding the Democratic vote in this city. That Bryan should not have polled a very large vote here, approximating 100,000 more than Taft, will be a bitter disappointment to all the Bryan followers. The day before the election a delegation of enthusiastic supporters of Bryan waited upon one of the most prominent men in Tammany hall and plainly told him that if Tammany did not give Mr. Bryan a very large plurality in New York vengeance would be taken on Tammany at the next mayoralty election and the Bryanites would be used to elect a Republican mayor.

This phase of voting was causing the gravest apprehension to the more intelligent and conservative members of the wigwam.

There has been a slaughter of Republican gubernatorial candidates in states which Taft has carried. Olley Arnold, Democrat, is elected in Rhode Island; Gov. Burke is re-elected in North Dakota; Gov. Johnson is re-elected in Minnesota. Some of the pluralities for Taft are enormous. Maine gives him 50,000; Vermont, 18,000; Massachusetts, 100,000; New Hampshire, 20,000; Wisconsin, 75,000; Michigan 100,000; Illinois, 200,000; Pennsylvania, 350,000.

There has also been an increase in the Republican vote in the southern states. Twenty thousand more men voted for Taft in Florida than for Roosevelt four years ago. Virginia's plurality for Bryan has fallen to 18,000 and the Republicans have gained a member of congress. There has also been a considerable gain in the Republican vote in Tennessee, Georgia and North Carolina.

New Jersey, like New York, has increased the Republican plurality. It gave Roosevelt 82,000 in 1904. Taft carries it by more than that.

A dramatic feature of the fight for the governor of New York was the last rally of the bookmakers and racing men to Chanler. Coming on a special train from Baltimore Monday night they drove the betting odds on Hughes almost to even. When the returns began to come in from New York city indicating a large vote for Chanler they threw thousands of dollars into the betting ring. As the night grew on the odds changed with the growing pluralities for Hughes up the state, and, when the result was finally settled, most of the beting men were as nearly brake as they ever have been on an election.

The result in Ohio was most emphatic. Although the early returns indicated the state might be in doubt the latest estimates are that Taft has carried it by a plurality of anywhere from 100,000 upward. Cleveland, Cincinnati, Toledo and Dayton, all large centers, gave a very heavy vote for Mr. Taft.

Indiana, the scene of one of the most desperates struggles in the campaign, has gone for Taft by a plurality of more than 10,000. In this state, as well as in Ohio, the shift of support from Bryan to Taft, on the influence of President Roosevelt's letters and Mr. Taft's pledges, it is said caused the final determination in favor of the Republican electors.

PLURALITY OF TAFT IS 10,000

In Indiana—Marshall Looks Like Victor Over Watson.

Indianapolis, Ind., Nov. 4.—Incomplete returns from throughout the state indicate that the Republicans have been struck by a landslide, and that their nominee for governor, James E. Watson, has been defeated by 8,000.

The same returns indicate that Judge Taft has carried Indiana by a plurality exceeding 10,000. The returns show that Judge Taft's strength was a great disappointment to the Republican organization in particular, and to his fellowers generally, who had been counting on his winning an easy victory by a plurality ranging from 25,000 to 40,000.

Walk Chairman Goodrich and his associates have not authorized any statement giving Indiana to Thomas R. Marshall, the Democratic nominee for governor they stated privately that he has carried the state.

The Democratic leaders are insisting that Marshall has carried Indiana by a plurality exceeding 15,000, and that the result, so far as Taft and Bryan are concerned, is in doubt.

It looks now as if the Republicans have lost control of the legislature on joint ballot, which would mean the retirement of Senator James A. Hemenway, of Boonville.

The worst losses the Republicans have sustained are in counties like Marion, Vigo, Vanderburgh, Allen, Madison, Delaware, Wayne and Tippecanoe.

The reports from 900 precincts, covering practically every section of the state, show that Taft's total vote is 126,362 and Bryan's 123,882, Taft's plurality being 2,460. There are 3,245 precincts in the state.

Watson's vote in the same 900 precincts is 111,609 and Marshall's 118,502 Marshall's plurality being 6,893.

On the basis of latest returns Republican Chairman Goodrich believes that Watson has a chance to pull through by a very close margin.

BRYAN CONFIDENT TO VERY LAST

But Realized His Prospects When Told He Had Lost New York.

Fairview Lincoln, Neb., Nov. 4.—William J. Bryan received at his home, Fairview, the returns which early told him for the third time he had been defeated in the greatest ambition of his life. Confident of victory to the very lasf, he was not prepared to believe that his cause was lost until the pluralities of his Republican opponent piled in such proportions as to have no room for doubt.

When the early returns came in he made particular inquiries regarding [illegible] Democratic vote in 1904, but as the figures continued to be received he relied on Greater New York to offset the heavy left vote above the Harlem river. Even in that he was bitterly disappointed, and he soon realized that the state was hopelessly gone, and with it his prospects of being elected.

According to the predictions of his managers he was led to believe that he would be elected without the aid of the Empire state, and he turned his inquiries toward Ohio and Indiana. The heavy Democratic gain in the Thirteenth Ohio district was a source that to him indicated that the prophecies that Ohio would go Democratic would be fulfilled. He also got much comfort out of a telegram from John E. Lamb, member of the advisory committee from Indiana, stating that the indications were that Indiana was probably Democratic.

After nearly three hours spent in his library, Mr. Bryan came upstairs and talked to the newspaper men and others who had assembled in the "work room." He read some further returns, but they told the same story of defeat, and he announced that he would not have any statement to give out Tuesday night.

HARRIS HOLDS OWN STATE.

Taft Carries Ohio By At Least 100,000.

Columbus, O., Nov. 4.—Though the returns are the slenderist for a quarter of a century, yet they are sufficient to indicate that Ohio has stood by William H. Taft for president, contrary to the country-wide belief that it was doubtful.

His plurality, as shown by the handful of precincts that have been heard from, will be in the neighborhood of 100,000.

The indications are that he has carried the great labor centers of Cincinnati, Cleveland, Columbus and Toledo, and that the agricultural districts have failed to return to the Bryan column with the expected strength.

Harmon, the democratic nominee for governor, is running ahead of the vote given for John M. Pattison, the nominee of the same party in 1906, who carried the state by 42,000. The lead, however, is dwindling with the returns from the rural counties and it is a fair presumption that Andrew L. Harris, the Republican nominee, will be elected by a safe plurality.

Because of the streaked character of the voting the returns upon the congressional contests are confusing. It is likely that Nicholas Longworth, the son-in-law of President Roosevelt, will be returned in the First district by a small plurality.

Taft Wins in Hamilton County.

Cincinnati, Nov. 4.—Seventy-three scattering precincts out of 321 received by the local board of elections indicate that Taft has carried Hamilton county by 5,000 or 6,000; that Harmon's plurality in the county will be from 10,000 to 12,000 and that the county ticket is in doubt, with probabilities favoring the Democrats.

DEMOCRATS WIN IN KENTUCKY

And Captured Nine of the Congressmen.

Louisville, Ky., Nov. 4.—Chairman Ben Johnson, of the Democratic state committee, claimed the state for Bryan by a majority of 18,000 votes. He said that D. E. Edwards in the Eleventh district was the only congressman the Republicans had elected and that Democrats would represent districts in congress next time.

Returns to Democratic state headquarters from Western Kentucky are coming in slowly, but they show enormous Democratic gains wherever reported.

Chairman Johnson believes that Kehoe has been elected over Bennet in the Ninth district, and that A. E. James had been defeated by R. Y. Thomas, Jr., in the Third.

"The victory in Kentucky," said Johnson, "shows what United Democracy can do when it goes after things, and that Kentucky is safely a Democratic state.

At Republican headquarters it was claimed that Congressman Bennet, in the Ninth; Langley, in the Tenth, and Edwards, in the Eleventh, had been re-elected, and that the Democrats had won the state and elected R. Y. Thomas in the Third.

TAFT CARRIES WEST VIRGINIA

By 20,000 Plurality—Governor Also Likely Republican.

Charleston, W. Va., Nov. 4.—Conservative estimates by leaders of the Republican party, based on incomplete returns received at the state capital, gave the seven electoral votes of West Virginia to Judge Taft by 20,000 plurality. They also claim W. E. Glasscock is elected governor over Louis Bennett by a plurality only a few thousand less than that received by Judge Taft.

Democratic leaders, while admitting that the state will probably land in the Taft column, are not inclined to base his plurlity at more than 10,000 and assert that the gubernatorial race is in doubt, with the chances favorable to the election of Louis Bennett.

West Virginia will, in all probability, return a solid Republican delegation to the national house of representatives.

Owing to the fact that West Virginia is a mountainous country it is almost an impossibility to secure returns that would justify an accurate forecast of the gubernatorial race between Glasscock and Bennett, but the counties from which returns have been received show that Glasscock is not running far behind Judge Taft.

Kanawha county, the largest in the state, will give Taft and Glasscock 1,500 majority. Clay county, which four years ago gave Cornwell (Dem.) 209 over Dawson (Rep.), has returned a majority of 50 for Taft and Glasscock. Kanawha county gave Roosevelt 3,100 plurality and gave the Democratic candidate for governor a plurality of 700 four years ago.

TENNESSEE.

Memphis, Tenn., Nov. 4.—Returns from a majority of counties in Tennessee indicate a plurality of from 15,000 to 20,000 for Bryan. Gov. Patterson will be elected a second term over his Republican rival, George N. Tillman, by a small majority. The usual solid Democratic congressmen will be returned.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Philadelphia, Nov. 4.—Republican leaders claim Pennsylvania for Taft by more than 300,000 plurality. The legislature, they claim, will be overwhelmingly Republican.

OKLAHOMA.

Oklahoma City, Nov. 4.—The Democratic state chairman, Thompson, claims the state for Bryan by 40,000.

VERMONT.

White River Junction, Vt., Nov. 4.—William H. Taft carried Vermont by about 27,000. Returns from all the cities and 144 of the 240 towns give Taft 27,531, Bryan 8,345.

MISSOURI.

St. Louis, Nov. 4.—Scattered returns indicate that Bryan has carried Missouri by 35,000 plurality and that Cowherd (Dem.) has defeated Hadley for governor by 20,000.

ILLINOIS.

Chicago, Nov. 4.—Indications now are that Taft has carried the state by 170,000. Deneen, the Republican candidate for governor, has been elected by approximately 100,000. The legislature, which elects a United States senator, will be strongly Republican.

GEORGIA.

Atlanta, Ga., Nov. 4.—Democratic candidates for congress elected in all of the Georgia districts, numbering 11. Re-election of United States senator Clay (Dem.) is assured. No state offices were involved.

WISCONSIN.

Milwaukee, Nov. 4.—The Sentinel claims the state for Taft and Davidson by an estimated plurality of 75,000.

MINNESOTA.

St. Paul, Nov. 4.—The indications based on scattering returns are that Johnson (Dem.) for governor, carries Railway county (St. Paul) by 6,500 and the state by at least 25,000. The returns so far received indicate that Taft will carry Minnesota by at least 80,000.

States For Bryan.

Alabama, 11; Arkansas, 9; Florida, 5; Georgia, 13; Kentucky, 13; Louisiana, 9; Mississippi, 10; Missouri, 18; Nebraska, 8; Nevada, 3; North Carolina, 12; Oklahoma, 7; South Carolina, 9; Tennessee, 12; Texas, 18; Virginia, 12.

For Taft.

California, 10; Connecticut, 7; Delaware, 3; Idaho, 3; Illinois, 27; Indiana, 15; Iowa, 13; Kansas 10; Maine, 6; Massachusetts 16; Michigan 14; Minnesota, 11; New Hampshire, 4; New Jersey, 12; New York, 39; North Dakota 4; Ohio, 23; Oregon, 4; Pennsylvania, 54; Rhode Island, 4; South Dakota, 4; Utah, 3; Vermont, 4, Washington, 5.

NEBRASKA.

Lincoln, Neb., Nov. 4.—Nebraska probably has gone Democratic by a decisive plurality, with not enough returns on governor on which to make an estimate. Bryan has made slight gains in the country precincts, and in the cities the Democratic gain is heavy. Bryan carried Lincoln by overturning a normal Republican plurality of 1,500.

LOUISIANA.

New Orleans, La., Nov. 4.—Bryan swept Louisiana Tuesday, the returns indicating a majority of 40,000. Provosty (Dem.) was elected supreme court justice and Shelby Taylor (Dem.) was elected railroad commissioner.

CALIFORNIA.

Los Angeles, Nov. 4.—The Republicans claim the state by 45,000. It is undoubtedly safe for Taft. An unusually heavy vote was cast over the entire state. In Los Angeles Congressman James McLaughlin (Rep.) was re-elected by a greatly reduced vote.

NEVADA.

Reno, Nev., Nov. 4.—The Democratic candidate carried Nevada by about 2,000. Bryan was very popular in some of the mining districts, Taft's popularity lay in the larger towns, but his influence was not powerful enough to carry the Republican party to victory.

UTAH.

Salt Lake City, Nov. 4.—Taft won out in this state with a majority of 10,000. The streets of the capital are thronged with people and every one is joining in the noisy sports of horn blowing and pastimes that go hand in hand with the celebration in honor of the election of a new president.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Raleigh, Nov. 4.—There will probably be a slight reduction from the Democratic majority of two years ago in the state. The majority probably will be about 40,000. The Eighth and Tenth Congressional districts are for Republican victory.

ARKANSAS.

Little Rock, Nov. 4.—Bryan won out with flying colors in the state of Arkansas and his plurality will exceed 20,000. A solid Democratic congressional delegation has been elected.

CONNECTICUT.

New Haven, Nov. 4.—Taft has carried Conecticut by more than 200,000 votes and George L. Lilley, the Republican candidate for governor will carry the state by over 10,000. All the Republican congressmen were elected.

FLORIDA.

Jacksonville, Nov. 4.—While the count has been slow in this state there is no doubt that Bryan has carried it by 25,000. All of the Democratic congressmen have been elected. Albert W. Gilchrist is elected governor.

THE BEADS.

As Mame approached young womanhood
She balked at scrubbing floors and stairs.
The gossips of the block averred
That she was getting uppish airs.
She blossomed out one Sunday morn,
A thing of feathers, bows and fuss,
While in her ears the neighbors saw
Two pearl drop jewels hanging thus:

o o

She soon became the reigning belle
Of all the district thereabout.
Her dresses at the barkeeps' ball
Put all the other girls to rout.
Her father—but we'll let that wait
Until with his expense we reck.
The neighbors gazed in great surprise
At beads like these about her neck:

oooooooooooooooo

A grand display of wealth she made,
Like women of a higher plane
Who good the men folks on to toil
And glitter with their hard earned gain.
Mame's father labored with a hod.
The beads that framed the showy miss
Cost daily beads upon his brow
That stood out as he slaved like this:

oooooooooooooo
oooooooooooooooo
oooooooooooooo
oooooooooo

—Charles R. Barnes in Puck.

Leather Hinges.

In the town of Ballinagh lived a butcher who was famed for selling tough meat. A countryman went in one day to purchase some.

"Well, my good man," asked the butcher, "is it for frying or boiling you want it?"

"Neither," replied John, "it's to make hinges for the stable door."—Tit-Bits.

Garge and the Pig.

"Well, Garge, what did the pig fetch?"

"Not near so much as I expected. I never thought it would."—Tatler.

The Vehicle of Uncertainty.

"Where shall we go for our wedding journey, dearest?"

He hesitated.

"Let's leave it to fate, darling."

"Good," she cried. "We'll start without knowing where we are going to stop."

So they went in a balloon.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

The Difference.

"Well," said the optimistic boarder, "there's one thing about our boarding house—you can eat as much as you like there."

"Of course, same as ours," replied the pessimistic one. "You can eat as much as you like, but there's never anything you could possibly like."—Philadelphia Press.

Always Capsizing.

Rodrick—Jibb's yacht capsized again. Why, it must be topheavy. What's it called?

Van Albert—Cupid.

Rodrick—Cupid, eh? Well, he ought to call it Lovers' Quarrel.

Van Albert—Why so?

Rodrick—Because it soon blows over.—Town Topics.

The Weight and the Day.

"It's silly for any one to suspect me of cheating," said the tricky coal man. "My weight is honest as the day."

"H'm!" remarked the housekeeper. "The days are getting shorter and shorter as the cold weather approaches."—Catholic Standard and Times.

Lost His Title.

Simkins—You say that little man was formerly the lightweight champion?

Timkins—Yes.

Simkins—How did he lose the title?

Timkins—Oh, he didn't lose it. He merely sold his grocery and retired.—Detroit Tribune.

His Scheme.

"Gaddie certainly is stuck on himself."

"Oh, I don't know. He's always running himself down."

"Of course. That's the only way he can keep on talking about himself and get people to listen to him."—Minneapolis Journal.

His Friend's Opinion.

"I have been married four times, and yet I often fear that I do not understand women."

"The fact that you have been married four times ought to remove from your mind all doubt concerning the matter."—Chicago Record-Herald.

The Reason.

Mr. Prairie Dog—You look pretty cross this morning.

Mrs. Prairie Dog—Humph! Had to keep my turtle doves all night to keep the baby quiet.—Houston Magazine.

The man Who Makes A STUDY OF HIS APPEARANCE

Is the man who best appreciates the detail of the tailoring we turn out. The workmanship passes without a question, the fit is naturally a matter of course, but the shape we mould into the garments give them a character that finishes them off and makes the satisfaction of the owner complete.

All this is a bid for your next tailoring order. We know we can make you the best clothes you ever wore. We want you to know it. That order is the best and only sure way to settle the question.

JAMES BROCK,
Dixon Building,
Oakland, Maryland.

ORDER NISI.

Jacob S. Miller, Mortgagee, vs. C. J. Yoder and wife.
No. 1565 Equity. In the Circuit Court for Garrett County, Maryland.

Ordered this fifth day of October in the year nineteen hundred and eight, by the Circuit Court for Garrett county, sitting in equity, that the sale made and reported in the above cause by Jacob S. Miller, Mortgagee, be ratified and confirmed, unless cause to the contrary thereof be shown on or before the 16th day of November, 1908; provided a copy of this order be published in some newspaper published in Garrett county, once a week for three successive weeks before the 16th day of November, 1908.

The report states the amount of sale to be $3200.00.

E. Z. TOWER, Clerk.

True Copy—test:
E. Z. TOWER, Clerk.

Order of Publication.

Alice Armstrong vs. John Armstrong.
No. 1512 Equity. In the Circuit court for Garrett county, Maryland.

The object of this suit is to obtain a decree, a vinculo matrimonii, the plaintiff from the defendent.

The bill states that the plaintiff and defendant were united by the Rev. Harris in Tucker county, West Virginia, at Easter, 1899, and that they resided together in the State of West Virginia, until the month of March, 1908, and that though the conduct of plaintiff toward the said John Armstrong, her husband, has always been kind, affectionate and above reproach, the said John Armstrong, in the month of March, 1908, without just cause or reason, abandoned and deserted her, while they were living in Nicholas county, West Virginia, and has declared his intention to live with her no longer, and that such abandonment has continued uninterruptedly for at least three years and is deliberate and final, and the separation of the parties beyond any reasonable expectation of reconciliation, and that immediately after such abandonment and desertion, the plaintiff removed to Garrett County, Maryland, where she has since made her home and supported herself and three children by manuel labor, and the bill further states that the plaintiff and defendant have had three children born to them from said marriage, the oldest, Mary, is now past sixteen years of age, Charles, past thirteen years of age, and Sarah J., now past ten years of age, the custody of which youngest child the plaintiff prays may be awarded to her. The bill then prays that the plaintiff may be divorced, a vinculo matrimonii, from the said defendant, John Armstrong, for the custody of said youngest child of the plaintiff, and for general relief, and an order of publication against the defendant, who is alleged to be a non resident of the State of Marviadi.

It is thereupon, this 22nd day of October 1908, ordered by the Circuit Court for Garrett county, in Equity, that the plaintiff, by causing a copy of this order to be inserted in some newspaper, published in Garrest county, once in each of four successive weeks before the 21st day of November, 1908 give notice to the said absent defendant the object and substance of this bill, waiving him to appear in this Court, in person or by solicitor, on or before the 8th day of December, 1908, to show cause, if any he has why a decree ought not to be passed as prayed.

E. Z. TOWER, Clerk.

True copy, tests—E. Z. Tower, Clerk.

Notice to Creditors.

This is to give notice, That the subscriber of Garrett county hath obtained from the Orphan's Court of Garrett county, in Maryland, letters of Administration on the personal estate of

WILLIAM FRUSH,

late of Garrett county, deceased. All persons having claims against the deceased are hereby warned to exhibit the same, with the vouchers thereof legally authenticated to the subscriber, on or before the 14th day of April, next; they may otherwise by law be excluded from all benefit of said estate. All persons knowing themselves indebted to said estate are requested to make immediate payment.

Given under my hand this 14th day of October, 1908.

JOHN W. FRUSH,
Administrator,
R. F. D., Oakland, Md.

Examiners' Notice.

Notice is hereby given, that the undersigned, appointed by the County Commissioners of Garrett county, to view the lands through which the new county road is to be located. Said new road to begin at a point on the county road leading from Thayersville to Altamont, near the residence of Solomon Hogue, running between the lands of Henry Myers, S. O. Clark, Thomas Garrett, Abel Hewitt, Martin Elsinger and Mr. E. Fundenberg to intersect the Deer Park road at a point near Mrs. Fundenbergs farm, to extend a distance of about one and one-half miles, which is now a private road but used by the public, and examine whether said road shall be located as a county road, will meet on the 16th day of November, 1908 for such purpose, and to determine whether the public convenience requires the said road, and if so, to locate the same and perform their duty in the premises.

ANDREW SHARTZER,
JOHN W. HANEY,
P. J. LOHR,
Examiners.

Notice to Creditors.

This is to give notice, That the subscriber of Garrett County, in Maryland, hath obtained from the Orphans' Court of Garrett county, in Maryland, letter Administration on the personal estate of

J. RUSSELL BROWNING,

late of Garrett County, deceased. All persons having claims against the deceased are hereby warned to exhibit the same with the vouchers thereof legally authenticated to the subscriber, on or before the 29th day of April, next, they may otherwise by law be excluded from all benefit of said estate. All persons knowing themselves indebted to said estate are requested to make immediate payment.

Given under my hand this 29th day of October, 1908.

M. A. BROWNING,
Administratrix,
Kitzmiller, Md.

Notice to Creditors.

This is to give notice, That the subscriber of Garrett county, hath obtained from the Orphans' Court of Garrett County, in Maryland, Letters of Administration on the personal estate of

JOHN W. BOWERS,

late of Garrett county, deceased. All persons having claims against the deceased are hereby warned to exhibit the same, with the vouchers thereof legally authenticated to the subscriber, on or before the 29th day of April next; they may otherwise by law be excluded from all benefit of said estate. All persons knowing themselves indebted to said estate are requested to make immediate payment.

Given under my hand this 26th day of November, 1908.

FLORENCE M. BOWERS,
Administratrix,
Dodson, Md.

THE REPUBLICAN.

VOLUME 32. OAKLAND, MARYLAND, THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 19, 1908. NUMBER 38

Treasurers Office
GARRETT COUNTY FREE LIBRARY OAKLAND, MD.

JURY DECIDES FOR DEFENDANT

Damage Suit From Garrett County Goes Against Mr. John Shartzer.

Arguments in the damage suit of John Shartzer against Lloyd Wilburn removed from Garrett county were concluded yesterday morning in the circuit court. Messrs. D. James Blackiston and T. J. Peddicord speaking on the part of the defendant, following ex-Judge Williams, who addressed the jury on the part of the plaintiff on Monday, concluding his remarks at the adjournment hour. Messrs. Blackiston and Peddicord were followed by Mr. Gilmor S. Hamill, who closed for the plaintiff. The jury was out for about an hour, returning with a verdict for the defendant. The suit was for $10,000 damages for malicious prosecution.

Owing to the fact that the counsel engaged in the insurance cases removed from Garrett county, on the part of the defendants, Mr. John P. Poe, of Baltimore, and Mr. J. A. McHenry, of this city, agreeing to try the cases before the court, the petit jury for the October term was discharged. The Garrett county case will be taken up tomorrow morning. These cases will about complete the docket for this term. Today the court will hear arguments in several motions.—Tuesday Cumberland News.

FIKE.

During the past week we had some rain but not enough to raise the waters.

Several of the farmers have killed their hogs.

Mr. Roy Chisholm has killed eight foxes this season.

W. H. Thomas, one of our fur dealers, has quite a number of furs on hand at this time.

Messrs. Chester Glover and Lafayette Frazee were in this section dehorning cattle last week.

Mr. Alfred Glover, of Uniontown, Pa., was in this vicinity last week.

Mr. Dixon, the assessor, was in this place last week doing some assessing.

Dr. H. P. Meyers, of Markleysburg, has moved to Confluence, Pa., where he will reside in the future.

CARTER.

Fire at Elkins.

The destruction of an entire block in the heart of the business section of Elkins, W. Va., was threatened at an early hour Tuesday morning when fire almost totally destroyed the Rebecca Hinkle building, the inmates upstairs barely escaping with their lives in an effort to save the Wilmoth building occupied by the Odd Fellows and a drug store. The effects of the Odd Fellows were greatly damaged. The loss, amounting to $2,000, was practically all covered by insurance.

FRIENDSVILLE.

Miss Ida Mason and Mrs. Jos. Vansickle, of Blum, W. Va., are visiting their brother Dr. A. J. Mason.

Mrs. Thompson, Ursina, Pa., spent last Thursday with Rev. Stouffer and family.

Supt. and Mrs. C. V. Gould, of Kendall, entertained Mrs. R. C. McCandlish and Mrs. A. J. Mason at afternoon tea last Fr day.

Mr. Bartol, representing the Maryland Life Insurance Co. of Baltimore, is back after six months absence.

Miss Edith Gary and Mr. George Hileman were quietly married at the home of the bride Saturday.

Mrs. George Frazee and son are visiting friends in Addison.

Mr. Fred Mitchell, who has been seriously ill, we are glad to say, is improving.

Messrs. Carl Brown and Perry Frantz of Oakland, spent Saturday and Sunday with friends here.

Playford Dunham when gunning for rabbits Monday met with a painful gun wound on the side of his left foot caused by accidental discharge of gun. He was taken to the Allegany Hospital at Cumberland Tuesday, that the wound might have the very best of cary. Dr. A. J. Mason, who attended him immediately after the accident, suggested his removal to the hospital to expedite a speedy recovery.

Chestnut Trees Destroyed.

The chestnut bark disease, or chestnut blight, first noticed in this country in 1904, has been making such rapid progress that it threatens to destroy a large part of our forests, and seems to be quite the most serious tree disease ever introduced in this country. The destruction already wrought, together with the quick spread of the fungus, leads the government experts to say that they see no reason why the chestnut should not shortly be absolutely exterminated in the Eastern United States. Such an event would be a calamity.

The disease seems to have been imported from Japan and to have assumed unusual virulence on coming into contact with the A erican variety of the tree. The spores of the fungus enter through any convenient crack or exposed space and at once comm nces to begins to vegetate, killing the tissues in which they grow. On smoot bark small brown or orange pustules are seen, but on rough bark these are often hidden, and the withering parts of the tree is often the first notice that it has been attacked.

The fangus appears to molest no tree but the chestnut, but it is fatal to all varieties of the tree, with the possible exception of some of those from Japan and Korea.—New York Sun.

WARNER GAVE HIS SUPPORT.

Cut in Pearre's Majority Not Due to Opposition Of Latter.

The following is from the Washington Herald of Tuesday:

Representative George A. Pearre's assertion that the reduction of his majority from 4,900 to about 500 in his recent race for re-election to Congress was due in part, at least, to the opposition of Brainard H. Warner excites only ridicule on the part of those cognizant of the facts.

Mr. Warner took a d cided interest in the late election, especially in Maryland and appealed to business men to support the entire ticket. His slogan was: "This is a business campaign." He emphasized this issue in a speech he made under the auspices of the Taft, Sherman and Pearre Club at Frederick, October 16, and subsequently, at his own expense, circulated throughout the Sixth district thousands of copies of this speech. It concluded as follows:

"This is a business campaign. Upon its success depends much of prosperity or adversity for the Sixth district of Maryland for four years to come. If you are wise you will prefer the former and cast your votes on election day for Taft, Sherman and Pearre.

"I not only voted for Mr. Pearre," said Mr. Warner, "but I worked for his election and urged all my friends to support him loyally at the polls. I am a business man and not a politician, and in my opinion but for the business aspect of the case, Mr. Pearre would have lost the district. His opponent made an aggressive and vigorous fight and polled a large vote. Mr. Pearre did not get the votes, and his majority was badly cut.

"President Roosevelt's letter referring to the Pearre anti-injunction bill reached many voters in Montgomery county. Why does he not charge that Mr. Roosevelt helped to bring about his defeat?

"As a matter of fact, there is no Warner faction in Montgomery county, or anywhere else, and I hope there never will be. I am for unison and harmony always. My work in the campaign speaks for itself. It is no fault of mine, or no fault of my friends that I could control, that Mr. Pearre received so small a majority."

The Washington Post Tuesday says:

Answering charges of Representative Pearre, of Maryland, that he had played him false in the recent election, and thereby caused the loss of the State to Taft, B. H. Warner, of this city, declared that there was no truth in the accusations of Mr. Pearre.

"I voted for Mr. Pearre and asked many of my friends to do so," said Mr. Warner. "I am a business man and not a politician, but if this had not been the year of the Presidential election, I believe Mr. Pearre would have been defeated. He might as well charge President Roosevelt with trying to defeat him. The President's letter referring to the Pearre anti-injunction bill reached many voters in Allegany county."

Church Services.

OAKLAND PRESBYTERIAN.

Services on Sunday, to which all are cordially invited, will be preaching at 11 a. m. and 7.30 p. m.

L. B. HENSLEY, Pastor.

ST. PAUL'S M. E.

Services next Sunday as follows:
Preaching 10.30 a. m.
Sunday school at 2.15 p. m.
Preaching at 7.30 p. m.
Epworth League Monday 7.30 p. m.
Junior League Wednesday 4.15 p. m.
Prayer meeting Wednesday 7.30 p. m.
Everybody cordially invited to attend these services.

J. B. WORKMAN, Pastor.

BAPTIST.

Owing to the dedication service at Ferndale church, on the Hooppole road near King's Run, there will be no preaching at either Deer Park or Loch Lynn next Sunday, Nov. 22. There will be services at Ferndale both in the morning and afternoon.

Everybody invited to be present.

C. W. HUDSON, Pastor.

ST. MARK'S LUTHERAN.

Services next Sabbath as follows:
Sunday school at 9.30 a. m.
Preaching 10.30 a. m., and 7.30 p. m.
Luther League every Wednesday at 7.30 p. m.
Everybody welcome.

E. MANGES, Pastor.

Strayed or Stolen

On Monday, Nov. 16th, an English setter pup, 8 months old, white with black ears and black around eyes, and also black spots on back and answers to the name of Joe. A reward will be paid for his return by the undersigned, or for information leading to the arrest of the party who took him or who may now have him in possession.

BOWIE JOHNSON,
Oakland, Md.

MOUNTAIN LAKE PARK.

The first snow of the season fell on Saturday to the depth of six inches.

Arrangements are about completed for the rapid cutting and handling of ice at the lake What is most needed now is water, as the lake was drained some weeks ago so as to have fresh and pure water before freezing weather set in, but the drouth still continues and the stage of water is too low for ice gathering as yet.

There is a hopeful outlook for natural gas by the opening of next season. This would be the greatest benefit that could come to this community, and would cause our summer residents to come earlier and remain later, while a number would make this their permanent home.

Mr. W. C. Dunnington is confined to his room by something like lumbago.

Mr. C. W. Hopkins, our energetic real estate agent, reports considerable inquiry by persons who desire to rent or purchase properties in the Park.

The outlook for a prosperous season the coming year is very encouraging. Young Woman's Christian Association convention will be held the latter part of June and the attendance will be greater than last year. Rev. Joseph Smith, who will conduct the camp-meeting in July, writes a friend that he has secured a large corps of workers and that he is encouraged to hope for the greatest meeting ever held at Mountain Lake Park.

Superintendent Davis is making every effort to secure conventions and other meetings to fill up and extend the next season.

Mr. Chas. F. Dawson, who has been employed at the new courthouse in Oakland, is likely to spend the winter in Fairmont working at his trade.

We are glad to report a continued improvement in the condition of Mr. Eugene Wilson.

The Ladies' Aid Society of the M. E. church placed a handsome Born-Davis range in the parsonage.

The insurance case of King & Martin which was to have been tried last week as postponed and will be heard before the court in Cumberland today.

An oyster supper, under the auspices of the Ladies' Aid Society of the M. E. church, will be given at Haydenhurst cottage Thanksgiving evening.

Mr. and Mrs. Milton Echard and son Charles left this morning for Uniontown, Pa., where they will spend the winter, returning to their cottage h re in the early summer.

MARYLAND'S PART.

Under the editorial caption "Maryland Is Showing Its Faith By Its Works," the Baltimore Sun, referring to the efforts being made in this state to stop the ravages of tuberculosis, says:

The generous gift of Mrs. George H. Beckwith is a fresh evidence of the deep interest of Marylanders in the movement to check the spread of tuberculosis. Mrs. Beckwith offers to the United States Government two considerable tracts of land—one at Saranac Lake, New York, and the other near Aiken, S. C.—on which to build model sanitoria to care for tuberculosis sufferers who are unable to pay the high prices required in private institutions.

The unselfish devotion of Mrs. Beckwith to the cause is shown by the fact that these lands were bought for her own private estates—a winter home near Aik n and a summer home in the New York lake region. But she gives up these luxuries in order to devote the properties to the relief of the poor.

From the beginning Maryland has been in the forefront of the movement to stamp out the white plague. Both the State and the city of Baltimore have in legislation and by appropriation aided in the establishment of modern institutions for the treatment of the disease; and private individuals like Mr. Victor G. Bloede, Mr. Jacob Epstein, Mrs. Nelson Perin and others have given large sums to establish special features in sanatoria.

The farm colony at Eudowood is the first of its kind and will doubtless lead to the adoption of the same system in other sections of the country.

The entire nation and a good part of the world are at last aroused to the dangers of tuberculosis and the necessity of systematic action to check the ravages of the disease. Maryland has not only given its voice and its pen to arouse the American people to the danger and point out the way to relief, but it has in a very practical way gone to work practicing what it has preached and showing its faith by its works.

HOUSE FOR RENT, possession given after October 1st; contains eight rooms; spring water. Apply to Mrs. L. F. Sincell, Oakland. Also cottage of six rooms, either furnisdhe or unfurnished.

NATIONAL PIKE TO BE REBUILT.

Engineers Going Over The Famous Road From Addison to Uniontown, Pa.

Plans for the reconstruction of the National pike are on foot and J. Russell Wilson of Washington, engineer for the State highways department, and a corps of engineers have been working on the project in this county for the past week. They began at the state line at Addison and have been moving in the direction of Uniontown. After leaving Somerfield and Farmington, a direct course will be taken to Brownsville and a report made to the chief engineer of the State highways department.

It is not positively known, but it is thought that 12 miles of pike will be remacadamized as soon as the survey is completed and the report furnished. The members of the engineer corps now covering the ground are: J. Russell Wilson, G. S. Coyle, J. M. Denny, W. K. Reid and W. C. Bushfield, of Washington, Pa., and Robert B. Colline, Uniontown.

INJURIES PROVED FATAL.

Youth of Sixteen Succumbed to Gun Shot Wound In His Heel.

Playford Dunham, son of Mr. and Mrs. George W. Dunham, of Friendsville, who was injured on last Monday while hunting rabbits in the woods near his home, by the accidental explosion of a gun in the hands of a companion named Gray, a youth of thirteen years, the the charge of shot entering the Dunham boy's heel, died in the Allegany Hospital at Cumberland this morning at the hour of six o'clock, to which institution the boy was removed fr m his home in Friendsville the morning after the accident.

The boy was one of six children of Mr. and Mrs. Dunham and his death is a terrible blow to his parents and friends.

At his bedside when death came were his father, Mr. W. B. VanZant, superintendent of the Western Maryland Coal Company, of Friendsville, the hospital nurse and one of the surgeons. The body will be removed from Cumberland to the sorrowing home this afternoon or to-morrow morning.

Mr. John C. Dunham is an uncle and Mrs. E. J. Frantz, an aunt of the deceased youth.

Thanksgiving Dinner

Is not complete without Fruit Cake. We have it—the finest that ever came from an oven. We also will make any kind of Cake to order for Thanksgiving Day, if you will give us your order in time. We will have a large assortment of our famous Home-Made Candies on hand. See our Bargains in box goods for Thanksgiving Day.

Yours to please,

OAKLAND M. S. BAKERY.
HENRY LAUER, Prop.

10-qt. tin dish pans 10c at Baumgartner's.

BITTINGER.

At the breakfast table the other day little Willie heard his father say that there was money in eggs this fall. An hour later the little philosphsr came in the kitchen looking much disappointed and announced his intention to kill all the chickens. "Why, Willie," said his mother, "what is the matter with the chickens?" "They don't lay good eggs," replied Willie, "I broke most a dozen eggs and didn't find no money in 'em."

Mrs. Sallie Ralston moved her family from this place to Keyser, W. Va., last week, and George Yommer and family are occupying the Ralston home.

Cleaver Brenneman has secured a position in Keyser, where he expects to spend the winter.

Miss Myrtle Wiley, who has been employed in Cumberland for several months, came up this week for a few days visit at her home here.

News reached here Tuesday of the death of Mrs. Henry Engle, at her home in Frostburg, Md. Mrs. Engle was the eldest daughter of the late Andrew Snyder and was well known in this section.

Mrs. Cyrus Stark, of Jennings, was taken to the hospital at Baltimore, last week to undergo an operation for appendicitis and at last report was in a critical condition.

The ladies of the Lutheran congregation here are arranging to hold a box supper in the school house on Thanksgiving evening. There will also be a special service in the Lutheran church on Thanksgiving morning.

Snow fell here last Saturday to a depth of eight inches and the weather is very cold.

Oppose Sunday Funerals.

The Ministers Union of Morgantown, W. Va., composed of the pastors of the Protestant churches of the city, have adopted an address to the public in which it is urged that except under very unusual circumstances should more than one minister be asked to share in the conduct of a funeral service. It is also urged that "only in cases of extreme necessity should funerals be arranged for Sunday. It is unfair to the undertaker and his drivers who, like others, have the right to a day of rest. And it is a severe tax on the minister's strength, whose Sunday is crowded with his regular engagements. And always we urge that the funeral be made not a place for display or ostentation, but a reverent and simple service."

List of Letters.

Miss Mary Davis, William Gorman, Mrs. John S. Lyon, Mrs. P. J. Martin, Clarence Awlins, Miss Bertie Spiker, W. H. Whorton.

See our 5 and 10c glassware. Baumgartner.

DIXON & KELSO

Dixon & Kelso
WILL WANT
One Ton
Full Dressed Chickens to be delivered not earlier than Saturday nor later than Tuesday morning before Thanksgiving

Also bring the same quantity of full dressed Turkeys delivered on the same dates for which we will pay from 18 to 20c. lb. We also can handle Dry-Picked Turkeys at 15 to 16c. lb. providing they are well handled and fat, these to be brought in earlier.

Yours to Please. DIXON & KELSO.

E. A. WEIMER.

Something Good
I HAVE IN STOCK A NICE ASSORTMENT OF THE CELEBRATED
Elite Petticoats
AT $1.00 $2.00
$3.00 AND $5.00
COME AND SEE

Yours Truly. E. A. WEIMER.
NEXT DOOR TO THE POSTOFFICE OAKLAND, MD

Married Actresses Are More Charitable and Loving.

By AMELIA BINGHAM.

ACTRESSES SHOULD MARRY. So should all other women. There, I am separating women of the stage into a class by themselves, as different from other women, just the thing that I object to have other people do. But in this case the separation comes easily. It has been said for so many years that the stage woman should not marry—because it hurts business—that I speak of her in particular.

This is an old and exploded idea. Managers no longer file the serious objection to married couples appearing in the same company that was formerly heard on every hand.

HOME IS THE PRINCIPAL THING. WE ALL NEED HOMES. THEY ARE A PART OF OUR LIVES WHICH WE CANNOT WELL DO WITHOUT, AND, ALTHOUGH THE ACTRESS MAY HAVE A HOME WITHOUT A HUSBAND, SHE IS LIKELIER TO POSSESS BOTH THAN ONE.

THE ACTRESS WHO IS MARRIED AND HAS A HOME LOOKS UPON THE WORLD WITH MORE CHARITABLE AND LOVING EYES.

Chances For Young Men to Succeed Are Greater Than Ever

By SAMUEL M. FELTON, President of the Mexican Central Railroad.

THE opportunities today for a young man to succeed and work his way up in the railroad service are just as good as they ever have been, provided he devotes his entire time and attention to the interests of the company. The trouble with many men who have not advanced as they hoped and who complain of a LACK OF OPPORTUNITY in railroad service today is that they are misled by the demagogue and persons who have their own selfish interests to serve and, instead of giving their first allegiance to the railroad, are too much inclined to devote the principal part of their time in other directions.

There have been times when to become the head of a great system or to have a seat in the councils of its directorate depended more upon other influences than that of actual ability or knowledge of the business, but this has diminished of late years, and the man who succeeds to these positions now does so on the LADDER OF TOIL. The growing thousands of miles of railroad construction afford many more of those positions worth working for, and positions are being given to the men who are CAPABLE RATHER THAN TO FAVORITES knowing nothing of the business.

And this is necessarily so, because increasing competition demands experienced men as operating heads, so that the OPPORTUNITIES ARE INCREASING RATHER THAN DECREASING, and the hardworking, ambitious employee receives recognition.

HOWEVER, ONE OF THE MOST HAZARDOUS SIDETRACKS ALONG THE ROAD TO SUCCESS IS DEMAGOGISM, AND OFTEN THE WHEELS LEAVE THE TRACK, CAUSING DELAYS. MANY MEN COMPLAIN OF LACK OF OPPORTUNITY WHEN IN REALITY THEY ARE BEING MISLED BY THOSE WHO HAVE IN VIEW SELFISH ENDS, AND I AM CERTAIN THAT THE OPPORTUNITIES FOR ADVANCEMENT BY THE DEVOTED EMPLOYEE ARE JUST AS GOOD NOW AS THEY EVER HAVE BEEN—IN FACT, BETTER.

All Women Should Have Legal Training.

By Miss E. F. McCARTNEY of Omaha, Prominent Woman Lawyer.

EVERY WOMAN SHOULD HAVE A KNOWLEDGE OF THE LAW; every woman should study it, even though she may have no intention of ever taking up its practice. EVERY DAY WOMEN SUFFER FINANCIAL LOSS THROUGH IGNORANCE OF IT. With a knowledge of the law they would always be prepared to protect themselves.

SCORES OF QUESTIONS ARISE TO PERPLEX THE BUSINESS WOMAN, THE PROFESSIONAL WOMAN, THE WOMAN OF THE HOME, WHICH A LEGAL TRAINING WOULD PUT ASIDE INSTANTLY. I BELIEVE THE DAY IS NOT FAR DISTANT WHEN THE LAW WILL BE A PART OF THE CURRICULUM OF EVERY SCHOOL.

Germany's Strength Assures Peace of Europe.

By Emperor WILLIAM II.

I REJOICE to be able to express my deepest conviction that the PEACE OF EUROPE IS NOT IN DANGER. It rests upon TOO SOLID FOUNDATIONS to be easily upset by incitements and calumnies provoked by envious and ill disposed individuals.

Firm security exists, in the first place, in the consciences of the princes and statesmen of Europe, who know and feel that they are responsible to God for the lives and property of the people intrusted to their leadership.

On the other hand, it is the will and desire of the people themselves to make themselves useful by tranquilly PURSUING THE DEVELOPMENT OF THE MAGNIFICENT ACHIEVEMENTS OF A PROGRESSIVE CIVILIZATION and to measure their strength in PEACEFUL RIVALRY.

FINALLY, PEACE ALSO IS ASSURED AND GUARANTEED BY OUR POWER ON LAND AND SEA BY THE GERMAN PEOPLE IN ARMS.

PROUD OF THE MANLY DISCIPLINE AND THE LOVE OF HONOR OF HER ARMED FORCES GERMANY IS DETERMINED TO KEEP THEM ON THEIR HIGH LEVEL WITHOUT MENACE TO OTHERS AND TO DEVELOP THEM AS HER OWN INTERESTS DEMAND, FAVORING NONE AND INJURING NONE.

Halloween Pumpkins.

By FRANK H. SWEET.

Copyright, 1908, by American Press Association.

"SAM CUSHING, I do believe!"

Sam turned quickly at the hearty voice, his face lighting up. In the old days Tom Wiltse had been his best friend, his school chum and companion in many a scrape. But as he grasped the hand his face shadowed a little.

"Glad to see you, Tom," he forced himself to say. Then he glanced hastily down the car as though expecting to see some one else.

"Oh, yes, Ned Brooks is back there," said Tom, answering the glance, "but he's the only one, for I've been through the whole excursion train to see if I could find anybody I knew. Odd I should strike at the very last end of the last car the fellow I most wanted to see. Big jam the west is sending down to Jamestown, isn't it, Sam? Do you know why I took a train over this roundabout branch of the road? Well, it was just so I could pass through our old town. That's what Ned says too. And I wouldn't wonder," looking at Sam inquiringly, "if you come this way for the same purpose?"

"Yes," briefly, "it's been seven years since I was there, and we're only twenty minutes from it now. How—how is Mattie?"

"Mattie? Oh, wait a minute till I call Ned. He'll want to see you and be in the talk."

Tom threw his shoulders back, hollowed his hands over his mouth and hurled a resounding, "Hey, Ned!" over the heads of the intervening passengers, then crowded himself down beside Sam.

"Mattie, you said? Why, you know as much about her as I—or, no, le's see. You left seven years ago and Ned and I about six. Haven't you had any news of Royville since then?"

"No."

"H'm! I'd sort of forgotten. Left on account of Mattie, didn't you?"

Sam's face paled a little.

"All that's gone by, Tom," he said harshly. "Suppose we don't bring it up any more. Besides, Mattie—your wife, I mean"—

"Mattie—my wife! Good land! Sam, you've never thought that? But I was pretty sweet on her, I remember, and after you left I did have some hope. You'd hardly been gone a month, though, when she rented her house and went over to her uncle's in the next county to keep school. The next day Bill Bates—you know Bill owned the place just across the road from hers—well, Bill shut up his house and started for the next county too. Ned and I followed a week later."

Tom grinned reminiscently.

"We both of us had relatives in her uncle's neighborhood," he went on, "and we hung round pretty nigh a year before we screwed up courage to speak, sometimes mad and not recognizing each other and sometimes acting sheepish. Then one morning I made a wild dash and had it out with Mattie on her way to the schoolhouse, and in the afternoon Ned spoke. That night we bought tickets for the west, went into business and in six months had married as fine girls as there are between Cincinnati and Sacramento."

"HEY, NED!"

Sam was sitting very erect now, with his hand grasping the seat arm as though about to spring up and dash away. Ned had joined them and was listening with silent amusement.

"And Bill Bates," demanded Sam fiercely, "did he"—

"Oh, it's Bill all right," drawled Tom. "He went about the whole thing in a straight-out, businesslike way. Didn't have an acquaintance in the next county to visit, so bought a farm joining her uncle's, just like he and Mattie had neighbored at home, and in a week they were out buggy riding together. But what gets me is how she can put up with him after turning down us three. Bill Bates is the meanest white man that ever lived. Never spent a cent on anybody except himself, and after they got married he must have led Mattie a life of it. The only decent things about Bill is he's got spunk and he'll stick to a thing like a dog after a woodchuck."

"They did get married, then?"

There was something in the voice that made Tom look at his friend curiously.

"Of course—er, that is, I sup, so to. They were buggy riding when we left, and you know how Bill stuck to a thing. But what difference does it make to you, Sam? Your wife—you're married, ain't you?"

"No."

Tom gave an expressive whistle, then added simply, "Well, I'm sorry, old man, but after she said no you ought to have braced up and tried to forget it all."

"She never said no," Sam blurted out almost involuntarily. "It was you, Tom, that I had words with her about. I was jealous."

"Then you were a fool and deserved all you got," Tom snapped. "I've wondered how she could drop you for Bill Bates. I see now. You gave her to him."

Ned Brooks had looked away, as though not to hear, but that he had heard was evidenced by his turning suddenly with:

"See here, fellows, what's the reason we can't stop over and see the town—part of it—for a few hours tonight?"

"And lose our excursion tickets?" asked Tom.

"What's tickets to seeing one's town? Besides, we might be able to fix them up with the agent. Do you know what night this is?" significantly.

"October the—why, Halloween, of course!" exclaimed Tom.

"Yes, Halloween. Remember the field beyond Mattie Vaughan's house, where pumpkins are always grown, and how we did up Bill Bates?"

He grinned reminiscently, and Tom broke into a loud guffaw. Even Sam smiled.

"Bill Bates may have spunk in some ways," said Ned, "but he's a coward all right when it gets dark. My, how he did run that night when he saw three pumpkins, with their big eyes blazing all sorts of terrible things, stealing toward him through the shrubbery! He was on his way to call on Mattie that night, you know, and when she heard of it she wouldn't speak to him for a month."

"It was a mean trick," declared Sam.

"Of course it was," promptly, "just like lots of others we did in those days. They were like boils and had to come out. And I feel a stirring within me now that says there is just one more which must erupt before I can settle down to quiet, peaceable citizenship. My proposal is that we go to the good old field, which, of course, has its annual contribution of pumpkins, cover our heads with the three biggest we can find and pay a visit to Bill Bates. If he isn't visible, we will throw a pebble against a door or window and draw him out."

"Maybe he isn't at home," said Tom.

"Our Bill Bates not at home!" derisively. "Why, man alive, it costs money to be away from home, and Bill never did that but once in his life, and then Mattie was the excuse. That was seven years ago. His home farm was more profitable than the little one he bought in the next county, so he's there all right."

"And Mattie with him," shortly. "I'm not going to frighten Mattie."

"With pumpkin heads?" peered Ned. "No, I don't think you will. Why, Mattie Vaughan, or Bates, could meet a whole field of such pumpkin heads as we are and not quiver an eyelash! It's Bill we're going to annihilate. And if Bill's got Mattie, as of course he has, it's dead sure he isn't treating her right, and a little Halloween visit may do him good. We'll cross the road, do the little missionary act and then toss our heads over into Bates' yard as souvenirs and skurry through the woods to the little station a mile above and catch the next train. Perhaps we can convince the conductor that our tickets are valid on his train and so not lose them. But, anyway, they're of secondary consideration."

He leaned forward, peering through the window.

"Only about four minutes," he added, "and it's beginning to grow dark. What do you say?"

"No," answered Sam decidedly. "It's a fool thing at best."

"Dare, dare and double dare—call you a coward if you back down," said Ned solemnly.

Sam's mouth twitched a little. It was an invocation his boyhood had never refused.

"Oh, come, Ned," he expostulated, "don't be silly."

"Dare, dare and double dare, Ned repeated inexorably.

Tom laughed and nodded, then turned to Sam and joined in the doggerel, which Ned was repeating for the third time.

"No escape now, Sam," Tom chuckled.

The train began to slacken.

Sam hesitated, then rose suddenly.

"Oh, well, what's the odds?" he exclaimed. "We can dodge off the train, have a little fun and get away without any one being the wiser. And—and—I wouldn't mind seeing Bill sidestep a little."

When the train slacked they dropped from the side opposite the platform and slipped past the freight house and down a back alley. Half an hour later they were in the well remembered lot—which they found still kept up its reputation—selecting the three largest pumpkins they could find.

Mattie Vaughan's house was just beyond, dark and gloomy, with the depressing influence which an empty house usually gives. The three young men, who had dropped over the fence with suppressed chuckles, grew silent as they glanced covertly toward it. The old house had associations for all of them.

Just across the street was Bill Bates' house, with a dim light in one of the windows. Sam's gaze watched the window hungrily for a shadow to pass between it and the light. Mattie was over there, of course, and the light—was the single light a symbol of Bill's penuriousness?

At the thought Sam's face darkened menacingly, and he gouged the eyes of the pumpkin a little larger. It was all the reprisal he could make, but it should be as effective as possible. The hate he could not show personally should blaze out through the pumpkin head's eyes.

At last all was ready, and then they waited another half hour until it was sufficiently dark for their purpose, until their forms could be seen at arm's length as only the dimmest of shadows. Then they lighted up and stole along inside the fence, designing to pass through Mattie's gate and thence advance upon the enemy. One rod, two rods, and the corner of the house loomed darkly on their right. Another step, and—

"Aha! Caught you, have I? Now let me see who you are, so I can get a settlement for my pumpkins. They are my main living now, and I cannot have them stolen even on Halloween."

"NOW I'VE GOT YOU, SAM CUSHING."

It was Mattie's voice, deep, rich, musical, decisive, as they remembered it. All three gasped with hushed breath, and by a common impulse Ned and Tom dropped their hands upon the fence and vaulted over, and a minute later their feet were heard pounding the road toward the woods. They would catch the next train all right.

Sam could not follow, for Mattie's unyielding grasp was upon him. He half turned, with a first thought of shaking her off, then stood stock still. He could not be rough with any woman, but he raised his arms quickly to extinguish the light.

However, Mattie was too swift for him. As his hands grasped the pumpkin it was snatched away and the blazing light of the eyes whirled upon his face.

"Now I've got— Land o' liberty! You, Sam Cushing!" the voice changing from a ring of triumph to utter consternation.

"Yes, Mattie," humbly.

"But why—what"—

"Oh, just some fool Halloween idea that several of us talked up. We were on our way to Jamestown, and—and—well," desperately, "we meant to scare your husband."

"My husband?" wonderingly.

"Yes; Bill Bates. We scared him once before, you know, and—and"—

Mattie stared, then seemed to comprehend, for a smothered laugh escaped her lips.

"Bill Bates sold out years ago and went to South America," she said. "A poor sick woman lives in the house over yonder now. Your horrible pumpkin heads might have frightened her to death. So you see what you've escaped."

Sam scarcely heard.

"And you?" he stammered. "I—I thought"—

"That I'd married Bill Bates," impatiently. "You're as big a simpleton as ever, Sam. Bill asked me, as did all the rest of you, and my answer was the same. I've been with my uncle until he died a few weeks ago. Then I settled up his estate and came home. I only got here this morning."

There was a short silence; then:

"You never did really refuse me, Mattie."

"No? Didn't I?" with the first tremulousness in her voice. "Well, perhaps I didn't. But you ran away."

Sam caught her hand with sudden energy.

"I'm back, though, Mattie," he implored. "I—I've been a fool."

Her tremulousness gave way to a rippling laugh.

"That's what I've been waiting seven years to hear you say, Sam. It's a sign of returning reason."

"Then you'll"—

"Of course. Didn't I say I'd been waiting?"

A Long Ordeal.

Judge (to prisoner)—We are now going to read you a list of your former convictions. Prisoner—In that case, perhaps your lordship will allow me to sit down.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

Not Flattering.

"Do you bake your own pies?"

"Most of 'em.

"Gimme one of the other kind."—Town Topics.

A Business Proposition

Did you ever stop to think, Mr. Business Man, that the news of your business is as much a part of the local events as a wedding or a church fair? The ladies are just as much interested in a new fabric you have on the shelves as they are in any home happening. Your store news and announcements in these columns will reach a large circle of eager buyers. This will enable you to sell your goods while they are new and fresh and you will not have to sacrifice later at remnant counter prices. Think it over.

W. H. RAVENSCRAFT, M.D., PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON, OAKLAND, MD.
Residence on North Third street.
Office in McComas Building.

DR. J. E. LEGGE, PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON.
Offers his Services to the citizens of Oakland and vicinity.
Office in McComas Building, Second street

DR. R. F. BARTLETT, DENTIST.
Office in McComas Building, Second street, Oakland, Md.
Special attention given to bridge and crown work.

DR. J. G. ROBINSON, DENTIST, OAKLAND MD
Office at residence on Liberty street.
GAS ADMINISTERED.

NORMAN S. HEINDELL, ATTORNEY-AT-LAW,
All business given prompt attention.
Office—First National Bank Building,
KLAND, MARYLAND.

GILMOR S. HAMILL, ATTORNEY-AT-LAW AND SOLICITOR IN CHANCERY.
Office in Garrett National Bank Building
Particular attention given to Conveyancing Investigation of land titles and collection of claims. Loans negotiated.

EDWARD H. SINCELL, ATTORNEY-AT-LAW, OAKLAND, MARYLAND.
Will practice in the Courts of Garrett and Allegany counties, the Court of Appeals of Maryland, and the adjoining counties of West Virginia.

Baltimore & Ohio R. R.
Schedule effective June 2, 1907.
OAKLAND.
*Daily. †Daily except Sunday. §Sunday only.
For WASHINGTON, BALTIMORE, PHILADELPHIA & NEW YORK, Depart *12.27 a. m., *6.50 a. m., *4.17 p. m., *8.29 p. m. Arrive *7.12 a. m., *8.35 p. m., *10.26 p. m., *11.54 p. m.
For CUMBERLAND and Way Points, Depart *10.00 a. m., *4.40 p. m. Arrive *9.20 a. m., *7.26 p. m.
For COLUMBUS & CHICAGO, Depart *11.54 p. m. Arrive *6.07 a. m., *4.17 p. m.
For GRAFTON (Accom.), Depart *9.26 a. m., *7.26 p. m. Arrive *10.00 a. m., *4.40 p. m.
For FAIRMONT and WHEELING, Depart *9.26 a. m. (Local), *6.39 p. m., *11.54 p. m. Arrive *6.07 a. m., *4.17 p. m., *12.25 night.
For FAIRMONT (Accom.), Depart *7.26 p. m. Arrive *10.00 a. m.
For CINCINNATI, LOUISVILLE and ST. LOUIS, Depart *7.12 a. m., *6.35 p. m., *10.26 p. m. Arrive *12.27 a. m., *6.31 a. m., *8.29 p. m.

FOR SALE.

We will sell at private sale at our farms between Mt. Lake Park and Oakland,

1 Gasoline Engine,
8 horse-power, made by the International Harvester Co. Almost new and in perfect running order. Will be sold for $275.

1 Hay Bailer,
operated by horse-power. Makes standard size bales.

For further information call on or write to
THE H. WEBER & SONS CO.,
Oakland, Md.

Oakland Pharmacy
JOS. E. HARNED, Proprietor.
Drugs, Chemicals, Stationery, Cigars
Cameras and Photo Supplies

GETTY BROWNING,
CIVIL AND MINING
ENGINEERING.
Office—"Mountain Democrat Building,"
OAKLAND, MARYLAND,
Real Estate Bought and Sold.
Particular Attention Given
Railroad & Mine Surveying.
Surveys made for Town Sites, Sewerage and Water Works. Prompt attention given Land Surveying. Both Phones.

Land for Sale.

We have for sale the following valuable tracts of land:
One Military Lot of 50 acres, a small portion of which is under cultivation. All good land, and every acre tillable. Watered by several good springs and a never failing small run. Contains some good timber. One-half mile from R. R. siding, and one and one-half miles from Oakland.
Also part of two Military Lots containing about 50 acres. This property is directly East of Oakland, on the South side of the B. & O. R. R. siding on the North side of tracks. Contains valuable grazing land, a portion of which is in cultivation. Valuable R. R. frontage.
Also 10 acres suitable for building sites, just East of Oakland on the North side of the Oakland and Mt. Lake Park road.
For further information, address
THE H. WEBER & SONS CO.,
6-tf Oakland, Md.

THE REPUBLICAN
Job Printing Department

WITHIN the past year the increased made upon the Job Printing Department of The Republican necessitated many improvements, and to meet the requirements of our rapidly increasing business an addition of considerable proportions to our present building is in contemplation; new type and improved machinery must be purchased—but in the meantime all orders will be executed in a most satisfactory manner.

The products of our Job Printery are all models in the class—our customers are numerous and well satisfied, and wnen ordering

Statements, Vouchers,
Envelopes, Cards,
Sale Bills, Posters,
Bank Forms, Billheads,
Letterheads, Tags,
Programs, Folders,

and

Letter Press Printing of all Kinds

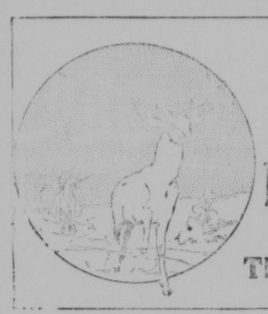
They are confident that the work will be Satisfactory in every particular---in WORKMANSHIP, PRICE and PAPER.

WE MAKE A SPECIALTY OF PRINTING

Lumber and Coal Companies' Forms
Bank Stationery, Hotel Prospectus,
Lodge and Society Laws,
Reports, Etc.

It will cost you nothing to submit your Printing to us. Estimates will be cheerfully furnished you free. It must be borne in mind, however, that we do not do "cheap" printing, but we do Good Printing which has a par value of one hundred cents for every dollar invested in the product of THE REPUBLICAN PRINTERY.

THE REPUBLICAN
Job Printing Departm't
OAKLAND, MARYLAND.



HUNTING DEER ON HORSEBACK

BY

THEODORE ROOSEVELT

[Copyright, 1885, by G. P. Putnam's Sons.
Published under arrangement with G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York and London.]

ALL kinds of hunting on horseback—and most hunting on horseback is done with hounds—tend to bring out the best and manliest qualities in the men who follow them, and they should be encouraged in every way. Long after the rifleman, as well as the game he hunts, shall have vanished from the plains, the cattle country will afford fine sport in coursing hares; and both wolves and deer could be followed and killed with packs of properly-trained hounds, and such sport would be even more exciting than still-hunting with the rifle. It is on the great plains lying west of the Missouri that riding to hounds will in the end receive its fullest development as a national pastime.

But at present it is almost unknown in the cattle country; and the ranchman who loves sport must try still-hunting—and by still-hunting is meant pretty much every kind of chase where a single man, unaided by a dog, and almost always on foot, outgenerals a deer and kills it with the rifle. To do this successfully, unless deer are very plenty and tame, implies a certain knowledge of the country, and a good knowledge of the habits of the game. The hunter must keep a sharp look-out for deer sign; for, though a man soon gets to have a general knowledge of the kind of places in which deer are likely to be, yet he will also find that they are either very capricious, or else that no man has more than a partial understanding of their tastes and likings; for many spots apparently just suited to them will be almost uninhabited, while in others they will be found where it would hardly occur to any one to suspect their presence. Any cause may temporarily drive deer out of a given locality. Still-hunting, especially, is sure to send many away, while rendering the others extremely wild and shy, and where deer have become used to being pursued in only one way, it is often an excellent plan to try some entirely different method.

A certain knowledge of how to track deer is very useful. To become a really skillful tracker is most difficult; and there are some kinds of ground, where, for instance, it is very hard and dry, or frozen solid, on which almost any man will be at fault. But any one with a little practice can learn to do a certain amount of tracking. On snow, of course, it is very easy; but on the other hand it is also peculiarly difficult to avoid being seen by the deer when the ground is white. After deer have been frightened once or twice, or have even merely been disturbed by man, they get the habit of keeping a watch back on their trail; and when snow has fallen, a man is such a conspicuous object deer see him a long way off, and even the tamest become wild. A deer will often, before lying down, take a half circle back to one side and make its bed a few yards from its trail, where it can, itself unseen, watch any person tracing it up. A man tracking in snow needs to pay very little heed to the footprints, which can be followed without effort, but requires to keep up the closest scrutiny over the ground ahead of him, and on either side of the trail.

In the early morning when there is a heavy dew the footprints will be as plain as possible in the grass, and can then be followed readily; and in any place where the ground is at all damp they will usually be plain enough to be made out without difficulty. When the ground is hard or dry the work is very much less easy, and soon becomes so difficult as not to be worth while following up. Indeed, at all times, even in the snow, tracks are chiefly of use to show the probable locality in which a deer may be found; and the still-hunter instead of laboriously walking along a trail will do far better to merely follow it until, from its freshness and direction, he feels confident that the deer is in some particular space of ground, and then hunt through it, guiding himself by his knowledge of the deer's habits and by the character of the land. Tracks are of most use in showing whether deer are plenty or scarce, whether they have been in the place recently or not. Generally, signs of deer are infinitely more plentiful than the animals themselves—although in regions where tracking is especially difficult deer are often jumped without any sign having been seen at all.

The bullet had broken the backs of both.

Although still-hunting on foot is on the whole the best way to get deer, yet there are many places where from the nature of the land the sport can be followed quite as well on horseback, than which there is no more pleasant kind of hunting. The best shot I ever made in my life—a shot into which, however, I am afraid the element of chance entered much more largely than the element of skill—was made while hunting black-tail on horseback.

We were at that time making quite a long trip with the wagon, and were going up the fork of a plains river in Western Montana. As we were out of food, those two of our number who usually undertook to keep the camp supplied with game determined to make a hunt off back of the river after black-tail; for though there were some white-tail in the more densely timbered river bottoms, we had been unable to get any. It was arranged that the wagon should go on a few mils, and then halt for the night, as it was already the middle of the afternoon when we started out. The country resembled in character other parts of the cattle plains, but it was absolutely bare of trees except along the bed of the river. The rolling hills sloped steeply off into long valleys and deep ravines. They were sparsely covered with coarse grass, and also with an irregular growth of tall sage-brush, which in some places gathered into dense thickets. A beginner would have thought the country entirely too barren of cover to hold deer, but a very little experience teaches one that deer will be found in thickets of such short and sparse growth that it seems as if they could hide nothing; and, what is more, that they will often skulk round in such thickets without being discovered. And a black-tail is a bold, free animal, liking to go out in comparatively open country, where he must trust to his own powers, and not to any concealment, to protect him from danger.

Where the hilly country joined the alluvial river bottom, it broke off short into steep bluffs, up which none but a Western pony could have climbed. It is really wonderful to see what places a pony can get over, and the indifference with which it regards tumbles. In getting up from the bottom we went into a wash-out, and then led our ponies along a clay ledge, from which we turned off and went straight up a very steep sandy bluff. My companion was ahead; just as he turned off the ledge, and as I was right underneath him, his horse, in plunging to try to get up the sand bluff, overbalanced itself, and, after standing erect on its hind legs for a second, came over backward. The second's pause while it stood bolt upright, gave me time to make a frantic leap out of the way with my pony which scrambled after me, and we both clung with hands and hoofs to the side of the bank, while the other horse took two as complete somersaults as I ever saw, and landed with a crash at the bottom of the wash-out, feet uppermost. I thought it was done for, but not a bit. After a moment or two it struggled to its legs, shook itself, and looked round in rather a shame-faced way, apparently not in the least the worse for the fall. We now got my pony up to the top by vigorous pulling, and then went down for the other, which at first strongly objected to making another trial, but, after much coaxing and a good deal of abuse, took a start and went up without trouble.

For some time after reaching the top of the bluffs we rode along without seeing anything. When it was possible, we kept one on each side of a creek, avoiding the tops of the ridges because while on them a horseman can be seen at a very long distance, and going with particular caution whenever we went round a spur or came up over a crest. The country stretched away like an endless, billowy sea of dull-brown soil and barren sage-brush, the valleys making long parallel furrows, and every thing having a look of dreary sameness.

At length, as we came out on a rounded ridge, three black-tail bucks started up from a lot of sage-brush some two hundred yards away and below us, and made off down hill. It was a very long shot, especially to try running, but, as game seemed scarce and cartridges were plenty, I leaped off the horse, and, kneeling, fired. The bullet went low, striking in line at the feet of the hindmost. I was very high next time, making a wild shot above and ahead of them, which had the effect of turning them, and they went off round a shoulder of a bluff, being by this time down in the valley. Having plenty of time I elevated the sights (a thing I hardly ever do) to four hundred yards and waited for their reappearance. Meanwhile they had evidently gotten over their fright, for pretty soon one walked out from the other side of the bluff, and came to a standstill, broadside toward me. He was too far off for me to see his horns.

As I was raising the rifle another stepped out and began to walk towards the first. I thought I might as well have as much of a target as possible to shoot at, and waited for the second buck to come out farther, which he did immediately and stood still just alongside of the first. I aimed above his shoulders and pulled the trigger. Over went the two bucks! And when I rushed down to where they lay I found I had pulled a little to one side, and the bullet had broken the backs of both.

While my companion was dressing them I went back and paced off the distance. It was just four hundred and thirty-one long paces; over four hundred yards. Both were large bucks and very fat, with the velvet hanging in shreds from their antlers, for it was late in August. The day was waning and we had a long rile back to the wagon, each with a buck behind his saddle. When we came back to the river valley it was pitch dark, and it was rather ticklish work for our heavily laden horses to pick their way down the steep bluffs and over the rapid stream; nor were we sorry when we saw ahead under a bluff the gleam of the camp fire, as it was reflected back from the canvas-topped prairie schooner, that for the time being represented home to us.

His legs hardly so much as twitched.

This was much the best shot I ever made; and it is just such a shot as any one will occasionally make if he takes a good many chances and fires often at ranges where the odds are greatly against his hitting. I suppose I had fired a dozen times at animals four or five hundred yards off, and now, by the doctrine of chances, I happened to hit; but I would have been very foolish if I had thought for a moment that I had learned how to hit at over four hundred yards. I have yet to see the hunter who can hit with any regularity at that distance, when he has to judge it for himself; though I have seen plenty who could make such a long range hit now and then. And I have noticed that such a hunter, in talking over his experience, was certain soon to forget the numerous misses he made, and to say, and even to actually think, that his occasional hits represented his average shooting.

One of the finest black-tail bucks I ever shot was killed by lying out in a rather unusual place. I was hunting mountain-sheep, in a stretch of very high and broken country, and about mid-day, crept cautiously up to the edge of a great gorge, whose sheer walls went straight down several hundred feet. Peeping over the brink of the chasm I saw a buck, lying out on a ledge so narrow as to barely hold him, right on the face of the cliff wall opposite, some distance below, and about seventy yards diagonally across from me. He lay with his legs half stretched out, and his head turned so as to give me an exact center-shot at his forehead; the bullet going in between his eyes, so that his legs hardly so much as twitched when he received it.

It was toilsome and almost dangerous work climbing out to where he lay; I have never known any other individual, even of this bold and adventurous species of deer, to take its noonday siesta in a place so barren of all cover and so difficult of access even to the most sure-footed climber. This buck was as fat as a prize sheep, and heavier than any other I have ever killed; while his antlers also were, with two exceptions, the best I ever got.

Three men sat down at a restaurant table. "Bring me a very rare steak," said one. "I want a rare steak, too," said the second man, "but I want it very rare. Just have the sides seared a little, and let the blood run out of it." Then the third man said, "Bring me a rare steak from an animal which has not been killed, but just crippled."

THE REPUBLICAN

BENJ. H. SINCELL, EDITOR.

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 19, 1908.

THE Baltimore American states that 45,000 votes, chiefly Republican, were thrown out in the recent count in Maryland by the election judges who claim that, under the law, they were improperly marked. On a fair court the American asserts the State would have given Taft 10,000 plurality instead of splitting its electoral vote.

STILL Mr. Bryan conspicuously omits to state that the future will have to provide other Presidential candidates for the Democracy. The omissions is slightly painful to optimistic Democrats, and also seems unnecessary. Mr. Bryan has already demonstrated that an avowal that he is no longer in the list of candidates is no bar to his getting in again with both feet.

BACK TO WORK.

It is estimated that over 1,000,000 persons who have been working on short hours during the recent months, or not working at all, have been put to work on full time since the Republicans carried the country two weeks ago.

The good tidings comes from every state. Every day since the election all the daily papers in the county have been printing dispatches from various centers telling of the reopening of mills and of the increase in the hours of work in mills which had been running on short time. And, of course, the papers have been able to chronicle only a small portion of this improvement. The victory registersed itself immediately in an advance in stocks along the whole line. When, during the campaign, the news was published that the railways and other great business, interests were sending in heavy orders to the steel mills, but making them contingent on Republican victory on November 3, the Democratic campaign managers denounced these reports as canards, or as attempts to coerce the workers into voting the Republican ticket. Democratic newspapers which ought to have known better also joined in this cry. The developments of the past fourteen days show that the reports were genuine.

PAY OF THE CLERGY.

The annual convention of the Protestant Episcopal diocese of New York has fixed $1,200 as the minimum salary for curates, with a residence in adcition, or $1,500 as the minimum for married clergymen. This is a progressive step that strikes at one of the disgraces of Christian churches. The New York diocese proposes to bring about reform by helping weak parishes from the general fund, and the experiment will be watched with interest by all denominations.

One of the most prevalent misconceptions is that a minister and his family should be able and contented to live on a smaller income than other folks. The burden, as was pointed out in New York, does not fall only upon the clergyman, who work is interfered with by harassments of inadequate support and of debt, but upon his wife and children—a condition so common that it is scarcely excites comment, though it is a reflection upon parishioners which should make them blush.

Of course, one great difficulty that is encountered is when establishing new houses of worship, organizing new congregations and planting churches in poor, or sparsely settled, or uncongenial fields. A houseful of poor folks, or a mere handful of reasonably prosperous people cannot afford to pay a minister a living salary; yet it would not do to refrain from founding a new parish, or to deny to a community of public worship along denominational lines, for that reason alone. Hence many examples of poorly paid clergymen. Another fruithful cause of such cases is the multiplicity of denominations. Thus often a town of moderate size has more churches than it can possibly support in any thing approaching dignified and comfortable style.

But even eliminating the absolutely poor or denominationally overcrowded localities any new fields, the shame of small salaries to American ministers still remains among people who can afford to do better and in towns where paucity of resources is not apparent. It is lack of generosity and appreciation, a want of that comprehension which concedes the laborer to be worthy of his hire, and a failure to realize that men and women come to regard the deserts of a minister and his family as they recognize and reward associates and assistants in business or enterprise the clergy will be more prosperous.

ALL INTERESTED.

Baltimore will have this week the meeting of the members of the Atlantic Deeper Waterways Association whose deliberations will be of great interest to all the country and will have no little bearing upon the commercial future of Maryland's metropolis. The Baltimore American of yesterday refering to this convention says:

The work of preparation for the assembling of the Atlantic Deeper Waterways Association in this city this week has resulted in the arrangement of details for a comprehensive program of entertainment. It is a reasonable expectation that the consultation which begins here next Tuesday will have important results in promoting the cause for which the organization stands. Delegates from twenty states will be in attendance. As many as 300 members of the association will come from Philadelphia, New York, Boston and points to the north of Baltimore. Nearly as many more are expected from various points in the South Atlantic States.

The scheme of an inner navigation route along the Atlantic Coast has fully assumed the aspect of a national enterprise. It is no longer a project that is being pushed in the interests of a single city or a single state. The building of the particular links of the route gain immensely in probability of ultimate realization from the extensiveness which the proposal has assumed. Nearly half the population of the country would be commercially benefited by the opening of an inner navigation channel along the entire extent of the Atlantic Coast.

During the two days of the session more than twenty addresses will be delivered which in their diversity and variation of thought and suggestion will shed a most illuminating light upon all phrases and particulars of the comtemplated enterprise. From the titling of the subjects upon which the speeches will be made it is to be understood that each of the speakers will direct attention to some link or division of the proposed waterway. From this method of discuss on there will be left untouched no problem connected with the great enterprise. As a result of the formal speeches and the informal discussions the fact will be brought out with impressive clearness that the comtemplated inner waterway along the Atlantic Coast is of national importance because of the fact that it will promote the commercial advantages of a score of states and of two score important cities.

No other city is more intensely interested in the realization of the proposed scheme than Baltimore. This city will be a midway station on the long route and the commerce of this port will be given an impetus both to the Northward and the Southward. The convention which assembles here next Tuesday is one in which this city is peculiarly interested. And Baltimore is peculiarly interested in making this convention in all respects a success. It will not be, as has been remar ed before, an affair of mere local significance, but it will be really of a high degree of local significance in the particular of two of the most important links of the proposed chain of waterways.

POLITICAL UNREST OF SOUTHERN STATES.

It is not an easy matter to tell what Republican gains in the South mean, but the strength generally shown by Mr. Taft in Southern states in the last election has starte discussion as to the probability of a breaking up of the solidarity of that section.

The review of the vote in the South that was printed in yesterday's News showed some surprising results. It would be easy to dispose of the returns by saying that the South is so strongly Democratic and that there is so little chance of its going Republican, that the people lose interest and do not come out to vote because they know that the party is safe; that a slump in the Democratic vote in Texas, for instance, is no more significant than the enormous slump which the Taft vote showed in Pennsylvania, as compared with that of Roosevelt, his plurality being 100,000 less. But this does not dispose of the question at all, because results in Missouri, Kentucky, Tennessee, and last, but not least, Marvland, prove that the South is by no means impregnable in a political sense, and that, with the Republican party once firmly committed to the policy of letting it work out its own salvation on the negro question, the time is not far off when states that seceded from the Union will split away from the Democratic party.

It is manifest that the South is becoming restless under conditions that give it so little voice in the conduct of the Government, and, indeed, of the conduct of the Democratic party's national policies. It is tired of feeding on husks, and many of its best citizens are beginning to ask if it is not time for parties to diyide on something other than racial lines. The growth of manufacturing industries has done much to bring about the possibility of a new alignment, and it is certain that this contingency is being debated now with more real interest than has been the case hitherto.

One suggestion made for increasing the South's influence in the councils of the nation is unique, to say the least. It is in brief:

"Form a Southern party. Elect our electors by the Legislatures of the respective Southern states. Put into the Electoral College 166 sovereign electors absolutely without instruction. Select men of high purpose, statesmen imbued with patriotism, men with constructive ideas and loyal to the South first, last and always.

"The more one studies the suggestion the more attractive it will become It is not novel. It is perfectly feasible. I am strongly inclined to the opinion that it would be effective.

"Commercially, the East and the West are natural enemies. The East is the manufacturing section and cries lustily for protection. The West is the agricultural section, and to them protective tariff is an imposition. If the South will but withdraw from the most unenviable position of being a target for both sections, it will not be long before the East and the West will be fighting each other with hammer and tongs.

"They will come into the electoral college with their hands on each other's throats. The South, free of entangling alliances, will have the balance of power; can command peace of either belligerent and on its own terms."

Of course, the difficulty of carrying out this suggestion is practically insurmountable. It is the difficulty of getting the consent of the voters to impose this trust in the electors. It was exactly the trust the framers of the Constitution intended to impose in the electors, but the people have taken it away from them, and there is not much chance of its being surrendered. We do not know what argument could be presented that would persuade the people of the South to give over this power and authority to the electors, and it seems a visionary dream more than anything else; but its discussion in a leading Southern paper is an indication that the leaven of unrest is working.

If the political history of the Southern States that have gone into the doubtful column is a criterion—Maryland, Missouri and Kentucky, for instance—it would seem that industrial development is the most potent force in changing politicale nditions. In this State there has grown up the large independent vote, but immigration has had much to do with equalizing the parties. The same thing is true of Missouri and Kentucky. And in the South, wherever there is a vigorous development, there seems to be the greatest aversion to setting down to the conditions of a one-party State. Unless the race question becomes more acute in the next four years, thus driving white men into one party, as in the past, it will be interesting to note developments. With a man like Mr. Taft in the White House, who seems to be animated not only by the friendliest disposition toward the South, but who appears to wish to do what he can to give it the stimulous and vitalization that are needed to get the best of its great resources, it is not at all impossible that we shall witness political changes of much importance in that section.

THE DEATH RECORD.

MRS. MARTHA DELAWDER.

Mrs. Martha Adair Delawder, widow of the late G. W. Delawder, of Garrett county, died at the home of her daughter, Mrs. L. C. Tabb, at Newport News, Va., on Tuesday of this week after an illness of less than a week of heart trouble and complications. Mrs. Delawder, after the death of her husband, which occurred at Deep Creek, came to Oakland where she resided until this fall with her son, Mr. James A. Delawder, and then went to Washington and later to Newport News. She was aged eighty-two years and leaves two sons, Messrs. James A., of Oakland, and John A., of Washington, and two daughters, Mrs. Jane Boughner, of Morgantown, and Mrs. L. C. Tabb, of Newport News. Mrs. Delawder's remains will arrive in Oakland this afternoon on train No. 55 and will be taken from the railway station to the Presbyterian church where the funeral service will take place immediately afterward. The interment will be made in the Oakland cemetery.

JOHN B. REYNOLDS

John B. Reynolds, aged thirty years, died at his home, the Manhatton Hotel, in Oakland, this morning at the hour of 1:00 o'clock, after a week's illness of pneumonia and complications. The deceased was a son of the late Mr. and Mrs. Barney Reynolds, of Oakland, and leaves surviving him a number of brothers and sisters. With his sister, Miss Julia, he resided and conducted the hotel, which has been a profitable business. He leaves besides his immediate relatives a large number of friends, and not an enemy, so far as is known. He was kind-hearted, liberal and charitable. He was a member of the Ancient Order of Hibernians, which will probably have charge of the funeral on Saturday, which will occur from St. Peter's Catholic church, also of the Fraternal Order of Eagles.

Married.

KEIPER—MILLER—At the Lutheran Parsonage, Oakland, on the 17th inst., Henry Keiper and Annie Miller, both of Breedlove, Preston county, W. Va.

Church Supper and Fair.

The ladies of St. Mark's Ev. Lutheran church, of Oakland, will give a supper on the evening of Thursday, December 10th, in the basement of the church. The menu will be as follows: Oysters, fried chicken, hot biscuit, slaw, chicken salad, potato salad, pickles, jelly, baked beans and brown joe, ice cream, cake, candy, coffee. Booths containing fancy articles will be on sale. Just what you may want for your friends' Christmas present. Come and get a good meal and purchase your Christmas gifts all in one evening.

Subscribe for The Republican.

ON A FARTY LINE.

Gossip of the Neighborhood at the Disposal of All.

"Oh, Sam, Johnny Smith is threatened with the measles, and the Joneses' cook is leaving because Mr. Jones doesn't give her enough to eat, and Emily Brown is engaged to young Wheeler, although she has denied it up and down."

Johnson paused in the act of removing his mackintosh, with one arm in and one out. He held his dripping umbrella over the new hall rug, whence it poured rivulets unheeded.

"What in the name of"—

"And," continued Mrs. Johnson breathlessly, "the Hitchcocks have mortgaged their house—I knew they couldn't afford the automobile—and Mr. Perkins is going to sue the Whites for building their bay window out over his property."

"You don't mean to say you have been out in this weather gathering all that gossip!" exclaimed Johnson as he divested himself of his mud laden overshoes.

"No."

"Has any one called?"

Mrs. Johnson shook her head, and the stream of neighborhood happenings which suburbanites love to discuss in the bosoms of their families continued to pour forth from her eager lips. But still she did not reveal the source of her information, and the news kept leaking out at intervals throughout dinner.

"I know," said Johnson at last. "You have had that by the day seamstress."

"No, but the man came today and installed the telephone."

"Well, but"—

"And it's a party wire, you know, so all I have to do when I'm lonely is to go and pick up the receiver. I can always hear somebody or other unbosoming herself to her most particular friend at some telephone that's on the line, you know."—New York Press.

Untaken and Not Paid For.

Andy McTavish was "no feelin' juist weel," so he went to the doctor and stated his complaints.

"What do you drink?" demanded the medico.

"Whusky."

"How much?"

"Maybe a bottle a day."

"Do you smoke?"

"Yes."

"How much?"

"Two ounces a day."

"Well, you give up whisky and tobacco altogether."

Andy took up his cap and in three steps reached the door.

"Andy," called the doctor, "you have not paid for my advice."

"Ah'm no' takin' it," snapped Andy as he shut the door behind him.—Calgary (Canada) Herald.

Explained.

"But she sings more than she plays. Why do you speak of her music as 'instrumental?'"

"Well, it's instrumental in making the neighbors move out."—Philadelphia Press.

Applying the Final Test.

"Doctor," asked the patient, whose eyes had been undergoing treatment for a period of six months or more, "do you think they're all right now?"

"Yes," said the oculist. "I think I can assure you, Mr. Pinchnickel, that your eyes are cured. But there is one more test I should like to apply. See if you can read that at a distance of twelve or fourteen inches without blinking."

Whereupon he laid his bill before him.—Chicago Tribune.

There's the Rub!

Mrs. Dorcas—It will show that the world has advanced when men in the street cars give their seats to women.

Dorcas—It looks to me, my dear, that the real reform will come when the companies give one a seat.—New York Life.

Well Developed at That.

"A football player can't be any good if he has a yellow streak," remarked the soph.

"Yet a football rooter is no good unless he has a 'yeller' streak," replied the junior.—Kansas City Times.

Quite So.

"The man who tolls will not suffer from loneliness."

"True. There are always plenty of people willing to stand around and supervise."—Washington Herald.

Campaign Expenses.

Successful Candidate—Well, Jerry, what did you spend during the campaign?

Jerry—I'll leave that to yer own judgment, yer honor.—New York Life.

Your Address, Madam, Please?

He—Has your fortune ever been told?

She—No, but I dare say papa will tell you if you really have serious intentions.—Boston Transcript.

The Lonaconing Savings Bank

Of Allegany Couuty.

Capital Stock . $20,000
Surplus and Undivided Profits . $60,000
Deposits . . $625,000

3 PER CENT. Interest Paid Upon all Savings Accounts.

GIVE THEM A START

Tne New Year is rapidly approaching. This would be a good time for you to start your young folks on the road to Success.

Early training in the practice of self-denial; instruction as to the use and value of money; opportunities for earning and saving money; all these tend to fix and fasten the children in the ways of thrift and prosperity.

We most gladly assist the young people in getting started.

One Dollar opens an account and entitles the depositor to one of our Savings Banks.

We shall be pleased to have our Garrett County friends call and receive a 1908 Calendar.

DAVID SLOAN, President. R. R. SLOAN, Treasurer.

The First National Bank

FRIENDSVILLE, MD.

Capital, $25,000. Surplus and Undivided Profits, $24,000.

OFFICERS:

L. E. Friend, President. J. W. McCullough, V. P.
R. C. McCandlish, Cashier.

DIRECTORS:

L. E. Friend, Merchant.
J. W. McCullough, Lumber and Coal.
W. W. Savage, Merchant.
D. S. Custer, Merchant.
H. M. Rumbaugh, Farmer.
W. H. H. Friend, Pension Agent and Surveyor.
Horace R. DeWitt, Treasurer of Garrett County, Md.
R. C. McCandlish.

We will issue time or demand certificates of deposit and pay you 4 per cent. interest if your money is left with us.

In all its dealings this Bank combines absolute safety with satisfactory service and never loses sight of either.

SAFETY DEPOSIT BOXES FOR RENT.

ORDER NISI.

Jacob S. Miller, Mortgagee, vs. C. J. Yoder and wife.

No. 1565 Equity. In the Circuit Court for Garrett County, Maryland.

Ordered this 21th day of October, in the year nineteen hundred and eight, by the Circuit Court for Garrett county, sitting in equity, that the sale made and reported in the above cause by Jacob S. Miller, Mortgagee, be ratified and confirmed, unless cause to the contrary thereof be shown on or before the 16th day of November, 1908; provided a copy of this order be published in some newspaper publ shed in Garrett county, once a week for three successive weeks before the 14th day of Novmeber, 1908.

The report states the amount of sale to be $2000.00

E. Z. TOWER, Clerk.

True Copy—test:
E. Z. TOWER, Clerk.

Notice to Creditors.

This is to give notice, That the subscriber, of Garrett county hath obtained from the Orphan's Court of Garrett county, in Maryland, letters of Administration on the personal estate of

WILLIAM FRUSH,

late of Garrett county, deceased. All persons having claims against the deceased are hereby warned to exhibit the same, with the vouchers thereof legally authenticated to the subscriber, on or before the 18th day of April, next; they may otherwise by law be excluded from all benefit of said estate. All persons knowing themselves indebted to said estate are requested to make immediate payment.

Given under my hand this 14th day of October, 1908.

JOHN W. FRUSH,
Administrator,
R. F. D., Oakland, Md.

Notice to Creditors.

This is to give notice, That the subscriber of Garrett County in Maryland, hath obtained from the Orphans' Court of Garrett county, in Maryland, letter Aministration on the personal estate of

J. RUSSELL BROWNING,

late of Garrett County, deceased. All persons having claims against the deceased are hereby warned to exhibit the same with the vouchers thereof lega ly authenticated to the subscriber, on or before the 23d day of April, next; they may otherwise by law be excluded from all benefit of said estate. All persons knowing themselves indebted to said estate are requested to make immediate payment.

Given under my hand this 29th day of October, 1908.

M. A. BROWNING,
Administrator,
Kitzmiller, Md.

Notice to Creditors.

This is to give notice, That the subscribers of Garrett county, hath obtained from the Orphans' Court of Garrett County, in Maryland, Letters of Administration on the personal estate of

JOHN W. BOWERS,

late of Garrett county, deceased. All persons having claims against the deceased are hereby warned to exhibit the same, with vouchers thereof legally authenticated to the subscriber, on or before the 29th day of April next; they may otherwise by law be excluded from all benefit of said estate. All persons knowing themselves indebted to said estate are requested to make immediate payment.

Given under my hand this 28th day of November, 1908.

FLORENCE M. BOWERS,
Administratrix,
Dodson, Md.

Examiners' Notice.

Notice is hereby given, that the undersigned, appointed by the County Commissioners of Garrett county, to view the lands through which the new county road is to be located. Said new road to begin at a point on the county road leading from Thayerville to Altamont, near the residence of Solomon Hogue, running between the lands of Henry Myers, S. O. Clark, Thomas Garrett, Abel Dewitt, Martin Filsinger and Mrs. E. Fundenberg to intersect the Deer Park road at a point near Mrs. Fundenbergs farm, to extend a distance of about one and one-half miles, which is now a private road but used by the public, and examine whether said road shall be located as a county road, will meet on the 16th day of November, 1908 for such purpose, and to determine whether the public convenience requires the said road, and if so, to locate the same and perform their duty in the premises.

ANDREW SHARTZER,
JOHN W. HANEY,
P. J. LOHR,
Examiners.

FOR RENT.—The Rectory on Alder street; house contains 14 rooms; stable and other outbuildings on the property. Apply to BOWIE JOHNSON, Oakland. 3t

WOOD'S SEEDS.
Best qualities obtainable.

Winter or Hairy Vetch

makes not only one of the largest-yielding and best winter feed and forage crops you can grow, but is also one of the best of soil-improvers, adding more nitrogen to the soil than any other winter crop.

Wood's Descriptive Fall Catalogue gives full information about this valuable crop; also about all other for Fall planting. Catalogue mailed free on request. Write for it.

Farm & Garden Seeds

T. W. WOOD & SONS,
Seedsmen, - Richmond, Va.

PUTTING UP PRESCRIPTIONS

Is the most exacting part of our business—a task we do not shirk. Giving you just what your doctor orders, never filling it with something "just as good," we deserve, and by means of this advertisement ask, your patronage. Everything in the drug and chemical line you'll want is here, too

OAKLAND PHARMACY
JOS. E. HARNED, Proprietor,
OAKLAND, MD.

DOES IT PAY?

to tramp errands, lose time and suffer inconvenience—to save the cost of a telephone message.

KODAK SAFETY FILM

A Meritorious Institution

Established as a State Bank in 1888 with a capital of $25,000.00; changed to a National Bank in 1903 and capital increased to $50,000.00; TODAY with a capital and surplus of $85,000.00 and total resources of over $500,000.00 we are

BETTER,

BIGGER

AND

STRONGER

than ever. During the 20 years of our existence, our aim has been to extend to our patrons the best possible service. Our steady growth is evidence that the banking institution, which throws the greatest safeguards around its business in order to protect its depositors merits the confidence of the public. If you are not a customer of this Bank let this be your invitation to become one; our relations will be mutually profitable.

Garrett National Bank

Of Oakland, Maryland.

Mr. R E. Sliger was in Cumberland last Friday on business.

Mrs. R. E. McQuay, of Philadelphia, is in Oakland for a visit to her daughter Mrs. B. F. Selby.

Miss Nell Browning, of Elkins, is here as the guest of her sister, Mrs. Norman R. Sanner.

Mr. D. Y. Morris, of Kingwood, is spending this week in Oakland with his daughter, Mrs. Benj. H. Sincell.

Mr. and Mrs. Harland L. Jones and little daughter are on a week's visit to Dr. Hattie B. Jones, in Wheeling.

The Oakland public schools enrolled 358 pupils during the Fall term and made an average attendance of 301.

Bernard Frieze, the florist, who was so dangerously ill last Thursday and for a few days thereafter, is very much improved.

Mrs. E. A. Weimer, who spent a week or two in Washington with her sister, Mrs. John A. Delawder, has returned to her home in Oakland.

Mr. William C. Bond, of Bond, was in Oakland this morning on business connected with DuBois & Bond Bros., the lumbering concern at Bond.

Mr. Wm. Canty of Hutton, is negotiating for the purchase of the Tene Claggett property and will move his family to Oakland in the near future.

Sheriff Austin Brown made a trip through the Northern end of the county last week on court business, returning to Oakland Saturday afternoon.

Mr. A. Workman, of Huntington, W. Va., who visited his son, Rev. J. B. Workman, in Oakland for a week, returned to his home Monday morning.

Mrs. M. R. Hamill, who spent a week with friends and relatives at Keyser and Upper Potomac, W. Va., returned to her home in Oakland last Saturday.

Thanksgiving turkeys are making their appearance in Oakland and are selling at twenty cents per pound. Chickens are bringing twelve and a-half cents.

The date for the meeting of the Court House Commission when that body will take over the new building has been changed from the 17th inst. to Monday, the 23rd inst., when the Commission will meet for the purpose, at which time all members of the body are expected to be present.

The case of S. F. Hamill vs. John Felty, which was removed from this county to Allegany county for trial, was settled out of court by the parties interested.

Mr. and Mrs. Norman R. Sanner and Miss Nell Browning went to Thayerville this morning where they are the guests today of ex-Sen. and Mrs. R. T. Browning.

When in town don't pass me by but come in and see Baumgartner.

Mr. and Mrs. Horace R. DeWitt returned to Oakland from their honeymoon yesterday afternoon and last night the couple was serenaded by the Mountain City band

Dr. Henry W. McComas, who was in east for two or three weeks owing to the extreme illness of his father, who suffered an attack of appendicitis, returned to his home in Oakland last night, reporting his father's condition as being favorable.

A representative of the Prisoners' Aid Society of Maryland, visited the Garrett county jail in Oakland one day last week and in conversation with one of the ministers gave it as his unqualified opinion that the jail here is the best prison in Maryland, well kept and sanitary in every particular.

Vice President W. McCulloh Brown, of the Maryland Horticultural Society, requests this paper to state that he will be pleased to receive on next Monday, the 23rd inst., fruits, potatoes, etc., for exhibition purposes at the state meeting of the society to be held in Baltimore on December 1st. A special premium for potatoes has been offered by the society, the exhibits to consist of one peck each, correctly named.

Last Saturday was the first real wintry day so far this season, when snow to the depth of six inches fell, much of which remained on the ground until yesterday. In Cumberland the snow was seven inches deep and at points near there it was even deeper. With the melting of the snow the waters were perceptibly raised, which broke the drouth that prevailed here during the months of September, October and the first half of this month, affording relief to the farmers and others who have suffered somewhat.

See The Republican for Job Printing.

CAPITAL 50,000.00 — SURPLUS AND PROFITS $20,000.00

THE First National Bank

OAKLAND, MD.

GOVERNMENT DEPOSITORY.

One of the Largest and Best Equipped Banking Houses in Maryland.

Vaults absolutely Fire and Burglar proof.

Safety Deposit Boxes for Rent

Pays 3 Per Cent. on Time Deposits—Compounded Semi-Annually

Every courtesy extended consistent with sound banking.

Home Savings Banks Free. $1.00 will start an account.

The Depositor with a Dollar account receives the same consideration as the largest depositor. COME IN AND GET ACQUAINTED

ALLEGED THIEVES ARRESTED.

Were Taken From Freight Train As It Was Passing Through Oakland This Morning.

This morning Chief of Police Browning was in receipt of a telegram notifying him to be on the look-out for a pair of alleged thieves who broke into and robbed Felton's store at Corinth, west of Oakland, last night, and who were on an east-bound freight train which was due to arrive here within a few minutes.

The policeman went to the station and just as he arrived the train came into view which he waved down and the men seeing him jumped from the car upon which they were riding, but on the opposite side of the track. When they jumped both fell, one of them being grabbed by Mr. W. S. Bond, brother of Mr. N. U. Bond, and in the tussel which ensued Mr. Bond's arm was considerably bruised, but he held on to his man. The second alleged thief ran back up the track and was overhauled at the hotel crossing by Constable Maffet. The men were taken before Justice Teats where they were examined and pending the arrival here of the West Virginia authorities in which state the theft took place, they were sent to jail.

When the prisoners were searched nothing was found upon them which connected them with the robbery, except a pair of shoes which Mr. Felton thought was taken from his store. The officers, however, state that when the arrest was made both men wore lodge pins, but afterward these pins could not be found.

The men gave their names as Charles Williams, of St. Louis, Mo., and Harry B. Rooney, of Columbus, Ohio, and are fine specimens of manhood.

Notice! I. O. O. F.

The members of Oak Lodge No. 8, I. O. O. F., are requested to be present with their families at I. O. O. F. Hall on Thursday evening, Nov. 26th, 8 p. m., to attend Thanksgiving service. Program has been prepared with several addresses by able speakers. Readings, music, vocal and instrumental.

COMMITTEE.

Estray Notice.

Five head of cattle from pasture at Deer Park—a two-year old yellow Jersey heifer; 1 yearling brindle bull; two two-year old red heifers; one two-year old yellow and white spotted heifer. A liberal reward will be paid for information leading to the recovery or the animals.

ANDREW SHARTZER.

Notice Epworthians.

All members of the Oakland Epworth League are cordially invited to attend a social to be given in the Young Men's Christian Society Hall, in the Mitchell building, Second street, on Thanksgiving evening. A silver offering will be taken at the door for the benefit of the Italian work in the Oakland District.

COMMITTEE.

Thanksgiving Services.

The annual union Thanksgiving services in Oakland will be held in St. Mark's Ev. Lutheran church, on next Thursday morning at 10.30 o'clock when Rev. L. B. Hensley, pastor of the Presbyterian church, will preach the sermon. Special music will be a feature of the service. All are urge to attend.

Last Notice to Delinquent Tax-Payers

The undersigned, as County Treasurer for the years 1906 and 1907, hereby notifies all who have not paid their taxes that they must do so immediately, otherwise I shall be compelled to advertise the property of such delinquents, consequently costs will be added.

I have been as lenient with delinquents as I possibly could be; the county's debts must be paid and I am expected to pay all orders upon presentation. This I cannot do unless I have the funds on hand with which to meet the obligations of the county. There is yet outstanding several thousand dollars of uncollected taxes. The money is due the county and should have been paid months ago. I make this last appeal to the tax payers and request that they respond at once, otherwise the law will be invoked.

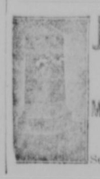
Let me hear from you.

Yours respectfully,
HORACE R. DEWITT,
tf Late Treasurer of Garret County.

Engraved calling cards and wedding invitations may be procured by leaving your orders at this office. A very attractive and stylish line at moderate prices is shown.

Mr. Robinson Loses.

In an opinion, written by Judge Pearce, the Court of Appeals affirmed the judgment of the Circuit Court for Allegany county imposing a fine of $100 and a sentence of 15 days in jail upon John J. Robinson, editor of the Lonaconing Star, for criminal libel upon Duncan R. Sloan.



J. B. WILLIAMS CO.
FROSTBURG, MD.
Cheapest place to buy
MONUMENTS HEADSTONES AND IRON FENCING
Send for prices

Commissioners' Meeting.

OFFICE OF THE COUNTY COMMISSIONERS FOR GARRETT CO., OAKLAND, MD., NOV. 19, 1908.

The County Commissioners for Garrett county will meet at their office in Oakland on

Tuesday, Dec. 8th, 1908,

for the purpose of transacting all routine business.

By order of the Board,
A. G. ROSS, Clerk.

CASTORIA
For Infants and Children.
The Kind You Have Always Bought
Bears the Signature of Chas. H. Fletcher

Order of Publication.

Alice Armstrong vs. John Armstrong. No. 1572 Equity. In the Circuit Court for Garrett County, Maryland.

The object of this suit is to obtain a decree, a vinculo matrimonii, the plaintiff from the defendent.

The bill states that the plaintiff and defendant were married by the Rev. Harris, in Tucker county, West Virginia, at Easter, 1899, and that they resided together in the State of West Virginia, until the month of March, 1903, and that though the conduct of plaintiff toward the said John Armstrong, her husband, has always been kind, affectionate and above reproach, the said John Armstrong, in the month of March, 1903, without just cause or reason, abandoned and deserted her, while they were living in Nicholas county, West Virginia, and has declared his intention to live with her no longer, and that such abandonment has continued unlinterruptedly for at least three years and is deliberate and final, and the separation of the parties beyond any reasonable expectation of reconciliation, and that immediately after such abandonment and desertion, the plaintiff removed to Garrett county, Maryland, where she has since made her home and supported herself and three children by manuel labor, and the bill further states that the plaintiff and defendant have had three children born to them from said marriage, the oldest, Mary, A. now past sixteen years of age, Charles, past thirteen years of age, and Sarah J. now past ten years of age, the custody of which youngest child the plaintiff prays may be awarded to her. The bill then prays that the plaintiff may be divorced, a vinculo matrimonii, from the said defendant, John Armstrong, for the custody of said youngest child of the plaintiff, and for general relief, and an order of publication against the defendant, who is alleged to be a non-resident of the State of Marylndd.

It is thereupon, this 22nd day of October 1908, ordered by the Circuit Court for Garrett county, in Equity, that the plaintiff, by causing a copy of this order to be inserted in some newspaper, published in Garrett county, once in each of four successive weeks before the 21st day of November, 1908, give notice to the said absent defendant of the object and substance of this bill, warning him to appear in this Court, in person or by solicitor, on or before the 8th day of December, 1908, to show cause, if any he has, why a decree ought not to be passed as prayed.

E. Z. TOWER, Clerk.

True copy, test:—E. Z. TOWER Clerk.

The man Who Makes A STUDY OF HIS APPEARANCE

Is the man who best appreciates the detail of the tailoring we turn out. The workmanship passes without a question, the fit is naturally a matter of course, but the shape we mould into the garments give them a character that finishes them off and makes the satisfaction of the owner complete.

All this is a bid for your next tailoring order. We know we can make you the best clothes you ever wore. We want you to know it. That order is the best and only sure way to settle the question.

JAMES BROCK,
Dixon Building,
Oakland, Maryland.

ARTHUR TOWNSHEND

BARGAINS! BARGAINS!

TO CLOSE OUT SOME

Flannels, Blankets and Flannel Skirts

WE CAN GIVE YOU GOOD PRICES.

MEN'S AND BOYS' Overcoats AT A GOOD SACRIFICE

STILL HAVE SOME GOOD THINGS IN

Underwear, Gloves, Mittens, and Tam o'Shanters Children's Caps.

ARTHUR TOWNSHEND

H. C. Sincell & Co.

FASHIONS 1908

The CLOAKS and SUITS we are showing this season at

$5.50 TO $30.00

are far superior to any previous effort.

See this line before you buy and be convinced that the

Fit and Style

you get here is what you desire.

H. C. Sincell & Co.

SUPPOSE you were cast up on an uninhabited tropical shore with nothing but a penknife and a magnifying glass? How would you go about getting a living? How would you manage to defend yourself from the wild beasts and the wilder elements?

These are problems that Tom Blake and the beautiful Miss Leslie and Winthrope had to solve. How they did solve them is told in

INTO THE PRIMITIVE

BY ROBERT AMES BENNET ILLUSTRATIONS BY RAY WALTERS

The beginning was at Capetown, when Blake and Winthrope boarded the steamer as fellow-passengers with Lady Bayrose and her party—which included the beautiful Miss Leslie. Three days later the ship went to pieces in a cyclone on a wild and isolated coast, and these three—the American engineer, the Englishman, and the heiress—were the only survivors. And when highly cultivated civilization was brought face to face with the primitive, what law could prevail but the survival of the fittest? It is a story full of vigorous strength and unusual charm.

It will be printed serially in these columns. The opening chapters to appear in the near future. You will not want to miss it.

across ter whar de cracker white's a-settin'. An' dis time w'en she ben' low befo' him she sez:

"'White man, sneak up an' tell de troof. Ain't yo' all Mahs' John?'

"'Ah am!' sez de man. An' he stud up an' pulled off his ol' hat an' false beard, an' hit sho'ly wuz Mahs' John. He hadn't gone ter Memphis 'tall. He wuz des a-pertendin'. He'd come dat disguised ez er cracker white fo' ter see what troof dar wuz 'bout Aunt Dinah's dancin'.

"'Oh, de law gormunity!' screams Aunt Dinah. An' she t'rows up her han's an' draps ter de flo', dead ez a doornail, an' nebbah moved ag'in.

"Well, dat put er stop ter de high jinks mighty quick. Everybody quit dare clappin' an' stompin' an' rolled dare eyes. Unc' Jim frowed down de banjo an' jumped ter his feet. He gib one look at Mahs' John an' one look at Aunt Dinah. Den he sez: 'Feet, carry off de body!' an' le'p' t'rough de winder, tekin' sash an' all, an' lit out. De res', dey foller suit, an' dey tuk off helter skelter t'rough doahs an' winders, whichever happened handy, an' scattered in de night. An' ez fo' Unc' Jim, nobody ain' nebbah laid eyes on him since, an' what he lit out ter after he le'p' t'rough de winder de goodness on'y knows!"

"HE STUD UP AN' PULLED OFF HIS OL' HAT."

Had to Get Up.

Many years ago Dr. Oscar Blumenthal, the director of the Lessing theater in Berlin, had an unpleasant experience of the vigilance with which the authorities carried out their duties.

In his comedy, the "Orient Reise," one of the characters was afflicted with a mother-in-law of the most objectionable kind. This lady died and, according to the belief of her relatives, went to heaven. The prospect of a fresh acquaintance with his dreaded mother-in-law so terrified her son-in-law that he announced that if this should be his fate "when the resurrection comes I shan't get up."

This was sufficient for the authorities. Twenty-four hours after the production of the piece an ominous blue envelope arrived at the Lessing theater containing a peremptory order from the president of police that the lines in question should be immediately suppressed "as being calculated to wound the religious feelings of the lieges."

The Ideal Forester.

To be a good forester a man should combine something of the naturalist with a good deal of the business man. To know how to use the forest he must be able to study it. He must have, therefore, the power of observation, a fondness for nature and the ability to penetrate her secrets. But if he is to succeed he must also have good practical judgment and the ability to meet and handle men. He must be resourceful, able to stand by himself, willing to undergo the privations of rough life and capable of commanding the respect of rough men, who quickly recognize virility and genuineness of character, but will not tolerate pretense or the assumption of superiority. A forester needs a vigorous mind in a vigorous body. He must be of the kind that likes to get things done and does not give up when things are not going his way. He will have to face difficulties and work out problems far from outside help, relying solely on himself. He ought to be hard to whip.

A Business Asset.

The owner of the only red brick building in a downtown block of gray buildings decided to paint his building the prevailing tone. Without previous announcement of his intention to the tenants he sent the painters around on Monday morning to begin work. When the tenants learned his purpose, a mighty howl was raised by them.

"Change the color of this building!" they exclaimed. "Why, this vivid red is one of our best business assets. It helps to locate us. Being the only red building in the neighborhood, it sticks in the minds of people who can't remember the number, but who can direct others to us just because we are doing business in a red house. We have stayed here all these years on account of the conspicuous color. If that is changed, we shall move."

The owner listened to these plaints patiently. Then he went ahead and painted the building, but he painted it a still brighter red.—New York Press.

Imagined ills painted by our fears are always greater than the true.—Metastasio.

Aunt Dinah's Dance.

By CLARENCE L. LOWER.

Copyright, 1903, by Clarence L. Lower.

FOR some time after Maria had finished the story the little girl sat looking thoughtfully out of the window.

"So Mr. Rabbit was only pretending?" she said presently, seeing that the old colored woman showed no sign of continuing the narrative.

"Dat's all, honey," said Maria, poking the week's wash into the steaming boiler with the laundry stick. "Dat's all 'e wuz, des a-pertendin'. Some folks 'spec's dey kin fool yuther folks yeah in an' yeah out wid deir pertendin'. Sometimes dey does, an' sometimes dey don't. Dey all gits found out in de aind, dough, lak ol' Aunt Dinah, after she'd done gone on a-foolin' Mars' John de lan' knows how long wid her pertendin'.

"Now, I dunno dat ol' Aunt Dinah wuz mo' lailer dan de common run ob cullud folks or ef she'd hoodooed Mahs' John inter favorin' her above de res'. But, w'en de rheumatiks doubled her up so's she cu'dn't walk 'ceptin' wid two crutches, Mahs' John he give out dat she wuzn't ter do no wock 'tall, but des tek her time a-settin' at her ease a-doin' ez she liked. So on good days Aunt Dinah set in de sun by de cyabin' do' a-smokin' her pipe, an' a-jowerin' de pickaninnies; an' on bad days she set by de fire, still a-smokin' her pipe an' a-jowerin' de pickaninnies an' keepin' 'em all a-runnin' heah an' yon at her beck an' call. An' dat's all she done, an ez fur ez she went, day after day. But yit folks by day is ez diffrunt f'om folks by night ez de shinin' sun is f'om de dahk ob de moon, an' dat's de troof de roun' wo'l' ober!

"Ebery oncet in er while Mahs' John he'd go down de bayou ter Memphis an' be gone days at de time. Whiles he's gone de overseer hab charge. An' all night long de overseer's a-projeckin' eroun', peekin' heah an' peekin' yon, fo' ter see whut's gwine on in de quahtehs after dahk.

"So one day, w'en Mahs' John come back, de overseer go ter 'im, an' 'e say, 'Mahs' John, bettah look out fo' ol' Aunt Dinah, 'kase she's des a-pertendin'—dat she ain't lame 'tall, an' she kin dance ez libely ez de spriest yaller gal in de quahtehs.' But Mahs' John he on'y say 'Pooh!' an' go 'bout his bus'ness.

"Well, bimeby Mahs' John he go ter Memphis fo' a week. Des ez soon's he's gone Aunt Dinah invites all de darkies in de quahtehs fo' ter come dat ebenin', 'kase dar's gwine ter be a dance an' ez possum supper at her cabin, an' Aunt Dinah wuz gwine ter cook de supper, fo' now Mahs' John wuz gone away dey c'u'd have all de likkfalutin things dey lifed. So w'en de moon come up big an' bright all de darkies come ter Aunt Dinah's cabin. Dar wuz young an' old, gray an' grizzled, an' dey filled de room ez full ez hit c'u'd hold. An', um-m! Talk o' yo' suppers! G'way, chile! 'Twa'n't are wuz a supper ez wuz a supper. I tell yo'! De folks dey eat an' drink an' laugh an' joke ez merry ez crickets. An' all de ebenin' ol' Aunt Dinah stan' up ez peart an' straight ez enny, a-washin' up de supper dishes ez de folks e't 'em empty an' a-laughin' an' a-jokin' wid de best.

"HIT MEK DE FOLKS ROLL DAR EYES."

"Bimeby dey cl'ar de flo' fo' dancin'. Ol' Unc' Jim he tek de chair an' begin fo' ter tune de banjo. An' I want yo' ter know, chile, dat ol' Unc. Jim wuz de champeen banjo picker ob de quahtehs. Dey might er bin some ez 'cought dat dey cud pick hit, but hit tuk Unc' Jim ter show 'em how. He wuz up ter all de tricks ob de trade in de banjo pickin'. He cud t'row de banjo eroun' behind him, an' swing hit by de neck an' toss hit in de air an' ketch hit ag'in an' go right erlong a-pickin' an' nevah miss de tune. I tell yo', Unc' Jim wuz a dandy at de banjo, an' w'en he stahted in ter play dey wuz sompin' doin'.

"Well, w'en Unc' Jim he stahts in on de banjo Sukey know she teks de flo' fo' ter dance. Sukey wuz er pale bright mulatto gal. She'd got de likes in her haid dat she cud outdance de bes' in de quahtehs. An' I tell yo' chile, de way dat gal fling her feet about wuz er caution! She'd put her han's on her hips an' sway herse'f back an' fo'th an' luk over her shoulder at de boys an' gin lak she dared 'em, an' all de time she keep her feet goin' to beat de han'.

"De crowd dey all laffs an' whoops an' claps dey han's an' pats dey feet on de flo', an' dey all 'low what Sukey's de champeen dancer ob de quahtehs—dat is, dey all 'lowed she wuz 'ceptin' Aunt Dinah. An' Aunt Dinah, she stud in de kitchen a-washin' up de supper dishes an' a-lookin' on wid her nose in de air, an' she 'low ter herse'f dat Sukey mek de ornerlest kin' ob a-dancer dat she ebber see in all her bawn days.

"'Todies de las', des ez Sukey wuz a-railroadin' her pooties', Aunt Dinah kain't stan' hit no longer."

"'Umph!' sez she. 'D' yo' call dat dancin'? Git off de flo', gal. Hilt teks me ter show yo' how ter dance!'

"An', wid a whoop, Aunt Dinah jumped inter de middle ob de flo', shoved Sukey erside an' began ter jig erway lak all possessed. Ol' Unc' Jim he struck up er rattlin' tune an' played faster'n ebbah. De faster he played de faster Aunt Dinah dance. She cut de pigeon wing, she railroaded an' she do de hoedown; she whirl roun' an' roun', she spring high in de air an' she toss her arms; she sway back an' fo'th an' she shout an' sing, an' all de time she keep er-flappin' her feet in de libelies' kin' ob er way an' nebbah miss de tune. Hit mek de folks roll dar eyes, I tell yo', fo' ter see her! Talk erbout bein' he'pless an' crippled wid rheumatiz! Shoo! Aunt Dinah wuz sho' 'nuff pertendin'!

"Bimeby, w'en de tune's ended, Unc' Jim lay de banjo down, an' he 'low dat playin' an' dancin' is dry wuhk an' hit wuz time dey wuz passin' roun' sumpin'. All dis time nobody pays no 'tention ter a po' cracker white dat wuz er-settin' quietly by de chimbly corner er-lookin' on. He'd come to de cabin do' des ez Sukey wuz erbout ter staht de dance an' axed Unc' Jim c'u'd he please come in an' set by de chimbly corner an' res', dat he wuz trompin' 'cross de kentry an' wuz nigh plumb tuckered out an' hongry ez er dog. Unc' Jim 'lowed he c'u'd set in de corner twell de shindig wuz oner, an' den ef dar wuz enny scraps lef' de white man c'u'd have 'em ter eat. De man wuz suttenly de shackles' po' white dat 'd ebbah bin seed roun' de quahtehs, but he set quietly by de chimbly corner wid his ol' hat drawed down ober his eyes an' his arms folded watchin' de goin's on an' nebbah sayin' a wuhd er makin' er move.

"So now Unc' Jim call ter de white man, an' dey tek er tray ob mugs an' go down cellar, whar Unc' Jim had stowed erway a kag ob Mahs' John's bes' applejack dat day onbeknowst. De cracker white hel' de tray an' de candle, an' Unc' Jim ups wid de ax an' knocks in de haid ob de kag, an' fills de mugs wid de applejack. Den Unc' Jim he tells de cracker white to go upstairs an' serbe de applejack to de ladies an' gemmen, whiles Unc' Jim stays down by de kag ter fill up de mugs ez dey's brung down empty.

"'An' min' out how yo' does hit, too, white man!' says he. 'An' min' oct dat yo' don' slight nobody, 'kase ef yo' does we'll kill yo'!' Yo's de on'y white man in de quahtehs ternight, so bettah watch out!'

"Well, w'en ebberybody'd bin serbed wid applejack 'roun' an' 'roun' ag'in, an' dey wuz feelin' happy, Unc' Jim comes up from de cellar an' de cracker white set down by de chimbly corner wid er mug ob applejack dat Unc' Jim gib 'im. Unc' Jim tek up de banjo an' stahts ter pickin' ag'in, an' Aunt Dinah she begin fo' ter dance some mo', an' ebberybody else keep time a-clappin'. Unc' Jim, he look up at de ceilin' an' sway his body back an' fo'th, an' pat his foot on de flo', keepin' time to de music.

"Bimeby he commence ter sing:

"'Ol' Mahs' John gone ter Memphis to-day.
Clap yo' han's, niggahs. Mek yo' feet go pit-a-pat.
Ol' Mahs' John long time gone erway.
Oo-ah, niggahs, ain' yo' mighty glad ob dat?

"'Possum am a-fryin' an' de taters bustin' white.
Clap yo' han's, niggahs. Mek yo' fee' go pit-a-pat.
Gwine ter hab gre't times at ouah house ternight.
Oo-ah, niggahs, ain' yo' mighty glad ob dat?

"'Gwine ter pick de banjo an' dance de buck an' wing.
Clap yo' han's, niggahs. Mek yo' feet go pit-a-pat.
Gwine ter eat an' drink all night an' all night gwine ter sing.
Oo-ah, niggahs, ain' yo' mighty glad ob dat?'

"All de while Aunt Dinah she kep' on a-dancin'. She ben' her body back, an' she ben' her body fo'th, twell she mos' bow to de groun'. She dance ober to whar de cracker white's a-settin' by de chimbly corner, an' she bow low befo' him twell her haid mos' tech his'n, an' she look him in de face an' roll her eyes. Den she dance back ter whar Unc' Jim's a-settin' pickin' de banjo, an' she whisper ez she pass him:

"'Unc' Jim, I's 'spicious 'bout dat 'ar white man!'

"'Wha' yo' mean?' Unc' Jim whisper back.

"'Wait!' sez Aunt Dinah.

"So Aunt Dinah danced across ter de cracker white ergin an' ben' low befo' him twell her haid mos' tech his'n an' look him in de face an' roll her eyes. Den back she danced ter Unc' Jim an' sez:

"'Unc' Jim, I 'low dat ain't no cracker white.'

"'Who yo' 'low 'tis, den?' sez Unc' Jim.

"'I 'low 'tain't nobody in de roun' worl' but Mahs' John his own se'f!' sez Aunt Dinah.

"'Shoo!' Unc' Jim 'spon', an' he go right erlong playin' de banjo.

"Oncet mo' Aunt Dinah danced a word, according to my theory. The word is 'will.' When the other shift is down, it becomes 2&&. Now we will go on further."

Judson watched in fear and trembling as the expert continued. When Farquahar had finished he handed the sheet of paper to Judson.

"Evidently the other strips will have to be translated before the connection is obtained," he observed.

"WILL YOU LUNCH TODAY AT SWAN'S?"

Judson read the sentence with blurred eyes:

"Will you lunch today at Swan's?"

Then his senses awoke.

"Give me another," he asked, holding out a nervous hand.

Farquahar had already tapped it off: "Suppose we try Fuller's today?"

A great light broke in upon Judson.

"Yes, I understand," he almost shouted. "I see the whole thing now." His face was fairly illumined.

"Must be good news," said Farquahar, noting the marked change.

Judson did not reply, but turned around to his desk and scratched off a check for $50.

"Don't translate any more," he ordered, handing the check over to Farquahar. "Just show me how that blamed thing works, and I'll find out for myself what the young rascal's been up to."

Farquahar was completely in the dark, but he made the required explanations and left the office with Judson punching at the typewriter with his big, heavy fingers.

As he progressed Judson's enthusiasm grew. He became more animated as each strip was translated and occasionally burst out into almost boyish laughter. When he had finished he had made out the following sentences at the end of about an hour's hard work picking on the typewriter:

"Must keep dad in the dark awhile longer."

"Wait till the deal in oranges is over with."

"Will meet you at the doorway this noon."

"Am sure he doesn't suspect us, sweetheart."

"Will be my own boss when I get into law practice."

Hiram Judson was somewhat of an old fashioned man, and his heart was what is commonly known as "in the right place." He sat quietly in his chair for some time, occasionally wiping his eyeglasses—frequently, in fact. He thought over his lifelong acquaintance with Jim Cresswell, Alice's father. They were men of the same stamp, and he knew the girl was worthy of any young man, although penniless. He crumpled the strips of paper in his hand, and his throat grew dry as he thought of his distrust.

HE BURST INTO ALMOST BOYISH LAUGHTER.

"Blast these modern business stories!" he ejaculated, rising from his chair.

The next day Hiram Judson was the big man of the street, for he had succeeded in cornering the orange market. Strangers had his name upon their lips, and friends showered compliments upon him, but the greatest pleasure of all to him was a quiet little surprise of his own.

He absented himself from the office at a time when he knew Fred would be there and, summoning a messenger boy, sent up a little package he had carefully arranged.

It was addressed to Alice, and, with Fred bending over her shoulder, she opened it. The package contained flowers, and accompanying them was a slip bearing the following inscription:

0&3@83 @?3?05 ?9: *46578@589 :8 !49.

They looked at the inscription in amazement.

"Somebody has discovered our cipher!" cried Fred. They looked at each other in confusion, and then young Judson fell to work on the typewriter. The translation was quickly made:

"Please accept congratulations from dad."

Both colored violently, and then Fred put his arms proudly around the girl and kissed her fervently.

"Oh, Fred, do you understand?" whispered the girl, drawing the half crushed flowers up till their odor was penetrating.

"OH, FRED, DO YOU UNDERSTAND?"

"Yes," answered Judson, holding her closely. "Yes, Alice, I know."

For the flowers which good, old fashioned Hiram Judson had sent were orange blossoms.

$7009$3 23 7&&34$ 59%@6.

He compared the strip with the one he had found the day previous. The only possible clew was a repetition of the group of characters "59%@6." The combinations were apparently without rhyme or reason, and he was completely baffled.

It took some time before he could bring himself to decisive action, yet the following day he expected to draw into his control the outstanding product which meant his success or failure at cornering the orange market. He knew he must act immediately if at all.

When the girl returned he decided to make the first test.

"I noticed this little slip of paper blow on to the floor after you left, Alice," he observed, striving to speak kindly and without emotion. "Is it anything that you care about?"

He watched her carefully and saw the color mount to her cheeks.

"No—no—it is nothing," she stammered in confusion. "I was just cleaning up the machine a little and wanted to see if those characters were clear."

She attempted to speak quietly, but her eyes did not seek his with their usual directness.

His heart sank at her perfidy. The type was the same as that on her machine, but he knew that Fred and not Miss Cresswell had written them, undoubtedly on the same kind of typewriter in some other office. What office? Was there a similar typewriter in the law school?

THE GIRL STUDIED IT INTENTLY.

A hundred questions came into his mind, but he decided first of all to consult a cipher expert and see if the riddle could be solved that way. Gathering the strips of paper together, he went up to an office in the same building where he knew a man named Farquahar, who was up on such things.

Farquahar greeted him cordially. He knew there was something important on hand when he received a visit from Hiram Judson.

"I have a little problem here for you to unravel," said Judson, speaking firmly. Farquahar could see that he was greatly wrought up.

"What make of typewriter is this?" was Farquahar's first question, examining the strips.

Judson told him he believed it was exactly similar to the one in his office.

"I can tell you one thing about this cipher immediately," said Farquahar incisively. "It is either a very easy one or a very shrewd one. I could perhaps tell immediately if I saw the machine on which it was written or one exactly like it. Is your office vacant at the present time?

Judson nodded.

"Well, let us go down there now, and I will take a look at it."

They went out to the elevator to descend, and Judson mopped his forehead with his handkerchief. After all, he asked himself, did he want to know what the characters all meant? He had half a mind to write Farquahar a check for $50 and tell him to leave the job alone.

But Farquahar bustled actively into the office ahead of him, where the janitor was engaged in sweeping.

"Let this go tonight, John," said Judson. He closed the door after the janitor.

Farquahar looked at the machine carefully.

"You might as well watch this little experiment," he said. "If it succeeds

"NO—NO—IT IS NOTHING."

it will save me a trip to the sales office to see other machines."

Judson sank on a chair helplessly. He could not remember when he had been so nervous in years.

"You observe," said the expert, "that this typewriter has two shift keys. One gives you all capital letters and the other when pressed down in place gives you all figures and characters. It is apparent that in writing these strips of paper the character key was pressed down. It is possible that the characters stand for the letters that would appear if the other shift had been used. We will see."

Judson, in a daze, saw him pick up the strip which he had tried to puzzle out the day before, bearing the following figures and characters:

28&& 697 : ?= 59%@6 @5 82@:8?

He held his breath as the experiment progressed. Farquahar pressed down the capital shift key and listened at its place. Then he began to strike the keys containing the figures and characters on the strip.

First he struck the figure 2 and obtained the corresponding capital W. Then he struck the figure 8 and got a capital I. Then he struck the two characters && and obtained two capital Ls.

"Ah, I think we are on the right track!" he said quickly. Judson jumped nervously.

"You see the capital shift gives us

Orange Blossoms

By FRANK H. SWEET.

Copyright, 1903, by Frank H. Sweet.

HIRAM JUDSON was disturbed. It was not business matters alone that troubled him, but a mixture of business and family matters. He cordially detested the combination, having endeavored to raise his children, particularly his son Fred, in simple honesty and without too much knowledge of business life from the speculative side.

He did not know whether to be glad or sorry that he had read all the new novels dealing with the stock market entanglements and gone to modern business plays appearing at the theater. It was one thing to have knowledge of the realistic side of dealing in stocks for his own sake and quite another to discover through this wisdom disagreeable complications involving his son, his trusted stenographer, Miss Alice Cresswell, and heaven only knew how many more. His wife and daughter might be pitted against him for all he knew. Such things were common in the books he had read and the plays he had seen.

It was shortly after he began cornering the orange market that the discovery was made. He remembered but vaguely the first instance when his attention had been drawn to a strip of white paper lying upon the stenographer's desk, on which a number of characters from the typewriter were inscribed.

He paid no particular attention to the matter at the time, but since then the strips of paper had appeared more frequently. Yesterday he had discovered a new one, and when Miss Cresswell was out to lunch his suspicions led him to examine her desk, disclosing several more.

Judson held the strips of paper in his fingers. They were apparently innocent, and all bore a harmless series of typewriter characters. The one he had discovered the previous day had the following marks upon it:

28XX 697 X7:? = 59%@6 @5 82@:8?

The more he looked at the odd characters upon the strips of paper the more Judson felt within him that he had stumbled upon an incriminating cipher. Perhaps he was the victim of a plot. The question rang in his ears incessantly in spite of himself.

STUMBLED UPON AN INCRIMINATING CIPHER.

The idea made him shudder, for he had a suspicion that his son Fred had left the incriminating paper on Miss Cresswell's desk. It had appeared there shortly before she went to lunch, when Fred was in the room, and within five minutes after he left Miss Cresswell put on her jacket rather hastily and followed.

He had the Florida orange crop well in hand, but there was a hitch in the southern California product. Matters had to be handled skillfully, and a little information placed in certain hands would undoubtedly ruin him at this particular time. He had always had perfect confidence in Miss Cresswell. She was the daughter of a former business associate who had failed, and Judson had given the girl work in his office, which she needed badly. His son, of course, was the apple of his eye and would ultimately fall heir to his immense fortune. Fred was just finishing up his law studies and had never dabbled in stocks—at least to his father's knowledge. He had no money to dabble in them with, and yet—those books—those plays!

"I wish I had never read those books or seen those plays," said Judson to himself. "I would rather my son would rob me of my last penny than that I should distrust him for a single moment."

With this he tried to dismiss the matter from his mind, but the cipher had done its work.

He could make nothing of the characters on the paper strips. The question stuck at the close of the one he had found the previous day he took it. Somebody wanted to know something. Miss Cressfell knew his secrets thoroughly. Was Fred trying to sell him out? The question fairly burned into his brain.

Next day Judson was on the alert. Fred came into the office shortly before noon, as usual, and they passed customary greetings. The young man apparently paid no attention to Miss Cresswell, yet Judson observed him leave a strip of paper on her desk. The girl studied it intently, while to all appearances going on with her typewriting.

Fred left the office, and in a short time Judson saw Miss Cresswell slip the paper under her notebook and prepare to leave. When she had gone Judson rushed eagerly to get the paper.

He examined it as closely as he had done the others, but the characters were Greek to him. Today they were as follows:

BOWSER HAS FLOWN.

Famous Philosopher Disappears After Solving Birds' Secret.

MRS. BOWSER DISTRACTED.

She Advertises For News of Lost Husband, Who Thought He Could Fly. Has Any One Seen a Bowser Bird In the Sky?

[Copyright, 1907, by Homer Sprague.]

One evening some days since Mr. Bowser shut himself up in the library for an hour under the excuse that he had some important business letters to write. The next day, when I was overhauling the room, I found that he had passed his time making drawings of wings and reading a magazine article entitled "Why Can't Human Beings Fly?"

The next evening, as we sat on the front steps to get the evening air, I noticed him carefully watching the swallows and bats, and after a time he queried:

"Mrs. Bowser, have you given the subject of flying machines any thought?"

"Not a great many thoughts," I answered.

"But you must be aware that at the present moment thousands of individuals are giving the matter their earnest consideration. Time and money are being lavished to solve the puzzle, and the newspapers are full of what benefits may be expected when flying machines are as common as birds."

"IN A WEEK YOU WILL SEE ME LEAVING THE HOUSE FOR THE OFFICE ON WINGS."

"Yes, I have read a good deal about them, but how can the problem ever be solved? How can you expect a big and awkward machine to fly against the wind? How can you provide against sudden gusts and squalls? At any moment some part of the machine may get out of order, and what's going to happen then? A flying machine may be made to sail around a bit on a perfectly calm day, but of what utility would it be?"

Mr. Bowser looked at me in admiration for a moment and then exclaimed:

"By thunder, woman, you have got a head on you! You have stated the case just as I have. The flying machine is an impossibility. It will never go beyond the toy stage. Tell me, then, what must follow?"

"They will have to give it up."

"They will give up the machine, but turn to something else. Man now travels under the sea, and he will never be satisfied until he travels through the air. If he can't do it one way, he will another. He not only wants the novelty, but the convenience of it. For instance, it is two miles from here to my office. I have to transfer. I am delayed by street car blocks and accidents. I have to jam in with the crowd. I may be on time or I may be half an hour late. I have my feet stepped on, my pocket picked and the conductor works lead nickels off on me. Suppose that instead of all this I could go up on the roof of this house and launch myself into the air and be at the office in three or four minutes?"

"It will never be possible."

"You may witness it within a week," he replied with a laugh. "Mrs. Bowser, answer me this. How does a bird fly?"

"By using its wings, of course."

"But what about the wings?"

"They are so constructed by nature as to sustain the bird in the air, the bones being hollow."

"Ah—ha! Now we are coming down to business. It's all in the wings instead of the bird. The ostrich has wings, but cannot fly at all. The swallow has wings and can fly all day. The wing bones of the hen are nearly full of marrow, and she cannot fly ten rods. The wing bones of the dove are entirely hollow, and she can fly a hundred miles. What deductions do you draw?"

"Why, if man is going to navigate the air he must do it with wings."

"Exactly."

"And the wings must be made after the pattern of the bird that flies the easiest and the farthest."

Mr. Bowser stepped into the vestibule out of sight of the people on the street and beckoned to me. When I was beside him he put his mouth close to my ear and whispered:

"You've struck it, Mrs. Bowser! Your head is level!"

"And what are you going to do?" I asked.

"Do? Do? Why I'm going to make $10,000,000 in the next ten years and a reputation that will last as many years. I thought this thing all out days ago, but I wanted to see if you would corroborate me. If we want to fly we must go back to first principles and take the birds for our pattern. Birds don't fly with their bodies, but with their wings. Put the right sort of wings on a man and he flies. You fly—I fly—everybody flies. By thunder! By thunder!"

"But those wings have got to be invented," I protested, a bit startled by his earnestness.

"Easy as rolling off a log—just a matter of three days' practice, Mrs. Bowser. You will see me leaving this house for the office on wings within a week. You will see me sailing over houses and trees and the river like an albatross. You will see the streets full of people looking up at me and shouting the name of Bowser. A thousand reporters will be tramping through the house and looking into the closets and under the beds and up the chimneys and asking you whether the mole was on your grandmother's chin or cheek. The fame of it! And the millions and millions of dollars!"

I have seen Mr. Bowser enthusiastic, but I never saw him so far gone before. Almost any second I expected to see him spread his wings and fly away. I started out to discourage him, but I made a failure of it. Boys might throw stones and men might bring out their shotguns, but he had a way of dodging them. He knew just how those wings ought to be made and just how they should be worked, and he sat down on all my arguments and flattened them out. I got him to fly to bed at last, but it was a long and sorrowful night for me. When he shot it was to work his legs as if flying, and when he was awake it was to tell me how many eagles and wild geese he would overhaul and bring to market. Just before daylight I fell into a sound sleep, and when I awoke he was gone. I questioned the hired girl about him, and she replied:

"He came down here, flapping his arms, an hour ago and was in such a hurry to get off that he would only wait for a cup of coffee. As near as I could make him out he expects to become a bird. Begging your pardon, ma'am, but a fine, fat, baldheaded bird will he make. Will he be called the Bowser bird?"

I was on my dignity and didn't answer, but as the forenoon dragged away I became very anxious. I figured that he had gone to some machine shop to get his wings made, and I could not tell at what moment he might come flying home and drop with a plump on the doorstep or be brought to the gate in an ambulance. At midafternoon I gave a boy a quarter to circle around and see if he could see a large bird sailing to and fro in the air.

No bird.

Then I gave another boy 10 cents to walk about and inquire if any one had been hurt or killed.

No news.

Night came on and no Mr. Bowser.

"When a man goes to thinking he's a bird what can you do with him?" asked the girl as I sat down to my dinner.

Nine—10—11—12. No Mr. Bowser. He had probably started for Boston or Philadelphia on wings.

I awoke next morning to go up on the roof of the house, but there was no clew. Mr. Bowser is sure to leave tracks wherever he goes, but he had left none on the roof.

At noon that day I had the police send out a general alarm. The officer who came to the house to get the particulars said that Mr. Bowser and his wings might be hanging to the telegraph wires out in the country or have been caught in some trees and that the police would do their best to let me know whether I was a widow or not.

The afternoon and the night passed, and still no news.

It is now three days and nights since Mr. Bowser flew away and yet the mystery is unsolved. His wings have either carried him upward beyond the ken of man or they have failed him and his body is lying in some thistle patch and awaiting discovery. Any news from him, dead or alive, will be thankfully appreciated and a liberal reward paid by

MRS. SARAH BOWSER,
Wife of the Only Bowser.

Per M. Quad.

A Double Inheritance.

Mr. Cross—That baby over across the way seems to inherit its voice from both its parents.

Mrs. Cross—How so?

Mr. Cross—It makes a great deal of noise, like its father, and keeps it up, like its mother.—Detroit Free Press.

A Useful Parrot.

Visitor—Can you tell me where the lion house is?

Policeman—I'm afraid I can't, sir. I am quite new here.

The Parrot—Go down the path, turn to the right, past the monkeys and it is opposite you.—Pele Mele.

Cruel Man.

The Groom—The minister seems to think he knows more about you than I do.

The Bride—How's that?

The Groom—I gave him a ten, and he handed back five of it.—Town Topics.

SUPPOSE you were cast up on an uninhabited tropical shore with nothing but a penknife and a magnifying glass? How would you go about getting a living? How would you manage to defend yourself from the wild beasts and the wilder elements?

These are problems that Tom Blake and the beautiful Miss Leslie and Winthrope had to solve. How they did solve them is told in

INTO THE PRIMITIVE

BY ROBERT AMES BENNET ILLUSTRATIONS BY RAY WALTERS

The beginning was at Capetown, when Blake and Winthrope boarded the steamer as fellow-passengers with Lady Bayrose and her party—which included the beautiful Miss Leslie. Three days later the ship went to pieces in a cyclone on a wild and isolated coast, and these three—the American engineer, the Englishman, and the heiress—were the only survivors. And when highly cultivated civilization was brought face to face with the primitive, what law could prevail but the survival of the fittest? It is a story full of vigorous strength and unusual charm.

It will be printed serially in these columns. The opening chapters to appear in the near future. You will not want to miss it.

When You Need Printing Done

You want it to be of the very best kind. As you expect your printed matter to make business it is necessary it should do the talking for you. Poor or indifferent printing cannot do this as it lacks the strong points required to gain and hold the interest of the patron.

¶ In this particular line of work we excel, for several reasons, viz: 1st; we have the largest and best variety of up-to-date type to be found in the western part of the state. 2nd; we carry only the very best grades of papers; and 3rd; the know-how with which to create original and attractive tye display.

¶ You make no mistake when you come to us with an order of printing

The Republican Job Printery

Benj. H. Sincell, Prop.,
Okland, Md.

Four Per Cent. Interest.

The First National Bank, Friendsville, pays four per cent. interest on time deposits. Place your money in this bank where its earning capacity will be greater than in any other banking institution in the county.

THE FIRST NATIONAL BANK,
Friendsville, Md.

Subscribe for The REPUBLICAN.

Dissolution Notice.

This is to give notice that the firm of Reams & Browning, doing general mercantile business, has been dissolved by mutual consent, Mr. Browning retiring. The business will be continued by Mr. Reams.

REAMS & BROWNING.

Swallow Falls, Aug 8, 1908. 3t

Special 10-qt. tin water buckets 10c at Baumgardner's.

A Hint to the Wise Is Sufficient.

Special Sale on
2-qt Blue Enamel Saucepan.
2-qt Blue Enamel Pudding Pans.
2-qt Blue Enamel Preserve Ketties.

We have just received over 1500 lbs. of our famous 10c Candy.

SUNDAY SCHOOL SUPPLIES

TAKE our advice—buy now, don't wait, but come and see

THE Little Man

and you will save money on all your Holiday Goods,

Toys, Candies, Novelties, Fancy Goods.

Baumgartner.

CAPITAL $25,000.00

The First National Bank
Of Grantsville, Md.

Safe deposit vault boxes for rent.

SURPLUS $12,500.00

The Savings Department Takes care of your money when waiting other investment. The money earns interest from the day it is deposited. It can be withdrawn at any time.

Its Advantages

Any amount from One Dollar up can be deposited, and interest added to principal twice a year. Pass books are issued to every depositor

We Pay 3 Per Cent. Interest. Open Daily except Sundays and Holidays. 9 a. m. to 4 p. m.

OFFICERS.
C. H. JENNINGS, - - President
U. W. STANTON, - Vice-President
J. O. GETTY, - - - Cashier
DIRECTORS.
C. H. Jennings, J. M. Stanton,
G. C. Keller, Eli Stanton,
W. A. Hitchins, Frank Watts,
J. O. Getty.

A. D. NAYLOR & COMP'Y

You can buy at Reduced Prices
Grain Drills, Harrows and Plows
AT NAYLOR & CO.'S

Big Stock to select from.

Have the Farmer's Favorite Drills, the Thomas, the Superior Hoe and Disc Drills.

We have the Syracuse, the Imperial and the Wyard Plows.

Also the wood frame Harrows, the wheel and lever Harrows; also the Disc Harrow, all at reduced prices.

We also have a nice line of Spray Pumps.

Muco-Solvent is an indispensible household remedy because it is a preventive as well as a cure, and because it arrests development of all contageous germs and bacterial diseases. It cures croup, colds, tonsilitis with its associated ills and all inflamed and catarrhal conditions of the mucous surface. It is a harmless vegetable preparation that may safely be administered to the tenderest babe. If not for sale in your neighborhood, write to

THE PIEDMONT SUPPLY CO.,
Sole Agents for Muco-Solvent. Piedmont, W. Va.

Real Estate Bargains

I offer for sale

FARM OF 147 ACRES, 3 miles from Oakland; good 6-room House; plenty of water; over 50 acres cleared; about 25 acres of grass; 2 Orchards, bearing; over 75 acres of White Oak Timber; R. F. D. mail service.

COTTAGE OF 6 ROOMS for sale at Mt. Lake Park.

HOUSE AND LOT on Oak Street, Oakland, for sale or rent. House of 6 rooms—Lot 50x150 feet, with Stable and all necessary Outbuildings.

FOUR VERY DESIRABLE BUILDING LOTS situated on Liberty Street, in Oakland. Also 3 DWELLING HOUSES on Liberty Street, with good water and all necessary outbuildings.

HOUSE AND LOT on Wilson Street. House of 10 rooms; good water. Lot 150 feet front. Best Outbuildings in Oakland.

A VERY GOOD FARM 1 mile from Oakland—all under fence; containing 32 acres; about 25 under cultivation; 2 fine Orchards, and about 2½ acres in small Fruit; 2 Houses, a very good Well and a never failing Spring. A very desirable place for Truck and Poultry Farming. Can be bought at a low price just now.

I have for sale 18 of the very best Building Lots in the town which I will sell for cash—or $5 down and $5 per month.

150 ACRES OF VALUABLE COAL LAND situated less than two miles of Oakland which can be bought at a great bargain. The surface would make fine farming land. This land is well watered with a stream and several good springs.

12 MORE CHOICE BUILDING LOTS at $5 down and $5 per month.

If you want cash for your Real Estate, or Real Estate for your cash, let me hear from you.

For further particulars call on or address

James A. Sincell Real Estate Agt and Surveyor
Sincell Building, Oakland, Md.

Thanksgiving Is Near At Hand.

We desire to thank you one and all for the patronage you have so kindly favored us with for the past year and assure you of our appreciation for the manner in which you have so faithfully stood by us. We have tried to make this store the home of the highest standard of merchandise and by the continued patronage of our many customers "who have found that good merchandise at conservative prices are the cheapest," we have succeeded in gaining that reputation. Every coat for Women and Children has been reduced in price 20%. We are showing the strongest line this season that we have ever had. This store is the home of Hart Shaffner and Mark Clothing and Overcoats, which is the high standard of fashionable clothing for men.

We have a quantity of Men's and Boys' suits carried over from last season a little out of style that we are selling for $2.98, all wool and well made. Being overbought on winter underwear we will sell you a good winter suit for 79 cents.

We take great pleasure in showing the strongest and best selected stock of Shoes for men, women and children that will be possible to see, ranging in price from 25c. to $5.00 the pair.

Respectfully yours,

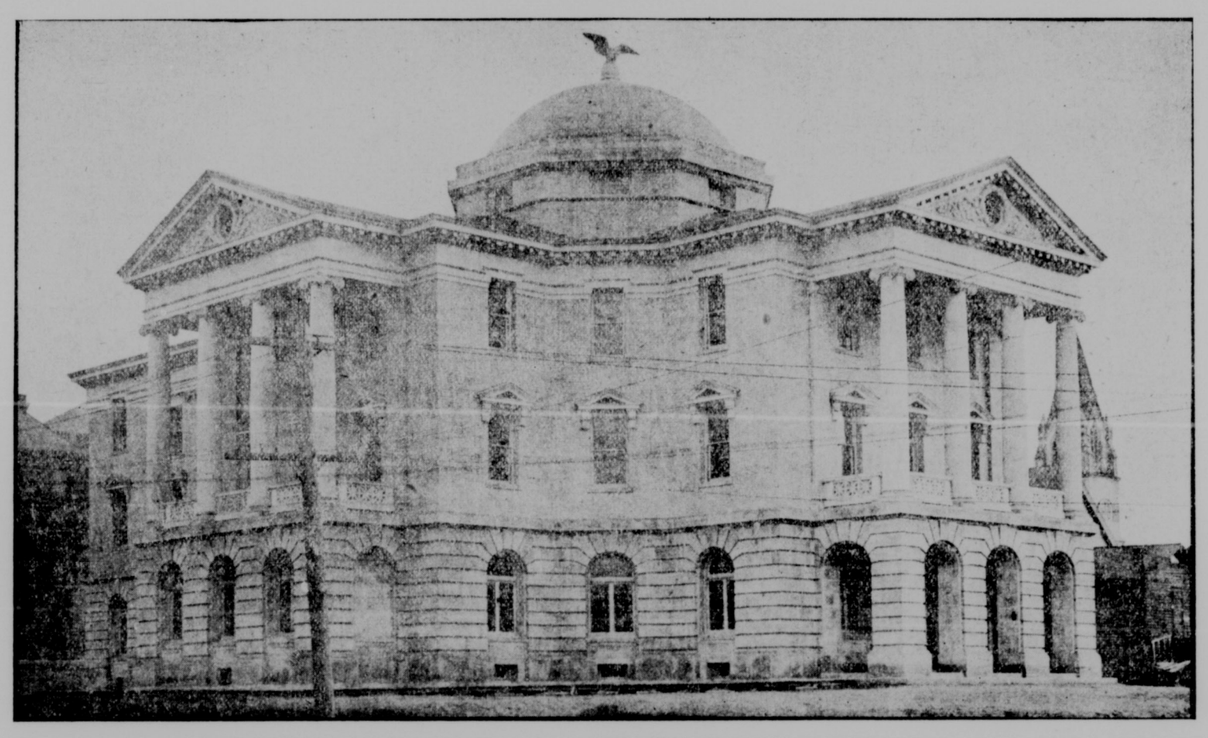
H. C. SINCELL & CO.

THE REPUBLICAN.

VOLUME 32. OAKLAND, MARYLAND, THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 26, 1908. NUMBER 39

Garrett County's New Court House Has Been Completed

A MODERN STRUCTURE IN EVERY PARTICULAR AND ONE WHICH EVERY GARRETT COUNTIAN SHOULD BE PROUD OF.



The new temple of justice for Garrett county has been completed and it stands as a monument to the members of the Commission who adopted the plans for its construction, and to the architect as well as to the contractor and any others who may have in any manner contributed in giving to this grand old mountain top county of Maryland the finest public buildings of its character in the State of Maryland outside of Baltimore City.

At a meeting of the Court House Commission held on Monday morning of this week at which all members of the Commission were present with the exception of County Commissioner Friend, who is extremely ill at his home, therefore unable to attend, and Mr. John W. McCulloh, of Friendsville, the building was accepted from the contractor, Mr. W. A. Liller, after it had been thoroughly inspected and passed upon by the architect, Mr. Liller being highly complimented for the manner and mode in which he did the work.

Shortly after the building was accepted the accompanying photograph of the Commission, the builder, the architect and superintendent was taken expressly for THE REPUBLICAN by Stewart, the photographer.

Capt. John M. Jarboe, of Oakland, who is also a member of the Commission, was appointed to superintend the work on the part of the Commission and he did his duty conscientiously and well.

Going back into history a few years: When Garrett county was created out of that portion of Allegany county lying westward of a certain line drawn due north from the Savage River near the town of Bloomington, it was several years before the then elected County Commissioners would provide suitable buildings for the transaction of the public business. By the interyention of the Court the Commissioners were compelled to erect the old court house on the site selected at that time, and in the year 1877 the building was completed and turned over to the public. From the beginning it was neither convenient nor was it suited for the purpose for which it was intended. Year after year grand jury after grand jury brought in arrignments of the Boards of County Commissioners for the unsanitary conditions which they allowed to exist about the old jail and the court house until a few years ago when the new jail was erected, not, however, until after patience ceased to be a virtue. The original intention of the Commissioners was to build the jail on a lot located in the rear of the old jail and court house. The had purchased a lot wholly inadequate for the size of the building in contemplation and it was only after THE REPUBLICAN had taken the matter up and led in the fight for a better and more central location that the present site was purchased, much of the money being contributed by the public spirited citizens of Oakland.

The jail was built by a direct levy upon the taxpayers, no bonds being issued for the purpose, resulting in some hardships upon certain classes.

The act authorizing the issuance of bonds for the erection of the court house was passed at the January session of the legislature of 1906 and was ratified by the people at the election held in November of the same year, carrying by a majority of 118 votes. This act provided for $75,000 and created the Commission having in hand the erection of the building, composed of the three Judges of the Circuit Court, the Board of County Commissioners and five other citizens and taxpayers, the latter under the act being appointed by the Judges of the Court. As provided in the act the Court appointed as members of the Commission Messrs. D. E. Offutt, John M. Jarboe, C. M. Miller, John W. McCullough and State Senator W. McCulloh Brown, the Commission organizing by electing Judge Robert R. Henderson chairman and Senator Brown secretary.

On May 12th, 1907, the contract for the erection of the building was awarded to Mr. W. A. Liller of Keyser, West Va., his bid being $60,962, exclusive of the furniture, heating, plumbing and electric wiring and fixtures. The plans for the building were made by Mr. J. Riley Gordon, of New York city, who also drew the specifications. Immediately after the contract was awarded Mr. Liller began work on the building and on Tuesday, October 15, 1907, the corner stone was laid by Oakland Lodge No. 192, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, the ocasion being one long to be remembered by those participating. Ex-United States Senator George L. Wellington, of Cumberland, was the orator upon this occasion and his effort was a masterful one.

The court house is constructed of Indiana limestone and light brick, the first story being of the former while the superstructure is of the latter with stone trimmings, entrance to the building being made either from Alder street or Third street, the main entrance being the latter through arched columns beneath the portico, corridors leading into the rotunda, which extends from the first floor to the dome. The corridors as well as the rotunda are tiled with white marble. On this floor will be located the offices of the Clerk of the Circuit Court, Orphans' Court, County Commissioners, County Treasurer and Supervisors of Elections, each suite of rooms being fitted with necessary vaults for the safe keeping of records and public documents.

In the basement is located the furnace room, coal storage and fuel room and a large vault which can be utilized for storage purposes.

On the second floor of the building is the Court room with a seating capacity for nearly three hundred persons. This room has a vaulted ceiling, sloping floors and is fitted with three galleries. In the rear of the court room is located the judges' retiring room and a consultation room, while immediately above are two large jury rooms for the petit jurors.

Leading from the rotunda on the second floor are a number of other rooms which will be utilized for the various public officials, as well as a large room for the Bar Association, a ladies' waiting room, etc.

On the third floor is the grand jury room, which faces Third street, and adjoining are two witnesses rooms, while flanking these are two suites of office rooms.

The building throughout is finished in white with the exception of the balustrades and the stairways which are natural hardwood, the contrast being somewhat distinct but on the whole rather harmonious.

The heating, plumbing, gas fitting and electrical work was put in by Messrs. A. D. Naylor & Co. of Oakland, to whom was awarded the contract by the Commission. The two boilers for the heating weigh eleven tons and have a combined rating of ninety horse power. The plant is the largest that has been put in in Garrett county and the work done by the local firm was highly complimented by both the architect and the Commission. In the plumbing there are ten lavatories and as many toilets, located on different floors of the building. The heating contractors deserve much credit for the manner in which the contract was performed.

Mr. W. A. Roderick, of Keyser, superintended the erection of the building for the contractor and gave excellent satisfaction to all concerned, while Mr. Liller received some high compiments from the Commission and the architect.

While the building has not as yet been formally turned over to the County Commissioners by the Court House Commission, it is virtually in their hands and at the convening of the court on December 7th the formal ceremony will take place.

The first office to be moved from the old building is that of Clerk E. Z. Tower, who will complete the work of moving the records and papers to his new quarters today.

THE COURT HOUSE COMMISSION. ARCHITECT, CONTRACTOR AND FOREMAN.

Reading from left to right: Foreman Roderick, Contractor W. A. Liller, C. M. Miller, Capt. J. M. Jarboe, Judge Robert R. Henderson, State Senator W. McCulloh Brown, Chief Judge A. Hunter Boyd, D. E. Offutt, Members of the Commission; Architect J. Riley Gordon; County Commissioners Otho J. Fike and A. C. Smith.

Thanksgiving Turkeys.

The present season for turkeys has been rather remarkable. A short time ago it was thought that the supply would be wholly unequal to the demand, and that the prices would be away up. Tuesday morning thousands of pounds of dressed turkeys and chickens were brought into Oakland and before noon owing to the quantities on sale the price dropped from twenty cents to eighteen cents per pound with indications that the price would be still lower before the day was over.

SAFE DYNAMITED IN GRANTSVILLE

Bloodhounds Put on the Trail of the Thieves But No Arrests Followed.

The general store of Noah Broadwater at Grantsville was entered by burglars at an early hour last Thursday morning, entrance being gained by forcing a door. The thieves used a quantity of either dynamite or nitro glycerine in blowing the safe open, which was of ordinary size, the explosion being so great that the door of the safe was wrenched from its hinges and blown for a distance of some fifteen or twenty feet when it crashed through a solid counter and against the side of the building. Windows were blown out as a result of the explosion and other damage done the structure. In the safe was a quantity of paid vouchers which the thieves carried away, overlooking about thirty dollars in cash which was contained in a small compartment of the safe.

Dry goods, clothing and a watch was stolen from the building and carried off toward the home of the suspected burglars, much of which was recovered found hidden in the attic of the Amish school located about four miles north of Grantsville.

Immediately following the discovery of the burglary J. A. Landis, of Fairmont, the owner of a pack of bloodhounds, was communicated with and upon his arrival at Grantsville the following morning a trail was picked up by the dogs, which led over the state line into Pennsylvania, passing the school house above referred to and to a house occupied by two men. A search of the premises, however, revealed nothing that would warrant the arrest of the parties and the matter was dropped.

Resolutions of Respect.

At a special meeting of the Ladies Aid Society of the Presbyteriau church of Oakland, the following resolutions were adopted in memory of Mrs. Martha Delawder, who departed this life November 17th, 1908, and who was an active member of this society.

WHEREAS, It has pleased Almighty God in His infinite wisdom to take from us by death's messenger our late sister and co-worker, Mrs. Martha Delawder, who was highly esteemed by all as a devout Christian lady; therefore be it

Resolved, That in this manner we desire to express this simple tribute to her memory and to say that we sincerely mourn the loss of a loving sister—she who was in every way worthy of our love.

Resolved, That we bow in humble submission to the will of the Most High, and that as members of the Ladies Aid Society we extend to her bereaved family and friends our sincere sympathy in their irreparable loss.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, that they be entered in our book of minutes, and that a copy be sent to each of the town papers for publication.

MRS. LEWIS WALTERS,
MRS. S. T. JONES,
MRS. L. B. HENSLEY,
MRS. J. D. HAMILL,
MRS. D. M. MASON,
Committee.

Conference Minutes Completed.

The minutes and journal of the Sixty-Second Annual Conference, Methodist Episcopal church, which was held in Moundsville, West Va., Oct. 5th-12th, the contract for the printing of which was awarded to THE REPUBLICAN Job Printing Department by Rev. J. B. Workman, secretary of the Conference, has been completed and are now in the hands of the subscribers. Twenty-five hundred copies of the books were turned out by THE REPUBLICAN'S presses, each book containing 168 pages and cover. We have received many compliments upon the appearance and general make up of the book, none of which we value more than that given by a prominent divine, who said that "this year's minutes are the best ever issued by the Conference." Thanks. Another, from an advertiser in the book, said: "The work reflects great credit upon the printer and is also creditable to the town in having a printery so well equipped as to make it possible to turn out such excellent work." The foregoing from a gentleman who probably handles more excellent printing than any other business man in town. Secretary Workman said: "I am well pleased with the character of the work, and am proud of the fact that it was no sacrifice of neatness or workmanship to patronize a home industry.

List of Letters.

Miss Cora Deihl, Miss Barbara Haigh, Mrs. Bertha Hinebaugh, Mr. J. W. Mashbum.

The Republican for Job Work.

ALLEGED TURKEY THIEVES.

Man and Woman Charged With Stealing National Bird Landed in Jail.

Tuesday evening acting constable Daniel W. Dorsey, of Grantsville, brought to Oakland a man named Benjamin Bittinger and a woman named Mrs. Thomas Stein, or Spiker, charged with having stolen two turkeys from Mr. Thomas Stanton, of Bittinger District, and delivered his prisoners into the keeping of Sheriff Brown to whose custody they had been committed by Justice Nathan of Grantsville after a preliminary hearing accorded them at that place Monday afternoon.

For several months past Mr. Thomas Stanton, of Bittinger, has been losing poultry, sometimes as many as five or six turkeys being stolen in one night. On Saturday night two more birds, the last of his flock of some twenty-five or thirty, were carried off and as J. A. Landis, of Fairmont, was in Grantsville with his bloodhounds for the purpose of running down the buglars who blew the safe and robbed the store of Noah Broadwater a few night previous, Mr. Stanton employed Landis and the trail was taken up by the dogs, leading directly to the Stein woman's home with whom Bittinger has been living for some time.

The turkeys had already been killed and dressed and were found hidden in a manger of a stable on the woman's property. Both the woman, her husband and Bittinger were arrested, but at the justice's hearing Stein proved that he had not been at home for several days previous to Saturday and he was released.

Change in Train Schedule.

Sunday morning the fall and winter time table on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad became effective, at which time all trains over the entire system were run under the new schedule, which was recently adopted. Locally the changes are few, the only important one being the discontinuance of the Sunday accommodation trains, which during the summer ran from Fairmont to Oakland and return, arriving here at 10.11 in the morning and departing in the evening at 7.30. The taking off of these trains will be a disadvantage to those who are accustomed to coming to Oakland from near-by points to attend church, especially those residing at Hutton.

In the Divorce Court.

Mrs. John Bergman, of Oakland, through her attorneys, Messrs. Renninger & Offutt, has docketed proceedings against her husband for divorce, the action being based on statutory grounds.

Big Lumber Contract.

The contract to cut 90,000 feet of lumber for the George's Creek Coal and Iron Company, of Lonaconing, and which was awarded to Jacob Strickland, of Garrett county, has been increased to 400,000 feet. He will begin the work at once.

Orphans' Court Proceedings.

At the session of the Orphans' Court held on Tuesday the following business was transacted:

Letters of administration were granted Mrs. Mary E. George on the personal estate of ther late husband, A. Frederick George.

Also to George W. Broadwater on the personal estate of John L. Bittinger.

ANGRY FEELING AT NEWBURG.

Wm. Cox, American Stone Mason, Murdered by An Italian Who Was Caught.

William Cox, an American, stone mason by trade, was shot and killed last night in a quarrel resultant from a grudge at the mining town of Newburg, W. Va., a few miles west of Oakland, Md., by Dan Mascarelli, an Italian, aged about 50 years. Shortly after nine o'clock last night, Mascarelli was caught. There was such feeling as to indicate that the Italian might be lynched before morning. Cox was shot twice in the face with a 12 guage shotgun and killed instantly. The police here were notified of the murder and later word came of the capture of Mascarelli.

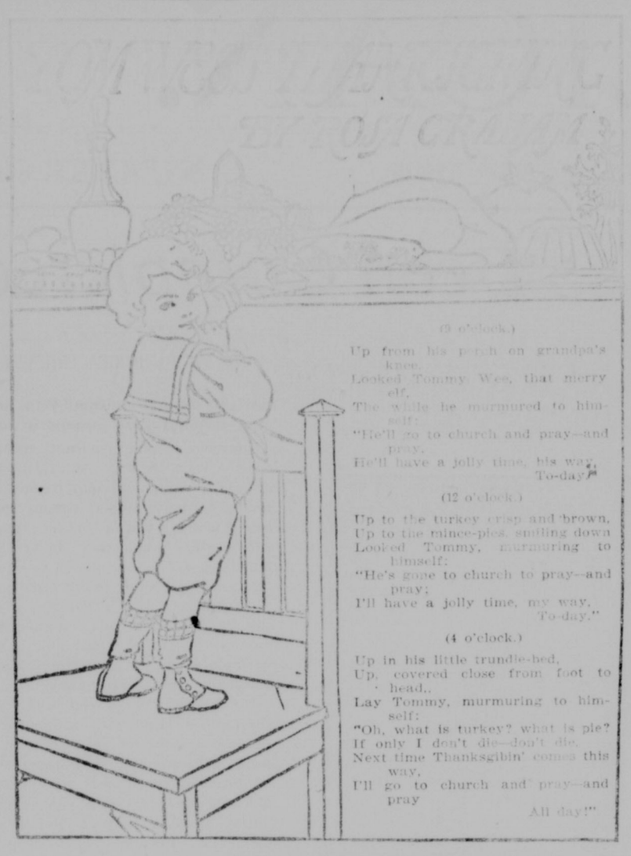
Four Per Cent. Interest.

The First National Bank, Friendsville, pays four per cent. interest on time deposits. Place your money in this bank where its earning capacity will be greater than in any other banking institution in the county.

THE FIRST NATIONAL BANK,
Friendsville, Md.

THANKSGIVING RECOLLECTIONS

By Charles Chapman.



(9 o'clock.)

Up from his perch on grandpa's knee
Looked Tommy Wee, that merry elf,
The while he murmured to himself:
"He'll go to church and pray—and pray,
He'll have a jolly time, his way,
To-day."

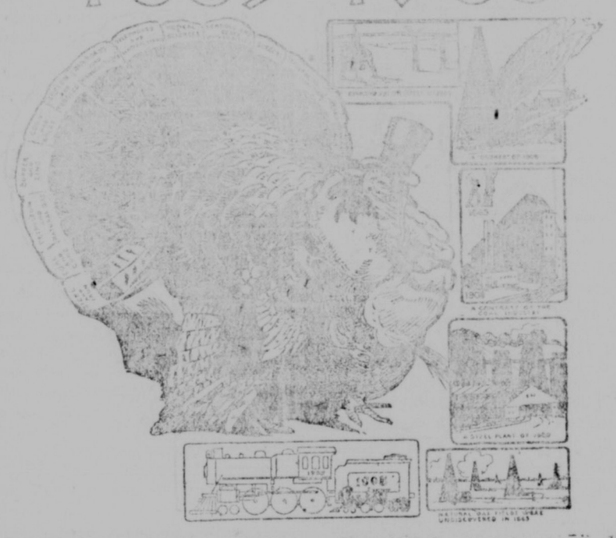
(12 o'clock.)

Up to the turkey crisp and brown,
Up to the mince-pies, smiling down
Looked Tommy, murmuring to himself:
"He's gone to church to pray—and pray;
I'll have a jolly time, my way,
To-day."

(4 o'clock.)

Up in his little trundle-bed,
Up, covered close from foot to head,
Lay Tommy, murmuring to himself:
"Oh, what is turkey? what is pie?
If only I don't die—don't die.
Next time Thanksgibin' comes this way,
I'll go to church and pray—and pray
All day!"

1865-1908



THE celebration of Thanksgiving day 40 years ago, in 1865, was the first after the close of the civil war.

There are some things about this country to-day with which even a good-natured person can find fault. But a cursory contrast of the condition of the country as it was then and as it is now shows vast general improvement.

To begin with, Thanksgiving day, 1865, found the country as yet practically unaddressed to the problem of getting over the frightful struggle that had rent and torn and well-nigh disrupted it. Not only were the wounds of sectional ill-feeling still open and unhealed, but most of the industries of one great section were still practically prostrated.

The readjustment of the country's business, difficult always after a great war, but doubly so after the civil war, because of the enormous inflation to which the currency had been subjected, was yet to be undertaken.

Most important agencies in the new and stronger union which has come to the United States since 1865 have been furnished by the tremendously improved means of communication and transportation. Most folk accept it today as a matter of course. To the younger generation it seems like an institution that has always existed, without which, no matter how much fault may be found with its rates, the business of the country could not well go on. But while there were about 50,000 miles of railroad in 1865, there are more than four times that many today, or about 215,000, more than seven miles for every 100 square miles of territory.

Then, as the old heads remember very well, there was no steel highway linking the coast of the Atlantic with the coast of the Pacific. Then there were three ways by which one wishing to travel from New York or Boston or Washington, to San Francisco or Portland, could do so: Overland by a combination of rail to the Mississippi, and stage coach and horseback westward from the river, a journey requiring many days; by steamer or sailing ship around the Horn, a voyage of months; or by steamer to the Isthmus of Panama (they called it Darien, then) across on the Panama railroad, and thence by steamer again up the coast to San Francisco.

It cost several hundred dollars to get from one side of the country to the other, then. Now, at the lowest rate, you may travel from one ocean to the other for $50, the highest rate, unless you wish to go on a private or special car—a veritable palace on wheels—is $110. This includes sleeping car, but not meals.

Since 1865 the general material development of the country has been such as to transcend all ordinary human understanding.

Vast new mining fields have been opened, whole areas of coal deposits, many of them entirely unsuspected, have been found and developed since 1865. The enormously valuable deposits of copper in Montana have all been discovered and developed since 1865. Michigan's, though known before then, have also been mainly developed inside of 40 years. So have the great iron deposits of Michigan, the zinc deposits of Missouri and countless beds of mineral wealth of all sorts in the south and in the almost boundless trans-Mississippi regions.

Secretary Seward knew that there was almost fabulous treasure under the surface of what was called Russian America when he bought it from the czar's government, but the gold and silver and other mineral wealth of Alaska has practically all been found and developed within the last ten years. In 40 years the addition from mineral sources alone to the wealth of the country has amounted to billions on the back of billions.

Petroleum was discovered before 1865, and the development of territory which yielded it was begun 40 years ago, but by far the greater part of that development has been accomplished since then.

Along with all these things the area of cultivated land has been increased so that the wheat and corn and cotton and other crops of the present are enormously vaster than they were in 1865. Manufactures of all sorts have increased enormously also, the total for 1865 being worth rather more than two billions of dollars; this year the total value of our manufactures will not be far from fifteen billions of dollars, roughly estimating the figures from the census of 1900.

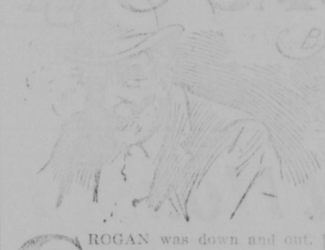
Stimulated by the extension and development of the railroads, and in turn stimulating their development, intimately interlocked and interdependent with the growth of mining, agriculture and manufacturing, there has been an unbelievable growth of cities and towns.

And, as Uncle Sam, after a right good dinner of turkey and pumpkin pie and other standard Yankee viands, contemplates the tremendous advance his settlements have made he may also dwell in thought upon the fact that the total of the country's population has grown from about 33,500,000 in 1865, to more than 80,000,000 in 1908.

Now these material good things are all well worth being grateful for, no other people on the green earth have so much reason of the sort to be thankful. After all, the best things

THE SACRIFICE

By Harry Irving Greene.



GROGAN was down and out. This was a literal truth, as well as a figurative one, for he was down upon his haunches behind a warehouse on the river front, and he was out at the elbows and knees and other places. Presently he arose and looked sullenly about as he remembered that it was Thanksgiving morning; that he had eaten nothing for 24 hours, and that hunger was gnawing at his stomach like a rat. Then he began to plot.

Grogan was a pretty hard citizen, but as yet he had done nothing really criminal. In the last few days, however, he had exhausted all his resources save one to get some money, and now he had decided upon the final expedient. He determined to hold somebody up. He picked up a short iron rod from the alley, shoved it up his sleeve and slouched in between the tall buildings.

Now it so happened that into the other end of the alley at the same time came Joe White, his hands in his pockets and whistling as he came. Joe had not eaten for 24 hours, either, and he was fully as hungry as Grogan, but he had prospects for a great meal at midday and was biding his time in content. He had struck a wonderful streak of luck that morning, for in his wanderings he had found a decent restaurant where the proprietor had promised him all that he could eat at noon, if he would clean the rubbish out of the alley back of the restaurant. So Joe had gone to work heartily, and had finished the task before nine o'clock, but the dinner would not be served until noon, and he was waiting contentedly in the knowledge that in another hour he would be at his feast. He had come into the alley that he might stand in front of a ventilator that sucked the warm air out of a basement into the cold alley outside, and thus it came to pass that he and Grogan met at the warm blast.

Joe was not well dressed, but his clothes were whole, and to Grogan's eye he looked a person who might well enough have a few dollars in his pockets, so the would-be highwayman stepped close beside him and drew the iron bar. "Give me your coin, party," he growled. "And if you get gay I'll slug you."

Joe recoiled slightly and looked into the ugly face before him, then raised his hands. "Search me," he said. "You will not find a cent, but I hope you will not hit me with that thing just because I am a disappointment." His voice was not at all angry or afraid, and with a grunt the robber went through him thoroughly. He found nothing of value and turned away.

"No use of hittin' you, I suppose, kid," he said. "Just stand where you are until I make my getaway around that corner. Mebby I'll have better luck next time."

"Are you going to hold up somebody else?" asked Joe, in a friendly tone. Grogan laughed back harshly at him.

"It's a case of steal or starve, so what else can a man do, young feller?" he demanded.

Joe had been thinking rapidly for the last minute, and he was inclined to believe that the man before him was not a hopeless case. And as the other's bitter words came back to him an old teaching of his mother flashed through his mind, and he hesitated for a moment as he repeated it. "It is more blessed to give than to receive," she had told him, and he had promised her he would not forget it after he had gone out into the world. And with these thoughts came a sudden determination that he would keep his boyhood promise. "Hold on," he called to the retreating Grogan. The highwayman paused.

"Give Me your Coin, Party!"

"Is it hunger alone that is driving you to this crime in which you may kill a man?" he asked. The other scowled.

"If you think I'm risk'n' a rope around my neck 'cause I've got an easy [illegible] mebby it would, I can wait until I could land you a job." Joe approached the outcast and laid a hand on his shoulder.

"Come with me, and I'll get you a meal," he said, simply, as Grogan stared at him incredulously. But the face of the boy was frank and honest, and with nothing to lose and much to gain, the highwayman shoved the iron into his pocket.

"If you are on the square, friend, it's all right, and I'll be on the level, too. But if you make a move to have me pinched, I'll lay you out," he threatened. Joe nodded his head understandingly, and side by side they walked away.

They reached the restaurant where the boy had the meal coming and entered. "I'll not take that dinner I earned," Joe said to the proprietor, "but my friend here will eat it for me.

"You're All Right, Young Feller!"

I don't suppose it makes any difference to you if somebody else eats in my place."

"No," said the proprietor, indifferently, as he motioned Grogan to a seat in an obscure corner of the little place, where a waiter handed him a bill-of-fare. Joe stepped outside, and through the window watched Grogan as he ate like a famished wolf, and when the feeder could eat no more, saw him pick up his hat, and, walking erect and like a new man, pass out onto the street. On the sidewalk they met, and Grogan held out his hand, slipping the other the iron rod as he did so.

"You're all right, young feller, and I won't forget it," he said, earnestly. "No more strong arm work for me. It's a job or starve for me from now on. And you can bet I mean it. Good-by."

He turned into the crowd and Joe watched him disappear. Somehow his hunger was not troubling him much now and his heart was beating lightly, for in his ears was ringing the voice of one who had taught him on her knees in the long ago, and the voice was saying:

"I have shewed you all things, how that so laboring ye ought to support the weak, and to remember the words of the Lord Jesus, how he said: 'It is more blessed to give than to receive.'"

(Copyright 1908, by Wright A. Patterson.)

NEITHER TURKEY NOR QUAIL.

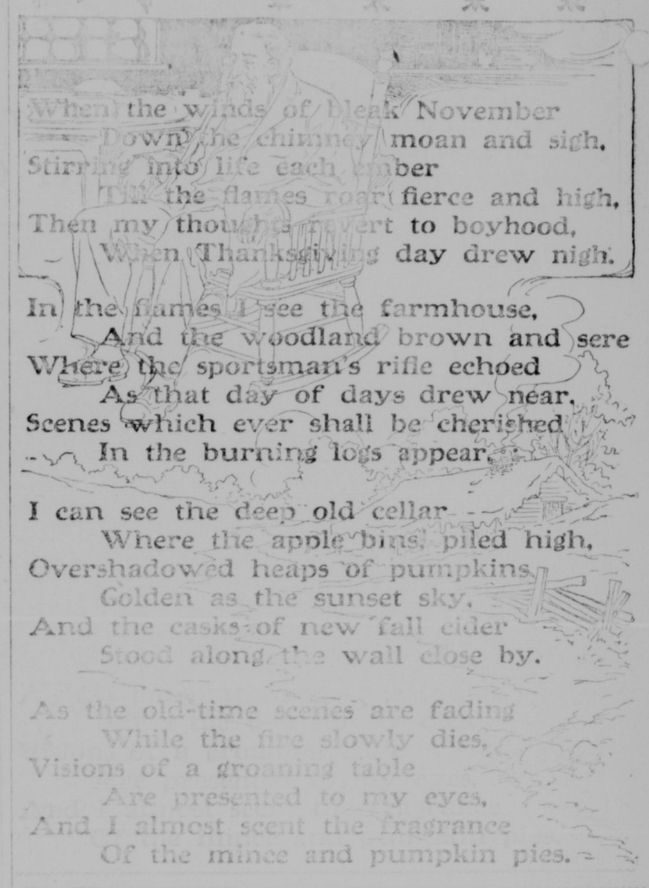
Nevertheless This Thanksgiving Dinner Was a Remarkable One.

"I reckon that my epicurean tendencies are as well developed as those of most men," said an old newspaper man to a group which was discussing things gastronomic, "and I have quite a taste for the elegant in the edible line, so to speak. But of all the meals I ever partook of the one that stands pre-eminent in my experience was my Thanksgiving dinner in 1888. Some time previously I had started from Memphis with an artist on a commission from a Memphis paper to write up the educational institutions of Mississippi, and during Thanksgiving week was at Columbus, in Lowndes county. I was invited by a friend to go quail shooting Thanksgiving day, and gladly accepted. By daybreak we were on our way to the sparsely settled country down the Tombigbee river in a light wagon that not only carried us and our dogs and a darky boy driver, but a basket filled with eatables and drinkables.

"We followed the dogs, which were duly diligent, but not a covey did we find. Reaching the rendezvous made with that chuckle-headed darky, we didn't find him or wagon, either. My friend had killed a rabbit a short time previously, and we were discussing the propriety of building a fire and barbecuing the bunny, when we noticed smoke curling out of a hollow near by. Investigation discovered that it came from a negro cabin, and when we reached it a big, fat, obsequious, smiling mammy, with a bandanna around her head, stood in the doorway. Well, she cooked that rabbit for us and made us some ash-cake and fried us some big hominy left over from breakfast and made us a cup of coffee. Talk about your Thanksgiving dinners. I have eaten my share, but that meal stands preeminently in my memory.

THANKSGIVING RECOLLECTIONS

By Charles Chapman.



When the winds of bleak November
Down the chimney moan and sigh,
Stirring into life each ember
Till the flames roar fierce and high,
Then my thoughts revert to boyhood,
When Thanksgiving day drew nigh.

In the flames I see the farmhouse,
And the woodland brown and sere
Where the sportsman's rifle echoed
As that day of days drew near,
Scenes which ever shall be cherished
In the burning logs appear.

I can see the deep old cellar
Where the apple bins, piled high,
Overshadowed heaps of pumpkins
Golden as the sunset sky,
And the casks of new fall cider
Stood along the wall close by.

As the old-time scenes are fading
While the fire slowly dies,
Visions of a groaning table
Are presented to my eyes,
And I almost scent the fragrance
Of the mince and pumpkin pies.

"HARVEST HOME" THEY CALLED IT

Old English Thanksgiving, of Which Ours Is an Offspring, Began Thousands of Years Ago.

The American Thanksgiving day is without doubt the offspring of that feast which in England is known as "Harvest Home," and in Scotland is called "Mell Supper." But the giving of thanks to some god at the close of the autumn season for the fruits of the earth is ageless, and can be traced back as far as civilization goes. In Exodus the Israelites are commanded to keep an autumnal feast, more explicit details for such a feast being given in the Book of Leviticus. The feast was to last seven days, and on the first day the people were to gather boughs of cedars and willows of the brooks. It would be from this custom that the present day decoration of churches with greens and vegetables arose.

Herodotus mentions this autumn custom of thanksgiving, and Homer writes that "cakes and lumps of dough thrown at the head of the sacrificial victim formed a part of the Greek offerings to Apollo, the sun god, at the feast of the ingathering."

In ancient times Apollo received the honors of the harvest festival, but the rustics sacrificed to Vacuna, the goddess. Images of Vacuna were made of straw, wheat, barley and rye, and were carried about with singing and cheering. Even now in England images made of straw crowned with flowers are occasionally carried about and called Ceres—the goddess of agriculture. Apollo was formerly worshiped in Britain, and the May-pole is a pretty relic of those days. They decorated it with garlands to welcome the northward coming of Apollo—life sun—at whose appearance the flowers and fruit began to grow.

Various customs, all containing the same idea, have prevailed in different countries. In Scotland, when the reapers have finished their work a small package of corn, called the "Corn Lady," is hung up in the house. The ancient Egyptians offered sacrifices and made offerings of corn and wine to Leith, the mother of the sun. Wheat, according to both sacred and secular history, was the most important grain grown in Egypt, and the mode of harvesting it is interesting. Instead of the usual method the reapers cut the straw just below the ear of corn. It was carried in bags to the threshing floor, where it was trodden out by oxen. Sometimes the wheat was reaped in the [illegible] way and [illegible] always employed to separate wheat from the straw.

What is known as "the shouting of the churn," comes down from the time when Apollo was worshiped in England. The churn or kern means a ring or circle formed by several persons holding hands. The word churn also signifies a chaplet worn around the head or carried suspended on a pole in procession. So "the shouting of the churn" means the merriment that always accompanied wearing a chaplet or dancing in a circle.

Another old custom is the "kenning" of England, in Scotland called "a mell." Mell is sometimes spelled melee, which is better, as a melee, or row, often resulted from contending for leadership in dispatching the last day's work in the field. Each reaper left a handful of the harvest uncut, and the bonniest lass was allowed to gather these handfuls and to make out of them a "corn baby." This was brought home in triumph, set up in the feast, and preserved for the remainder of the year. The lass was called the harvest queen. Sometimes instead of being made into a doll the products of the field would be formed into a mare, and the reapers would amuse the guests by trying to cut down the mare with their sickles. The man who succeeded in the undertaking would declare what should be done with the mare.

Thanksgiving Toast.

Thanksgiving day! The Fates benign
Have given us in joy to dine.
To Womanhood I raise this glass—
Let every lover toast his lass
In newest wit and oldest wine!
God bless our sweethearts, yours mine!
In loneliness why longer pine?
Be wed ere next shall overpass
Thanksgiving day!

Now pledge me this, good fellows nine,
When round our board the love lights shine,
We'll send one backward thought, alas!
To Bachelors' Unhappy Class!
And drink one toast to "Auld Lang Syne," —Ernest N. Lyons, in Sunday Magazine.
Thanksgiving day!

Thankfulness as a Necessity.

"In everything give thanks" is not only a righteous demand which God makes upon us, but, like all his other commands, it sets before us a necessity of our own nature. For, until we learn to give thanks in everything we cannot be properly thankful for anything, we cannot have full confidence in God and cannot love him in such a way as to enjoy fellowship with him.

Labor and Love.

Thanksgiving and thanksliving to be genuine must embody the Nazarene's life, labor and love. The natural man needs to be educated in [illegible] selfless living, self-sacrificing, doing good to others first, being loyally altruistic, then and not till then shall the world be brought to thankfulness.

WITHIN the past year the increased made upon the Job Printing Department of The Republican necessitated many improvements, and to meet the requirements of our rapidly increasing business an addition of considerable proportions to our present building is in contemplation; new type and improved machinery must be purchased—but in the meantime all orders will be executed in a most satisfactory manner.

The products of our Job Printery are all models in the class—our customers are numerous and well satisfied, and when ordering

Statements, Vouchers,
Envelopes, Cards,
Sale Bills, Posters,
Bank Forms, Billheads,
Letterheads, Tags,
Programs, Folders,

and

Letter Press Printing of all Kinds

They are confident that the work will be Satisfactory in every particular---in WORKMANSHIP, PRICE and PAPER.

WE MAKE A SPECIALTY OF PRINTING

Lumber AND Coal Companies' Forms
Bank Stationery, Hotel Prospectus,
Lodge and Society Laws,
Reports, Etc.

It will cost you nothing to submit your Printing to us. Estimates will be cheerfully furnished you free. It must be borne in mind, however, that we do not do "cheap" printing, but we do Good Printing which has a par value of one hundred cents for every dollar invested in the product of THE REPUBLICAN PRINTERY.

THE REPUBLICAN
Job Printing Departm't

HUNTING

IN the United States the peccary is only found in the southernmost corner of Texas. In April, 1890, I made a hurried visit to the ranch country of this region, starting from the town of Uvalde with a Texan friend, Mr. John Moore. My trip being very hurried, I had but a couple of days to devote to hunting.

Our first hunting-place was at a ranch on the Frio; a low, wooden building, of many rooms, with open galleries between them, and verandas around about. The country was in some respects like the ranch country by unlike the southern plains with which I was well acquainted. It was for the most part covered with a scattered growth of tough, stunted mesquite trees, not dense enough to be called a forest, and yet sufficiently close to cut off the view. It was very dry, even as compared with the northern plains. The bed of the Frio was filled with coarse gravel, and for the most part dry as a bone on the surface, the water seeping through underneath, and only appearing in occasional deep holes. These deep holes or ponds never fail, even after a year's drouth; they were filled with fish. One lay quite near the ranch house, under a bold rocky bluff; at its edge grew giant cypress trees.

Saw no peccary sign, although deer were plentiful.

There had been many peccaries, or, as the Mexicans and cowpunchers of the border usually call them, javalinas, round this ranch a few years before the date of my visit. Until 1886, or thereabouts, these little wild hogs were not much molested, and abounded in the dense chaparral around the lower Rio Grande. In that year, however, it was suddenly discovered that their hides had a market value, being worth four bits—that is, half a dollar—apiece; and many Mexicans and not a few shiftless Texans went into the business of hunting them as a means of livelihood. They were more easily killed than deer, and, as a result, they were speedily exterminated in many localities where they had formerly been numerous, and even where they were left were to be found only in greatly diminished numbers. On this particular Frio ranch the last little band had been killed nearly a year before. There were three of them, a boar and two sows, and a couple of the cowboys stumbled on them early one morning while out with a dog. After half a mile's chase the three peccaries ran into a hollow pecan tree, and one of the cowboys, dismounting, improvised a lance by tying his knife to the end of a pole, and killed them all.

Many anecdotes were related to me of what they had done in the old days when they were plentiful on the ranch.

I spent two days hunting round this ranch, but saw no peccary sign whatever, although deer were quite plentiful.

Saw no peccary sign, although deer were plentiful.

Having satisfied myself that there were no javalinas left on the Frio ranch, and being nearly at the end of my holiday, I was about to abandon the hunt in disgust when a passing cowman hinted to me that the first thing to do was to find the peccaries. This seemed to be a conundrum, but he explained that they were to be found in the chaparral, and that the way to find them was to get on the trail of a bunch of dogs. Accordingly I borrowed from my host a big, rough, half-bred hound, and from the cowboys a lean, wiry, half-starved javalina hound, and rode off in search of my game.

Dropped her dead with a shot in the spine.

The javalina hound was a queer little beast, with a big head, a pointed nose, and a very long body. It was a keen trailer, and as soon as we got into the chaparral it struck the trail of a bunch of peccaries, and began to follow it with its nose to the ground, while the big hound and I loped behind. Soon the javalina hound threw up its head and began to bay, and we knew that it had overtaken the game. We rode up to find it standing at bay in front of a hollow pecan tree, while the big hound was dancing about, trying to get at the peccaries, which were inside the tree. The javalina hound was very small, and the peccaries were not in the least afraid of it, but would rush out and drive it off whenever it tried to get at them. Then they would run back into the tree, and the javalina would run in front of them, baying loudly, and the big hound would rush up and seize one of the peccaries by the ear, whereupon the peccary would rush out and drive off the javalina hound, and then run back into the tree, and the javalina would run in front of it, baying loudly, and the big hound would rush up and seize another peccary by the ear, and so on.

Finally I got off my horse and crept up to the tree, and shot one of the peccaries in the head, killing it instantly. Then I shot another in the body, and it ran out and I killed it with my hunting-knife. Then I shot another, and it ran out and I killed it with my hunting-knife. Then I shot another, and it ran out and I killed it with my hunting-knife. Then I shot another

THE REPUBLICAN

BENJ. H. SINCELL, EDITOR.

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 26, 1908.

WITH the Governor-elect of Nebraska breaking a leg in his initiation as a Noble of the Mystic Shrine, the Greek letter fraternity boys in the colleges will have to look to their laurels. They have seldom done any thing more formidable than that themselves.

JUDGE TAFT denies that he has arranged his cabinet or offered cabinet places to anybody. The newspapers have been a trifle hasty with the new president. They represent President Roosevelt as framing Mr. Taft's policies they have been selecting his cabinet for him, and they are telling the public that congress will go ahead and revise the tariff without much regard for his recommendations. Thus when he becomes president his occupation will be gone, and he will be a mere figurehead. Don't you believe it.

BEFORE AND AFTER.

The final statements of the Republican and Democratic contributions have been made public. It appears that the Republican managers had a total sum of about $1,600,000, and the Democrats a total of somewhat over $600,000. These totals simply show that campaigning has become expensive, though by no means necessarily corrupt. Literature and speeches and managers cost a great deal.

In the Republican itemized list there is some interest. But there is no evidence of the evil motives so freely charged by the opposition during the campaign. In fact, the list compares with the Democratic lists that were published during the campaign, without prejudice. A few "malefactors of great wealth" are to be found in both lists for sums they could well afford and which we assume gives them no lasting claim on the party organizations and none at all upon the elected candidates.

There can be little doubt that such publications of contributions is proper and in accord with public sentiment. It has a tendency to restrain contributions from some quarters and to discourage thoughts of wholesale corruption. We can see no advantage in the piecemeal publications before election, and are inclined to give more importance to itemized expenditures than to publicity of contributions. It is not so much a question of who gives the money, or of how much is given, as it is one of how the money is spent, in so far as possible corruption is concerned.

TAFT, NOT CANNON.

The Baltimore Sun of Monday has this headline to an able editorial: "The Republican Party in Congress Should Line-up Behind Judge Taft Rather Than Behind Cannon." It will be remembered that the Sun, though the leading Democratic newspaper in Maryland, vigorously championed the cause of Judge Taft. If now continues to give him support in carrying out the promise made in the platform upon which he was elected. That promise was: "The Republican party declares unequivocally for a revision of the tariff by a special session of Congress immediately following the inauguration of the next President."

The Sun in common with many good citizens has no confidence in Speaker Cannon. As a "standpatter" and a leader of the congressional "standpatters," he is feared by those in favor of tariff revision, and therefore the aptness of the Sun's editorial headline. In conclusion the Sun says:

"Mr. Taft showed his courage and sincerity during the campaign, and the country has good ground for believing that he will do everything in his power to carry out the promises of his platform in letter and in spirit. He appears to represent all that is best in the Republican party, and his victory was the victory not only of his own party, but of many thousands of independent and Democratic voters also. If it comes to a battle between him and Mr. Cannon, the Republican party in Congress and the country at large would make a stupendous blunder not to line up behind Mr. Taft and enable him to redeem the pledges of the party platform. Mr. Taft seems to be thoroughly in earnest, and if Speaker Cannon refuses to cooperate with him, his party will do a wise as well as a patriotic thing in reducing Cannon to the ranks and putting forward a man imbued with the spirit and purpose of the new administration."

BRYAN'S IGNES FATUI.

Mr. Bryan comes up again serenely after his third severe drubbing, and announces his determination to continue the fight for the success of the issues which he is pleased to denominate reforms. He does not, seemingly at least, realize that vast numbers of the votes cast for him in the recent election were only given in his favor because he bore the label of the Democratic party. If he had been a candidate on the same identical platform by any other name it is pretty certain that several millions of Democrats would not only have voted against him, but would have denounced his dogmas as political heresies and in direct conflict with the principles of Jeffersonian Democracy. Some of Mr. Bryan's theories are so self evidently at variance with the doctrines expressed by Mr. Jefferson that they were tacitly omitted from the Denver platform. For instance, no more serious blow could be given to States' rights than government ownership of railroads. Yet Mr. Bryan declared, a dozen years ago and quite recently reiterated, that this was the only solution of the railroad problem.

His catalogue of reforms contains several other propositions quite as dangerous as this, but they need not be repeated here. They were threshed over during the recent campaign and were repudiated by the people of the United States by about a million and a quarter plurality, and we believe, as already stated, would have been shown much less favor if they had not borne the stamp of a Democratic National convention dominated by Mr. Bryan.

Mr. Bryan announces that he will continue the fight along the lines of the recent campaign and it is up to the Democratic party to determine whether it will continue to follow these ignes fatui, which can only lead it into the quagmires of irretrivable defeat, or whether it will return to the safer and saner theories of its so-called founder.

RETROSPECTIVE.

In last week's Commoner Mr. Bryan makes an effort to discover what caused his defeat. He confesses that he has not yet secured sufficient figures to be exact in his deductions, but in a general way he is aware that he was thrown down, and that, too, by the very people upon whom he had counted for salvation. Tammany and labor failed to accomplish what was expected of them.

BITTINGER.

On last Friday or Saturday some person or persons stole six turkeys belonging to Thos. Stanton, and on Sunday Mr. Stanton had three blood hounds brought over from Somerset county, Pa., and the dogs took up the trail and hunted the thieves down and as a result on Monday, W. T. Spiker, alias Stein, and Benj. Bittinger were arrested, charged with the theft.

On last Monday evening Rev. Yugel and some of the young people rendered a pleasing musical program before a small audience assembled in the parsonage.

Dr. Robinson, of Grantsville, is attending Harry Wiley who is confined to his home by an attack of pneumonia.

Merchant C. E. Ellithorp spent a part of last week in the vicinity of New Germany.

Amos Reckner has purchased the Salem Lee farm near Swanton and will move his family to that place in the near future.

Wade H. Lohr and family, of Swanton, were visiting J. T. Lohr at this place last Sunday.

F. M. Bittinger has his new chopping mill in operation at his coal mine and will grind daily for the puplic.

Fat turkeys spake as turkeys speak,
In wordless truth they say;
"I hardly think that I will thank On this Thanksgiving day."

MOUNTAIN LAKE PARK.

Mr. H B. Lewis and family and his son Andrew and family have gone to Piedmont to conduct a restaurant and lodging house. They will return to the Park the first of June and again open the Columbian Hotel for the season.

Mr. J. M. Jacobs of Fairmont, W. Va., was at the Park Tuesday.

Supt. Davis Wednesday gave the force working at the ice plant a turkey dinner. The dinner was prepared and served at the Long cottage near the lake.

Today at 10.30 o'clock a union Thanksgiving service will be held in the M. E. church. The sermon will likely be preached by Rev. Hudson of the Baptist church.

There are living in the bounds of the Park about sixty-five families. These, together with families outside corporation but quite near, (not including Loch Lynn,) gives us a population of about three hundred and fifty. The population of Loch Lynn is about three hundred.

It is said that water will not run up hill, but it surely does if the item in one of the Oakland papers of a recent date be correst, in which the altitude of Oakland was given as several feet higher than that of Mountain Lake Park. It is bad enough for Loch Lynn to claim to be "on higher ground" than the Park, but when it comes to Oakland, located two miles lower on the "Raging Yough" claiming such distinction it is carrying the joke entirely too far. The villages of Oakland and Loch Lynn should not put on so many frills. It will be more becoming after they "grow up."

Mountain Lake Park claims one of the best Epworth Leagues in Oakland district.

When in town don't pass me by but come in and see Baumgartner.

MR. BROWN TELLS OF SNOW IN 1836.

Gives Interesting Reminiscences of Weather Freaks in the Distant Past.

To the Editor of The Republican:

The recent eight inch snow, followed by an almost zero temperature, is still a subject of much interest and comment. Aged persons are being asked whether anything like that has heretofore occurred here so early in the season. Opinions of course do not agree. I for one can say truthfully and knowingly, no such a cold snap has occurred in this region within the last half century or more. There are those here who remember the deep snow fall on or about May 4, 1861, the beginning of the Civil war. That snow was as deep or deeper than the last one, but very soft. The trees were in full leaf and the wet snow clung to the limbs and leaves so as to break many small limbs and cause them to drop upon the sidewalks and streets. But the snow melted rapidly without any harm whatever to vegetation.

Still another snow freak. This one occurred in what is now Garrett county early in the fall of 1836. The fall was not less than a foot in depth and was of a wet kind. The late apples were yet upon the trees. A little incident occurred to cause me never to forget it. A good mother had in her orchard a favorite apple tree in full bearing. She was afraid her apple butter fruit would be frozen and her large kettle would not have its annual fill. Her only home boy at the time was urged to climb the tree to shake down the endangered fruit to prevent it from freezing. The work was willingly done and many bushels of suitable apples became buried in the deep snow, which melted away rapidly without harm to the fruit or anything else.

Two years ago in October there was a very heavy freeze in the mountains. The fall apples were still on the trees in large quantities. Thousands of bushels were frozen on the trees. That was a record-breaker.

J. B.

Cumberland, Md., Nov. 23, 1908.

Church Supper and Fair.

The ladies of St. Mark's Ev. Lutheran church, of Oakland, will give a supper on the evening of Thursday, December 10th, in the basement of the church. The menu will be as follows: Oysters, fried chicken, hot biscuit, slaw, chicken salad, potato salad, pickles, jelly, baked beans and brown joe, ice cream, cake. candy, coffee. Booths containing fancy articles will be on sale. Just what you may want for your friends' Christmas present. Come and get a good meal and purchase your Christmas gifts all in one evening.

Treed by a Panther.

Mr. A. Frank Dennison, son-in-law of Mr. R. B. Willison, of Clarksburg, who was out with a party of hunters, including Mr. L. J. McKenzie, of Howesville, W. Va., had a thrilling experience with a panther in the mountnins about forty miles back of Keyser, W. Va., during the past week. The animal chased Mr. Dennison up a large tree and kept him there almost a whole day, Mr. Dennison only being able to get down from his lofty perch when Mr. McKenzie came to the rescue and shot the panther. The hunters report an abundance of game there, including quail, pheasants, deer, bear, wild cats and panthers.

Literary Society Organized.

The Oakland Literary Society has been organized by electing the following officers for the winter term: President, Lawrence Fraley; vice-president, G. E. Newman; secretary, Frances Hamill; assistant secretary, Joe McComas. A very interesting meeting was held in the High School room on Friday evening, Nov. 20th, at which the following program was rendered:

Song, "Jolly Boys;" declamation, "Mark Antony's Speech," Paul Workman; piano solo, Frances Hamill; recitation, Mary Harsch; recitation, Irma Workman; poem, Prof. C. M. Miller; debate, "Resolved, that winter sports are preferable to summer sports," affirmative, Mark White, Earl Smith and Paul Workman; negative, G. E. Newman, Gilderoy Whorton and Clyde Shartzer; quintette, Eleanor Peddicord, Lucile Mitchell, June White, Frances Hamill and Bertie Lawton.

Prof. A. W. Dewitt, of Deer Park, Prof. Loraditch and Mr. J. E. Harned were the judges and decided in favor of the affirmative.

There will be no meeting this (Thanksgiving) week but an interesting program is being prepared for the session of Friday evening, Dec. 4th, the prominent feature of which is a debate on the question, "Resolved, that the Press has Been of more Benefit to Mankind than the Pulpit."

Notice! I. O. O. F.

The members of Oak Lodge No. 8, I. O. O. F., are requested to be present with their families at I. O O. F. Hall on Thursday evening, Nov. 26th, 8 p. m., to attend Thanksgiving service. Program has been prepared with several addresses by able speakers. Readings, music, vocal and instrumental.

COMMITTEE.

Subscribe for the Republican.

SHORT RUN.

A certain old maid who had a great antipathy to peddlers, had the tables turned on her the other day. Just as a disreputable looking peddler came into the yard. she put up a second-story window, leaned out and screamed. "Go right away, go right away! I don't want you here—don't want to buy anything, not a thing!" "Put yer darned head in the window and wait till yer asked," said the peddler as he bit off a piece of tobacco. The window slammed and the peddler walked slowly away with a broad grin on his face

Mr. Abraham I. Wilson is visiting his many friends at this place.

Miss Belle Harvey was visiting Miss Nelle Harvey Sunday.

Messrs. Allen and George Moon, of Kitzmiller, attended church here Sunday night.

Mr. Alex Wilson, who spent the past two months at Glady, W. Va., is home again attending the series of meetings at this place, Rev. J. H. Funk pastor.

Miss Nellie Harring is the guest of Miss Jane Wilson this week.

Mr. and Mrs. Dan'l Wilson were visiting Mr. W. J. Wilson near Gorman, Saturday and Sunday.

Miller Bros. are sawing Mr. J. H. Wilson's timber. Charlie wishes the job will last all winter.

Mr. Scott Harvey has been going to Blaine quite often.

Mrs. Roderick Paugh was visiting at Daniel Wilson's Monday.

With best wishes to THE REPUBLICAN. ???

New Postage Stamps on Sale.

Uncle Sam's new issue of postage stamps was placed on sale today at many postoffices, but the demand has been so great that at some offices the old series will be sold until the supply is exhausted. Stamp books containing the new stamps have been sent to all the larger offices and will be on sale today.

The denomination of the new stamps, which are officially known as the "series of 1908," are of 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 8, 10, 12, 15 and 50 cents, and $1. The postoffice department says that the $2 and $5 stamps will be discontinued after the present supply is exhausted.

On the one-cent stamp is the head of Benjamin Franklin in profile from Houdon's bust. All the other denominations bears the head of George Washington in profile from Houdon's bust. The border designs of all the denominations are identical, the head being an ellipse on end with laurel leaves on either side. Above the head are the words, "U. S. Postage," below it the denomination. The size of the stamps is the same as that of the stamps formerly on sale.

McGraw's Favorite for 1912.

Col. John T. McGraw, Democratic national committeeman from West Virginia, is out for Governor-elect Harmon, of Ohio, for the Democratic Presidential nomination four years hence. Several West Virginia papers are mentioning Governor-elect Marshall, of Indiana, while the Virginia papers are booming Gov. Johnson, of Minnesota. The Clarksburg Telegram says Col. McGraw wished to be the original Harmon man, in order to head off the Chiltons, of Charleston, who claimed to be the original Bryan men in West Virginia at the Denver convention.

Baptist Church Dedicated.

The new Ferndale Baptist church, on Hoopole road, about four miles north of Oakland, was dedicated Sunday with appropriate ceremonies. Rev. C. W. Hudson, the pastor, was assisted by several visiting clergymen

To Have Free Delivery.

Meyersdale is to receive free delivery of mail. An official from the Postoffice Department inspected the town with a view of establishing the new system and he found matters generally satisfactory. Owing to the lack of sidewalks, however, service will be given to only parts of Keystone, Beachley and North streets.

Woman Slain.

Silas King and his wife, Emma King, have been lodged in jail at Welch, W. Va., by Squire Crider to await the action of the grand jury on the charge of killing and horribly mutilating the body of Emma Bush, a woman of Tidewater Hill. According to stories told there, the Bush woman was put out of a house of the Tidewater Coal Company, and the Kings moved in. She let them use her furniture until she secured another place, and when she went to the house they insisted that she wait until the next morning. During the night she was murdered and her head severed from the body. The couple were arrested the following day, charged with the crime.

Congressman Sturgiss Weds.

Congressman George C. Sturgiss, of Morgantown, brother Col. A. G. Sturgiss, of Oakland, was married yesterday at Alameda, Cal., to Miss Charlotte Cecilia Kent, of that city, the ceremony being performed at the home of the bride's parents. Congressman Sturgiss and his bride will spend the winter in Washington, D. C.

The Lonaconing Savings Bank

Of Allegany Couuty.

Capital Stock . $20,000
Surplus and Undivided Profits . $60,000
Deposits . . $625,000

3 PER CENT. Interest Paid Upon all Savings Accounts.

GIVE THEM A START

Tne New Year is rapidly approaching. This would be a good time for you to start your young folks on the road to Success.

Early training in the practice of self-denial; instruction as to the use and value of money; opportunities for earning and saving money; all these tend to fix and fasten the children in the ways of thrift and prosperity.

We most gladly assist the young people in getting started.

One Dollar opens an account and entitles the depositor to one of our Savings Banks.

We shall be pleased to have our Garrett County friends call and receive a 1908 Calendar.

DAVID SLOAN, President. R. R. SLOAN, Treasurer.

The First National Bank

FRIENDSVILLE, MD.

Capital, $25,000. Surplus and Undivided Profits, $24,000.

OFFICERS:

L. E. Friend, President. J. W. McCullough, V. P.
R. C. McCandlish, Cashier.

DIRECTORS:

L. E. Friend, Merchant,
J. W. McCullough, Lumber and Coal.
W. W. Savage, Merchant.
D. S. Custer, Merchant.
H. M. Rumbaugh, Farmer.
W. H. H. Friend, Pension Agent and Surveyor.
Horace R. DeWitt, Treasurer of Garrett County, Md.
R. C. McCandlish.

We will issue time or demand certificates of deposit and pay you 4 per cent. interest if your money is left with us.

In all its dealings this Bank combines absolute safety with satisfactory service and never loses sight of either.

SAFETY DEPOSIT BOXES FOR RENT.

Notice to Creditors.

This is to give notice, That the subscriber, of Garrett county hath obtained from the Orphans' Court of Garrett county, in Maryland, letters of Administration on the personal estate of

A. F. GEORGE,

late of Garrett county, deceased. All persons having claims against the deceased are hereby warned to exhibit the same, with the vouchers thereof legally authenticated to the subscriber, on or before the 26th day of May next; they may otherwise by law be excluded from all benefit of said estate. All persons knowing themselves indebted to said estate are requested to make immediate payment.

Given under my hand this 24th day of November, 1908.

MARY E. GEORGE,
Administratrix,
Swanton, Md.

Notice to Creditors.

This is to give notice, That the subscriber, of Garrett county hath obtained from the Orphan's Court of Garrett county, in Maryland, letters of Administration on the personal estate of

WILLIAM FRUSH,

late of Garrett county, deceased. All persons having claims against the deceased are hereby warned to exhibit the same, with the vouchers thereof legally authenticated to the subscriber, on or before the 14th day of April, next; they may otherwise by law be excluded from all benefit of said estate. All persons knowing themselves indebted to said estate are requested to make immediate payment.

Given under my hand this 14th day of October, 1908.

JOHN W. FRUSH,
Administrator,
R. F. D., Oakland, Md.

Notice to Creditors.

This is to give notice, That the subscriber of Garrett County, in Maryland, hath obtained from the Orphans' Court of Garrett county, in Maryland, letters Aministration on the personal estate of

J. RUSSELL BROWNING,

late of Garrett County, deceased. All persons having claims against the deceased are hereby warned to exhibit the same with the vouchers thereof legally authenticated to the subscriber, on or before the 29th day of April, next; they may otherwise by law be excluded from all benefit of said estate. All persons knowing themselves indebted to said estate are requested to make immediate payment.

Given under my hand this 29th day of October, 1908.

M. A. BROWNING,
Administrator,
Kitzmiller, Md.

Notice to Creditors.

This is to give notice, That the subscribers of Garrett county, hath obtained from the Orphans' Court of Garrett County, in Maryland, Letters of Administration on the personal estate of

JOHN W. BOWERS,

late of Garrett county, deceased. All persons having claims against the deceased are hereby warned to exhibit the same, with vouchers thereof legally authenticated to the subscriber, on or before the 29th day of April next; they may otherwise by law be excluded from all benefit of said estate. All persons knowing themselves indebted to said estate are requested to make immediate payment.

Given under my hand this 26th day of November, 1908.

FLORENCE M. BOWERS,
Administratrix,
Dodson, Md.

Examiners' Notice.

Notice is hereby given, that the undersigned, appointed by the County Commissioners of Garrett County, to view the lands through which the new county road is to be located. Said new road to begin at a point on the county road leading from Thayersville to Altamont, near the residence of Solomon Hogue, running between the lands of Henry Myers, S. O. Clark, Thomas Garrett, Abel Dewitt, Martin Filsinger and Mrs. E. Fundenberg to intersect the Deer Park road at a point near Mrs. Fundenbergs farm, to extend a distance of about one and one-half miles, which is now a private road but used by the public, and examine whether said road shall be located as a county road, will meet on the 16th day of November, 1908 for such purpose, and to determine whether the public convenience requires the said road, and if so, to locate the same and perform their duty in the premises.

ANDREW SHARTZER,
JOHN W. HANEY,
P. J. LOHR,
Examiners.

See our 5 and 10c glassware. Baumgartner.

WOOD'S SEEDS.
Best qualities obtainable.

Winter or Hairy Vetch

makes not only one of the largest-yielding and best winter feed and forage crops you can grow, but is also one of the best of soil-improvers, adding more nitrogen to the soil than anyiother winter crop.

Wood's Descriptive Fall Catalogue gives full information about this valuable crop; also about all other for Fall planting. Catalogue mailed free on request. Write for it.

Farm & Garden Seeds

T. W. WOOD & SONS,
Seedsmen, - Richmond, Va.

PUTTING UP PRESCRIPTIONS

Is the most exacting part of our business—a task we do not shirk. Giving you just what your doctor orders, never filling it with something "just as good," we deserve, and by means of this advertisement ask, your patronage. Everything in the drug and chemical line you'll want is here, too

OAKLAND PHARMACY
JOS. E. HARNED, Proprietor,
OAKLAND, MD.

DOES IT PAY?

to tramp errands, lose time and suffer inconvenience—to save the cost of a telephone message.

The C. &P. Telephone Comp'y

A Meritorious Institution

Established as a State Bank in 1888 with a capital of $25,000.00; changed to a National Bank in 1903 and capital increased to $50,000.00; TODAY with a capital and surplus of $85,000.00 and total resources of over $500,000.00

BETTER, BIGGER AND STRONGER

we are than ever. During the 20 years of our existence, our aim has been to extend to our patrons the best possible service. Our steady growth is evidence that the banking institution, which throws the greatest safeguards around its business in order to protect its depositors merits the confidence of the public. If you are not a customer of this Bank let this be your invitation to become one; our relations will be mutually profitable.

Garrett National Bank

Of Oakland, Maryland.

Take me out to the Gold Mine.

Miss Margaret Crystal spent Tuesday in Terra Alta with friends.

How about having a look at the Gold Mine before you buy your Toys?

Mr. George Loar, of Grafton, spent Sunday in Oakland with his mother.

Mr. R. T. Semmes, of Cumberland, was in Oakland Tuesday on professional business.

Capt. John M. Jarboe went to Keyser, W. Va., Tuesday, where he spent the day on business.

The Gold Mine is the best place to buy Toys. Why? because you can get what you want.

Mr. David S. Davis, of near Sunnyle, was in Oakland last Saturday when he called at this office.

Mr. and Mrs. W. L. Thomas spent a few days this week on a visit to relatives at Masontown, West Va.

Mr. Harland L. Jones returned to Oakland last Friday night from a brief visit to relatives in Wheeling.

Mr. G. Semmes Hamill spent Sunday in Baltimore, in which city his family is on a visit to friends and relatives.

FOR SALE—A small driving mare; will be sold cheap. Apply to Dr. B. F. Selby, Oakland.

Dr. John E. Legge was in Washington, D. C., last Sunday where he visited his brotner, Mr. George W. Legge.

Mr. and Mrs. King Delawder went over to Mrs. Charles E. Hilleary's this morning where they will spend the day.

Just received 496,422,992,724½ Dolls. What a whopper! The Gold Mine.

Mr. Jack Grimes, of Deer Park, who was at his home in Pittsburg for several days, returned to Deer Park Tuesday.

Mrs. A. D. Naylor and Mrs. Benj. H. Sincell spent Tuesday at Terra Alta as the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Parley DeBerry.

Mrs. Oscar Hinebaugh, of Terra Alta, spent Sunday in Oakland with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. James O. Cleveland.

Mr Frank Browning, of Cumberland, spent Monday night in Oakland with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. John T. Browning.

If you want it, and I haven't got it, will get it for you, if you come early. GEO. M. MASON.

Miss Beatrice Heyward, of Bond, arrived in Oakland this morning and will remain a few days as the guest of Miss Sue Littman.

Mrs. John L. Fitzwater, of near Swanton, was in Oakland Tuesday in company with her husband, Judge John L. Fitzwater.

Mrs. Jack Moore, of near Morgantown, is in Oakland this week where she is visiting her parents, Mr. and Mrs. William Kildow.

Dr. and Mrs. W. H. Ravenscraft left Oakland on Monday afternoon for a visit to relatives and friends in and near Kingwood, W. Va.

Mrs. C. F. Hammond, who was on a visit to relatives and friends at Meyersdale, Pa., for some time, returned to her home in Oakland Tuesday.

Mrs. R. A. Smith, one of the coal operators of Blaine, was a visitor to Oakland Tuesday afternoon, returning to his home the same evening.

Messrs. C. E. Ellithorp and S. E. Broadwater, leading citizens of Bittinger, Garrett county, are in the city on business.—Cumberland News.

Mrs. M. E. McQnay, of Philadelphia, who spent two weeks in Oakland as the guest of her daughter, Mrs. B. F. Selby, returned to Philadelphia last Friday.

Senator Ravenscroft came up to Oakland from Baltimore Sunday afternoon and remained here until Monday afternoon, when he returned to Baltimore.

Mrs. Daniel Shaffer, of Wheelng, W. Va., arrived in Oakland Tuesday afternoon to remain for a short visit to her parents, Mr. and Mrs. John W. Hart.

Misses Wonn and Josephine Robinson returned to their home in Oakland on Tuesday evening from a few days' visit to friends in Fairmont and Clarksburg.

Mrs. Ella Miller, who visited friends in Pennsylvania for a week or two, returned to Oakland last Wednesday afternoon and resumed her position in the postoffice.

Mr. Frank Harne, who is holding a position as conductor on the Western Maryland Railroad, with headquarters at Hagerstown, is at home in Oakland for a week's visit.

The largest and best line of Xmas Post Cards in Western Maryland at the Gold Mine store.

See The Republican for Job Printing.

CAPITAL 50,0 0.00 — THE — SURPLUS AND PROFITS $29,000.00

First National Bank

OAKLAND, MD.

GOVERNMENT DEPOSITORY.

One of the Largest and Best Equipped Banking Houses in Maryland.

Vaults absolutely Fire and Burglar proof.

Safety Deposit Boxes for Rent

Pays 3 Per Cent. on Time Deposits—Compounded Semi-Annually

Every courtesy extended consistent with sound banking.

Home Savings Banks Free. $1.00 will start an account.

The Depositor with a Dollar account receives the same consideration as the largest depositor.

COME IN AND GET ACQUAINTED

SAW MILL BURNED.

Third Plant Belonging to Mr. D. M. Lower Destroyed.

For the third time in as many years Mr. D. M. Lower, of near Mountain Lake Park, has suffered the loss of saw mills by fire, the last and probably the the most serious conflagation occurring last Saturday night when his mill as well as 50,000 feet of manufactured oak, chestnut and other lumber being consumed.

Mr. Lower stated Tuesday morning that the mill was operated until in the afternoon of Saturday when he had to close down on account of the lack of water and that the origin of the blaze was likely due to a spark alighting on the roof of the mill which set it on fire.

The loss will be $1000 with no insurance.

Miss Mary Watson, of near Charlestown, W. Va. and Miss Julia Engle, of Kearneysville, W. Va., are in Oakland where they are the guests of Mr. and Mrs. John A. Grant.

Mrs. A. F. George, two sons and daughter, of near Swanton, were in Oakland Tuesday on business before the Orphans' Court in connection with the settlement of the estate of the late Mr. George.

Mr. and Mrs. Horace R. DeWitt, who returned to Oakland last Wednesday afternoon from their honeymoon trip, left here on Friday for their future home near Hoyes, followed by the well wishes of their numerous friends.

Say! Can you get Toys at the Gold Mine store? You saider.

Miss Cinda Hinebaugh, who has been on an extended visit to friends and relatives in Keyser, Elkins and other West Virginia towns, returned to her home in Oakland Sunday afternoon.

Mr. Douglas McLane and son William, of McHenry, were in Oakland Tuesday where they received a six horse power gasoline engine and a chop mill, which they will erect on their farm, using the machinery for their own needs as well as grinding for their neighbors.

Dr. John E. Legge is making some extensive improvements to the property owned by his father, Mr. George W. Legge, by tearing down the old stable and other buildings facing on Centre street and rebuilding them on the alley in the rear of the lot.

Mrs. Florence M. Bowers, of Upper Potomac, whose husband, John Bowers, died recently, is in Oakland and vicinity where she will visit friends and relatives for two or three weeks and then leave for Shawnee, Oklahoma, where she will make her future home with her mother, Mrs. Martha Bolyard.

Senator W. McCulloh Brown will leave on Friday for Baltimore where he will remain until after the State Horticultural Society meeting, which begins on December 1st. Senator Brown is confident that Garrett county will secure first prize for her exhibits, especially apples.

Among those from out of town who attended the funeral of the late Mrs. Martha Delawder in Oakland last Thursday afternoon were Mr. and Mrs. W. L. Boughner and daughter, Miss May, of Morgantown; Rev. and Mrs. J. A. McClelland, of Grafton, and Misses Bessie Adair and Ellen Connell, of Terra Alta.

Mr. C. F. Hammond left Oakland Tuesday night for Baltimore, where he met his son Roy yesterday morning, the latter being a student at Strathmore College and has been suffering for several months with an affection of the eyes, his visit to Baltimore being made for the purpose of consulting a specialist concerning his son's condition.

Mr. William Schooly, of Warsaw, Ohio, who was here on a visit to relatives for a week or two, returned home last night. Mr. Schooly is a native Garrett countian, having left here more than thirty years ago, going to Ohio where he has made a success as an agriculturalist, his recent visit here marking his first return to the scenes of his boyhood and young manhood. While in Oakland Tuesday night he met quite a number of his old time acquaintances, among them being Mr. Fred A. Thayer, to whom he went to school.

Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Frantz and their daughter, Mrs. John J. Sweeney, went to Friendsville last Saturday where they attended the funeral on Sunday of their nephew, Playford Dunham, son of Mr. and Mrs. George W. Dunham, of Friendsville, announcement of the death of the young man having been made in this paper last week. Rev. Asa S. Wolfe, pastor of the M. E. church at Friendsville conducted the funeral which occurred from the church Sunday afternoon, with interment in the Steele cemetery. Mr. James B. Frantz also attended the funeral, having gone from here to Cumberland last Thursday morning prior to the annoucement of the death of his relative, accompanying the remains from that city to the home the following day.

Waltz me around to the Gold Mine.

Appointed Justice of the Peace.

Last Thursday Governor Crothers appointed Mr. Edward I. West, of Oakland, Justice of the Peace for the Fourteenth District of Garrett county. Mr. West qualified on Saturday morning and on Monday opened his office in the Matthews building on Alder street.

THE DEATH RECORD.

MRS. BRIDGET GRIFFIN.

Mrs. Bridget Griffin, widow of the late Patrick Griffin, of Deer Park, died at her home at that place Tuesday at noon after an illness extending over a considerable period from causes incident to extreme age, the deceased being nearly or quite eighty years old. She was the mother of four sons and three daughters, they being Messrs. John, of Elkins; Edward, of Grafton, who holds a responsible position with the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad; Patrick and William, Mrs. Michael Garrett, Misses Josephine and Kate, all of Deer Park. The deceased lady was a member of the Oakland Catholic church and will be buried from that edifice this (Thursday) morning at ten o'clock. The interment will be made in the cemetery here.

Church Services.

OAKLAND PRESBYTERIAN.

Services on Sunday, to which all are cordially invited, will be preaching at 11 a. m. and 7.30 p. m.

L. B. HENSLEY, Pastor.

ST. PAUL'S M. E.

Services next Sunday as follows:
Preaching 10.30 a. m.
Sunday school at 2.15 p. m.
Preaching at 7.30 p. m.
Epworth League Monday 7.30 p. m.
Junior League Wednesday 4.15 p. m.
Prayer meeting Wednesday 7.30 p. m.
Everybody cordially invited to attend these services.

J. B. WORKMAN, Pastor.

ST. MARK'S LUTHERAN.

Services next Sabbath as follows:
Sunday school at 9.30 a. m.
Preaching 10.30 a. m.
Luther League every Wednesday at 7.30 p. m.
Preaching in Deer Park Lutheran church next Sunday at 7 30 p. m.
Everybody welcome.

E. MANGES, Pastor.

Notice Epworthians.

All members of the Oakland Epworth League are cordially invited to attend a social to be given in the Young Men's Christian Society Hall, in the Mitchell building, Second street, on Thanksgiving evening. A silver offering will be taken at the door for the benefit of the Italian work in the Oakland District.

COMMITTEE.

Estray Notice.

Five head of cattle from pasture at Deer Park—a two-year old yellow Jersey heifer; 1 yearling brindle bull; two two-year old red heifers; one two-year old yellow and white spotted heifer. A liberal reward will be paid for information leading to the recovery or the animals.

ANDREW SHARTZER.

Discharged from Custody.

Last Friday morning Charles Williams and Harry B. Rooney, the two men who were arrested in Oakland on the morning preceding, suspected of having broken into and robbed the Felton store at Corinth, six miles west of Oakland sometime between the hours of twelve o'clock midnight and day-break Thursday morning, were released from custody as no evidence connecting the two men with the crime was produced before the Magistrate.

District Missionary Convention.

The District Convention of the Woman's Home Missionary Society will meet in St. Paul's M. E. church Thursday, Dec. 3rd, at 2.30 p. m.

Miss Hillman, of Bridgeport, Ohio, will address the convention in the afternoon and the business of the convention will be transacted.

At 7.30 Dr. Frederick H. Wright of Pittsburg will deliver an address. Dr. Wright is one of the leading pulpit and platform speakers of America, and it is a rare privilege to have him with us.

The program in full is as follows:

Our motto is: "For the love of Christ and in His Name."

AFTERNOON SESSION.

2:30 Devotional service, Mrs. F. A. Thayer.
2:45 Address of welcome, Rev. J. B. Workman.
Solo, Miss Agnes Bullard.
2:55 Response by Mrs. Jas. W. Engle.
3:05 Report from District Officers.
Hymn.
3:20 Address by Miss Hillman, of Bridgeport, Ohio.
3:50 Round Table—Conducted by Miss Hillman.
Hymn, Adjournment.

EVENING SESSION.

7:30 Devotion, J. O. Bolton.
7:50 Reports from committees.
Music by the choir.
8:00 Address by Dr. Frederick H. Wright, of Pittsburg, Pa
Solo by Dr. John G. Robinson.
Doxology. Benediction.

All the services of the convention will be are opened to the public and you are urged to be present.

Engine Leaps Into Ravine.

Tearing down the mountain from Thomas at the rate of more than sixty miles an hour, a light engine, No 503, on the Western Maryland railroad, in rounding a curve at Big Run Sunday night, left the rails and plunged over a steep embankment into a ravine below. Both Engineer William Fortney and Fireman Ellis Durr escaped, however. They went down with the engine, but were only a little bruised and crawled out from under the wreckage. The engine was demolished. This same curve has been the scene of two previous wrecks, when many lives were lost.

Water Famine Threatened.

Alarm over the water famine at Clarksburg, W. Va., has reached high tension, as the river and creek supply is exhausted. The city waterworks has been out of commission for three days. Residents are putting padlocks on private wells and cisterns. Drinking water has to be purchased from artesian wells 5 miles from the city.

Bridge Being Repaired.

Workmen from a bridge construction works located at Shippinsburg, Pa., began the work of repairing the Oak street bridge spanning the tracks of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad in Oakland on Monday morning of this week, the contract having been awarded the concern by the Mayor and Council at a recent meeting. The cost of the repairs will amount to a sum aggregating eight hundred dollars. It is expected that the repairs will be completed within a week or two and then the bridge will be reopened after having been closed to the public since early in the summer.

E. A. WEIMER.

Something Good

I HAVE IN STOCK A NICE ASSORTMENT OF THE CELEBRATED

Elite Petticoats

AT

$1.00 $2.00 $3.00 AND $5.00

COME AND SEE

Yours Truly. E. A. WEIMER.

NEXT DOOR TO THE POSTOFFICE — OAKLAND, MD

Commissioners' Meeting.

OFFICE OF THE COUNTY COMMISSIONERS FOR GARRETT CO., OAKLAND, MD., NOV. 19, 1908.

The County Commissioners for Garrett county will meet at their office in Oakland on

Tuesday, Dec. 8th, 1908,

for the purpose of transacting all routine business.

By order of the Board.
A. G. ROSS, Clerk.

J. B. WILLIAMS CO.
FROSTBURG, MD.
Cheapest place to buy
MONUMENTS HEADSTONES AND IRON FENCING
Send for prices

Order of Publication.

Alice Armstrong vs. John Armstrong. No. 1512 Equity. In the Circuit Court for Garrett county, Maryland.

The object of this suit is to obtain a decree, a vinculo matrimonii, the plaintiff from the defendent.

The bill states that the plaintiff and defendant were married by the Rev. Harris, in Tucker county, West Virginia, at Easter, 1890, and that they resided together in the State of West Virginia, until the month of March, 1908, and that though the conduct of plaintiff toward the said John Armstrong, her husband, has always been kind, affectionate and above reproach, the said John Armstrong, in the month of March, 1908, without just cause or reason, abandoned and deserted her, while they were living in Nicholas county, West Virginia, and has declared his intention to live with her no longer, and that such abandonment has continued uninterruptedly for at least three years and is deliberate and final, and the separation of the parties beyond any reasonable expectation of reconciliation, and that immediately after such abandonment and desertion, the plaintiff removed to Garrett county, Maryland, where she has since made her home and supported herself and three children by manuel labor, and the bill further states that the plaintiff and defendant have had three children born to them from said marriage, the oldest, Mary, A., now past sixteen years of age; Charles, past thirteen years of age, and Sarah J., now past ten years of age, the custody of which youngest child the plaintiff prays may be awarded to her. The bill then prays that the plaintiff may be divorced, a vinculo matrimonii, from the said defendant, John Armstrong, for the custody of said youngest child of the plaintiff, and for general relief, and an order of publication against the defendant, who is alleged to be a non-resident of the State of Maryland.

It is thereupon, this 22nd day of October 1908, ordered by the Circuit Court for Garrett county, in Equity, that the plaintiff, by causing a copy of this order to be inserted in some newspaper, published in Garrett county, once in each of four successive weeks before the 21st day of November, 1908, give notice to the said absent defendant of the object and substance of this bill, warning him to appear in this Court, in person or by solicitor, on or before the 8th day of December, 1908, to show cause, if any he has, why a decree ought not to be passed as prayed.

E. Z. TOWER, Clerk.

True copy, test:—E. Z. TOWER Clerk.

The man Who Makes A STUDY OF HIS APPEARANCE

Is the man who best appreciates the detail of the tailoring we turn out. The workmanship passes without a question, the fit is naturally a matter of course, but the shape we mould into the garments give them a character that finishes them off and makes the satisfaction of the owner complete.

All this is a bid for your next tailoring order. We know we can make you the best clothes you ever wore. We want you to know it. That order is the best and only sure way to settle the question.

JAMES BROCK,
Dixon Building,
Oakland, Maryland.

ARTHUR TOWNSHEND

BARGAINS! BARGAINS!

TO CLOSE OUT SOME

Flannels, Blankets and Flannel Skirts

WE CAN GIVE YOU GOOD PRICES.

MEN'S AND BOYS' Overcoats AT A GOOD SACRIFICE

STILL HAVE SOME GOOD THINGS IN

Underwear, Gloves, Mittens, and Tam o'Shanters Children's Caps.

ARTHUR TOWNSHEND

10-qt. tin dish pans 10c at Baumgartner's.

Will the Complete Mastery of the Air Be Attained?

STORE OF ENERGY, which must be carried and periodically refilled, thus limiting the speed and duration of flight. The last two imply a FLOW OF ENERGY to the flying machine from WITHOUT, the supply being continuous and inexhaustible. They are, therefore, immensely superior to the former.

Careful thought leads to the conclusion that the WIRELESS METHOD would be decidedly the best for the peace and welfare of men.

BUT, NO MATTER HOW PERFECT THE MEANS FOR OBTAINING MOTIVE POWER, IT WILL NEVER BE POSSIBLE TO GO BEYOND CERTAIN RATHER NARROW LIMITS IN AERIAL PERFORMANCE.

* * *

The atmospheric ocean is ideally adapted to travel, permitting, as it does, perfect freedom of movement in three directions, but the physical properties of the air make it rather unsuitable for navigation. It is a sticky or viscous substance, a hundred times more so than water, which means that it offers a relatively very great FRICTIONAL RESISTANCE to a body in motion. Its small density is for many reasons detrimental to high efficiency of propulsion. Its compressibility, turbulence and perpetual unrest all cause additional specific losses of motive power. THESE PROPERTIES FOREVER PRECLUDE THE POSSIBILITY OF EXCESSIVE SPEED with reference to the surrounding air by the aeroplane as well as the dirigible balloon.

MAKING EVERY ALLOWANCE FOR FUTURE ACHIEVEMENT, IT IS IDLE TO EXPECT THAT THE RECORD ON LAND OR WATER WILL BE SURPASSED.

Modern Literature Is Too Flippant.

By HARRIET PRESCOTT SPOFFORD, Noted Author.

FLIPPANCY is the great trouble with literature today. People aren't interested in big, vital questions as they were in the old days. They feel nothing strongly, intensely, any longer. Perhaps it's because they feel so many things a little. THEY LACK A GREAT OBJECT.

There must always be the STRENGTH OF SINCERE PURPOSE; there must be sincere devotion to some cause or causes in the man or woman who wishes to do great work. Of course that is not all, but that must always be present.

There is a surplus of the study of personality in the work of modern authors.

People said awhile ago that for a long time books had been written for the young girl with nothing included which she might not see. Then they said: "This is foolish. We will change it. We will write about anything." They have. They have written stories dealing with phases of the marriage relation, stories which ought never to have been written.

Then, again, our modern writers are NOT EDUCATED. They do not know the classics. They haven't STUDIED the great writers.

Perhaps they think they can be more original and independent if they don't. But how else can they ever learn to express themselves?

THERE ARE VERY FEW GREAT MEN WHO HAVE NOT STUDIED THE PEOPLE WHO HAVE COME BEFORE THEM.

Poetry and the Modern Play.

By PERCY MACKAYE, Poet and Dramatist.

THE distinction between the poetry of words and the poetry of ideas is in the artistry of the poet who conceives by the skill of his work.

THE CHIEF APPEALS OF THE MODERN PLAYS THAT HAVE MARKED A NEW ELEMENT OF SUCCESS IN THE THEATER HAVE BEEN POETIC. WE SEEM TO HAVE ENTERED UPON A NEW DECADE IN THE AMERICAN THEATER—A NEW PRINCIPLE IN PLAYS.

* * *

The most wonderful thing today is the instant and wide appreciation these NEW FORCES OF POETRY IN MODERN PLAYS have received from the American people. It has not been a merely vagrant interest among the elect and cultured, but a UNIVERSAL AWAKENING to the poetry of modern life. It is the most hopeful and inspiring prospect for the modern dramatist, because it opens up an illimitable field of subjects that had by customs and prejudices of the theater been more or less improbable. Thanks to the pioneers who have marked a new direction in dramatic landmarks, the poetic drama has achieved a NEW IMPETUS, acquired a NEW STYLE in the poetry of daily life.

Nothing that the poet dramatist can [illegible] ground, because the poetry of any subject [illegible] unknown or half suspected facts in human [illegible] ization of humanity.

[illegible]

there was only one thing that would save her from disgrace and penury, and that was—Lorenzo. And if Lorenzo had not found courage to ask her to marry him during these twenty-five years, when she had been young and blooming, would he care for her now? His coming to see her was a habit, as was the occasional buggy ride they enjoyed together or his attendance upon her at the village fair, when he treated her to supper and ice cream and then soberly escorted her home afterward. They were not engaged; they were "keeping company," and all Petersville gossiped over it [illegible] at Lorenzo's slowness and Sarah's [illegible]

"I'VE BEEN EXPECTING YOU'D SAY SOMETHING LIKE THAT."

[illegible] the room [illegible] and her chin [illegible] little cry: "Don't go, Lorenzo!"

"WELL, WHAT IS THAT?"

dress and [illegible] the blue bag I—I put the letter in there when you weren't looking. I thought you'd find it the next day." Lorenzo was breathing laboriously.

"I ain't used the bag since then until tonight."

"I thought you'd read it, and I said if you wouldn't have me you needn't answer it—and that I'd be your friend forever—and I've been coming ever since—glad just to see you, Sarah."

Sarah Downs reached a timid hand for the letter and broke the seal reverently. She read the closely written page with joyful, tear filled eyes. "Why, it's a proposal!" she murmured blushingly.

"That's what it is," asserted Lorenzo, drawing closer to her. "Do you mean to say, Sarah, that if you'd seen this twenty-five years ago you'd have said yes?"

Sarah Downs must have given a satisfactory answer, for a moment later Lorenzo had gathered the pink fascinator, the blue silk bag, the blushing Sarah and all her troubles into his protecting arms.

He Was Accepted.

He was a comic writer and asked her to be his wife. He proposed as seriously as a humorist could, and she laughed. He looked blue. Then she smiled and said:

"That is a capital joke."

"What's a joke?" he asked in surprise.

"Your latest. Shall you have it printed?"

"That was no joke. I meant it."

"You did? Why, you have written so much in ridicule of love, courtship and marriage"—

"Well—er—ep—yes—but"—

"I should never suit you. I write postscripts, stop before the mirror, am slow in dressing for church, admire a new hat, sometimes want a new dress, and"—

"But, my dear Angelina, I should never object to"—

"You have always said that happiness ends with marriage, and I have a mother who would want to visit me, and"—

"Why, I"—

"And I have my animosities and may look round in church, and you would find such a lot of things to write about."

"My precious, I would only write about other people then, the neighbors, the"—

"The horrid Misses Sniffleton?"

"That's a fact."

"And the stuck up folks over the way?"

"Most certainly."

"Enough! I am yours!"—Pick-Me-Up.

The Great Seal of England.

The great seal of England consists of a large mass of sterling silver, measuring about six and a half inches in diameter by one and a quarter inches in depth or thickness. It is in two parts, both smooth on the other side, but elaborately engraved within. These engravings are impressed upon a lump of wax attached in an ingenious way to any document to which the seal is to be affixed, the weight of the seal in its metal [illegible]

A Business Proposition

Did you ever stop to think, Mr. Business Man, that the news in your store is just as much interesting to a new fabric you have on the shelves as they are in any home happening. Your store news and announcements in these columns will reach a large circle of eager buyers. This will enable you to sell your goods while they are new and fresh and you will not have to sacrifice later at remnant counter prices. Think it over.

DR. R. GAYLE CRAFT, M.D., PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON, OAKLAND, MD. Residence on North Third street. Office at office building.

DR. R. R. FRANTZ, DENTIST, OAKLAND, MD. Office in Thomas building, second street, Oakland, Md. Special attention given to bridge and crown work.

DR. J. G. ROBINSON, DENTIST, OAKLAND MD. Office at residence on Liberty street. GAS ADMINISTERED.

NORMAN S. BEINDELL, ATTORNEY-AT-LAW. All business given prompt attention. Office—First National Bank Building. KLAND, MARYLAND.

GILMOR S. HAMILL, ATTORNEY-AT-LAW AND SOLICITOR IN CHANCERY. Office in Garrett National Bank Building. Particular attention given to conveyancing, investigation of land titles and collection of claims. Loans negotiated.

EDWARD H. SINCELL, ATTORNEY-AT-LAW. OAKLAND, MARYLAND. Will practice in the Courts of Garrett and Allegany counties, the Court of Appeals of Maryland, and the adjoining counties of West Virginia.

Baltimore & Ohio R. R.
Schedule effective June 2, 1907.
OAKLAND.
*Daily. †Daily except Sunday. §Sunday only.
For WASHINGTON, BALTIMORE, PHILADELPHIA & NEW YORK, Depart *12.27 a. m., *6.31 a. m., *4.17 p. m., *8.29 p. m. Arrive *7.12 a. m., *3.33 p. m., *10.26 p. m., *11.54 p. m.
For CUMBERLAND and Way Points, Depart *10.00 a. m., *4.40 p. m. Arrive *9.26 a. m., *7.26 p. m.
For COLUMBUS & CHICAGO, Depart *11.54 p. m. Arrive *6.07 a. m., *4.17 p. m.
For GRAFTON (Accom.), Depart *9.26 a. m., *7.26 p. m. Arrive *10.00 a. m., *4.40 p. m.
For FAIRMONT and WHEELING, Depart *9.26 a. m. (local), *3.33 p. m., *11.54 p. m. Arrive *6.07 a. m., *4.17 p. m., *12.25 night.
For FAIRMONT (Accom.), Depart *7.26 p. m. Arrive *10.00 a. m.
For CINCINNATI, LOUISVILLE and ST. LOUIS, Depart *7.12 a. m., *3.33 p. m., *10.26 p. m. Arrive *12.27 a. m., *6.31 a. m., *8.29 p. m.

FOR SALE.

We will sell at private sale at our farms between Mt. Lake Park and Oakland,

1 Gasoline Engine,

8 horse-power, made by the International Harvester Co. Almost new and in perfect running order. Will be sold for $275.

1 Hay Bailer,

operated by horse-power. Makes standard size bales.

For further information call on or write to THE H. WEBER & SONS CO., Oakland, Md.

Oakland Pharmacy
JOS. E. HARNED, Proprietor.
Drugs, Chemicals, Stationery, Cigars
Cameras and Photo Supplies

GETTY BROWNING,
CIVIL AND MINING
ENGINEERING.
Office—"Mountain Democrat Building," OAKLAND, MARYLAND,
Real Estate Bought and Sold.
Particular Attention Given Railroad & Mine Surveying.
Surveys made for Town sites, Sewerage and Water Works. Prompt attention given Land Surveying. Both Phones.

Land for Sale.

We have for sale the following valuable tracts of land:

One Military Lot of 50 acres, a small portion of which is under cultivation. All good land, and every acre tillable. Watered by several good springs and a never failing [illegible] Certain [illegible] with [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

BOWSER IS OVERCOME

The Precariousness of Existence Fills Him With Sadness.

HE REFUSES TO BE CHEERED.

Mrs. B. Finally Solves the Puzzle of Her Husband's State of Mind, but Doesn't Sympathize With Him in the Least—Puts Him to Bed.

[Copyright, 1908, by T. C. McClure.]

Mrs. Bowser and the cat were on watch for Mr. Bowser as he came home the other evening. As he dropped off the car at the corner it was seen that his general attitude was one of dejection. Halfway down to his gate Mrs. Bowser could see the care lines in his face. As he reached the foot of the steps she realized that he must have got word that all his brothers and sisters were dead. He was passing by her to enter the house, with the most lonesome look imaginable on his face, when she exclaimed:

"Mr. Bowser, will you tell me what in the name of goodness has happened?"

"Nawthin'," he drawled out.

"But something surely has. Are any of your relatives dead?"

"I dunno."

"Have you lost a large amount of money?"

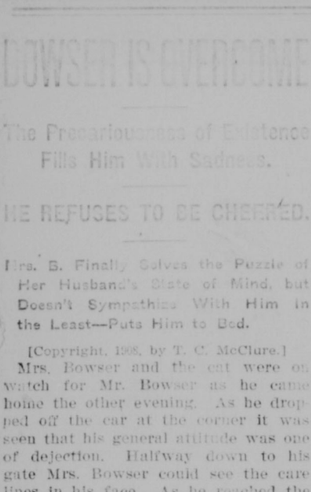
"No."

"Then what is it? You look as if you hadn't a friend left on earth."

"And I haven't," he replied as he hung up his hat and tears came to his eyes.

"But I am here—I, your wife."

"Yes, but what of it? I tell you, Mrs. Bowser, this is a sad old world.



"SHE CAN'T PUT HER LOVING ARMS AROUND MY NECK AND CALL ME A CHERUB, AS SHE USED TO."

I hadn't much to do at the office this afternoon, and I just sat down and thought of things—sad things. I—I feel as if I could weep."

Suspicious of Him.

She looked at him suspiciously and led the way down to the dining room and then started in to tell him that the police had arrested four boys that afternoon for playing ball in the street.

"Yes, but what do four boys and the police amount to?" he wailed out. "Mrs. Bowser, every day around us men and women are dropping dead and being borne to their long home."

"But that is what we all expect," she replied. "They say the butcher on the corner must fall if the price of meat doesn't come down."

"But what have I got to do with the butcher on the corner and the price of meat? I tell you there is sadness in this world—oceans of sadness. As it says in the Scriptures, we are here to day and gone tomorrow. I left the house in the best of health this morning, but how did you know that I would return alive? How could you tell that at this very moment you would not be a widow with scalding tears of grief chasing each other down your cheeks?"

"Yes, life is a risk, but we should not be sad over it. There came pretty near being an awful dog fight in front of the house half an hour ago. I wish you had been here to sick the little dog on."

"Oh, what's the use?" he said as he nibbled at a piece of bread and turned his face away. "When I am thinking of how my dear old mother died do you think I want to hear about dog fights? Yes, she—she died."

"But you were only four years old then, and you are forty-eight now."

Misses His Mother.

"It doesn't make any difference. My poor mother was called home. I can't go to see her, and she can't put her loving arms around my neck and call me her cherub, as she used to. Had a congestive chill and passed right away. And my father is dead, too, and my brother Jim is dead. I tell you there's grief and sadness abroad in the land."

Mrs. Bowser looked at him for a full minute across the table and sniffed at the atmosphere suspiciously and then said:

"I'm sorry about your father and mother and your brother Jim, but of course you couldn't expect them to keep right on living. I have lost my own father and a sister, as you must know."

"Then why ain't you sad? What are you talking about butchers and dog fights for? Here we sit in the best of health and surrounded by happy influences, and not two blocks away there are houses of mourning. I tell you, Mrs. Bowser—I tell you"—

But before he could tell her she rose up from the table, and he followed her motions who wanted to do something to effect a change in him, and she [illegible]

She Refuses to Mourn.

"But what do you want me to do?" she retorted. "Is it going to bring the dead to life if I sit down and weep?"

"Back to that!" he exclaimed after a moment and without having answered her question. "There is a peddler shouting 'Watermelons!' at the top of his voice! Just hear him!"

"Why, you have heard him every evening for days and days. He has got watermelons to sell. Probably nine out of ten of them are as green as grass, but let him sell them if he can. The more cholera morbus the better for the drug stores and doctors."

"But the cry goes right to my heart," protested Mr. Bowser. "My poor father died after eating a watermelon and my Uncle Jim because he hadn't any teeth to eat one with. The peddler knows it and is hollering to add to my grief."

"Don't be childish, Mr. Bowser. The man doesn't even know who lives here. Did I tell you that I wanted to get at my housecleaning next monih?"

"And now he's yelling 'Gooseberries!'"

"Well, let him yell."

"But I tell you he knows that Bowser lives here, and he wants to spite me by adding to my grief. It was gooseberry tarts that killed my sister Mary and plain gooseberries that killed my cousin Betty. Betty ate four quarts of 'em right down and next day was no more."

"I don't wonder at it. But let's talk about something more cheerful. Do you think the next congress is going to take up the tariff question?"

Stirred Up by a Song.

Mr. Bowser might or might not have answered the question, but before he could get around to it a bird girl in the next back yard who was taking clothes off the line commenced singing at the top of her voice:

"In Scarlet town, where I was born,
There was a fair maid dwelling,
And every town lad far and near Adored bonny Barbara Allen."

"Great snakes, but must I submit to this?" groaned Mr. Bowser as he started up. "Here I come home loaded down with grief and sadness, and a peddler must yell 'Watermelons!' and 'Gooseberries!' at me from the front and a hired girl must warble a song at me from the back!"

"But have patience," counseled Mrs. Bowser. "These people know nothing of your sadness. See, the peddler has driven on and the girl has stopped singing. Let me ask you a question, please. Did you partake of any fall tonic today?"

"And my sister died after eating gooseberry tarts!" he murmured as he wiped his eyes anew.

"Answer my question. Did you have any fall tonic this afternoon? Did any one recommend a tonic to take your grief away?"

"Y-e-s, just a little tonic. It was for my lame back. I took about a tablespoonful."

"Um! I thought so."

"And it has made me sad—s-a-d."

"I see. Well, let me put you to bed, and you'll wake up in the morning feeling all right."

"And I won't be sad no more?"

"Not a sad. You won't even remember whether it was gooseberry tarts or pumpkin pie that did the business for your sister. Come on."

"Yesh, I will come on. Mrs. Bowsher, you are sho good—sho g-o-o-d zhat I cry for you!" M. QUAD.

Honor and Digestion.

Cobble—You certainly have a good cook. By the way, where do you get your servants?

Stone—From our neighbors. When we hear of a good one among them we offer her more money to come with us.

"But, my dear fellow, is that honorable?"

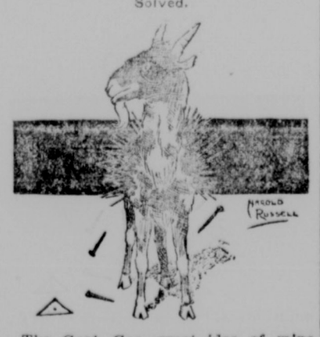
"Why not? Can you develop a sense of honor with a poor digestion?"—New York Life.

Not Much Difference.

Eva—Harry saw you start on a fishing expedition this morning and said he wished he were a fish so you could catch him.

Edna—Oh, it amounts to the same. I'm always stringing him. — Detroit Tribune.

Solved.



The Goat—Gee, great idea of mine eating that magnet! Now I'll go to that masque ball as a porcupine.—Bohemian Magazine.

A Social Affront.

"Wasn't their divorce a shocking affair?" said Mrs. Featherslit.

"Inexcusable," answered Mrs. Smartsett. "They both had the most unfashionable lawyers they could find."—Smart Set.

SUPPOSE you were cast up on an uninhabited tropical shore with nothing but a penknife and a magnifying glass? How would you go about getting a living? How would you manage to defend yourself from the wild beasts and the wilder elements?

These are problems that Tom Blake and the beautiful Miss Leslie and Winthrope had to solve. How they did solve them is told in

INTO THE PRIMITIVE

BY ROBERT AMES BENNET ILLUSTRATIONS BY RAY WALTERS

The beginning was at Capetown, when Blake and Winthrope boarded the steamer as fellow-passengers with Lady Bayrose and her party—which included the beautiful Miss Leslie. Three days later the ship went to pieces in a cyclone on a wild and isolated coast, and these three—the American engineer, the Englishman, and the heiress—were the only survivors. And when highly cultivated civilization was brought face to face with the primitive, what law could prevail but the survival of the fittest? It is a story full of vigorous strength and unusual charm.

It will be printed serially in these columns. The opening chapters to appear in the near future. You will not want to miss it.

When You Need Printing Done

You want it to be of the very best kind. As you expect your printed matter to make business it is necessary it should do the talking for you. Poor or indifferent printing cannot do this as it lacks the strong points required to gain and hold the interest of the patron.

¶ In this particular line of work we excel, for several reasons, viz: 1st; we have the largest and best variety of up-to-date type to be found in the western part of the state. 2nd; we carry only the very best grades of papers; and 3rd; the know-how with which to create original and attractive tye display.

¶ You make no mistake when you come to us with an order of printing

The Republican Job Printery

Benj. H. Sincell, Prop.,
Okland, Md.

Four Per Cent. Interest.

The First National Bank, Friendsville, pays four per cent. interest on time deposits. Place your money in this bank where its earning capacity will be greater than in any other banking institution in the county.

THE FIRST NATIONAL BANK,
Friendsville, Md.

Subscribe for The Republican.

Dissolution Notice.

This is to give notice that the firm of Reams & Browning, doing general mercantile business, has been dissolved by mutual consent, Mr. Browning retiring. The business will be continued by Mr. Reams.

REAMS & BROWNING.
Swallow Falls, Aug 8, 1908. 3t

Special 10-qt. tin water buckets, for a few days only, at Baumgardner's.

A Hint to the Wise Is Sufficient.

Special Sale on

2-qt Blue Enamel Saucepan.

2-qt Blue Fnamel Pudding Pans.

2-qt Blue Enamel Preserve Kettles.

We have just received over 1500 lbs. of our famous 10c Candy.

SUNDAY SCHOOL SUPPLIES.

TAKE our advice—buy now, don't wait, but come and see

THE Little Man

and you will save money on all your Holiday Goods,

Toys, Candies, Novelties, Fancy Goods.

Baumgartner.

CAPITAL $25,000.00

The First National Bank

Of Grantsville, Md.

Safe deposit vault boxes for rent.

SURPLUS $12,500.00

The Savings Department takes care of your money when waiting other investment. The money earns interest from the day it is deposited. It can be withdrawn at any time.

Its Advantages

Any amount from One Dollar up can be deposited, and interest added to principal twice a year. Pass books are issued to every depositor.

We Pay 3 Per Cent. Interest.
Open Daily except Sundays and Holidays. 9 a. m. to 4 p. m.

OFFICERS.
C. H. JENNINGS, - - - President
D. M. STANTON, - Vice-President
J. O. GETTY, - - - Cashier

DIRECTORS.
C. H. Jennings, D. M. Stanton,
G. C. Keller, Eli Stanton,
W. A. Hinebaugh, Frank Watts,
J. O. Getty.

A. D. NAYLOR & COMP'Y

You can buy at Reduced Prices

Grain Drills, Harrows & Plows

AT NAYLOR & CO.'S

Big Stock to select from.

Have the Farmer's Favorite Drills, the Thomas, the Superior Hoe and Disc Drills.

We have the Syracuse, the Imperial and the Wyard Plows.

Also the wood frame Harrows, the wheel and lever Harrows; also the Disc Harrow, all at reduced prices.

We also have a nice line of Spray Pumps.

Muco-Solvent is an indispensible household remedy because it is a preventive as well as a cure, and because it arrests development of all contageous germs and bacterial diseases. It cures croup, colds, tonsilitis with its associated ills and all inflamed and catarrhal conditions of the mucous surface. It is a harmless vegetable preparation that may safely be administered to the tenderest babe. If not for sale in your neighborhood, write to

THE PIEDMONT SUPPLY CO.,
Sole Agents for Muco-Solvent. Piedmont, W. Va.

Real Estate Bargains

I offer for sale

FARM OF 147 ACRES, 3 miles from Oakland; good 6-room House; plenty of water; over 50 acres cleared; about 25 acres of grass; 2 Orchards, bearing; over 75 acres of White Oak Timber; R. F. D. mail service.

COTTAGE OF 6 ROOMS for sale at Mt. Lake Park.

HOUSE AND LOT on Oak Street, Oakland, for sale or rent. House of 6 rooms—Lot 50x150 feet, with Stable and all necessary Outbuildings.

FOUR VERY DESIRABLE BUILDING LOTS situated on Liberty Street, in Oakland. Also 3 DWELLING HOUSES on Liberty Street, with good water and all necessary outbuildings.

HOUSE AND LOT on Wilson Street. House of 10 rooms; good water. Lot 150 feet front. Best Outbuildings in Oakland.

A VERY GOOD FARM 1 mile from Oakland—all under fence; containing 32 acres; about 25 under cultivation; 2 fine Orchards, and about 2½ acres in small Fruit; 2 Houses, a very good Well and a never failing Spring. A very desirable place for Truck and Poultry Farming. Can be bought at a low price just now.

I have for sale 18 of the very best Building Lots in the town which I will sell for cash—or $5 down and $5 per month.

150 ACRES OF VALUABLE COAL LAND situated less than two miles of Oakland which can be bought at a great bargain. The surface would make fine farming land. This land is well watered with a stream and several good springs.

12 MORE CHOICE BUILDING LOTS at $5 down and $5 per month.

If you want cash for your Real Estate, or Real Estate for your cash, let me hear from you.

For further particulars call on or address

James A. Sincell, Real Estate Agt and Surveyor
Sincell Building, OAKLAND, MD.

BOWSER IS OVERCOME

The Precariousness of Existence Fills Him With Sadness.

HE REFUSES TO BE CHEERED.

Mrs. B. Finally Solves the Puzzle of Her Husband's State of Mind, but Doesn't Sympathize With Him in the Least—Puts Him to Bed.

[Copyright, 1908, by T. C. McClure.]

Mrs. Bowser and the cat were on watch for Mr. Bowser as he came home the other evening. As he dropped off the car at the corner it was seen that his general attitude was one of dejection. Halfway down to his gate Mrs. Bowser could see the care lines in his face. As he reached the foot of the steps she realized that he must have got word that all his brothers and sisters were dead. He was passing by her to enter the house, with the most lonesome look imaginable on his face, when she exclaimed:

"Mr. Bowser, will you tell me what in the name of goodness has happened?"

"Nawthin'," he drawled out.

"But something surely has. Are any of your relatives dead?"

"I dunno."

"Have you lost a large amount of money?"

"No."

"Then what is it? You look as if you hadn't a friend left on earth."

"And I haven't," he replied as he hung up his hat and tears came to his eyes.

"But I am here—I, your wife."

"Yes, but what of it? I tell you, Mrs. Bowser, this is a sad old world.

"SHE CAN'T PUT HER LOVING ARMS AROUND MY NECK AND CALL ME A CHERUB, AS SHE USED TO."

I hadn't much to do at the office this afternoon, and I just sat down and thought of things—sad things. I—I feel as if I could weep."

Suspicious of Him.

She looked at him suspiciously and led the way down to the dining room and then started in to tell him that the police had arrested four boys that afternoon for playing ball in the street.

"Yes, but what do four boys and the police amount to?" he wailed out. "Mrs. Bowser, every day around us men and women are dropping dead and being borne to their long home."

"But that is what we all expect," she replied. "They say the butcher on the corner must fail if the price of meat doesn't come down."

"But what have I got to do with the butcher on the corner and the price of meat? I tell you there is sadness in this world—oceans of sadness. As it says in the Scriptures, we are here today and gone tomorrow. I left the house in the best of health this morning, but how did you know that I would return alive? How could you tell that at this very moment you would not be a widow with scalding tears of grief chasing each other down your cheeks?"

"Yes, life is a risk, but we should not be sad over it. There came pretty near being an awful dog fight in front of the house half an hour ago. I wish you had been here to sick the little dog on."

"Oh, what's the use?" he said as he nibbled at a piece of bread and turned his face away. "When I am thinking of how my dear old mother died do you think I want to hear about dog fights? Yes, she—she died."

"But you were only four years old then, and you are forty-eight now."

Misses His Mother.

"It doesn't make any difference. My poor mother was called home. I can't go to see her, and she can't put her loving arms around my neck and call me her cherub, as she used to. Had a congestive chill and passed right away. And my father is dead, too, and my brother Jim is dead. I tell you there's grief and sadness abroad in the land."

Mrs. Bowser looked at him for a full minute across the table and sniffed at the atmosphere suspiciously and then said:

"I'm sorry about your father and mother and your brother Jim, but of course you couldn't expect them to keep right on living. I have lost my own father and a sister, as you must know."

"Then why ain't you sad? What are you talking about butchers and dog fights for? Here we sit in the best of health and surrounded by happy influences, and not two blocks away there are houses of mourning. I tell you, Mrs. Bowser—I tell you"—

But before he could tell her she rose up from the table, and he followed her upstairs. She wanted to do something to effect a change in him, and she succeeded to perfection. He went to bed and cried himself to sleep, and in the morning he said:

"And my father is dead and my Uncle Jim, and my cousin Betty—you dead and gone! I can't sleep. I can't find their graves. If I set out to look for them dead and gone, and you are playing with that blamed old yaller cat as if nothing had happened."

She Refuses to Mourn.

"But what do you want me to do?" she retorted. "Is it going to bring the dead to life if I sit down and weep?"

"Hark to that!" he exclaimed after a moment and without having answered her question. "There is a peddler shouting 'Watermelons!' at the top of his voice! Just hear him!"

"Why, you have heard him every evening for days and days. He has got watermelons to sell. Probably nine out of ten of them are as green as grass, but let him sell them if he can. The more cholera morbus the better for the drug stores and doctors."

"But the cry goes right to my heart," protested Mr. Bowser. "My poor father died after eating a watermelon and my Uncle Jim because he hadn't any teeth to eat one with. The peddler knows it and is hollering to add to my grief."

"Don't be childish, Mr. Bowser. The man doesn't even know who lives here. Did I tell you that I wanted to get at my housecleaning next month?"

"And now he's yelling 'Gooseberries!'"

"Well, let him yell."

"But I tell you he knows that Bowser lives here, and he wants to spite me by adding to my grief. It was gooseberry tarts that killed my sister Mary and plain gooseberries that killed my cousin Betty. Betty ate four quarts of 'em right down and next day was no more."

"I don't wonder at it. But let's talk about something more cheerful. Do you think the next congress is going to take up the tariff question?"

Stirred Up by a Song.

Mr. Bowser might or might not have answered the question, but before he could get around to it a hired girl in the next back yard who was taking clothes off the line commenced singing at the top of her voice:

"In Scarlet town, where I was born,
There was a fair maid dwelling,
And she was known both far and near
As lovely Barbara Allen."

"Great snakes, but must I submit to this?" groaned Mr. Bowser as he started up. "Here I come home loaded down with grief and sadness, and a peddler must yell 'Watermelons!' and 'Gooseberries!' at me from the front and a hired girl must warble a song at me from the back!"

"But have patience," counseled Mrs. Bowser. "These people know nothing of your sadness. See, the peddler has driven on and the girl has stopped singing. Let me ask you a question, please. Did you partake of any fall tonic today?"

"And my sister died after eating gooseberry tarts!" he murmured as he wiped his eyes anew.

"Answer my question. Did you have any fall tonic this afternoon? Did any one recommend a tonic to take your grief away?"

"Y-e-s, just a little tonic. It was for my lame back. I took about a tablespoonful."

"Um! I thought so."

"And it has made me sad—s-a-d."

"I see. Well, let me put you to bed, and you'll wake up in the morning feeling all right."

"And I won't be sad no more?"

"Not a sad. You won't even remember whether it was gooseberry tarts or pumpkin pie that did the business for your sister. Come on."

"Yesh, I will come on. Mrs. Bowsher, you are sho good—sho g-o-o-d zhat I cry for you!" M. QUAD.

Honor and Digestion.

Cobble—You certainly have a good cook. By the way, where do you get your servants?

Stone—From our neighbors. When we hear of a good one among them we offer her more money to come with us.

"But, my dear fellow, is that honorable?"

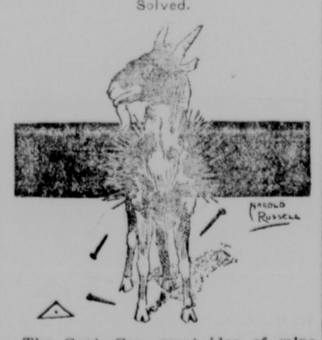
"Why not? Can you develop a sense of honor with a poor digestion?"—New York Life.

Not Much Difference.

Eva—Harry saw you start on a fishing expedition this morning and said he wished he were a fish so you could catch him.

Edna—Oh, it amounts to the same. I'm always stringing him. — Detroit Tribune.

Solved.



The Goat—Gee, great idea of mine eating that magnet! Now I'll go to that masque ball as a porcupine.—Bohemian Magazine.

A Social Affront.

"Wasn't their divorce a shocking affair?" said Mrs. Featherclit.

"Inexcusable," answered Mrs. Smartsett. "They both had the most unfashionable lawyers there could find."—Smart Set.

SUPPOSE you were cast up on an uninhabited tropical shore with nothing but a penknife and a magnifying glass? How would you go about getting a living? How would you manage to defend yourself from the wild beasts and the wilder elements?

These are problems that Tom Blake and the beautiful Miss Leslie and Winthrope had to solve. How they did solve them is told in

INTO THE PRIMITIVE

BY ROBERT AMES BENNET ILLUSTRATIONS BY RAY WALTERS

The beginning was at Capetown, when Blake and Winthrope boarded the steamer as fellow-passengers with Lady Bayrose and her party—which included the beautiful Miss Leslie. Three days later the ship went to pieces in a cyclone on a wild and isolated coast, and these three—the American engineer, the Englishman, and the heiress—were the only survivors. And when highly cultivated civilization was brought face to face with the primitive, what law could prevail but the survival of the fittest? It is a story full of vigorous strength and unusual charm.

It will be printed serially in these columns. The opening chapters to appear in the near future. You will not want to miss it.

When You Need Printing Done

You want it to be of the very best kind. As you expect your printed matter to make business it is necessary it should do the talking for you. Poor or indifferent printing cannot do this as it lacks the strong points required to gain and hold the interest of the patron.

¶ In this particular line of work we excel, for several reasons, viz: 1st; we have the largest and best variety of up-to-date type to be found in the western part of the state. 2nd; we carry only the very best grades of papers; and 3rd; the know-how with which to create original and attractive tye display.

¶ You make no mistake when you come to us with an order of printing

The Republican Job Printery

Benj. H. Sincell, Prop.,
Okland, Md.

Four Per Cent. Interest.

The First National Bank, Friendsville, pays four per cent. interest on time deposits. Place your money in this bank where its earning capacity will be greater than in any other banking institution in the county.

THE FIRST NATIONAL BANK,
Friendsville, Md.

Subscribe for The REPUBLICAN.

Dissolution Notice.

This is to give notice that the firm of Reams & Browning, doing general mercantile business, has been dissolved by mutual consent, Mr. Browning retiring. The business will be continued by Mr. Reams.

REAMS & BROWNING.
Swallow Falls, Aug 8, 1908. 3t

Special 10-qt. tin water buckets 10c at Baumgardner's.

A Hint to the Wise is sufficient.

Special Sale on
2-qt Blue Enamel Saucepan.
2-qt Blue Fnamel Pudding Pans.
2-qt Blue Enamel Preserve Kettles.

We have just received over 1500 lbs. of our famous 10c Candy.

SUNDAY SCHOOL SUPPLIES

TAKE our advice—buy now, don't wait, but come and see

THE Little Man

and you will save money on all your Holiday Goods,

Toys, Candies, Novelties, Fancy Goods.

Baumgartner.

CAPITAL $25,000.00

The First National Bank

Of Grantsville, Md.

Safe deposit vault boxes for rent.

SURPLUS $12,500.00

The Savings Department takes care of your money when waiting other investment. The money earns interest from the day it is deposited. It can be withdrawn at any time.

Its Advantages

Any amount from One Dollar up can be deposited, and interest added to principal twice a year. Pass books are issued to every depositor.

We Pay 3 Per Cent. Interest.
Open Daily except Sundays and Holidays. 9 a. m. to 4 p. m.

OFFICERS.
C. H. JENNINGS, - - President
U. M. STANTON, - Vice-President
J. O. GETTY, - - - Cashier
DIRECTORS.
C. H. Jennings, J. M. Stanton,
G. C. Keller, Eli Stanton,
W. A. Hitchins, Frank Watts,
J. O. Getty.

A. D. NAYLOR & COMP'Y

You can buy at Reduced Prices
Grain Drills, Harrows & Plows
AT NAYLOR & CO.'S

Big Stock to select from.

Have the Farmer's Favorite Drills, the Thomas, the Superior Hoe and Disc Drills.

We have the Syracuse, the Imperial and the Wyard Plows.

Also the wood frame Harrows, the wheel and lever Harrows; also the Disc Harrow, all at reduced prices.

We also have a nice line of Spray Pumps.

Muco-Solvent is an indispensible household remedy because it is a preventive as well as a cure, and because it arrests development of all contageous germs and bacterial diseases. It cures croup, colds, tonsilitis with its associated ills and all inflamed and catarrhal conditions of the mucous surface. It is a harmless vegetable preparation that may safely be administered to the tenderest babe. If not for sale in your neighborhood, write to

THE PIEDMONT SUPPLY CO.,
Sole Agents for Muco-Solvent. Piedmont, W. Va.

Real Estate Bargains

I offer for sale

FARM OF 147 ACRES, 3 miles from Oakland; good 6-room House; plenty of water; over 50 acres cleared; about 25 acres of grass; 2 Orchards, bearing; over 75 acres of White Oak Timber; R. F. D. mail service.

COTTAGE OF 6 ROOMS for sale at Mt. Lake Park.

HOUSE AND LOT on Oak Street, Oakland, for sale or rent. House of 6 rooms—Lot 50x150 feet, with Stable and all necessary Outbuildings.

FOUR VERY DESIRABLE BUILDING LOTS situated on Liberty Street, in Oakland. Also 3 DWELLING HOUSES on Liberty Street, with good water and all necessary outbuildings.

HOUSE AND LOT on Wilson Street. House of 10 rooms; good water. Lot 150 feet front. Best Outbuildings in Oakland.

A VERY GOOD FARM 1 mile from Oakland—all under fence; containing 32 acres; about 25 under cultivation; 2 fine Orchards, and about 2½ acres in small Fruit; 2 Houses, a very good Well and a never failing Spring. A very desirable place for Truck and Poultry Farming. Can be bought at a low price just now.

I have for sale 18 of the very best Building Lots in the town which I will sell for cash—or $5 down and $5 per month.

150 ACRES OF VALUABLE COAL LAND situated less than two miles of Oakland which can be bought at a great bargain. The surface would make fine farming land. This land is well watered with a stream and several good springs.

12 MORE CHOICE BUILDING LOTS at $5 down and $5 per month.

If you want cash for your Real Estate, or Real Estate for your cash, let me hear from you.

☞For further particulars call on or address

James A. Sincell, Real Estate Agt and Surveyor
Loan Building, OAKLAND, MD.

Thanksgiving Is Near At Hand.

We desire to thank you one and all for the patronage you have so kindly favored us with for the past year and assure you of our appreciation for the manner in which you have so faithfully stood by us. We have tried to make this store the home of the highest standard of merchandise and by the continued patronage of our many customers "who have found that good merchandise at conservative prices are the cheapest," we have succeeded in gaining that reputation. Every coat for Women and Children has been reduced in price 20%. We are showing the strongest line this season that we have ever had. This store is the home of Hart Shaffner and Marx Clothing and Overcoats, which is the high standard of fashionable clothing for men.

We have a quantity of Men's and Boys' suits carried over from last season a little out of style that we are selling for $2.98, all wool and well made. Being over-bought on winter underwear we will sell you a good winter suit for 79 cents.

We take great pleasure in showing the strongest and best selected stock of Shoes for men, women and children that will be possible to see, ranging in price from 25c. to $5.00 the pair.

Respectfully yours,

H. C. SINCELL & CO.

THE REPUBLICAN.

VOLUME 32. OAKLAND, MARYLAND, THURSDAY, DECEMBER 3, 1908. NUMBER 40

HOUSES AND MEAT WERE BURNED MONDAY NIGHT.

Chas. E. Hilleary, Esq., Loses Buildings, Six Hogs and a Beef.

Last Monday night a serious fire occurred on the farm of Mr. Charles E. Hilleary, near Gorman, entailing a loss of about $1500 with no insurance. The property burned consisted of two dwelling houses, used for storage purposes, a smoke house and a hennery.

The day preceding the fire Mr. Hilleary had butchered six hogs and a beef and in one of the dwelling houses burned a fire had been kept going with which to render lard and do the other necessary work incident to butchering, and he is of the opinion that the flue from long disuse had become defective and that a live coal had communicated the fire to the structure which in turn set the surrounding buildings on fire.

The fire was not discovered until about one o'clock Tuesday morning at which time it was under such headway as to prevent the saving of anything stored in any of the buildings except some canned fruit and the liberation of the chickens from the hennery. Many of the neighbors were summoned by telephone who responded and it required hard work on their part to save the new and very handsome dwelling house erected on the farm a few years ago. Water for the purpose had to be hauled from a creek a quarter of a mile away.

In the smoke house Mr. Hilleary had stored his pork and beef butchered the day preceding, all of which was consumed.

Married.

STEINER—KEPNER—Miss Alice M. Kepner, of Oakland, and Mr. Ira F. Steiner, of Baltimore, were married at the home of the bride in Oakland last Thursday afternoon by Rev. J. M. Davis, of this city. Mr. Steiner holds a position of importance with the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad at Locust Point and he and his bride will reside at 332 North Calhoun street, Baltimore. Mrs. Steiner is well and favorably known in Oakland where she was born and raised and resided during her entire life.

Printer's Error.

A Colorado editor wanted to announce that church attendants on the following Sabbath would be permitted to inspect the most beautiful stained glass windows in the west. The printer made it read "the most beautiful stunning grass widows," and before the singing of the first hymn the next Sunday the sexton found it necessary to hand out the S. R. O. sign.—Aurora (Ill.) Beacon.

Say! Can you get Toys at the Gold Mine store? You saider.

A REMARKABLE FLOW OF WATER FOUND

Well Sunk to Supply the City With Water Shows Wonderful Supply.

One of the wells which were recently contracted for by the City Council for the purpose of supplying Oakland with water, has been completed by Mr. R. S. Jamison, who drilled it.

The well is located on the old Daily field just outside the town limits, and is one hundred and fifty feet deep, cased with an eight inch pipe to the rock and is eight inches in diameter.

Tuesday morning a test was made of the well when a pump capable of throwing fifteen hundred gallons of water an hour was installed and the engine used in drilling the well was attached to it. After continous work for four hours the stream was apparently undiminished, but a further test was made yesterday when the pump was kept going continuously for eight and a half hours with the same result, pumping twelve hundred and fifty gallons an hour, or a total of more than 10,000 gallons.

According to estimates made from records of water companies this amount of water is capable of furnishing more than two hundred families using an average of seventy gallons daily.

Last night at a special meeting of Council it was decided to sink at least one more well on the same lot and near enough so that a single engine could be utilized in pumping both.

Tentative arrangements have been made by Council with Mr. A. D. Naylor for the erection of the reservoir on the hill near his residence, which elevation is sufficient to give sufficient pressure in all parts of town for both domestic uses and fire protection.

Nothing Wonderful.

Milwaukee is advertising a snake with whiskers. But that is nothing. We have have known several bunches of whiskers to have snakes.—Hicksville (O.) Tribune.

Hereford Cattle in Garrett County.

Mr. Charles Howard Lloyd, of Easton, Talbot county, Md., has sold to Mr. Charles R. Savedge, of Deer Park, Garrett county, a registered bull and heifer of the Hereford stock. This breed of cattle are not especially noted as good milkers, but stand well for beef producing qualities, and this is something Garrett county needs. Though of the same breed, the bull and heifer referred to are of no kin whatever. They were sent up to Deer Park from the Eastern Shore by express and arrived in fine condition. Many people have seen and admired them since their arrival in this county.

The Republican for Job Work.

Garrett County

4

PER CENT.

Court House Bonds

These Bonds are in Denominations of $500 and represent the Highest Grade of Investment from the standpoint of Security and Income. They afford an excellent opportunity for the investment of your idle funds at a profitable rate of interest.

FOR TERMS, Address

BOND DEPARTMENT

The Second National Bank

OF

Cumberland, Maryland.

TO START STATE ROAD WORK IN THE SPRING.

Tentative Plans for Garrett and Allegany Roads Mapped Out.

The Good Roads Commission held an important session Monday morning, at which the roads in Anne Arundel were definitely located and in Allegany and Garrett tentative routes were selected.

All the members of the commission were present, as was also Chief Engineer W. W. Crosby. Mr. John M. Tucker, chairman, presided, and said that the hope of the commission to start dirt flying in the actual construction of the roads simultaneously in all sections upon the arrival of spring would be realized.

"As soon as the frost gets out of the ground," said Mr. Tucker, "we can begin the work. In the meantime we have some months to locate definitely all the routes and to arrange for the purchase of materials and the obtaining of transportation. The law requires us to locate all roads by May 1, but we hope to have this work through before that."

The tentative route decided upon by the commission for Garrett county is as follows:

From Oakland, via Bittinger and Jennings, to Grantsville, and from Grantsville over the old National pike to the Allegany county line.

It was also decided to build a road from Grantsville to the Pennsylvania State line, running over the old National pike.

The tentative route for Allegany county is as follows: From the Garrett county line over the National pike via Frostburg, Cumberland and Flintstone to the Washington county line.

Upon motion of Mr. Samuel Shoemaker the following resolution was adopted by the commission:

"Some misunderstanding exists as to the meeting of the commission to pass upon the question of the final locations of the roads. Be it resolved:

"The commission, after having decided upon a tentative route in any of the counties or of Baltimore city, shall publish in the localities where said road or street is so tentatively located, giving an opportunity for any citizen of such localities to appear before the commission and offer any objection they may have to the tentative route thus fixed upon or to suggest others in their stead, but the commission will be unable to give any special meetings to any locality other than the ones mentioned above, which are open to all the people interested in any county or city."

The commission adjourned to meet at 11 o'clock on December 10, at which time hearings will be granted upon the tentative routes selected for Allegany and Garrett counties.

The commission having fixed the 10th inst. as the day upon which the local people will be given a hearing upon the tentative routes selected for this county, an effort is being made by a number of prominent men to have the date extended to the 28th inst., as almost every member of the committee selected at a public meeting held in Oakland several weeks ago will be engaged in court and consequently will be unable to attend upon the day set by the commission.

GARRETT COUNTY GETS TWO FIRST PRIZES

In the State Horticultural Show. One for Potatoes, One for Canliflower.

At the State Horticural Show in Baltimore this week Garrett county was represented by fifty-two exhibitors of apples, one of potatoes, one of cauliflower and one of buckwheat, and succeeded in carrying off two first prizes, one being for potatoes and one for cauliflower.

The awards to the apple exhibitors have not yet been made, but it is confidestly believed that this county will receive first prize for a number of varieties, as well as first prize for the best county exhibit.

Tuesday the awards for potatoes and cauliflower were made, the former going to Mr. Thomas E. Bishoff, of Hoyes, and the latter to the well known firm of H. Weber & Sons Company of Oakland.

LATER.—Since the above was written a telegram received by THE REPUBLICAN this morning from Senator Brown states that Garrett county was awarded first prize for the best county collection, thus placing this county at the head of all other sections of the State.

We shall publish in these columns next week a full list of the local exhibitors.

Marriage Licenses.

The following is a list of marriage licenses issued by Clerk E. Z. Tower since the removal of his office from the old to the new court house:

Charles E. Green and Helen Skipper, both of Garrett county.

Henry E. Wildman and Libbie Spencer, both of Tyler county, W. Va.

Charles H. Cozad and June E. Price, of Smithfield, W. Va.

Frank D. Wiedman, of Morgantown, and Ethel Williams, of Clarksburg, W. Va.

Edward H. Sieverton and Carrie Belle Hussey both of Fairmont, W. Va.

Clyde B. Keller and Beulah M. Trexler, both of Terra Alta, W. Va.

Oda Abbott, of Lorentz, W. Va., and Mayme K. Peterson, of Pittsburg, Pa.

Roy Glen Stahl, of Myersdale, Pa., and Alberta E. Pezold, of Johnstown, Pa.

John Graham and Eva Harker, both of Monongalia county, W. Va.

Orville M. Myers and Martha Alice Chisholm, both of Garrett county.

DIXON & KELSO

DIXON & KELSO will offer their entire Stock of

CLOTHING AND OVERCOATS

AT A REDUCTION OF 20 TO 25 PER CENT.

In order to clean out this stock preparatory to taking annual inventory. This is a rare opportunity to get bargains.

Yours to Please. DIXON & KELSO.

HORSE AND VEHICLE STOLEN FROM PARK

Was the Property of Mr. C. F. Hammond of Oakland.

Fast Friday evening a horse and runabout belonging to Mr. C. F. Hammond, of Oakland, was stolen from Mountain Lake Park by some unknown party and driven off, since which time no trace of either the horse or vehicle has been found by the owner or by the State's officers, although diligent inquiry and search has been made.

Mr. Hammond's son had driven the horse to the Park on Friday evening where he went to make a social call and tied the animal to a hitching post along one of the main streets in that place. When he started for home a short time afterward the horse and runabout had disappeared.

The following morning the horse was tracked from the starting point via the Dennett road to Oakland and thence out Hooppole road to King's Run where the track was lost.

Sheriff Brown has offered a reward of $25 for the arrest of the party and describes the stolen property as follows:

The horse is dark bay in color, weighing about 1000 pounds, rather thin, large star in forehead, low on withers, straight pointed ears, white feet, shoes off two feet when stolen; rather stiff in movement. Breast strap harness, brass trimmings, tan driving lines.

The runabout has black body, cut-under, yellow wheels and running gears, cushion tires, hand holds on box. The upholstering was of extra good black leather and high lazy back. Was comparatively new.

List of Letters.

Gilbert Hanlin, French Nestor, Howard Nethkin, Mildred Peterson, Mrs. Lucinda Phillips, Edgar Ruthrauff, E. C. Taylor, M. A. Yost, Mrs. Jennie Jones Young, Jacob F. Webster.

BERGMAN ARRESTED FOR NON-SUPPORT OF WIFE

A Gay Lothario Sent to Jail and May Be Transported to Jessups.

John Bergman, who has been engaged in Oakland for several years past as a tailor and two or three years ago was married to a domestic employed at Deer Park, was arrested Monday morning by Deputy Sheriff Brown on a warrent sworn out by his wife charging him with desertion and non-support.

Bergman has been a man of unsavory reputation ever since he has been in Oakland, being a hard drinker at times and has on at least one occasion shamefully beaten and abused his wife.

A few weeks ago Mrs. Bergman instituted proceedings in the Circuit Court for a divorce on statutory grounds and a short time afterward a notice was published in a Lonaconing paper stating that Bergman had married a woman named Robertson, the marriage ceremony being performed at Clarksburg, W. Va. Advice, from the clerk of the court at that place, however, state that no record is on file there showing that such a marriage had taken place. Whether or not Bergman is responsible for the publication is not known.

At the hearing given Bergman Monday afternoon by Justice Gonder the prisoner made an effort to have his wife drop the criminal proceedings against him but she refused and not being able to furnish a bond in the sum of $100 Bergman was sent to jail where he will remain until after his case is disposed of by the grand jury which meets on Monday next. Should a bill be found against him and he is still unable to furnish the requisite bond he will be sent to Jessups where his earnings will be applied toward the support of his wife and child.

See The Republican for Job Printing.

E. A. WEIMER.

Something Good

I HAVE IN STOCK A NICE ASSORTMENT OF THE CELEBRATED

Elite Petticoats

AT

$1.00 $2.00 $3.00 AND $5.00

COME AND SEE

Yours Truly. E. A. WEIMER.

NEXT DOOR TO THE POSTOFFICE OAKLAND, MD

INTO THE PRIMITIVE

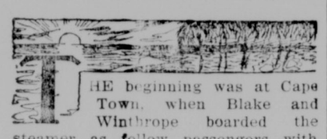
BY ROBERT AMES BENNET

ILLUSTRATIONS BY RAY WALTERS.

COPYRIGHT 1908, BY A. C. McCLURG & CO.

CHAPTER I.

Wave-Tossed and Castaway.



THE beginning was at Cape Town, when Blake and Winthrope boarded the steamer as fellow passengers with Lady Bayrose and her party.

This was a week after Winthrope had arrived on the tramp steamer from India, and her ladyship had explained to Miss Leslie that it was as well for her not to be too hasty in accepting his attentions. To be sure, he was an Englishman, his dress and manners were irreproachable, and he was in the prime of ripened youth. Yet Lady Bayrose was too conscientious a chaperon to be fully satisfied with her countryman's bare assertion that he was engaged on a diplomatic mission requiring reticence regarding his identity. She did not see why this should prevent him from confiding in her.

Notwithstanding this, Winthrope came aboard ship virtually as a member of her ladyship's party. He was so quick, so thoughtful of her comfort, and paid so much more attention to her than to Miss Leslie, that her ladyship had decided to tolerate him, even before Blake became a factor in the situation.

From the moment he crossed the gangway the American engineer entered upon a daily routine of drinking and gambling, varied only by attempts to strike up an off-hand acquaintance with Miss Leslie. This was Winthrope's opportunity, and his clever frustration of what Lady Bayrose termed "that low bounder's impudence" served to install him in the good graces of her ladyship as well as in the favor of the American heiress.

Such, at least, was what Winthrope intimated to the persistent engineer with a superciliousness of tone and manner that would have stung even a British lackey to resentment. To Blake it was supremely galling. He could not rejoin in kind, and the slightest attempt at physical retort would have meant irons and confinement. It was a British ship. Behind Winthrope was Lady Bayrose; behind her ladyship, as a matter of course, was all the despotic authority of the captain. In the circumstances, it was not surprising that the American drank heavier after each successive goading.

Meantime the ship, having touched at Port Natal, steamed on up the east coast, into the Mozambique channel.

On the day of the cyclone, Blake had withdrawn into his stateroom with a number of bottles, and throughout that fearful afternoon was blissfully unconscious of the danger. Even when the steamer went on the reef, he was only partially roused by the shock.

He took a long pull from a quart flask of whisky, placed the flask with great care in his hip pocket, and lurched out through the open doorway. There he reeled headlong against the mate, who had rushed below with three of the crew to bring up Miss Leslie. The mate cursed him virulently, and in the same breath ordered two of the men to fetch him up on deck.

The sea was breaking over the steamer in torrents; but between waves Blake was dragged across to the side and flung over into the bottom of the one remaining boat. He served as a cushion to break the fall of Miss Leslie, who was tossed in after him. At the same time, Winthrope, frantic with fear, scrambled into the bows and cut loose. One of the sailors leaped, but fell short and went down within arm's length of Miss Leslie.

She and Winthrope saw the steamer slip from the reef and sink back into deep water, carrying down in the vortex the mate and the few remaining sailors. After that all was chaos to them. They were driven ashore before the terrific gusts of the cyclone, blinded by the stinging spoondrift to all else but the hell of breakers and coral reefs in whose midst they swirled so dizzily. And through it all Blake lay huddled on the bottom boards gurgling blithely of spicy zephyrs and swaying hammocks.

There came the seemingly final moment when the boat went spinning stern over prow.

Half-sobered, Blake opened his eyes and stared solemnly about him. He was given little time to take his bearings. A smother of broken surf came seething up from one of the great breakers, to roll him over and scrape him a little farther up the muddy shore. There the flood deposited him for a moment, until it could gather force to sweep back and drag him down again toward the roaring sea that had cast him up.

Blake objected—not to the danger of being drowned, but to interference with his repose. He had reached the obstinate stage. He grunted a protest. Again the flood seethed up the shore, and rolled him away from the danger.

This was too much! He set his jaw, turned over, and staggered to his feet. Instantly one of the terrific wind-blasts struck his broad back and sent him spinning for yards. He brought up in a shallow pool, beside a hummock.

Under the lee of the knoll lay Winthrope and Miss Leslie. Though conscious, both were draggled and bruised and beaten to exhaustion. They were together because they had come ashore together. When the boat capsized, Miss Leslie had been flung against the Englishman, and they had held fast to each other with the desperate clutch of drowning persons. Neither of them ever recalled how they gained the shelter of the hummock.

Blake, sitting waist-deep in the pool, blinked at them benignly with his pale blue eyes, and produced the quart flask, still a third full of whisky.

"I shay, fren's," he observed, "ha' one on me. Won' cos' you shent—notta re' shent!"

"You fuddled lout!" shouted Winthrope. "Come out of that pool."

"Wassama'er pool? Pool's allri'!"

The Englishman squinted through the driving scud at the intoxicated man with an anxious frown. In all probability he felt no commiseration for the American; but it was no light matter to be flung up barehanded on the most unhealthful and savage stretch of the Mozambique coast, and Blake might be able to help them out of their predicament. To leave him in the pool was therefore not to be thought of. So soon as he had drained his bottle, he would lie down, and that would be the end of him. As any attempt to move him forcibly was out of the question, the situation demanded that Winthrope justify his intimations of diplomatic training. After considering the problem for several minutes, he met it in a way that proved he was at least not lacking in shrewdness and tact.

"See here, Blake," he called, in another lull between the shrieking gusts, "the lady is fatigued. You're too much of a gentleman to ask her to come over there."

It required some moments for this to penetrate Blake's fuddled brain. After a futile attempt to gain his feet, he crawled out of the pool on all fours, and, with tears in his eyes, pressed his flask upon Miss Leslie. She shrank away from him, shuddering, and drew herself up in a huddle of flaccid limbs and limp garments. Winthrope, however, not only accepted the flask, but come near to draining it.

Blake squinted at the diminished contents, hesitated, and cast a glance of maudlin gallantry at Miss Leslie. She lay coiled, closer than before, in a draggled heap. Her posture suggested sleep. Blake stared at her, the flask extended waveringly before him. Then he brought it to his lips, and drained out the last drop.

"Time turn in," he mumbled, and sprawled full length in the brackish ooze. Immediately he fell into a drunken stupor.

Winthrope, invigorated by the liquor, rose to his knees, and peered around. It was impossible to face the scud and spoondrift from the furious sea; but to leeward he caught a glimpse of a marsh flooded with salt water, its reedy vegetation beaten flat by the storm. He himself was beaten down by a terrific gust. Panting and trembling, he waited for the wind to lull, in hope that he might obtain a clearer view of his surroundings. Before he again dared rise to his feet, darkness swept down with tropical suddenness and blurred out everything.

Sleeping the Sleep of the Just and the Drunkard.

The effect of the whisky soon passed, and Winthrope huddled between his companions, drenched and exhausted. Though he could hear Miss Leslie moaning, he was too miserable himself to inquire whether he could do anything for her.

Presently he became aware that the wind was falling. The center of the cyclone had passed before the ship struck, and they were now in the outermost circle of the vast whirlwind. With the consciousness of this change for the better, Winthrope's fear-racked nerves relaxed and he fell into a heavy sleep.

CHAPTER II.

Worse Than Wilderness.

AWAIL from Miss Leslie roused the Englishman out of a dream in which he had been swimming for life across a sea of boiling oil. He sat up and gazed about him, half-dazed. The cyclone had been followed by a dead calm, and the sun, already well above the horizon, was blazing upon them over the glassy surfaces of the dying swells with fierce heat.

Winthrope felt about for his hat. It had been blown off when, at the striking of the steamer, he had rushed up on deck. As he remembered, he straightened, and looked at his companions. Blake lay snoring where he had first outstretched himself, sleeping the sleep of the just—and of the drunkard. The girl, however, was already awake. She sat with her hands clasped in her lap, while the tears rolled slowly down her cheeks.

"My—ah—dear Miss Genevieve, what is the matter?" exclaimed Winthrope.

"Matter? Do you ask, when we are here on this wretched coast, and may not get away for weeks? Oh, I did so count on the London season this year! Lady Bayrose promised that I should be among those presented."

"Well, I—ah—fancy, Lady Bayrose will do no more presenting—unless it may be to the heavenly choir, you know."

"Why, what do you mean, Mr. Winthrope? You told me that she and the maids had been put in the largest boat—"

"My dear Miss Genevieve, you must remember that I am a diplomat. It was all quite sufficiently harrowing, I assure you. They were, indeed, put into the largest boat— Beastly muddle!— While they waited for the mate to fetch you, the boat was crushed alongside, and all in it drowned."

"Drowned!—drowned! Oh, dear Lady Bayrose! And she'd traveled so much—oh, oh, it is horrible! Why did she persuade me to visit the Cape? It was only to be with her—And then for us to start off for India, when we might have sailed straight to England! Oh, it is horrible! horrible! And my maid, and all—it cannot be possible!"

"Pray, do not excite yourself, my dear Miss Genevieve. Their troubles are all over. Er—Gawd has taken them to Him, you know."

"But the pity of it! To be drowned—so far from home!"

"Ah, if that's all you're worrying about!—I must say I'd like to know how we'll get a snack for breakfast. I'm hungry as a—er—groom."

"Eating! How can you think of eating, Mr. Winthrope—and all the others drowned? This sun is becoming dreadfully hot. It is unbearable! Can you not put up some kind of an awning?"

"Well, now, I must say, I was never much of a hand at such things, and really I can't imagine what one could rig up. There might have been a bit of sail in the boat, but one can't see a sign of it. I fancy it was smashed."

Miss Leslie ventured a glance at Blake. Though still lying as he had sprawled in his drunkenness, there was a comforting suggestion of power in his broad shoulders and square jaw.

"Is he still—in that condition?"

"Must have slept it off by this time, and there's no more in the flask," answered Winthrope. Reaching over with his foot, he pushed against Blake's back.

"Huh! All right," grunted the sleeper, and sat up, as had Winthrope, half dazed. Then he stared around him, and rose to his feet. "Well, what in hell! Say, this is damn cheerful!"

"I fancy we are in a nasty fix. But I say, my man, there is a woman present, and your language, you know—"

Blake turned and fixed the Englishman with a cold stare.

"Look here, you bloomin' lud," he said, "there's just one thing you're going to understand, right here and now. I'm not your man, and we're not going to have any of that kind of blatter. Any fool can see we're in a tight hole, and we're like to keep company for a while—probably long as we last."

"What—ah—may I ask, do you mean by that?"

Blake laughed harshly, and pointed from the reef-strewn sea to the vast stretches of desolate marsh. Far inland, across miles of brackish lagoons and reedy mud-flats, could be seen groups of scrubby, half-leafless trees; ten or twelve miles to the southward a rocky headland jutted out into the water; otherwise there was nothing in sight but sea and swamp. If it could not properly be termed a sea-view, it was at least a very wet landscape.

"Fine prospect," remarked Blake, dryly. "We'll be in luck if the fever don't get the last of us inside a month; and as for you two, you'd have as much show of lasting a month as a toad with a rattlesnake, if it wasn't for Tom Blake—that's my name—Tom Blake—and as long as this shindy lasts, you're welcome to call me Tom or Blake, whichever suits. But understand, we're not going to have any more of your bloody, bloomin' English condescension. Aboard ship you had the drop on me, and could pile on dog till the cows came home. Here I'm Blake and you're Winthrope."

"Believe me, Mr. Blake, I quite appreciate the—ah—situation. And now, I fancy that, instead of wasting time—"

"It's about time you introduced me to the lady," interrupted Blake, and he stared at them half defiantly, yet with a twinkle in his eyes.

Miss Leslie flushed. Winthrope swore softly, and bit his lip. Aboard ship, backed by Lady Bayrose and the captain, he had goaded the American at pleasure. Now, however, the situation was reversed. Both title and authority had been swept away by the storm, and he was left to shift for himself against the man who had every reason to hate him for his overbearing insolence. Worse still, both he and Miss Leslie were now dependent upon the American, in all probability for life itself. It was a bitter pill and hard to swallow.

Blake was not slow to observe the Englishman's hesitancy. He grinned.

"Every dog has his day, and I guess this is mine," he said. "Take your time, if it comes hard. I can imagine it's a pretty stiff dose for your ludship. But why in—why in frozen hades an American lady should object to an introduction to a countryman who's going to do his level best to save her pretty little self from the hyenas—well, it beats me."

Winthrope flushed redder than the girl.

"Miss Leslie, Mr. Blake," he murmured, hoping to put an end to the situation.

But yet Blake persisted. He bowed, openly exultant.

"You see, miss," he said, "I know the correct thing quite as much as your swells. I knew all along you were Jenny Leslie. I ran a survey for your dear papa when he was manipulating the Q. T. railroad, and he did me out of my pay."

"Oh, but Mr. Blake, I am sure it must be a mistake; I am sure that if it is explained to papa—"

"Yes; we'll cable papa to-night. Meantime, we've something else to do. Suppose you two get a hustle on yourselves, and scrape up something to eat. I'm going out to see what's left of that blamed old tub."

"Surely you'll not venture to swim out so far!" protested Winthrope. "I saw the steamer sink as we cast off."

"Looks like a mast sticking up out there. Maybe some of the rigging is loose."

"But the sharks! These waters swarm with the vile creatures. You must not risk your life!"

"'Cause why? If I do, the babes in the woods will be left without even the robins to cover them, poor things! But cheer up!—maybe the mud-hens will do it with lovely water-lilies."

"Please, Mr. Blake, do not be so cruel!" sobbed Miss Leslie, her tears starting afresh. "The sun makes my head ache dreadfully, and I have no hat or shade, and I'm becoming so thirsty!"

"And you think you've only to wait, and half a dozen stewards will come running with parasols and ice water. Neither you nor Winthrope seem to 've got your eyes open. Just suppose you get busy and do something. Winthrope, chase yourself over the mud, and get together a mess of fish that are not too dead. Must be dozens, after the blow. As for you, Miss Jenny, I guess you can pick up some reeds and rig a headgear out of this handkerchief— Wait a moment. Put on my coat, if you don't want to be broiled alive through the holes of that peek-a-boo."

"But I say, Blake—" began Winthrope.

"Don't say—do!" rejoined Blake; and he started down the muddy shore.

Though the tide was at flood, there was now no cyclone to drive the sea above the beach, and Blake walked a quarter of a mile before he reached the water's edge. There was little surf, and he paused only a few moments to peer out across the low swells before he commenced to strip.

Winthrope and Miss Leslie had been watching his movements; now the girl rose in a little flurry of haste, and set to gathering reeds. Winthrope would have spoken, but, seeing her embarrassment, smiled to himself, and began strolling about in search of fish.

It was no difficult search. The marshy ground was strewn with dead sea-creatures, many of which were already shriveling and drying in the sun. Some of the fish had a familiar look, and Winthrope turned them over with the tip of his shoe. He even went so far as to stoop to pick up a large mullet; but shrank back, repulsed by its stiffness and the unnatural shape into which the sun was warping it.

He found himself near the beach, and stood for half an hour or more watching the black dot far out in the water—all that was to be seen of Blake. The American, after wading off-shore another quarter of a mile, had reached swimming depth, and was heading out among the reefs with steady, vigorous strokes. Half a mile or so beyond him Winthrope could now make out the goal for which he was aiming—the one remaining topmast of the steamer.

"By Jove, these waters are full of sharks!" murmured Winthrope, staring at the steadily receding dot until it disappeared behind the wall of surf which spumed up over one of the outer reefs.

A call from Miss Leslie interrupted his watch, and he hastened to rejoin her. After several failures, she had contrived to knot Blake's handkerchief to three or four reeds in the form of a little sunshade. Her shoulders were protected by Blake's coat. It made a heavy wrap, but it shut out the blistering sun rays, which, as Blake had foreseen, had quickly begun to burn the girl's delicate skin through her open-work bodice.

Thus protected, she was fairly safe from the sun. But the sun was by no means the worst feature of the situation. While Winthrope was yet several yards distant, the girl began to complain to him. "I'm so thirsty, Mr. Winthrope! Where is there any water? Please get me a drink at once, Mr. Winthrope!"

"But, my dear Miss Leslie, there is no water. These pools are all seawater. I must say, I'm deuced dry myself. I can't see why that cad should go off and leave us like this, when we need him most."

"Indeed, it is a shame—Oh, I'm so thirsty! Do you think it would help if we ate something?"

"Make it all the worse. Besides, how could we cook anything? All these reeds are green, or at least water-soaked."

"But Mr. Blake said to gather some fish. Had you not best—"

"He can pick up all he wants. I shall not touch the beastly things."

"Then I suppose there is nothing to do but wait for him."

"Yes, if the sharks do not get him."

Miss Leslie uttered a little moan, and Winthrope, seeing that she was on the verge of tears, hastened to re-

Two or Three Small Fish Lay Faintly Wriggling on the Surface.

assure her. "Don't worry about him, Miss Genevieve! He'll soon return, with nothing worse than a blistered back. Fellows of that sort are born to hang, you know."

"But if he should be—if anything should happen to him!"

Winthrope shrugged his shoulders, and drew out his silver cigarette case. It was more than half-full, and he was highly gratified to find that neither the cigarettes nor the vesta matches in the cover had been reached by the wet.

"By Jove, here's luck!" he exclaimed, and he bowed to Miss Leslie. "Pardon me, but if you have no objections—"

The girl nodded as a matter of form, and Winthrope hastened to light the cigarette already in his fingers. The smoke by no means tended to lessen the dryness of his mouth; yet it put him in a reflective mood, and in thinking over what he had read of shipwrecked parties, he remembered that a pebble held in the mouth is supposed to ease one's thirst.

To be sure, there was not a sign of a pebble within miles of where they sat; but after some reflection, it occurred to him that one of his steel keys might do as well. At first Miss Leslie was reluctant to try the experiment, and only the increasing dryness of her mouth forced her to seek the promised relief. Though it failed to quench her thirst, she was agreeably surprised to find that the little flat bar of metal eased her craving to a marked degree.

Winthrope now thought to rig a shade as Miss Leslie had done, out of reeds and his handkerchief, for the sun was scorching his unprotected head. Thus sheltered, the two crouched as comfortably as they could upon the half-dried crest of the hummock and waited impatiently for the return of Blake.

TO BE CONTINUED.

Archaeological Find.

During some excavations in the Rue du Cardinal Lemoine, in Paris, the workmen came across a leaden coffin of peculiar workmanship. As the find was near the site of the college founded by the Cardinal, is was thought that the coffin contained his remains. M. Sellier, one of the curators of the Carnavalet Museum, has made a cursory examination, and has no hesitation in declaring that whoever was buried in the Rue it was not the cardinal. M. Sellier bases his opinion on the fact that at the time of the Cardinal's death in 1313 dignitaries such as he would have interred in a stone coffin, lead not being used for burials in France for just two centuries later. The coffin now found is evidently of the sixteenth or seventeenth century. It must have escaped the vigilance of the Revolutionists, who utilized all the lead coffin they could find to make bullets. The question is unsolved who was the defunct.—New York Herald.

FOR RENT.—The Rectory on Alder street; house contains 14 rooms; stable and other outbuildings on the property. Apply to BOWIE JOHNSON, Oakland. 3t

THE PROBLEM OF PARENTAL TITLES

The Several Greetings Employed By Children Addressing Parents.

"I was brought up," said Mr. Fatherly "to say mother and father. As far as I can recollect I never said mamma or papa, and what fine, natural, wholesome, homely words, teeming with strength and love and affection, father and mother are.

"Then in the course of time I grew up and got married, and we had children, and our children started in calling us not father and mother, but mamma and papa, pronounced in the most natural and easy way with the accent on the first syllable, mommer and popper.

"I don't know just how our children, whose parents in their childhood had always said father and mother, came thus to say mamma and papa, but we are not objecting; they may have been taught so by their nurse or they may have absorbed it from people, young and old, of the neighborhood.

"Then as the children grew older and came to exercise their own intelligence they came to pronounce these words correctly, with the accent on the last syllable; and they were very careful and precise about this under all ordinary circumstances, but when they got excited and didn't stop to think they went back to mommer and popper, which I am free to say I liked much better. Mamma and papa, with the accent on the last syllable, always seemed poor and artificial words to me.

"And then another interesting thing happened. As our children grew older—guided by the same acuteness that prompted them to get mamma and papa correctly, now, but with a broad intelligence—they discovered and adopted as parental titles the words mother and father. I am not sure but what at first they did this because they considered it to be the really correct fashion, better form; but mother and father came finally to appeal to them perfectly, and ever since they have used them unaffectedly and naturally, with ma and pa occasionally as affectionate diminutives.

"But now here is a curious thing. Our children are pretty well grown up, young men and women our boys and girls are now, and now suppose one of the girls, say, should be affrighted in her sleep by some terrible dream, so that she calls aloud for help. And then whom do you suppose she calls for? Why, instinctively she calls for her mother, as all children do, but in what manner do you suppose the affrighted dreaming girl, calling for help, calls to her mother? Does she shout 'mother!' or 'mamma!' with the accent on the last syllable? Truth she says neither, but what she now says is:

"'Mommer! Mommer! Mommer!'

"You see? The early habit persists, and I suppose we shall have to wait for another generation, until our grandchildren come, for children in whose minds the lovely words, by constant use from infancy up, have once more become so firmly fixed that they will say 'Mother!' instinctively and always, even in their dreams."—New York Sun.

The Safest Employment.

The person who is least affected by trade depression and "slumps" in production is the peasant proprietor. So long as his acres produce corn, potatoes, peas, beans, fruit, milk and vegetables he is safe enough from hunger. His sheep will give wool, and homespun is excellent wear. His is the safe, primitive and elemental profession where a man lives close to the earth, the great mother.—Dublin Irish Homestead.

Dissolution Notice.

This is to give notice that the firm of Reams & Browning, doing general mercantile business, has been dissolved by mutual consent, Mr. Browning retiring. The business will be continued by Mr. Reams.

REAMS & BROWNING.

Swallow Falls, Aug 8, 1908. 3t

THE REPUBLICAN
Job Printing Department

WITHIN the past year the increased made upon the Job Printing Department of The Republican necessitated many improvements, and to meet the requirements of our rapidly increasing business an addition of considerable proportions to our present building is in contemplation; new type and improved machinery must be purchased—but in the meantime all orders will be executed in a most satisfactory manner.

The products of our Job Printery are all models in the class—our customers are numerous and well satisfied, and wnen ordering

Statements, Vouchers,
Envelopes, Cards,
Sale Bills, Posters,
Bank Forms, Billheads,
Letterheads, Tags,
Programs, Folders,

and

Letter Press Printing of all Kinds

They are confident that the work will be Satisfactory in every particular---in WORKMANSHIP, PRICE and PAPER.

WE MAKE A SPECIALTY OF PRINTING

Lumber AND Coal Companies' Forms
Bank Stationery, Hotel Prospectus,
Lodge and Society Laws,
Reports, Etc.

It will cost you nothing to submit your Printing to us. Estimates will be cheerfully furnished you free. It must be borne in mind, however, that we do not do "cheap" printing, but we do Good Printing which has a par value of one hundred cents for every dollar invested in the product of THE REPUBLICAN PRINTERY.

THE REPUBLICAN
Job Printing Departm't
OAKI AND, MARYLAND.

HUNTING THE BLACK-TAILED DEER

BY

THEODORE ROOSEVELT

[Copyright, 1885, by G. P. Putnam's Sons. Published under arrangement with G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York and London.]

THE black-tail's great curiosity is one of the disadvantages under which it labors in the fierce struggle for existence, compared to the white-tail. The latter, when startled, does not often stop to look round; but the former will generally do so. The first black-tail I ever killed was obtained owing solely to this peculiarity. I had been riding up along the side of a brushy coulie, when a fine buck started out some thirty yards ahead. Although so close, my first shot, a running one, was a miss; when a couple of hundred yards off, on the very crest of the spur up which he had run, he stopped and turned partially round. Firing again from a rest, the bullet broke his hind leg far up and went into his body. Off he went on three legs, and I after him as fast as the horse could gallop. He went over the spur and down into the valley of the creek from which the coulie branched up, in very bad ground.

My pony was neither fast nor sure-footed, but of course in half a mile overhauled the three legged deer, which turned short off and over the side of the hill flanking the valley. Instead of running right up on it I foolishly dismounted and began firing; after the first shot—a miss—it got behind a boulder hitherto unseen, and thence over the crest. The pony meanwhile had slipped its hind leg into the rein; when, after some time, I got it out and galloped up to the ridge, the most careful scrutiny of which my practised eyes were capable failed to discover a track on the dry ground, hard as granite. A day or two afterward the place where the carcass lay was made known by the vultures, gathered together from all parts to feed upon it.

He stopped and turned.

When fired at from a place of hiding, deer which have not been accustomed to the report of a gun will often appear confused and uncertain what to do. On one occasion, while hunting in the mountains, I saw an old buck with remarkably large horns, of curious and beautiful shape, more symmetrical than is most instances where the normal form is departed from. The deer was feeding in a wide, gently sloping valley, containing no cover from behind which to approach him. We were in no need of meat, but the antlers were so fine that I felt they justified the death of their bearer. After a little patient waiting, the buck walked out of the valley, and over the ridge on the other side, moving up wind; I raced after him, and crept up behind a thick growth of stunted cedars, which had started up from among some boulders. The deer was about a hundred yards off, down in the valley. Out of breath, and overconfident, I fired hastily, overshooting him. The wind blew the smoke back away from the ridge, so that he saw nothing, while the echo prevented his placing the sound. He took a couple of jumps nearer, when he stood still and was again overshot. Again he took a few jumps, and the third shot went below him; and the fourth just behind him. This was too much, and away he went. In despair I knelt down (I had been firing offhand), took a steady aim well-forward on his body, and fired, bringing him down, but with small credit to the shot, for the bullet had gone into his hip, paralyzing his hind-quarters. The antlers are the finest pair I ever got, and form a magnificent ornament for the hall; but the shooting is hardly to be recalled with pleasure. Still, though certainly very bad, it was not quite as discreditable as the mere target shot would think. I have seen many a crack marksman at the target do quite as bad missing when out in the field, and that not once, but again and again.

I have never made big bags myself, for I rarely hunt except for a fine head or when we need meat, and if it can be avoided do not shoot at fawns or does; so the greatest number I have ever killed in a day was three. This was late one November, on an occasion when our larder was running low. My foreman and I, upon discovering this fact, determined to make a trip next day back in the broken country, away from the river.

We breakfasted hours before sunrise, and then mounted our horses and rode up the river bottom. The bright prairie moon was at the full, and was sunk in the west till it hung like a globe of white fire over the long row of jagged bluffs that rose from across the river, while its beams brought into fantastic relief the peaks and crests of the buttes upon our left. The valley of the river itself was in partial darkness, and the stiff, twisted branches of the sage-brush seemed to take on uncanny shapes as they stood in the hollows. The cold was stinging, and we let our willing horses gallop with loose reins, their hoofs ringing on the frozen ground. After going up a mile or two along the course of the river we turned off to follow the bed of a large dry creek. At its mouth was a great space of ground much cut up by the hoofs of the cattle, which was in summer overflowed and almost a morass; but now the frost-bound earth was like wrinkled iron beneath the horses' feet. Behind us the westerning moon sank down out of sight; and with no light but that of the stars, we let our horses thread their own way up the creek bottom. When we had gone a couple of miles from the river the sky in front of our faces took on a faint grayish tinge, the forerunner of dawn. All in the valley was yet dark when we reached the place where the creek began to split up and branch out into the various arms and ravines from which it headed. We galloped smartly over the divide into a set of coulies and valleys which ran into a different creek, and selected a grassy place where there was good feed to leave the horses. My companion picketed his; Manitou needed no picketing.

The tops of the hills were growing rosy, but the sun was not yet above the horizon when we started off, with our rifles on our shoulders, walking in cautious silence, for we were in good ground and might at any moment see a deer. Above us was a plateau of some size, breaking off sharply at the rim into a surrounding stretch of very rough and rugged country. It sent off low spurs with notched crests into the valleys round about, and its edges were indented with steep ravines and half circular basins, their sides covered with clusters of gnarled and wind-beaten cedars, often gathered into groves of some size. The ground was so broken as to give excellent cover under which a man could approach game unseen.

At last, just as the sun had risen, we came out by the mouth of a deep ravine or hollow cut in the flank of the plateau, with steep, cedar-clad sides; and on the crest of a jutting spur not more than thirty yards from where I stood, was a black-tail doe, half facing me. I was in the shadow, and for a moment she could not make me out, and stood motionless with her head turned toward me and her great ears thrown forward. Dropping on my knee, I held the rifle a little back of her shoulder—too far back, as it proved, as she stood quartering and not broadside to me. No fairer chance could ever fall to the lot of a hunter; but, to my intense chagrin, she bounded off at the report as if unhurt, disappearing instantly. My companion had now come up, and we ran up a rise of ground, and crouched down beside a great block of sandstone, in a position from which we overlooked the whole ravine or hollow. After some minutes of quiet watchfulness, we heard a twig snap—the air was so still we could hear anything—some rods up the ravine, but below us; and immediately afterward a buck stole out of the cedars. Both of us fired at once, and with a convulsive spring he rolled over backward, one bullet having gone through his neck, and the other—probably mine—having broken a hind leg. Immediately afterward, another buck broke from the upper edge of the cover, near the top of the plateau, and, though I took a hurried shot at him, bounded over the crest, and was lost to sight.

We now determined to go down into the ravine and look for the doe, and as there was a good deal of snow in the bottom and under the trees, we knew we could soon tell if she were wounded. After a little search we found her track, and walking along it a few yards, came upon some drops and then a splash of blood. There being no need to hurry, we first dressed the dead buck—a fine, fat fellow, but with small misshapen horns—and then took up the trail of the wounded doe. Here, however, I again committed an error, and paid too much heed to the trail and too little to the country round about; and while following it with my eyes down on the ground in a place where it was faint, the doe got up some distance ahead and to one side of me, and bounded off round a corner of the ravine. The bed where she had lain was not very bloody, but from the fact of her having stopped so soon, I was sure she was badly wounded. However, after she got out of the snow the ground was as hard as flint, and it was impossible to track her; the valley soon took a turn, and branched into a tangle of coulies and ravines. I deemed it probable that she would not go up hill, but would run down the course of the main valley; but as it was so uncertain, we thought it would pay us best to look for a new deer.

Our luck, however, seemed—very deservedly—to have ended. We tramped on, as swiftly as was compatible with quiet, for hour after hour; beating through the valleys against the wind, and crossing the brushy heads of the ravines, sometimes close together, and sometimes keeping about a hundred yards apart, according to the nature of the ground. When we had searched all through the country round the head of the creek, into which we had come down, we walked over to the next, and went over it with equal care and patience. The morning was now well advanced, and we had to change our method of hunting. It was no longer likely that we should find the deer feeding or in the open, and instead we looked for places where they might be expected to bed, following any trails that led into thick patches of brush or young trees, one of us then hunting through the patch while the other kept watch without. Doubtless we must have passed close to more than one deer, and doubtless others heard us and skulked off through the thick cover; but, although we saw plenty of signs, we saw neither hoof nor hair of living thing.

We lunched at the foot of a great clay butte, where there was a bed of snow.

After lunch we hunted until the shadows began to lengthen out, when we went back to our horses. The buck was packed behind good old Manitou, who can carry any amount of weight at a smart pace, and does not care at all if a strap breaks and he finds his load dangling about his feet, an event that reduces most horses to a state of frantic terror. As soon as loaded we rode down the valley into which the doe had disappeared in the morning, one taking each side and looking into every possible lurking place. The odds were all against our finding any trace of her; but a hunter soon learns that he must take advantage of every chance, however slight. This time we were rewarded for our care; for after riding about a mile our attention was attracted by a white patch in a clump of low briars. On getting off and looking in it proved to be the white rump of the doe, which lay stretched out inside, stark and stiff. The ball had gone in too far aft and had come out on the opposite side near her hip, making a mortal wound, but one which allowed her to run over a mile before dying. It was little more than an accident that we in the end got her; and my so nearly missing at such short range was due purely to carelessness and bad judgment.

The buck was packed behind.

Neither of my shots had so far done me much credit; but at any rate I had learned where the error lay, and this is going a long way toward correcting it. I kept wishing that I could get another chance to see if I had not profited by my lessons; and before we reached home my wish was gratified. We were loping down a grassy valley, dotted with clumps of brush, the wind blowing strong in our faces, and deadening the noise made by the hoofs on the grass. As we passed by a piece of broken ground a yearling black-tail buck jumped into view and cantered away. I was off Manitou's back in an instant. The buck was moving slowly, and was evidently soon going to stop and look round, so I dropped on one knee, with my rifle half raised, and waited. When about sixty yards off he halted and turned sideways to me, offering a beautiful broadside shot. I aimed at the spot just behind the shoulder and felt I had him. At the report he went off, but with short, weak bounds, and I knew he would not go far; nor did he, but stopped short, swayed unsteadily about, and went over on his side, dead, the bullet clean through his body.

THE REPUBLICAN

BENJ. H. SINCELL, EDITOR.

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 3, 1908.

IS THE STATE GAME WARDEN ASLEEP.

It is reported that the State Game Warden remains in seclusion at his home in Berlin, down in the lower part of the Eastern Shore, while the game laws are flagrantly, openly and contemptuously violated, and the game is being exterminated or driven out of the State. The Constitution requires that the Governor "shall take care that the laws are faithfully executed." That is his chief duty. The game laws are strict and definite, and in many respects are important. The State Game Warden is the agency under the Governor for the enforcement of these laws. The State appropriates money for the support of the Game Warden and clothes him with the necessary authority. If the laws cannot be enforced, then the money paid to the Game Warden is money wasted and the office should be abolished. It certainly is not intended to be a sinecure and should not be permitted to become one. If the enforcement of the laws is possible, and the present Warden can not or will not enforce them, then the responsibility is on the Governor. He is required by the Constitution to take care that the laws are enforced, and he should do it.

The State Game Warden is appointed by the Governor for a term of two years. His salary is $1,260 a year, and he is allowed $600 a year additional for traveling and other expenses. Whenever he shall deem it necessary, he shall have deputy game wardens appointed to assist him "in more efficiently enforcing the game and fish laws of the State." He has the right to designate such deputies, and if his selections are approved by the Governor they are commissioned. These deputies are paid out of the fines collected from persons convicted of violations of the game laws. It is one of the chief duties of the State Game Warden "to obtain information as to all violations of the game and fish laws and to prosecute all persons and corporations having in their possession any game or fish contrary to either the general or local game or fish laws of the State."

If information has reached the Game Warden of violations of the game laws, it has probably had to go in search of him. For while he is secluding himself at Berlin, the wild ducks in the upper bay and elsewhere, according to reports from various quarters, are being slaughtered, contrary to law, or are being driven from their feeding grounds by methods which are prohibited by law. Wild geese, swans and, in fact, all waterfowl are being exterminated, it is said, by lawless pot-hunters, and, as far as we can learn, the Game Warden is not lifting his hand to protect them.

The protection of wild fowl, fish and other game is not a matter that interests the sportsman or pleasure-seeker alone. Ever since the first settlement of the State the wild fowls upon our waters have furnished delicious food to the people, and the taking of them has given profitable employment to great numbers of persons. Many people have money invested in ducking shores, in clubhouses and other property, all of which will become valueless when the game shall have been exterminated.

The law authorizes the Governor to remove the Game Warden at any time upon proof satisfactory to him that he is not vigorously enforcing the game laws or the fish laws of the State, or is not a fit person for the position. Is it not the duty or the Governor, in view of of the general complaint on the subject, to make inquiry as to whether or not the Game Warden is enforcing the game and fish laws of the State? And if, upon inquiry, he finds he is not doing his duty, he should either see that he does so, or take such actions as will effectually protect the important interests in question from further injury. A game warden who does not enforce the game laws, and who makes no effort to enforce them may be a very estimable gentleman in private life, but he has no right to be filling a public office and drawing an official salary. Like little Boy Blue, the Game Warden appears to be fast asleep under his haystack in Berlin, while the pot-hunters and the lawbreakers are devastating the richest game district of the State.—Baltimore Sun.

GENUINE TARIFF REVISION.

Mr. Taft wants a genuine revision of the tariff and he is right. We are firm in our adherence to the doctrine of protection. This cardinal Republican policy has rapidly developed our industries and has made the American market the most desirable in the world. It has provided needed revenue for running the government and at the same time has built up diversified industries in every corner of it. With work at good wages, the mechanic and salary earner has been able to buy at good prices the products of the farm. Thus with an evenly balanced tariff giving to our home people such rates as will equalize the difference in wages with a fair profit to capital we have gone forward in wealth by leaps and bounds. But conditions in a particular industry may undergo radical changes in ten years and it is the belief of a large number of people that tariff rates in many instances may be lowered with advantage without violating the principal of protection. Mr. Taft stands for a thorough examination of the vast number of schedules and if some producers are receiving more protection than is just or necessary he favors a revision downward. There are likely a number of cases where it will be necessary to revise upward but with the passing of the years and the growing number of manufacturers, there is every reason to expect a lowering of tariff duties as a safeguard against human greed. Mr. Taft will see that the job is done right and with the interests of the whole country in view.

THE HUNTING LAW AND ITS RESULTS.

"Rellim" Scouts the Idea That the Closed Season Has Materially Aided Game.

To the Editor of The Republican:

After a cessation of two years—1906-1907—upon hunting rights in Garrett, the November season of 1908 permitting pheasant shooting under Legislative restrictions has closed, and spectators can look over the field, observe the casualties and estimate the results. The law just tested by two years' experience may now be fairly open for discussion pro and con. Altering conditions may exist in different localities and what may appear true here may be found the oppostie in other parts of the county, but so far as a wide range of this community shows it does not look as if the pheasant family has utilized the two years' of care and keeping by an increase of numbers. On the other hand we cannot recall a year in which there was such a scarcity of the birds as at the present. Really it seems as if the depleted flocks of 1905 have disdained the advantages liberally accorded them by law, and the peace and safety made theirs by statutory provision have, if anything, ended in a numerical diminishment. A reason may have to be sought elsewhere than in the humane respite from the dog and the gun. It may be man has too closely invaded and narrowed the covered realm of their natural haunts and that they, like poor Joe in Bleak House, must "move on" or die in exhaustion at the gate. The problem for solution is how are we to rescue this valued gift from total obliteration. The one experiment most conveniently in sight, to our judgment, is under a firm enforcement of existing law. This Act, restricting the hunting rights to one month and raising a bar against either selling or shipping this bird beyond the county confines is proving to be best for a reasonable respect to the desert of the citizen and the hope of retaining and propagating this splendid fowl. Unrestricted sale of this game to meet the demand and tempting prices from the outside means extermination close at hand. Like all new laws this has its transgressors, but administration of its punitive provisions will lessen offenseg and compel obedience. Right thinking citizens should report the clandestine practice of hunting in advance of the season, now occurring to a more or less extent, in so many communities, and stop the palpable violation known to be going on by evasive shipments. This is a rare bird of beauteous plumage and delicious flavor, holding a priority right over man to an abiding pace in the mountains and forests of Garrett, and man should be just to him in a generous application of the Golden Rule and protect his native rights by laws none may dare to break.

And, Mr. Editor, a striking personality passed last week from Virginians. Mr. Joseph Bryan, youngest son of Mr. John Randolph Bryan a foster brother of the noted John Randolph of Roanoke, died. When sixteen years of age he left the University of Virginia to espouse the Confederate cause, and rode with Mosby, the daring raider, through the long storms of war. After Appomattox he resumed his place at the University, graduated and became a lawyer distinguished for ability in the State, accumulating great wealth which was liberally devoted to charities and philanthopic designs. At his burial, in a country churchyard, among many distinguished in Church and State, were Col. Mosby and numbers of Confederate camps and organization, military and civic. But the most touchingly pathetic scene came when negroes he had known through life, took the body at the church and bore it to the grave—these were Virginia negroes.

Nov. 28, 1908. RELLIM.

Coming Events.

Circuit Court will convene on Monday next. No cases, however, will be tried on that day.

County Commissioners will meet on Tuesday for the transaction of routine business.

Christmas next.

No Danger.

Early one morning a terribly seasick passenger, pale and hollow-eyed, came out of his stateroom and ran into a lady who was coming along the passageway, clad in the scantiest raiment. She screamed and started to run. "Don't be alarmed, madam; I shall never live to tell it."—Girard (Ill.) Anchor.

DECEMBER WEATHER.

Several Warm Spells Will Relieve the Intense Cold of Month.

An outlook of the kind and severity of weather likely to prevail during December, as forecasted by Peter R. Smith:

The general outlook denotes much blustery weather during a large part of the month, the meteorology being under the influence of excitement much of the above period. Rains will materialize in quantities sufficient to invigorate the springs and streams that failed during the drouth. Thunderstorms will likely show up in many parts early in the month and high winds attended by forceful gales on the northern lakes, their shores, and the north Atlantic and its coasts in northern parts. Rain turning to destructive sleet and snow, then to a full-grown blizzard sweeping the plains, with an intense cold wave reaching far southward, will show up.

Touching the 2d the temperature will rise and gathering clouds will denote an oncoming storm, which will be on passage the 3d and 4th, bringing rain, wind, and electrical action in many parts, especially in the south. The wave will be very destructive in the north, where rain will turn to sleet and blizzards, followed by a sweeping cold wave out of the northwest, reaching far south on or about the 5th.

The 8th, 9th and 10th will bring on more stormy weather which is likely to be very intense and general. Rain, sleet and snow are sure to show up in central parts. In the north these storms will be much more severe, fanned by northwestern gales of intense cold, reaching all central parts and going far south.

The 14th and 15th will bring a renewal of stormy weather.

On or touching the 17th the temperature will change to warmer and storm conditions will prevail on the 19th and 20th, which may be prolonged till after the 23, and then again on the 26th.

About the 28th the temperature will change to warmer and storm conditions will follow on the 29th and 30th, with a renewal of cold extending into January, 1909.

BITTINGER.

"Good mornin', " said Hiram Swindle, as he climbed over his neighbor's barn yard fence on Thanksgiving morning, "we'uns are butcherin' today and Sary Ann told me to come over and ask you how's the best way to cure ham and shoulders." Jim Skinner stuck his fork deep into the ground and looking up said; "Cure 'em same as we cured Government ownership and bank guarantee." "How's that, Jim?" "That s easy, Hi; put them down in Bryan."

Emanuel Bittinger died at his home near Jennings early Sunday morning. The funeral took place Monday afternoon.

The box supper given by the ladies of the Lutheran congregation of this village, on Thanksgiving evening, was a pleasant and successful affair.

The Garrett Lumber Co., who have been operating near here for the past five years, have shipped the last of their lumber and are tearing up their railroad preparatory to leaving for another territory.

Harry Wiley is rapidly recovering from an attack of pneumonia and we hope to see him out again very soon.

Gus Stanton is having a new tin roof put on his barn this week. Dennis Stevanus, of Springs, Pa., is the contractor.

Supervisor S. J. Brenneman is making some badly needed repairs on the bridge over Casselman river on the county road near Silas Beachy's.

The weather continues very mild and no abatement of the drougth.

FRIENDSVILLE.

Mrs. Wm. McCullough, of Somerfield, Pa., is visiting Mr. George Dunham's family.

Mr. J. N. Alsip returned to Cumberland Monday.

Geo. Friend spent Thanksgiving with friends here.

Mr. R. C. McClandlish and family spent Sunday with M. Mattingly at Hoyes.

Mr. Carl Higginbothan, of Pittsburg, Pa., is visiting his grandmother, Mrs. Mitchell, at the Crawford hotel.

Mr. and Mrs. R. C. McCandlish entertained Supt. and Mrs. C. V. Gould, Dr. A. J. Mason and family, also Geo. D. Browning at dinner Thanksgiving day.

Mr. Orland Dunham returned to his work in Pittsburg Friday.

Mrs. Elmer Haulenbeek in Hospital.

Mrs. Elmer Haulenbeek is a patient in the Hahneman Homoepathic Hospital in Philadelphia. Last summer she suffered from periodical attacks of acute indigestion, and upon reaching her mother's home in Philadelphia decided to submit to an operation. This was successfully done and she is now convalescing.

The Hahneman Hospital is a fine institution, located on 15th street, and occupies a high position among medical institutions. Its physicians are famed for their skill, and its corps of trained nurses are among the best.

CASE NOW GOES TO HIGHER COURT

Garrett County Insurance Suit Will Be Heard In Court of Appeals.

In the case of the Park Grocery Company against the Insurance Company of North America and the Franklin Insurance Company of Philadelphia, Judge Robert R. Henderson has rendered his decision in favor of the defendants. The case will now go to the Court of Appeals.

The case was tried before Judge Henderson at the October term of the circuit court and was removed to Cumberland from Garrett county. The plaintiff carried insurance amounting to $2,000 in the defendant companies. The latter refused payment on the grounds that the iron safe clause in the policies had not been complied with. This clause requires the keeping of an inventory of the goods insured, those sold and new purchases made securely locked up in an iron safe. The plaintiff kept no safe, but produced an inventory, which they contended was kept in the store in the day time and in one of their houses at night. When the testimony was all in the defendants offered a prayer to take the case away from the jury, just the same as if the case had been tried before a jury, so that neither side could take exceptions to the granting of the prayer in order to get the question to go before the Court of Appeals.

Messrs. Thomas J. Peddicord, of Oakland, and D. James Blackiston, of Cumberland, appeared for the plaintiff, and Messrs. John P. Poe, of Baltimore, and James A. McHenry, of Cumberland, for the defendants.

HOYES.

[DELAYED.]

The snow which we had about a week ago and which came very rapidly left us just as rapid, and now we are enjoying the most beautiful weather we have had for years at this season. We feel like comparing our climate at this time with that of California.

Mrs. Minerva Custer, of Connellsville, Pa., is making an extended visit to relatives and friends in Hoyes.

Mrs. George E. Bishoff left this place Tuesday for Grafton, W. Va., where she will spend a few weeks with her daughter, Mrs. Laura Custer.

County Commissioner Asa Friend, who has been severely afflicted with blood poison for several weeks past, is only slightly improved at this time.

Miss Freda Dawitt spent last Sunday as a guest of Auburn Smith and Sadie Wilburn.

Jacob Knox, who had quite a siege of typhoid fever, is very much improved and we hope to soon see him out again.

Mrs. Mary Enlow, of Red House, was calling on some of her friends in Hoyes the past week and expects to spend some time with relatives at Sang Run before returning to her home.

Thomas Bishop cordially welcomed the stork at his home Tuesday, the 24th, for it left with him a fine girl.

Ralph Friend, wife and little daughter left this place last week for the West. They expect to locate at Spokane, Wash. We wish them good luck in their new home.

Mr. Horace Dewitt, who was married quite recently, arrived at his home last Thursday. He and his bride were heartily welcomed by a band of real serenaders. After congratulating them the crowd was given a nice treat. All left for their homes wishing Mr. and Mrs. Dewitt a very happy life.

Miss Bertha Custer and brother Arthur gave a social Tuesday night to the young people of the neighborhood. All spent a most enjoyable evening.

Misses Ethel Dewitt and Bertha Custer and Messrs. Harry Lowdermilk and Arthur Custer attended the funeral of Playford Dunham at Friendsville last Sunday.

Mrs. Carrie Dewitt, of near Deer Park, passed through Hoyes Wednesday on her way to visit her sister, Mrs. Ravenscroft, and will also visit relatives at Cranesville and Selbysport before returning.

"Ye old time Serenaders," get your bells ready. We are safe in saying you will need them again before the week is past.

Mrs. Minerva Custer and Miss Ethel Dewitt were pleasantly entertained at the home of Meshach Mattingly one day this week.

Bud Friend, wife and son were guests of D. O. Dewitt and family last Sunday.

Mrs. Jessie Fazenbaker and son Lee, of Westernport, arrived at the home of Asa Friend last Friday. Mr. Fazenbaker returned to his home Saturday but Mrs. F. will remain for an indefinite time.

Hamill Casteel, wife and children spent last Sunday with Mrs. C.'s parents, Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Dewitt.

Misses Emma Hamill and Bernadetta Mattingly were out horse-back riding last Saturday afternoon. We knew by their smiling countenances that they were enjoying themselves very much. We will also add that Miss Hamill is quite a successful teacher, as we hear only words of praise for her.

Charley and Ray Friend made a business trip to Oakland one day this week.

Misses Olia and Bernadette Mattingly spent Tuesday shopping in Oakland.

Mrs. Emma DeWitt returned to her home Tuesday after spending a week with her daughter, Mrs. Brenneman, near Crellin.

A party of young people of this town were exploring the famous Sang Run Cave one night last week, the ones composing the party being Misses Ethel DeWitt, Olia and Bernadette Mattingly, Bertha Custer and Jessie Lowdermilk, and Messrs. Burns and Harry Lowdermilk, Willie Bishoff, Earl Smith, Arthur DeWitt and Charles Callis. Harry Lowdermilk having his camera photographed the crowd a number of times and the scenes were very beautiful.

Miss Ollie Cuppett and William Frazee were quietly married last Wednesday by Rev. H. E. Friend. We wish them a very happy life.

Messrs. Willie Bishoff and Earl Smith spent Thanksgiving with their parents at this place and returned to Oakland Sunday evening.

The members of the Sunday school are preparing for Xmas services in the M. E church at this place Xmas night. The choir practiced some of their music Sunday afternoon at the home of Freeman DeWitt.

A FRESH ARRIVAL OF DRUGS

Is no novelty here. In fact we buy in small quantities on purpose to insure the frequent renewal and the constant freshness of all drugs which deteriorate with time. That plan makes our profits smaller, but it gives you better medicines and remedies. That is one reason why doctors prefer to have their prescriptions filled here.

OAKLAND PHARMACY

JOS. E. HARNED, Proprietor,
OAKLAND, MD.

Notice To Delinquent Tax-Payers.

Notice is hereby given to all delinquent tax-payers that if taxes now due and in arrears are not paid before

JANUARY 1ST, 1909,

I will proceed by law to collect. I refer to Section 50 of Chapter 456 of Acts of the General Assembly of Maryland, which provides as follows:

SECTION 50. The said Treasurer shall during the first week in December in each and every year, give notice to all delinquent tax-payers of said county, by advertisement inserted in two newspapers published in said county, and in hand-bills posted in five of the most public places in each election district of said county, and at the court-house door, warning them that the payment of all taxes then due and in arrear will be enforced by advertisement and sale unless the same be paid before the 1st day of January next following.

Please pay promptly and save costs.

W. E. HOLLINGER,
Treasurer of Garrett County.

Subscribe for the Republican.

The Lonaconing Savings Bank

Of Allegany Couuty.

Capital Stock . $20,000
Surplus and Undivided Profits . $60,000
Deposits . . $625,000

3 PER CENT. Interest Paid Upon all Savings Accounts.

GIVE THEM A START

The New Year is rapidly approaching. This would be a good time for you to start your young folks on the road to Success.

Early training in the practice of self-denial; instruction as to the use and value of money; opportunities for earning and saving money; all these tend to fix and fasten the children in the ways of thrift and prosperity.

We most gladly assist the young people in getting started.

One Dollar opens an account and entitles the depositor to one of our Savings Banks.

We shall be pleased to have our Garrett County friends call and receive a 1908 Calendar.

DAVID SLOAN, President. R. R. SLOAN, Treasurer.

The First National Bank

FRIENDSVILLE, MD.

Capital, $25,000. Surplus and Undivided Profits, $24,000.

OFFICERS:

L. E. Friend, President. J. W. McCullough, V. P.
R. C. McCandlish, Cashier.

DIRECTORS:

L. E. Friend, Merchant.
J. W. McCullough, Lumber and Coal.
W. W. Savage, Merchant.
D. S. Custer, Merchant.
H. M. Rumbaugh, Farmer.
W. H. H. Friend, Pension Agent and Surveyor.
Horace R. DeWitt, Treasurer of Garrett County, Md.
R. C. McCandlish.

We will issue time or demand certificates of deposit and pay you 4 per cent. interest if your money is left with us.

In all its dealings this Bank combines absolute safety with satisfactory service and never loses sight of either.

SAFETY DEPOSIT BOXES FOR RENT.

Notice to Creditors.

This is to give notice, That the subscriber, of Garrett county hath obtained from the Orphans' Court of Garrett county, in Maryland, letters of Administration on the personal estate of

A. F. GEORGE,

late of Garrett county, deceased. All persons having claims against the deceased are hereby warned to exhibit the same, with the vouchers thereof legally authenticated to the subscriber, on or before the 26th day of May next; they may otherwise by law be excluded from all benefit of said estate. All persons knowing themselves indebted to said estate are requested to make immediate payment.

Given under my hand this 24th day November, 1908.

MARY E. GEORGE,
Administratrix.
Swanton, Md.

Notice to Creditors.

This is to give notice, That the subscriber, of Garrett county hath obtained from the Orphan's Court of Garrett county, in Maryland, letters of Administration on the personal estate of

WILLIAM FRUSH,

late of Garrett county, deceased. All persons having claims against the deceased are hereby warned to exhibit the same, with the vouchers thereof legally authenticated to the subscriber, on or before the 14th day of April, next; they may otherwise by law be excluded from all benefit of said estate. All persons knowing themselves indebted to said estate are requested to make immediate payment.

Given under my hand this 14th day of October, 1908.

JOHN W. FRUSH,
Administrator.
R. F. D., Oakland, Md.

Notice to Creditors.

This is to give notice, That the subscriber of Garrett County, in Maryland, hath obtained from the Orphans' Court of Garrett county, in Maryland, letter Administration on the personal estate of

J. RUSSELL BROWNING,

late of Garrett County, deceased. All persons having claims against the deceased are hereby warned to exhibit the same with the vouchers thereof legally authenticated to the subscriber, on or before the 29th day of April, next; they may otherwise by law be excluded from all benefit of said estate. All persons knowing themselves indebted to said estate are requested to make immediate payment.

Given under my hand this 29th day of October, 1908.

M. A. BROWNING,
Administrator,
Kitzmiller, Md.

Notice to Creditors.

This is to give notice, That the subscribers of Garrett county, hath obtained from the Orphans' Court of Garrett County, in Maryland, Letters of Administration on the personal estate of

JOHN W. BOWERS,

late of Garrett county, deceased. All persons having claims against the deceased are hereby warned to exhibit the same, with vouchers thereof legally authenticated to the subscriber, on or before the 29th day of April next; they may otherwise by law be excluded from all benefit of said estate. All persons knowing themselves indebted to said estate are requested to make immediate payment.

Given under my hand this 26th day of November, 1908.

FLORENCE M. BOWERS,
Administratrix.
Dodson, Md.

Examiners' Notice.

Notice is hereby given, that the undersigned, appointed by the County Commissioners of Garrett county, to view the lands through which the new county road is to be located. Said new road to begin at a point on the county road leading from Thayersville to Altamont, near the residence of Solomon Hogue, running between the lands of Hogue, Myers, S. O. Clark, Thomas Garrett, Adel Dewitt, Martin Fiselinger and Mrs. E. Fundenberg to intersect the Deer Park road at a point near Mrs. Fundenbergs farm, to extend a distance of about one and one-half miles, which is now a private road but used by the public, and examine whether said road shall be located as a county road, will meet on the 16th day of November, 1908 for such purpose, and to determine whether the public convenience requires the said road, and if so, to locate the same and perform their duty in the premises.

ANDREW SHARTZER,
JOHN W. HANEY,
P. J. LOHR,
Examiners.

See our 5 and 10c glassware. Baumgartner.

A Meritorious Institution

Established as a State Bank in 1888 with a capital of $25,000.00; changed to a National Bank in 1903 and capital increased to $50,000.00; TODAY with a capital and surplus of $85,000.00 and total resources of over $500,000.00 we are

BETTER, BIGGER AND STRONGER

than ever. During the 20 years of our existence, our aim has been to extend to our patrons the best possible service. Our steady growth is evidence that the banking institution, which throws the greatest safeguards around its business in order to protect its depositors merits the confidence of the public. If you are not a customer of this Bank let this be your invitation to become one; our relations will be mutually profitable.

Garrett National Bank

Of Oakland, Maryland.

Mr. James Aronhalt, of near Wilson, was in the city Monday on business.

Mr. John T. Sincell, of Keyser, spent a few hours Sunday afternoon in Oakland with relatives.

Deputy Clerk Samuel Lawton was housed up several days last and this week with a severe cold.

Mr. W. T. Steyer, of near Gorman, was in the city yesterday and made this office a brief business call.

Mrs. J. Wilson Humbird, of Cumberland, is in Oakland visiting her daughter, Mrs. William R. Offutt.

Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Bush and two children, of Eglon, are in Oakland visiting Mr. and Mrs. Louis Bush at their home, Surmount.

Mrs. Ada A. V. Halterman, of Crellin, who visited in Chicago, Ill., for a week or two, returned to her home Sunday afternoon.

Mr. Leonard Lochner, of this office, bicycled to Accident Sunday morning where he remained until Monday noon visiting relatives.

Mr. Ed. Offutt spent a day or two last week in Philadelphia, witnessing on Thursday the game of football between the Army and Navy, which was played on Franklin Field in the Quaker City.

Mrs. James W. Leathers left Oakland last Thursday evening for Bloomington, Ill., where she will remain until after the holidays visiting her parents and other relatives.

Dr. and Mrs. R. B. Ward are entertaining at their residence in Oakland Rev. and Mrs. Engle and Mrs. Ingram, of Terra Alta, and Miss Hilman, superintendent of the Deaconess' Home, of Bridgeport, Ohio.

Mr. Lonny Carr, of Fairmont, W. Va., and Mountain Lake Park, came to Oakland Tuesday afternoon where he took train No. 12 for New York City where he will visit his brother for a week or ten days.

Messrs. Harry and L. L. Loar, who have been spending the past two weeks at Atlantic City, N. J., for the benefit of the latter's health, returned to Oakland, Md., Saturday, where Mr. L. L. Loar spent Sunday with his mother, returning to this city Sunday night. Mr. Loar returns much improved in health, a fact we are exceedingly pleased to note.—Grafton Republican.

Mr. R. L. Nevill, recently of Mount Storm, W. Va., who purchased the Henry Thompson farm near Kearney a few months ago, was a pleasant visitor to this office Tuesday afternoon.

Mr. S. A. Kendall, of Meyersdale, Pa., spent a day or two in Oakland this week on business. On the 19th inst. he will start for California where he will spend a short time with his family who are wintering there.

Mrs. H. R. Laughlin and little daughter, Rose Alice, went to Deer Park this afternoon, where the little girl will remain some time as the guest of her grandparents, Dr. and Mrs. Laughlin. Her mother will return to the city tomorrow evening.—Grafton Republican.

Mr. J. Wilson Hunbird, of Cumberland, drove to Oakland Monday afternoon in his new Steven-Duryea touring car, arriving here within five hours after having left the starting point and returned to his home Tuesday, going by the way of the Northwesteen pike, accompanied by Mr. D. E. Offutt, Sr.

One of the tank cars composing the water train which is being used by the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company to convey water from Oakland to points west, jumped the track at the Washington Spring crossing, west of town, on Monday, and delayed traffic for an hour or more.

In the historical column "Thirty Years Ago," appearing weekly in the Frostburg Mining Journal the following may be of interest to many Garrett countians, the principal character being a member of the Custer family well known in this county: "Frostburg was honored in a visit by Emanuel Custer, of Michigan. Mr. Custer was born at Cresaptown in 1806. In 1824 he emigrated to Michigan. He was a blacksmith—in youthan apprentice of George Seiss, grand father of Mrs. Marx Wineland, of this place. He remembered well when coal was hauled from Eckhart to Cumberland by wagon. One of his sons, Gen. G. A. Custer, was a distinguished officer of the Union army during the Civil War, and in 1876 with his entire command was slain in the battle of the Little Big Horn River by the Sioux Indians. In Cumberland Mr. Custer was the guest of Mrs. Georgie Willia nson, who accompanied him to Frostburg. Here both were guests of Marx Wineland."

CAPITAL $50,000.00 — SURPLUS AND PROFITS $29,000.00

THE First National Bank

OAKLAND, MD.

GOVERNMENT DEPOSITORY.

One of the Largest and Best Equipped Banking Houses in Maryland.

Vaults absolutely Fire and Burglar proof.

Safety Deposit Boxes for Rent

Pays 3 Per Cent. on Time Deposits—Compounded Semi-Annually

Every courtesy extended consistent with sound banking.

Home Savings Banks Free. $1.00 will start an account.

The Depositor with a Dollar account receives the same consideration as the largest depositor.

COME IN AND GET ACQUAINTED

HONOR ROLL

Of the Oakland Public Schools for the Month of November.

The following pupils in the Oakland Public Schools were neither late nor absent during the month of November.

U. G. PALMER, Principal.

FIRST GRADE.

Elwood Hinebaugh, Ralph Davis, Harry Glotfelty, Roy Dixon, Carl Kale, Richard West, Carlton Hinebaugh, Edward Pollock, Margaret Kale, Margaret Sincell, Leah Maffett, Lucy Trickett, Dorothy Pritchard, Cora McRobie, Ella Helbig.

OLIVE DEWITT, Teacher.

SECOND GRADE.

Nellie McComas Inez Workman, Rebecca Workman, Ethel Naylor, Bessie Maloney, Ruth Robinson, Frances Miller, Edwin Palmer, Willie Giessman, Charlie Whetsel, Ralph Robinson, Robert Porter, Alva Gortner.

JENNIE L. MILLER, Teacher.

THIRD GRADE.

Iona Johnson, Louise Harned, Katherine Porter, Julius Littman, Willie Casteel, Francis Gauer, Ada Glotfelty, Martha West, Reva Davis, Lillian Helbig, Clarence Dixon, Edward Kahl, Wilmer Alger.

ZAIDEE BROWNING, Teacher.

FOURTH GRADE.

Margaret Slabaugh, Lois Fraley, Fred Cogley, Kathleen Helbig, Mabel White.

BEULAH LAUGHRIDGE, Teacher.

FIFTH GRADE.

Florence Flanigan, Bessie Hendrickson, Margaret Jamison, Edna Trickett, Donald Maffett, Julia Rowan, Douglass Sincell, Carroll Kelly, Bertha Wilt.

ORLEY V DUNHAM, Teacher.

SIXTH GRADE.

Clara Mitchell, Bernadette Hart, Carlton Helbig.

SEVENTH GRADE.

Pearl Shartzer, Evelyn Helbig, Madge Workman, Mary Stemple, Robert White, Walter Kahl, Samuel Lantz, Eleanor Hinebaugh.

ELIZABETH B LEARY, Teacher.

EIGHTH GRADE.

Irma Workman, Clyde Shartzer, Dwight Townshend.

NINTH GRADE.

Mary Harsh, June White, Robert Helbig.

JUNIORS.

Eleanor Peddicord, Paul Workman, Lawrence Fraley, Clarence Murphy, Neil Fraley.

SENIORS.

Dean Skinner.

W. E. BISHOFF, Vice Principal.

Honor Roll of South Point School.

Those who were present every day in November are: Georgia Davis, Delbert Davis, Asa Queer, George Queer, Harvey Bittinger, Mabel Bittinger, Garnie Bittinger, Rose Kerins, Nellie Bittinger, Frank Lyon and Leo Lyon.

Those who made 90 to 100 per cent in deportment and daily recitations are: Georgia Davis, Delbert Davis, Maud Queer, Julia Queer, Asa Queer, George Queer, Vernon Lyon, Leo Lyon, Harvey Bittinger, Rose Kerins and Nellie Bittinger.

J. S. GNEGY, Principal.

Mr. and Mrs. Herman Creutzburg went to Barton last Monday morning where they were called by the death of their sister-in-law, Mrs. Henry Creutzburg, which occurred Saturday morning after an illness of a few hours. The funeral took place Monday afternoon.

Waltz me around to the Gold Mine.

Ambitious young men and ladies should learn telegraphy, for, since the now 8-hour law became effective, there is a shortage of many thousand telegraphers. Positions pay from $50 to $70 per month to beginners. The National Telegraph Institute of Philadelphia, Pa., and five other cities is operated under the supervision of R. R. officials and all students are placed when qualified. Write them for particulars.

The largest and best line of Xmas Post Cards in Western Maryland at the Gold Mine store.

Turkeys, owing to the warm weather prevalent the latter part of last week, and the overstocking of the local as well as the city markets, sold in Oakland as low as ten cents a pound on last Thursday morning. At other points it was hard to dispose of the accumulated stock of poultry at even this low price and many hundreds of pounds either spoiled or were given away by merchants.

If you want it, and I haven't got it, I will get it for you, if you come early. GEO. M. MASON.

The Pittsburg Christian Advocate has the following to say concerning the journal and minutes of the West Virginia Conference, printed by THE REPUBLICAN Job Department recently: "The official journal and minutes of the sixty-second session of the West Virginia Conference, held in Moundsville, October 7 to 12, has come to our table, bringing a fund of information concerning the faithful and successful work which is being done by our church in the growing commonwealth of West Virginia. It is a well-edited and neatly-printed pamphlet of one hundred and seventy-two pages. J. B. Workman, secretary of the Conference, is editor and publisher."

Just received 496,422,992,724½ Dolls. What a whopper! The Gold Mine.

Lot For Sale.

The best building lot in Oakland; opposite new courthouse, at reasonable price. Apply to owner.

HENRY LAUER,
Oakland, Md.

ASSESSED $50 AND COSTS.

Attempt to Evade Game Laws Resulted As Above.

For a number of weeks, it is generally beheved, game in large and small lots have been shipped from Oakland to eastern markets in violation of the law, the shippers covering their tracks so well that no trace was ever found, or if found, the matter was kept quiet.

Tuesday night, however, a trunk, which had been checked to Washington, was seized at the B. and O. station here by a deputy game warden and the shipper, Mr. George Geissman, arrested, charged with shipping game from the county in violation of the law.

Yesterday Mr. Geissman was given a hearing by Justice Gonder and confessed that in the trunk were a number of pheasants but that this was his first (and last) offense. He was fined $50 and costs, amounting to $52 in all.

While THE REPUBLICVN does not want to appear as condoning the offense it seems rather remarkable that just at the close of the hunting season an arrest should be made when the law has evidently been flagrantly violated for weeks past.

Church Supper and Fair.

The ladies of St. Mark's Ev. Lutheran church, of Oakland, will give a supper on the evening of Thursday, December 10th, in the basement of the church. The menu will be as follows: Oysters, fried chicken, hot biscuit, slaw, chicken salad, potato salad, pickles, jelly, baked beans and brown joe, ice cream, cake, candy, coffee. Booths containing fancy articles will be on sale. Just what you may want for your friends' Christmas present. Come and get a good meal and purchase your Christmas gifts all in one evening.

Estray Notice.

Five head of cattle from pasture at Deer Park—a two-year old yellow Jersey heifer; 1 yearling brindle bull; two two-year old red heifers; one two-year old yellow and white spotted heifer. A liberal reward will be paid for information leading to the recovery or the animals.

ANDREW SHARTZER.

County Officers Moving.

Since the last issue of THE REPUBLICAN the following county officials have moved into their quarters in the new court house:

Deputy Treasurer James W. White, who occupies a room on the first floor to the left of the main entrance.

Surveyor James A. Sincell, who has a suite of rooms on the north side of third floor.

The Orphans' Court will hold its sessions in the new court house on Tuesday, the court room being located on main floor, south side of the rotunda.

Monday the Circuit Court will convene in the new court room, much of the furniture having already been recieved and the balance is expected every day.

An effort is being made by Clerk Ross to have the County Commissioners' rooms in proper shape for the transaction of the public business when the Commissioners meet on Tuesday next.

The Board of Supervisors of Elections is also preparing to move into the new court house. The office of the Supervisors is located opposite that of the County Treasurer on the main floor of the building to the right of the main entrance.

Church Services.

OAKLAND PRESBYTERIAN.

Services on Sunday, to which all are cordially invited, will be preaching at 11 a. m. and 7.3 p. m.

L. B. HENSLEY, Pastor.

ST. PAUL'S M. E.

Services next Sunday as follows:
Preaching 10.30 a. m.
Sunday school at 2.15 p. m.
Preaching at 7.30 p. m.
Epworth League Monday 7.30 p. m.
Junior League Wednesday 4.15 p. m.
Prayer meeting Wednesday 7.30 p. m.
Everybody cordially invited to attend these services.

J. B. WORKMAN, Pastor.

ST. MARK'S LUTHERAN.

Services next Sabbath as follows:
Sunday school at 9.30 a. m.
Preaching 10.30 a. m., and 7.30 p. m.
Luther League every Wednesday at 7.30 p. m.
Preaching at Crellin next Sunday at 3 p. m.
Everybody welcome.

E. MANGES, Pastor.

BAPTIST.

Services next Sunday as follows:
Ferndale—Preaching at 11 a. m.
Loch Lynn—Preaching at 3 p. m.
Deer Park—Preaching at 7.30 p. m.
Everybody invited to be present.

C. W. HUDSON, Pastor.

MT. LAKE AND DEER PARK M. E. CHARGE

Services next Sunday as follows:
Deer Park—Preaching at 11 a. m. Sunday School at 10 a. m.
Mt. Lake Park—Sunday school 2:30 p. m., followed bo preaching. Epworth League 6:30 p.m.
Wesley Chapel—Special meetings are in progress.

JOHN O. BOLTON, Pastor.

How about having a look at the Gold Mine before you buy your Toys?

FOR SALE—A National Cash Register. Offutt & Renninger.

Bank Statements.

In this paper today we publish the statements of the Garrett National Bank of Oakland, and of the First National Bank of Kitzmiller, in accordance with the call made by Comptroller of the Currency as of November 27th. Both banks as shown by the statements are in excellent condition and reflect credit upon the management.

GORTNER.

Daniel Kinsinger, of Meyersdale, Pa., is visiting friends here.

S. J. Lichty, who was visiting his mother at Garrett, Pa., returned home Monday.

Miss Della Savage, who so successfully taught the Swan Meadow school at this place a few years ago, is spending a few days here as the guest of Mr. and Mrs. P. P. Gortner.

Miss Nellie Conneway was calling on Miss Anna Gortner Sunday.

Robert Gauer and S. O. Ridder are employed in building a house for John Rolf near Red House.

Geo. Killins left for the Sunny South Wednesday morning.

MOUNTAIN LAKE PARK.

Preaching service in the M. E. church next Sunday will be at 3:30 p. m. This change was made on account of the protracted services which are being held at Wesley Chapel.

The special class in our Sunday School organized and taught by Rev. Bolton has more than doubled in attendance in three weeks and much interest is manifested on the part of the young men of Mountain Lake Park and Loch Lynn.

Rev. Reed and family, who have been occupying the Binkley cottage on F street for several weeks, will leave us shortly to take up their residence at Webster Springs, W. Va., where Rev. Reed will have charge of the M. E. church South at that place.

The insurance case of King & Martin will go up to the Court of Appeals.

A car load of lumber for the new Baptist church at Loch Lynn was unloaded Monday. We understand that the building will be pushed to an early completion. Mr. Duke King will have charge of the work. The building will cost about $2,500.

Four members were received by letter in the M. E. church Sunday evening.

The oyster supper at Haydenhurst last Wednesday night netted about $14 to the treasury of the Ladies' Aid Society.

We are glad to note that Mrs. Michael, widow of the late C. C. Michael, has been granted a pension of $12 per month to date from the time of her husband's death.

Rev. Bolton is holding special services at Wesley Chapel at which interest is growing in that neighborhood. There were three conversions last night and many more are looked for before the close of the meeting.

Messrs. Gay W. Hayden and Harry Callis have accepted positions in the paper mill at Luke, Md.

Warren, the three year old son of Mr. and Mrs. Warren Rathbun, of Loch Lynn, died Tuesday night after a brief illness from dyphtheria. Little Warren was a very bright and lovable child and a general favorite in the community. A deep sympathy is expressed for the parents, grand parents and other relatives.

Resident and non-resident property owners of Mountain Lake Park have been more than usually nervous this fall from fear of fire on acconnt of the unusual drought prevailing here, but unusual care and the burning of leaves throughout the grounds have prevented fires so far and now we feel comparatively safe from loss from this source.

SHORT RUN.

The farmers are butchering and doing their fall plowing now.

Mr. Staley Miller spent Sunday at Crellin.

Miss Emma Moon and Mrs. Lula Blake spent the latter part of last week visiting Miss Emma Harvey.

Miss Lois Harvey is staying in Kitzmiller now.

Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Junkins and Miss Eva Kesner, of Keyser, are the guests of Mr. J. H. Wilson at this time.

Dr. and Mrs. Z. H. Moon and Mrs. Hendrickson are visiting Mrs. Moon's parents at this place.

Mr. and Mrs. H. L. Pool and Miss Ida Wilson are visiting friends here.

Mr. S. A. Moon spent Sunday at his home near Kurtz Chapel.

Mr. James Hoopengardner was calling on Miss Delia Tasker Sunday evening.

Mr. Guy Miller is a frequent visitor at J. H. Wilson's.

Mr. Charles Miller and Miss Delea Wilson were out enjoying the good roads Sunday.

A number of young people attended church at Kitzmiller Sunday night.

Mr. Alex Wilson was in Oakland one day last week on business.

Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Moon were visiting Robert Paugh Sunday.

Wishing THE REPUBLICAN every success.

REPORT OF THE CONDITION OF THE GARRETT NATIONAL BANK, at Oakland, in the State of Maryland, at the close of business, November 27th, 1908:

RESOURCES.

Loans and Discounts		$285,425 44
Overdrafts, secured and unsecured		2 55
U. S. Bonds to secure circulation		50,000 00
Premiums on U. S. Bonds		1,500 00
Bonds, securities, etc		105,645 00
Banking house, furniture and fixtures		14,500 00
Due from National Banks (not reserve agents)		813 45
Due from State Banks and Bankers		923 79
Due from approved reserve agents		38,168 36
Checks and other cash items		344 65
Notes of other National Banks		890 00
Fractional paper currency, nickels and cents		172 04
Lawful Money Reserve in Bank, viz:
Specie	$21,126 50
Legal-tender notes	7,385 00	28,511 50
Redemption fund with U. S. Treasurer, (5 per cent of circulation		2,500 00
Total		$529,405 78

LIABILITIES.

Capital stock paid in	$ 50,000 00
Surplus fund	35,000 00
Undivided profits, less expenses and taxes paid	4,874 95
National bank notes outstanding	48,700 00
Due to other National Banks	3,425 49
Due to State Banks and Bankers	779 36
Individual deposits subject to check	161,311 62
Savings Deposits	19,908 20
Time certificates of deposit	204,115 38
Cashier's checks outstanding	1,392 78
Total	$529,405 78

State of Maryland, County of Garrett, ss:

I, S. T. JONES, Cashier of the above named bank do solemnly swear that the above statement is true to the best of my knowledge and belief. S. T. JONES, Cashier.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 1st day of December, 1908.

HARLAND L. JONES, Notary Public.

Correct—Attest: D. E. OFFUTT, JOHN T. MITCHELL, JOHN M. DAVIS, Directors.

REPORT OF THE CONDITION OF

The First National Bank

AT KITZMILLERVILLE,

In the State of Maryland, at the close of business, November 27, 1908.

RESOURCES.

Loans and Discounts		$53,216 80
U. S. Bonds to secure circulation		6,250 00
Premiums on U. S. Bonds		218 75
Bonds, securities, etc		7,575 00
Banking house, furniture and fixtures		8,347 95
Other real estate owned		400 00
Due from National Banks (not reserve agents)		74 62
Due from approved reserve agents		9,711 50
Checks and other cash items		3 50
Notes of other National Banks		460 00
Fractional paper currency, nickels, and cents		65 05
LAWFUL MONEY RESERVE IN BANK, viz:
Specie	$7,466 50
Legal-tender notes	72 40
		8,213 50
Redemption fund with U. S. Treasurer (5 per cent of circulation		312 50
Due from U. S. Treasurer, other than 5 per cent redemption fund		300 00
Total		$93,949 17

LIABILITIES.

Capital stock paid in	$25,000 00
Surplus fund	3,000 00
Undivided profits, less expenses and taxes paid	1,317 90
National Bank notes outstanding	6,250 00
Due to other National Banks	2,505 18
Due to State Banks and Bankers	70 68
Individual deposits subject to check	26,598 11
Savings deposits	28,649 59
Cashier's checks outstanding	159 80
Total	$93,949 17

State of Maryland, County of Garrett.

I, E. J. Hamill, Cashier of the above named bank, do solemnly swear that the above statement is true to the best of my knowledge and belief.

E. J. HAMILL, Cashier.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 2nd day of December, 1908.

GEO. J. POOL, Notary Public.

Correct—Attest: R. A. SMITH, WADE SAPP, A. C. SMITH, Directors.

ARTHUR TOWNSHEND

BARGAINS! BARGAINS!

TO CLOSE OUT SOME

Flannels, Blankets and Flannel Skirts

WE CAN GIVE YOU GOOD PRICES.

MEN'S AND BOYS' Overcoats AT A GOOD SACRIFICE

STILL HAVE SOME GOOD THINGS IN

Underwear, Gloves, Mittens, and Tam o'Shanters Children's Caps.

ARTHUR TOWNSHEND

10-qt. tin dish pans 10c at Baumgartner's.

HOUSE FOR RENT, possession given after October 1st; contains eight rooms; spring water. Apply to Mrs. L. F. Sincell, Oakland. Also cottage of six rooms, either furnisdhe or unfurnished.

The Prince of Peace.

Famous Lecture Delivered by William Jennings Bryan at Numerous Chautauquas and Y. M. C. A.'s, and at Tokyo, Manila, Bombay, Cairo, Jerusalem.

I offer no apology for speaking upon a religious theme, for it is the most universal of all themes. If I addressed you upon the subject of law I might interest the lawyers. If I discussed the science of medicine I might interest the physicians. In like manner merchants might be interested in a talk on commerce and farmers in a discussion of agriculture. But none of these subjects appeals to all. Even the science of government, though broader than any profession or occupation, does not embrace the whole sum of life, and those who think upon it differ so among themselves that I could not speak upon the subject so as to please a part without offending others. While to me the science of government is intensely absorbing, I recognize that the most important things in life lie outside of the realm of government and that more depends upon what the individual does for himself than upon what the government does or can do for him. Men can be miserable under the best government, and they can be happy under the worst government.

Government affects but a part of the life which we live here and does not touch at all the life beyond, while religion touches the infinite circle of existence as well as the small arc of that circle which we spend on earth. No greater theme, therefore, can engage our attention.

Man is a religious being. The heart instinctively seeks for a God. Man is essentially devout.

There are honest doubters whose sincerity we recognize and respect, but occasionally I find young men who think it smart to be skeptical. They talk as if it were an evidence of larger intelligence to scoff at creeds and refuse to connect themselves with churches. They call themselves "liberal," as if a Christian were narrow minded. To these young men I desire to address myself.

Religion the Basis of Morality.

Even some older people profess to regard religion as a superstition, pardonable in the ignorant, but unworthy of the educated, a mental state which one can and should outgrow. Those who hold this view look down with mild contempt upon such as give to religion a definite place in their thoughts and lives. They assume an intellectual superiority and often take little pains to conceal the assumption.

Religion has been defined as the relation which man fixes between himself and his God and morality as the outward manifestation of this relation. Every one by the time he reaches maturity has fixed some relation between himself and God, and no material change in this relation can take place without a revolution in the man, for this relation is the most potent influence that acts upon a human life.

Religion is the basis of morality in the individual and in the group of individuals. Materialists have attempted to build up a system of morality upon the basis of enlightened self interest. They would have man figure out by mathematics that it pays him to abstain from wrongdoing; they would even inject an element of selfishness into altruism. But the moral system elaborated by the materialists has several defects. First, its virtues are borrowed from moral systems based upon religion. Second, as it rests upon argument rather than upon authority it does not appeal to the young, and by the time the young are able to follow their reason they have already become set in their ways. Our laws do not permit a young man to dispose of real estate until he is twenty-one. Why this restraint? Because his reason is not mature. And yet a man's life is largely molded by the environment of his youth. Third, one never knows just how much of his decision is due to reason and how much is due to passion or to selfish interest. We recognize the bias of self interest when we exclude from the jury every man, no matter how reasonable or upright he may be, who has a pecuniary interest in the result of the trial. And, fourth, one whose mortality is based upon a nice calculation of benefits to be secured spends time figuring that he should spend in action.

Morality is the power of endurance in man, and a religion which teaches personal responsibility to God gives strength to morality. There is a powerful restraining influence in the belief that an all seeing eye scrutinizes every thought and word and act of the individual.

There are difficulties to be encountered in religion, but there are difficulties to be encountered everywhere. I passed through a period of skepticism when I was in college, and I have been glad ever since that I became a member of the church before I left home for college, for it helped me during those trying days. The college days cover the dangerous period in the young man's life. It is when he is just come into possession of his powers, when he feels stronger than he ever feels afterward and thinks he knows more than he ever does know.

It was at this period that I was confused by the different theories of creation. But I examined these theories and found that they all assumed something to begin with. The nebular hypothesis, for instance, assumes that matter and force existed, matter in particles infinitely fine and each particle separated from every other particle by space infinitely great. Beginning with this assumption, force working on matter, according to this hypothesis, creates a universe. Well, I have a right to assume and I prefer to assume a Designer back of the design, a Creator back of creation, and, no matter how long you draw out the process of creation, so long as God stands back of it you cannot shake my faith in Jehovah. In Genesis it is written that in the beginning God created the heavens and the earth, and I can stand on that proposition until I find some theory of creation that goes further back than "the beginning."

I do not carry the doctrine of evolution as far as some do. I have not yet been able to convince myself that man is a lineal descendant of the lower animals. I do not mean to find fault with you if you want to accept it. All I mean to say is that, while you may trace your ancestry back to the monkey if you find pleasure or pride in doing so, you shall not connect me with your family tree without more evidence than has yet been produced. It is true that man in some physical qualities resembles the beast, but man has a mind as well as a body and a soul as well as a mind. The mind is greater than the body, and the soul is greater than the mind, and I object to having man's pedigree traced on one-third of him only, and that the lowest third.

One does not escape from mystery, however, by accepting this theory, for it does not explain the origin of life. When the follower of Darwin has traced the germ of life back to the lowest form in which it appears, and to follow him one must exercise more faith than religion calls for, he finds that scientists differ. Some believe that the first germ of life came from another planet, and others hold that it was the result of spontaneous generation.

If I were compelled to accept one of these theories, I would prefer the first, for if we can chase the germ of life off this planet and get it out into space we can guess the rest of the way and no one can contradict us, but if we accept the doctrine of spontaneous generation we cannot explain why spontaneous generation ceased to act after the first germ was created.

Go back as far as we may, we cannot escape from the creative act, and it is just as easy for me to believe that God created man as he is as to believe that millions of years ago he created a germ of life and endowed it with power to develop into all that we see today. But I object to the Darwinian theory until more conclusive proof is produced, because I fear we shall lose the consciousness of God's presence in our daily life if we must assume that through all the ages no spiritual force has touched the life of man or shaped the destiny of nations. But there is another objection. The Darwinian theory represents man as reaching his present perfection by the operation of the law of hate—the merciless law by which the strong crowd out and kill off the weak. If this is the law of our development, then, if there is any logic that can bind the human mind, we shall turn backward toward the beast in proportion as we substitute the law of love. How can hatred be the law of development when nations have advanced in proportion as they have departed from that law and adopted the law of love?

But while I do not accept the Darwinian theory I shall not quarrel with you about it. I refer to it only to remind you that it does not solve the mystery of life or explain human progress. I fear that some have accepted it in the hope of escaping from the miracle, but why should the miracle frighten us? It bothered me once, and I am inclined to think that it is one of the test questions with the Christian.

Why Shouldn't Miracles Be Performed?

Christ cannot be separated from the miraculous. His birth, his ministrations and his resurrection all involve the miraculous, and the change which his religion works in the human heart is a continuing miracle. Eliminate the miracles and Christ becomes merely a human being and his gospel is stripped of divine authority.

The miracle raises two questions, "Can God perform a miracle?" and "Would he want to?" The first is easy to answer. A God who can make a world can do anything he wants to do with it. The power to perform miracles is necessarily implied in the power to create. But would God want to perform a miracle? This is the question which has given most of the trouble. The more I have considered it the less inclined I am to answer in the negative. To say that God would not perform a miracle is to assume a more intimate knowledge of God's plans and purposes than I can claim to have. I will not deny that God does perform a miracle or may perform one merely because I do not know how or why he does it. The fact that we are constantly learning of the existence of new forces suggests the possibility that God may operate through forces yet unknown to us, and the mysteries with which we deal every day remind me that faith is as necessary as sight. Who would have credited a century ago the stories that are now told of the wonder working electricity? For ages man had known the lightning but only to fear it. Now this invisible current is generated by a man made machine, imprisoned in a man made wire and made to do the bidding of man. The miracle is not more mysterious than many of the things with which man now deals. It is simply different.

It is sometimes said that God could not suspend one of his laws without stopping the universe, but do we not suspend or overcome the law of gravitation every day? Every time we move a foot or lift a weight we temporarily interfere with the operation of the most universal of natural laws, and yet the world is not disturbed.

Science has taught us so many things that we are tempted to conclude that we know everything, but there is really a great unknown which is still unexplored, and that which we have learned ought to increase our reverence rather than our egotism. Science has disclosed some of the machinery of the universe, but science has not yet revealed to us the great secret—the secret of life. It is to be found in every blade of grass, in every insect, in every bird and in every animal, as well as in man. Six thousand years of recorded history, and yet we know no more about the secret of life than they knew in the beginning. We live, we plan, we have our hopes, our fears, and yet in a moment a change may come over any one of us, and this body will become a mass of lifeless clay. What is it that, having, we live and, having not, we are as the clod? We know not, and yet the progress of the race and the civilization which we now behold are the work of men and women who have not solved the mystery of their own lives.

And our food—must we understand it before we eat it? If we refused to eat anything until we could understand the mystery of its growth, we would die of starvation. But mystery does not bother us in the dining room. Only in the church is it an obstacle.

I was eating a piece of watermelon some months ago and was struck with its beauty. I took some of the seed and dried them and weighed them and found that it would require some five thousand seed to weigh a pound. And then I applied mathematics to that forty pound melon. One of these seeds put into the ground when warmed by the sun and moistened by the rain goes to work. It gathers from somewhere two hundred thousand times its own weight and, forcing this raw material through a tiny stem, constructs a watermelon. It covers the outside with a coating of green, inside of the green it puts a layer of white, and within the white a core of red, and all through the red it scatters seeds, each one capable of continuing the work of reproduction. Where did that little seed get its tremendous power? Where did it find its coloring matter? How did it collect its flavoring extract? How did it build a watermelon? Until you can explain a watermelon do not be too sure that you can set limits to the power of the Almighty or say just what he would do or how he would do it. I cannot explain the watermelon, but I eat it and enjoy it.

Power That Is Infinite and Divine.

Everything that grows tells a like story of infinite power. Why should I deny that a divine hand fed a multitude with a few loaves and fishes when I see hundreds of millions fed every year by a hand which converts the seeds scattered over the field into an abundant harvest? We know that food can be multiplied in a few months' time. Shall we deny the power of the Creator to eliminate the element of time when we have gone so far in eliminating the element of space?

But there is something even more wonderful still, the mysterious change that takes place in the human heart when the man begins to hate the things he loved and to love the things he hated, the marvelous transformation that takes place in the man who before the change would have sacrificed the world for his own advancement, but who after the change would give his life for a principle and esteem it a privilege to make sacrifice for his convictions. What greater miracle than this that converts a selfish, self centered human being into a center from which good influences flow out in every direction! And yet this miracle has been wrought in the heart of each one of us, or may be wrought, and we have seen it wrought in the hearts of those about us. No; living in the midst of mystery and miracles, I shall not allow either to deprive me of the benefits of the Christian religion.

Some of those who question the miracle also question the theory of atonement. They assert that it does not accord with their idea of justice for one to die for others. Let each one bear his own sins and the punishments due for them, they say. The doctrine of vicarious suffering is not a new one. It is as old as the race. That one should suffer for others is one of the most familiar of principles, and we see the principle illustrated every day of our lives.

I find proof that man was made in the image of his Creator in the fact that throughout the centuries man has been willing to die that blessings denied to him might be enjoyed by his children, his children's children and the world.

The seeming paradox, "He that saveth his life shall lose it, and he that loseth his life for my sake shall find it," has an application wider than that usually given to it. It is an epitome of history. Those who live only for themselves live little lives, but those who give themselves for the advancement of things greater than themselves find a larger life than the one surrendered.

Instead of being an unnatural plan, the plan of salvation is in perfect harmony with human nature as we understand it. Sacrifice is the language of love, and Christ in suffering for the world adopted the only means of reaching the heart, and this can be demonstrated not only by theory, but by experience, for the story of his life, his teachings, his sufferings and his death has been translated into every language, and everywhere it has touched the heart.

But if I were going to present an argument in favor of the divinity of Christ I would not begin with miracles or mystery or theory of atonement. I would begin with the fact that Christ lived. Christ presents an example of purity in thought and life, and man, conscious of his own imperfections and grieved over his shortcomings, finds inspiration in one who was tempted in all points just as we are and yet was without sin.

Christ as an Example of Humility.

Humility is a rare virtue. If one is rich he is apt to be proud of his riches. If he has distinguished ancestry he is apt to be proud of his lineage. If he is well educated he is apt to be proud of his learning. Some one has suggested that if one becomes humble he soon becomes proud of his humility. Christ, however, possessed of all power, was the very personification of humility.

The most difficult of all the virtues to cultivate is the forgiving spirit. Revenge seems to be natural to the human heart. To want to get even with an enemy is a common sin. It has even been popular to boast of vindictiveness. It was once inscribed on a monument to a hero that he had repaid both friends and enemies more than he had received. This was not the spirit of Christ. He taught forgiveness, and in that incomparable prayer which he left as a model for our petitions he made our willingness to forgive the measure by which we may claim forgiveness. He not only taught forgiveness, but he exemplified his teachings in his life. When those who persecuted him brought him to the most disgraceful of all deaths his spirit of forgiveness rose above his sufferings, and he prayed, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do."

What conclusion is to be drawn from the life, the teachings and the death of this historic figure? Reared in a carpenter's shop, with no knowledge of literature save Bible literature, with no acquaintance with philosophers living or with the writings of sages dead, this young man gathered disciples about him, promulgated a higher code of morals than the world had ever known before and proclaimed himself the Messiah. He taught and performed miracles for a few brief months and then was crucified. His disciples were scattered and many of them put to death. His claims were disputed, his resurrection denied and his followers persecuted, and yet from this beginning his religion has spread until millions take his name with reverence upon their lips and thousands have been willing to die rather than surrender the faith which he put into their hearts. How shall we account for him? "What think ye of Christ?" It is easier to believe him divine than to explain in any other way what he said and did and was.

I have selected this theme that I may present some of the reasons which lead me to believe that Christ has fully earned the title the Prince of Peace and that in the years to come it will be more and more applied to him. Faith in him brings peace to the heart, and his teachings when applied will bring peace between man and man. And if he can bring peace to each heart and if his creed will bring peace throughout the earth who will deny his right to be called the Prince of Peace?

All the world is in search of peace. Every heart that ever beat has sought for peace, and many have been the methods employed to secure it. Some have thought to purchase it with riches, and they have labored to secure wealth, hoping to find peace when they were able to go where they pleased and buy what they liked. Of those who have endeavored to purchase peace with money the large majority have failed to secure the money. But what has been the experience of those who have been successful in accumulating money? They all tell the same story—viz, that they spent the first half of their lives trying to get money from others and the last half trying to keep others from getting their money and that they found peace in neither half. Some have even reached the point where they find difficulty in getting people to accept their money, and I know of no better indication of the ethical awakening in this country than the increasing tendency to scrutinize the methods of money making. A long step in advance will have been taken when religious, educational and charitable institutions refuse to condone immoral methods in business and leave the possessor of ill gotten gains to learn the loneliness of life when one prefers money to morals.

Some have sought peace in social distinction; but, whether they have been within the charmed circle and fearful lest they might fall out or outside and hopeful that they might get in, they have not found peace.

Some have thought—vain thought!—to find peace in political prominence; but, whether office comes by birth, as in monarchies, or by election, as in republics, it does not bring peace. An office is conspicuous only when few can occupy it. Only when few in a generation can hope to enjoy an honor do we call it a great honor. I am glad that our Heavenly Father did not make the peace of the human heart depend upon the accumulation of wealth or upon the securing of social or political distinction, for in either case but few could have enjoyed it, but when he made peace the reward of a conscience void of offense toward God and man he put it within the reach of all. The poor can secure it as easily as the rich, the social outcast as freely as the leader of society and the humblest citizen equally with those who wield political power.

Christ promoted peace by giving us assurance that a line of communication can be established between the Father above and the child below. And who will measure the consolation that has been brought to troubled hearts by the hour of prayer?

Proof of Immortality.

And immortality! Who will estimate the peace which a belief in a future life has brought to the sorrowing? You may talk to the young about death ending all, for life is full, and hope is strong, but preach not this doctrine to the mother who stands by the deathbed of her babe or to one who is within the shadow of a great affliction.

Christ gave us proof of immortality, and yet it would hardly seem necessary that one should rise from the dead to convince us that the grave is not the end. To every created thing God has given a tongue that proclaims a resurrection.

If the Father deigns to touch with divine power the cold and pulseless heart of the buried acorn and to make it burst forth from its prison walls, will he leave neglected in the earth the soul of man, made in the image of his Creator? If he stoops to give to the rosebush whose withered blossoms float upon the autumn breeze the sweet assurance of another springtime, will he refuse the words of hope to the sons of men when the frosts of winter come? If matter mute and inanimate, though changed by the forces of nature into a multitude of forms, can never die, will the spirit of man suffer annihilation when it has paid a brief visit like a royal guest to this tenement of clay? No; I am as sure that there is another life as I am that I live today.

In Cairo I secured a few grains of wheat that had slumbered for more than three thousand years in an Egyptian tomb. As I looked at them this thought came into my mind: If one of those grains had been planted on the banks of the Nile the year after it grew and all its lineal descendants planted and replanted from that time until now, its progeny would today be sufficiently numerous to feed the teeming millions of the world. If this invisible germ of life in the grain of wheat can thus pass unimpaired through three thousand resurrections, I shall not doubt that my soul has power to clothe itself with a body suited to its new existence when this earthly frame has crumbled into dust.

A belief in immortality not only consoles the individual, but it exerts a powerful influence in bringing peace between individuals. If one really thinks that man dies as the brute dies, he may yield to the temptation to do injustice to his neighbor when the circumstances are such as to promise security from detection. But if one really expects to meet again and live eternally with those whom he knows today he is restrained from evil deeds by the fear of endless remorse.

Again, Christ deserves to be called the Prince of Peace because he has given us a measure of greatness which promotes peace. When his disciples disputed among themselves as to which should be greatest in the kingdom of heaven, he rebuked them and said, "Let him who would be chiefest among you be the servant of all." Service is the measure of greatness. It always has been true. It is true today and it always will be true that he is greatest who does the most of good. And yet what a revolution it will work in this old world when this standard becomes the standard of life! Nearly all of our controversies and combats arise from the fact that we are trying to get something from each other. There will be peace when our aim is to do something for each other. Our enmities and animosities arise from our efforts to get as much as possible out of the world. There will be peace when our endeavor is to put as much as possible into the world. Society will take an immeasurable step toward peace when it estimates a citizen by his output rather than by his income and gives the crown of its approval to the one who makes the largest contribution to the welfare of all.

Christ has also led the way to peace by giving us a formula for the propagation of good. Not all of those who have really desired to do good have employed the Christian method—not all Christians even. In all the history of the human race but two methods have been employed.

The first is the forcible method. The other is the Bible plan—be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good. And there is no other way of overcoming evil. I am not much of a farmer. I get more credit for my farming than I deserve, and my little farm receives more advertising than it is entitled to. But I am farmer enough to know that if I cut down weeds they will spring up again, and I know that if I plant something there which has more vitality than the weeds I shall not only get rid of the constant cutting, but have the benefit of the crop besides.

In order that there might be no mistake about his plan of propagating good Christ went into detail and laid emphasis upon the value of example—"So live that others seeing your good works may be constrained to glorify your Father which is in heaven." There is no human influence so potent for good as that which goes out from an upright life.

The World's Only Hope.

It may be a slow process, this conversion of the world by the silent influence of a noble example, but it is the only sure one, and the doctrine applies to nations as well as to individuals. The gospel of the Prince of Peace gives us the only hope that the world has, and it is an increasing hope, of the substitution of reason for the arbitrament of force in the settlement of international disputes.

But Christ has given us a platform more fundamental than any political party, more farreaching and more comprehensive than any platform ever written by the convention of any party in any country. When he condensed into one commandment those of the ten which relate of man's duty toward his fellows and enjoined upon us the rule "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself" he presented a plan for the solution of all the problems that now vex society or may hereafter arise. Other remedies may palliate or postpone the day of settlement, but this is all sufficient, and the reconciliation which it effects is a permanent one.

If I were to attempt to apply this thought to various questions which are at issue, I might be accused of entering the domain of partisan politics, but I may safely apply it to two great problems. First let us consider the question of capital and labor. This is not a transient issue or a local one. It engages the attention of the people of all countries and has appeared in every age. The immediate need in this country is arbitration, for neither side to the controversy can be trusted to deal with absolute justice if allowed undisputed control. But arbitration, like a court, is a last resort. It would be better if the relations between employer and employee were such as to make arbitration unnecessary. Just in proportion as men recognize their kinship to each other and deal with each other in the spirit of brotherhood will friendship and harmony be secured. Both employer and employee need to cultivate the spirit which follows from obedience to the great commandment.

Ethics of Money Making.

The second problem to which I would apply this platform of peace is that which relates to the accumulation of wealth. We cannot much longer delay consideration of the ethics of money making. That many of the enormous fortunes which have been accumulated in the last quarter of a century are now held by men who have given to society no adequate service in return for the money secured is now generally recognized. While legislation can and should protect the public from predatory wealth, a more effective remedy will be found in the cultivation of a public opinion which will substitute a higher ideal than the one which tolerates the enjoyment of unearned gains. No man who really knows what brotherly love is will desire to take advantage of his neighbor, and the conscience when not seared will admonish against injustice. My faith in the future rests upon the belief that Christ's teachings are being more studied today than ever before and that with this larger study will come an application of those teachings to the everyday life of the world. In former times men read that Christ came to bring life and immortality to light and placed the emphasis upon immortality; now they are studying Christ's relation to human life. In former years many thought to prepare themselves for future bliss by a life of seclusion here; now they are learning that they cannot follow in the footsteps of the Master unless they think about doing good. Christ declared that he came that we might have life, and have it more abundantly. The world is learning that Christ came not to narrow life, but to enlarge it.

But this Prince of Peace promises not only peace, but strength. Some have thought his teachings fit only for the weak and the timid and unsuited to men of vigor, energy and ambition. Nothing could be further from the truth. Only the man of faith can be courageous. Confident that he fights on the side of Jehovah, he doubts not the success of his cause. What matters it whether he shares in the shouts of triumph? If every word spoken in behalf of truth has its influence and every deed done for the right weighs in the final account, it is immaterial to the Christian whether his eyes behold victory or whether he dies in the midst of the conflict.

Only those who believe attempt the seemingly impossible and by attempting prove that one with God can chase a thousand and two can put ten thousand to flight. I can imagine that the early Christians who were carried into the arena to make a spectacle for those more savage than the beasts were entreated by their doubting companions not to endanger their lives. But, kneeling in the center of the arena, they prayed and sang until they were devoured. How helpless they seemed, and, measured by every human rule, how hopeless was their cause! And yet within a few decades the power which they invoked proved mightier than the legions of the emperor, and the faith in which they died was triumphant o'er all that land. It is said that those who went to mock at their sufferings returned asking themselves, "What is it that can enter into the heart of man and make him die as these die?" They were greater conquerors in their death than they could have been had they purchased life by a surrender of their faith.

What would have been the fate of the church if the early Christians had had as little faith as many of our Christians now have? And, on the other hand, if the Christians of today had the faith of the martyrs, how long would it be before the fulfillment of the prophecy that every knee shall bow and every tongue confess?

Our faith should be even stronger than the faith of those who lived 2,000 years ago, for we see our religion spreading and supplanting the philosophies and creeds of the orient.

As the Christian grows older he appreciates more and more the completeness with which Christ fills the requirements of the heart, and, grateful for the peace which he enjoys and for the strength which he has received, he repeats the words of the great scholar, Sir William Jones:

Before thy mystic altar, heavenly truth,
I kneel in manhood as I knelt in youth.
Thus let me kneel till this dull form decay
And life's last shade be brightened by thy ray.

KODAK SAFETY FILM

LOOKING TO TAFT TO DEFEAT CANNON.

Opponents Of Speaker Say President-Elect Must Declare Himself.

By J. C. WELLIVER.

Washington, Nov. 30.—As members of Congress arrive in Washington day by day, the tentative contest over the Speakership is beginning to pass from a simmer to a boil. It simmered for a week; it will boil during the last week before Congress meets, and for sometime thereafter. Then, everything will depend on the manifestation which shall come from the camp of the incoming administration.

Among the men who have come to Washington thus far, the sentiment is pretty decidedly bearish on any proposition of defeating the Speaker. Even among the men who would like to see a change, the feeling is strong that his defeat is likely to prove impossible. It is definitely understood that President Roosevelt, who is no more fond of the Speaker than is Mr. Taft, feels that it is very doubtful whether the Burton announuement from Hot Springs was good politics.

The President has a way of figuring out carefully the chances of winning before he projects himself into fights. In this case he feels as do many of the insurgent House members, that victory in a contest against the Speaker is most uncertain, and that defeat in such a contest would be extremely unfortunate.

The Taft camp must soon decide whether it will press the effort against Cannon. If it is to do so, it must have a candidate for Speaker or else a group of candidates. "You can't beat somebody with nobody," is a political maxim which has been deeply impressed in practical minds in recent months. Mr. Taft couldn't be beaten for the Chicago nomination by a rope-of-sand alliance; Governor Hughes couldn't be defeated for the New York Gubernatorial nomination by a combination of disaffection and personal ambitions for bosship; and Mr. Cannon cannot be beaten unless some man of great strength leads the opposition forces.

But in casting about for a candidate the insurgents are much at loss. Mr. Burton will know whether he is going to be Senator several weeks before the Speaker must be elected. He could enter the Speakership race, if defeated for the Senator. But there are obvious difficulties. Defeated for Senator, he would have lost prestige. More serious still, he would have lost precious weeks of time. While holding the field open on the chance of his entering it, he would have given the Cannon people time and opportunity to obtain pledges.

What is needed now is either one overshadowing candidate for the anti-Cannon forces, or else a group of candidates who, each in his own locality, will be able to hold out a following, the aggregate of which will be a large enough to comprise a majority of the Republican members. Who are the possible anti-Cannon candidates.

Mr. Burton comes first. He is looked on as the most promising man to gain some votes in the region east of the Alleghanies and north of of the Ohio. In that territory most of the votes are at this time regarded as sure for Cannon. Any thing obtained there is pure gain. Burton is the type of man to make appeal in the East.

Next comes Charles E. Townsend of Michigan, author of the so-called Esch-Townseud railroad rate legislation measures which started the railroad control fight the House, and leader of the insurgents in the last session. Townsend has proved his complete sympathy with the progressive program, and likewise has demonstrated that he has courage and ability in organization and on the floor.

Another man who is being studied by the insurgents is Fred. C. Stevens of Minnesota, and Walter I. Smith of Iowa is regarded as a possible man to hold together a force of mid-Western people. Smith has been giving evidence of entire willingness to be considered and members in Nebraska and Iowa have declared for him.

Congressman Cooper of Wisconsin is another whose name is never omitted in such considerations. He has been the most outspoken and earnest of critics of both the rules and the Speaker; he has had long and honorable service; in ability and character he is ranked among the strongest men in the House.

The East is the region of overpowering Cannon strength. Massachusetts men are personally displeased with Cannon; yet, it is said, all but one will vote for him. The suggestion has been put forward that Herbert Parsons, Republican boss of New York county, would be a strong card with the big Empire State delegation. But Parsons' friends says he has pledged himself to Cannon. Pennsylvania is expected to give every vote to Cannon, fight or no fight.

Against this array of Cannon forces there stands the possibility of getting results through an appeal to the country; of using the power of patronage and the Administration's influence; of drawing the line so sharply on the character of tariff revision as to scare courage into men who do not want to be called to task for a failure of revision. The declaration that Taft would veto a tariff bill which did not meet with his approval has given pause to many members who know that their districts would be indignant if they should support an organization whose failure to execute party pledges would result in such a disaster.

LOVE OF THE BEAUTIFUL.

How to Awaken Interest In Civic Improvement.

Every person loves in some degree ornamentation and the beauties of nature. It often occurs that a business man is so engrossed in his affairs that love of the beautiful has no chance to develop, and sometimes when such a one retires this appreciation develops so rapidly that we know it was just slumbering. Often, too, one has to travel in less favored lands than his natural surroundings, or even to be shut out or sight of natural beauty in a hospital ward or prison cell before the taste is properly awakened.

No student of Byron can fail to be impressed by the love of the beautiful evidenced by the poet in his "Prisoner of Chillon," where he so vividly describes the song and appearance of the bird both seen and heard through prison bars, nor how beautifully he describes the scene opened to the prisoner's view when he succeeded in digging steps in the wall that would enable him to look through the grated window and see mountains, expanse of water, the distant city—

And then there was a little isle,
Which in my very face did smile,
The only one in view—
A small green isle, it seemed no more,
Scarce broader than my dungeon floor,
But in it there were three small trees,
And o'er it blew the mountain breeze,
And by it there were waters flowing,
And on it there were young flowers growing
Of gentle breath and hue.

It occurs in many lives that but a suggestion is needed to change the whole current of thought or bring to life the slumbering love for the beautiful. Civic improvement associations have often received the widest appreciation and financial support from men and women known for years to take no interest in the civic beautifying. Workers along these lines should not be discouraged by a lack of encouragement. Keep right on with all the aid you can command—if your cause and work are good the results will kindle in many hearts that smoldering appreciation that may in the end be most productive of common good. A primping up of your neighbor from a seeming lethargy or indifference, and before long the whole community will be working in harmony to build the city beautiful.

Humus Burned Out.

The real loss is far greater than any estimate shows, based upon the amount of timber consumed and the value of the property of the settler and the houses and improvements of the villages and towns. The greatest loss, probably, is one that is never taken in account—the loss of young trees and the loss in humus.

After one of these terrible conflagrations has swept over a timber slashing not a living thing of vegetation is left. Nature has to begin again the work of furnishing protection for the naked earth; years must elapse before the traces of the dreary desolation are hidden. The farmer who returns to rebuild his home upon the ashes is without material for building or feeding, and soon he is without material for living except what he buys.

But the loss of humus is a far greater loss. The vegetable matter so abundant on the surface of the soil in a new country is devoured by the flames. The top soil with all that it contains is turned into ashes. For two or three years good crops may follow because of the abundance of ashes lying over the soil, but the stimulating effect of these is soon lost. The area burned over will not recover what it lost by such a conflagration in a score of years or in a period much longer.—St. Paul Pioneer Press.

The Gambles of the Poor.

"The greatest problem today among the poor and middle poor." says George Ethelbert Walsh in Moody's Magazine, "is that of good investments of their savings." The poor man, like his prosperous brother, is not free, unhappily, from a desire to better his condition. But when by dint of hard work and rigid economy he has accumulated $200 or $300, he is usually very much at a loss to invest it. At this juncture some plausible villian appears and pockets his savings in return for a Spanish castle or a dozen shares in a gold mine situated in the mountains of the moon. But it is a fundamental and hitherto unchallenged principle that every man may squander his money in his own fashion. It is in these modern times quite proper to pry into a man's conscience, but to pry into his purse is an intrusion on the most sacred part of his nature. The reserve which has been exercised in this matter is astonishing—and in some respects quite commendable. Yet there is certainly an opportunity for philanthropy in the dissemination among the honest poor of some information on sound and unsound investments. Too often the story of the investment of their hard won savings might be described as "The short but simple gambles of the poor."—New York Evening Post.

The Indian as an Athlete.

Any one who has seen the Carlisle battalion on parade, its ranks of slim dusky-faced youths moving with a step at once swift and stealthy, will not need to be told that it contains the material for several foot ball elevens, full of fire and courage, quick, dextrous, keen nerved. The battalion speads that even to those not familiar with the history of the game or the records of the play. The Carlisle lads are civilized Indians so far as training, discipline and organization go, and doubtless this experience aids them in playing a game in which so much depends on a happy combination of the initiative in the individual and unity of the team; but they have not been wholly under obligation to the white man for that adaptability to sport which dexterity expresses. The Indians have long been athletes in their way, and did their records survive we should undoubtedly find among them evidence of great play ers, tribal idols, the cynosures of dusky galleries. Before the palefaces came the Indians had their sports, precisely as they had their chowder, and the newcomers were not long in realizing that in athletic contests it was their brawn that gave them success over the redskins. The Indian brain was good; the Indian body supple; the Indian skill subtle; the Indian nerve all that could be desired, sometimes more.—Boston Transcript.

A Business Proposition

Did you ever stop to think, Mr. Business Man, that the news of your business is as much a part of the local events as a wedding or a church fair? The ladies are just as much interested in a new fabric you have on the shelves as they are in any home happening. Your store news and anouncements in these columns will reach a large circle of eager buyers. This will enable you to sell your goods while they are new and fresh and you will not have to sacrifice later at remnant counter prices. Think it over.

W. H. RAVENSCRAFT, M.D., PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON, OAKLAND, MD.
Residence on North Third street.
Office in McComas Building.

DR. J. E. LEGGE, PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON,
Offers his Services to the citizens of Oakland and vicinity.
Office in McComas Building, Second street

DR. R. F. BARTLETT, DENTIST.
Office in McComas Building, Second street, Oakland, Md.
Special attention given to bridge and crown work.

DR. J. G. ROBINSON, DENTIST, OAKLAND MD
Office at residence on Liberty street.
GAS ADMINISTERED.

NORMAN S. HEINDELL, ATTORNEY-AT-LAW,
All business given prompt attention.
Office—First National Bank Building.
KLAND, MARYLAND.

GILMOR S. HAMILL, ATTORNEY-AT-LAW AND SOLICITOR IN CHANCERY.
Office in Garrett National Bank Building
Particular attention given to Conveyancing Investigation of land titles and collection of claims. Loans negotiated.

EDWARD H. SINCELL, ATTORNEY-AT-LAW, OAKLAND, MARYLAND.
Will practice inthe Courts of Garrett and Allegany counties, the Court of Appeals of Maryland, and the adjoining counties of West Virginia.

Baltimore & Ohio R. R.

Schedule effective June 2, 1907.

OAKLAND.

* Daily. † Daily except Sunday. § Sunday only.
For WASHINGTON, BALTIMORE, PHILADELPHIA & NEW YORK. Depart *12.27 a. m., *6.51 a. m., *4.17 p. m., *8.29 p. m.. Arrive *7.12 a. m., *3.33 p. m., *10.26 p. m., *11.54 p. m.
For CUMBDELAND and Way Points. Depart *10.00 a. m., *4.40 p. m. Arrive *9.26 a. m., *7.26 p. m.
For COLUMBUS & CHICAGO, Depart *11.54 p. m. Arrive *6.07 a. m., *4.17 p. m.
For GRAFTON (Accom.). Depart *9.26 a. m., *7.26 p. m. Arrive *10.00 a. m., *4.40 p. m.
For FAIRMONT and WHEELING, Depart *9.26 a. m. (local), *5.30 p. m., *11.54 p. m. Arrive *6.07 a. m., *4.17 p. m., *12.25 night.
For FAIRMONT (Accom.), Depart *7.26 p. m. Arrive *10.00 a. m.
For CINCINNATI, LOUISVILLE and ST. LOUIS, Depart *7.12 a. m., *3.33 p. m., *10.26 p. m. Arrive *12.27 a. m., *6.51 a. m., *8.29 p. m.

FOR SALE.

We will sell at private sale at our farms between Mt. Lake Park and Oakland,

1 Gasoline Engine,

8 horse-power, made by the International Harvester Co. Almost new and in perfect running order. Will be sold for $275.

1 Hay Bailer,

operated by horse-power. Makes standard size bales.

For further information call on or write to

THE H. WEBER & SONS CO.,
Oakland, Md.

Oakland Pharmacy

JOS. E. HARNED, Proprietor.

Drugs, Chemicals, Stationery, Cigars

Cameras and Photo Supplies

GETTY BROWNING, CIVIL AND MINING ENGINEERING.

Office—"Mountain Democrat Building,"
OAKLAND, MARYLAND,
Real Estate Bought and Sold.
Particular Attention Given Railroad & Mine Surveying.

Surveys made for Town Sites, Sewerage and Water Works. Prompt attention given Land Surveying. Both Phones.

Land for Sale.

We have for sale the following valuable tracts of land:

One Military Lot of 50 acres, a small portion of which is under cultivation. All good land, and every acre tillable. Watered by several good springs and a never failing small run. Contains some good timber. One-half mile from R. R. siding, and one and one-half miles from Oakland.

Also part of two Military Lots containing about 50 acres. This property is directly East of Oakland, on the South side of the B. & O. R. R. siding on the North side of tracks. Contains valuable grazing land, a portion of which is in cultivation. Valuable R. R. frontage.

Also 10 acres suitable for building sites, just East of Oakland on the North side of the Oakland and Mt. Lake Park road.
For further information, address
THE H. WEBER & SONS CO.,
6-tf Oakland, Md.

A Hint to the Wise Is Sufficient.

Special Sale on
2-qt Blue Enamel Saucepan.
2-qt Blue Fnamel Pudding Pans.
2-qt Blue Enamel Preserve Kettles.

We have just received over 1500 lbs. of our famous 10c Candy.

SUNDAY SCHOOL SUPPLIES.

TAKE our advice—buy now, don't wait, but come and see

THE Little Man

and you will save money on all your Holiday Goods,

Toys, Candies, Novelties, Fancy Goods.

Baumgartner.

CAPITAL $25,000.00

The First National Bank Of Grantsville, Md.

Safe deposit vault boxes for rent.

SURPLUS $12,500.00

The Savings Department takes care of your money when waiting other investment. The money earns interest from the day it is deposited. It can be withdrawn at any time.

Its Advantages

Any amount from One Dollar up can be deposited, and interest added to principal twice a year. Pass books are issued to every depositor.

We Pay 3 Per Cent. Interest.
Open Daily except Sundays and Holidays. 9 a. m. to 4 p. m.

OFFICERS.
C. H. JENNINGS, - - President
U. M. STANTON, - Vice-President
J. O. GETTY, - - - Cashier
DIRECTORS.
C. H. Jennings, J. M. Stanton,
G. C. Keller, Eli Stanton,
W. A. Hitchins, Frank Watts,
J. O. Getty.

A. D. NAYLOR & COMP'Y

You can buy at Reduced Prices
Grain Drills, Harrows AND Plows
AT NAYLOR & CO.'S

Big Stock to select from.

Have the Farmer's Favorite Drills, the Thomas, the Superior Hoe and Disc Drills.

We have the Syracuse, the Imperial and the Wyard Plows.

Also the wood frame Harrows, the wheel and lever Harrows; also the Disc Harrow, all at reduced prices.

We also have a nice line of Spray Pumps.

Muco-Solvent

is an indispensible household remedy because it is a preventive as well as a cure, and because it arrests development of all contageous germs and bacterial diseases. It cures croup, colds, tonsilitis with its associated ills and all inflamed and catarrhal conditions of the mucous surface. It is a harmless vegetable preparation that may safely be administered to the tenderest babe. If not for sale in your neighborhood, write to

THE PIEDMONT SUPPLY CO.,
Sole Agents for Muco-Solvent. Piedmont, W. Va.

Real Estate Bargains

I offer for sale

FARM OF 147 ACRES, 3 miles from Oakland; good 6-room House; plenty of water; over 50 acres cleared; about 25 acres of grass; 2 Orchards, bearing; over 75 acres of White Oak Timber; R. F. D. mail service.

COTTAGE OF 6 ROOMS for sale at Mt. Lake Park.

HOUSE AND LOT on Oak Street, Oakland, for sale or rent. House of 6 rooms—Lot 50x150 feet, with Stable and all necessary Outbuildings.

FOUR VERY DESIRABLE BUILDING LOTS situated on Liberty Street, in Oakland. Also 3 DWELLING HOUSES on Liberty Street, with good water and all necessary outbuildings.

HOUSE AND LOT on Wilson Street. House of 10 rooms; good water. Lot 150 feet front. Best Outbuildings in Oakland.

A VERY GOOD FARM 1 mile from Oakland—all under fence; containing 32 acres; about 25 under cultivation; 2 fine Orchards, and about 2½ acres in small Fruit; 2 Houses, a very good Well and a never failing Spring. A very desirable place for Truck and Poultry Farming. Can be bought at a low price just now.

I have for sale 18 of the very best Building Lots in the town which I will sell for cash—or $5 down and $5 per month.

150 ACRES OF VALUABLE COAL LAND situated less than two miles of Oakland which can be bought at a great bargain. The surface would make fine farming land. This land is well watered with a stream and several good springs.

12 MORE CHOICE BUILDING LOTS at $5 down and $5 per month.

If you want cash for your Real Estate, or Real Estate for your cash, let me hear from you.

☞For further particulars call on or address

James A. Sincell Real Estate Agt and Surveyor
Sincell Building, OAKLAND MD

When Oakland Was a Lonely Bear-Hunter's Camp

In the following article which appeared in the Baltimore Sun of last Sunday, a great injustice has been done Oakland by the writer, who seems to be staff correspondent of the paper mentioned. To one unacquainted with the town the impression would be that Oakland is unprogressive, unappreciative of the many natural advantages and that we have made no improvements worthy of note during the last quarter of a century.

The Sun's correspondent speaks as though we have no modern buildings except the new county buildings and those owned by the B. & O. Railroad Company, whereas many excellent private residences are scattered over the town and nowhere can a better building be found than that owned by the First National Bank. He was blind to the fact that we have many squares of paved streets, an excellent electric light system and the construction of a system of water works and sewerage under way.

The Sun's article follows and is published in these columns to show our readers how narrow minded a city newspaper man can be:

OAKLAND, MD., Nov. 28.

If Dickens or Thackeray or some other author of the day when chapterheads were more informing than the text they prefaced had been engaged to write this paper in the series on "The County Seats of Maryland," instead of me, he would doubtless have composed introductory lines somewhat as follows (though, possibly not in as elegant English as mine):

"CHAPTER ONE. In which the Author introduces himself, relates a scandalous scandal of his early professional career, and generally prepares the reader for the excellent feast he is about to spread."

A handful of years ago, in city which I shall not name, I was employed in a reportorial capacity upon a daily newspaper. After much earnest toil I succeeded so far in ironing the natural brogue from the tongue of my pen that I was assigned one day to write about the opening of a long-forgotten department store.

When I reached the store to collect impressions I found congregated there some three or more other newspaper representatives, who were holding a heart-to-heart talk with the proprietor of the establishment.

This proprietor was a most accommodating man He showed us gowns direct from Paris that he was selling at less that $8, to make his competitors crazy. He showed us other offerings that were equally marvelous.

And then he led us to the door, held us there a moment while he surveyed critically the little company of earnest penpushers, and finally announced with due regard to the oratorical possibilities of the speech:

"I'll tell you what, gentlemen—the man who writes me the best story in his newspaper, I will give him a cigar."

This little incident of a rather gloomy past came back to my memory as I neared Oakland. Here is a town, I told myself, that is a chilly summer resort, but I am interviewing it in bleak November. It will present about as much allurment as a barroom at 6.30 in the morning or a theatre when the charwomen are doing their stunt.

Such were my pre-Oakland reveries. If I painted things as I then anticipated them, the summer vacationist would write me down an Ananias or some hotel manager might hand my name to the Black Hand Society. And on the other hand, if I told the brazen truth as I did not find it, there rose up no saintlier visions than that of some hotelkeeper rewarding me with a bit of cheese in addition to pie for desert, when next I returned to Oakland.

Oakland, on first blush, does not hold out much promise of being presentable to company in winter time. For instance, the city would seem to have no great history, since 60 years ago it consisted of a single building—a railway station Furthermore, the average resort in its off season is just about as attractive as a comic-opera chorus lady in her street clothes and real complexion.

But Oakland surprised me even more than the department store proprietor. I reached the town at night—a cold, clear, starry night—and there is nothing to equal the mountain tops on such an occasion. Oakland then was beautiful, invigorating, serene.

Moreover, when I journeyed forth next morning to inspect the county seat of Garrett in its less pleasing aspect I chanced upon a veritable mine of local history that entranced me more than that of the average historical county seats.

The previous night Oakland—a summer resort town—had revealed itself a winter paradise. The morning Oakland—the city without a history—became the town with as fascinating a story as can be found among Maryland books.

One of those sturdy pioneers who won the mountainous country of Western Maryland from the Indians to the white man, from wild beasts to domesticated animals, from uncultiaated vegetation to agriculcural—one of these pioneers, after having spent nearly half a century as an adventurer and hunter, recorded the events of his life in a book, and a wonderful record he made of it.

Meshach Browning's "Forty-four Years of the Life of a Hunter," appeared nearly 50 years ago, and, in the eastern part of Maryland—except in a few isolated cases—the volume is probably completely forgotten by now.

In the far west of the State, however, the work is still bought and read and re-read, and it may be regarded as the chief and only authority upon life in what is now Garrett county in the days before Oakland was founded or the infant county of Maryland created.

Because Mr Browning's book is both reliable and interesting, he may be freely quoted in so far as the history of Oakland prior to 1849 is concerned. His descriptions might have been lifted without giving him credit, but it were folly to attempt to paraphrase the lines which, according to the author of "Forty-four Years of the Life of a Hunter," were "roughly written down." It is the simple narrative style of the author that gives the volume much of its attractiveness.

"There were then [prior to 1849] hundreds, if not thousands of acres of * * * grass growing where there is now nothing but bushes and a rough and very inferior kind of grass, which serve very well for early pasture, but is of little worth for hay. My mind cannot imagine a more beautiful sight than could be obtained from the highest grounds of the Hooppole Ridge, which commanded a view of the valley between that and the great Backbone—a distance of from 6 to 8 miles.

"It was a grand sight to watch the tall grass, rolling in beautiful waves with every breeze which passed over its smooth surface, as well as the herds of deer, skipping and playing with each other. It was not a strange thing to see a great lubberly looking bear forcing his way through the grass, when every deer which got a sight or a scent of him would bound off, with tail erect, toward the nearest thicket. Sometimes a wolf could be seen prowling among the high grass, endeavoring to sneak on a fawn, or, if possible, even on a grown deer.

"I used to think the months of April, May and June were the best for a visit to these natural and beautiful meadows, as during those months there was not such a high growth of grass as would hide the the turkeys from the traveler. From 50 to 100 young turkeys in one large glade of perhaps 100 or more acres and in every sort of action was a sight pleasant to the eye of the beholder.

"Men of other States, but first those of Virginia, becoming acquainted with our glades, were so much delighted with these unbounded pasture lands that they prevailed on some of the settlers to herd large quantities of cattle in them, for which they paid from 50 to 75 cents a head. This being soon discovered by Pennsylvania, they followed the example of Virginia, and from April to September they crowded the glades with hundreds and thousands of cattle, eating, tramping and running over every place in the glade country.

"Meantime the herders were at all times in the glades, calling to and whooping at the cattle, besides shooting at the deer and other game, until the animals became alarmed, and all the best of those that were not suckling fawns abandoned the glades and hid in the mountains, when the deer, owing to this constant slaughter, became scarce. Those herders would bleat like a fawn, and when the distressed mother would come they would shoot her down and leave the poor little fawn to starve.

"This cruel practice was carried on until the neighboring settlers became so much annoyed at it that they petitioned the Legislature to pass some law or laws for their relief.

"But, unhappily, no law was ever enacted which could prevent the practice, and the people, seeing themselves still imposed on and laws made for their benefit and relief entirely disregarded, rose and went to the glades in the night and there attacked and shot numbers of the cattle, and no doubt they would have shot the herders also had they attempted to rescue their flocks.

"This, in a great measure, put a stop for some years to the herding of foreign cattle, but not until the game was seriously thinned by these and other means no less disgraceful, such as chasing the deer in deep snows when they could not help themselves and when neither meat nor skin was fit for use. Hundreds were destroyed in this way, and, between the one and the other practice, the breed of deer in Allegany has become very scarce.

"The early settlers, being but few in number, had a hard time to maintain themselves, and had they not used the greatest economy they could not have lived in the wilderness at all. But they all made their own clothes, they raised flax and wool, which the women spun and wove in to linen and linsey for the men, and flannel for their own wear. This was certainly better for females in winter and not liable to half of the danger from fire that cotton is at this time.

"If any man wished to hire help the parties would have an understanding as to what the wages were to be paid in. Sometimes linsey, pork, beef, honey or corn, and at others a calf, pig, sheep, deerskin, bearskin, coonskin, or a wolf's scalp, together with many other articles, were used as substitutes for money, but if any man was so lucky as to have money the wages he paid would surely be lower, and a day's work ranked from 33 to 50 cents—differing according to the length of the day. No difference, however, was made between harvesting and digging potatoes.

"If a man wore a pair of boots he was considered a gentleman, and if a single lady had on a pair of calfskin shoes, or, by chance, a pair made of morocco, she was at once declared a belle All the settlers lived in a cabin and fed their children on bread, meat, butter, honey and milk. Coffee and tea were almost out of the question being used by only a very few old ladies who had been raised in other parts of the country. Meat was generally plentiful, for if the farmers could only keep the wild animals away from their hogs the nuts and acorns would make them very fat. Pork, beef, bear meat and venison were easily obtained and on fair terms, but wild meat was not thought so much of on account of its being so plentiful in every place.

"In those times politics were but little understood, and all the voters in the glade country were Federalists except one—old Mr. George Rinehart. We always held an election on the first Monday in October, when would be seen a goodly array of hunting shirts and moccasins, and almost every man with a big knife in his belt.

"A foreigner would have supposed that the voters were some military party going to oppose a threatened invasion, and if a quarrel occurred they would take off perhaps both coat and shirt and fight until one or the other acknowledged he had as much of a beating as he was willing to receive.

"Then their friends, if they did not get into a scrape among themselves, would take the combatants to the nearest water and wash off the blood. If no serious injury was done, which was seldom the case, that would, nine fights out of ten, be the last of the quarrel.

"The people in the country west of Cumberland were exceedingly generous and particularly so to strangers traveling through their territory. If there was danger apprehended of a stranger losing his way a hunter would pilot him five, six or even ten miles, until he was out of danger of being lost, and then would not receive any compensation for his services."

Browning's description of the country about Oakland, and of Oakland itself, is as it existed prior to 1848. In that year the engineers of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, carrying the line of steel rails westward, surveyed through the heavily wooded country where there have since grown several popular summer resorts.

A year later work was begun in building a railway, and Oakland—named because of the giant oaks that were found there—began to figure as a railroad point—a very small point however, possessing little more than a name.

The town was laid out in 1849, but for some time its only claim to being a town was a single building, and that the railway station that had been erected by the Baltimore and Ohio.

Despite the ideal location of Oakland, it did not, during the early years of its existence, amount to very much. It was first the terminus of the Baltimore and Ohio's lines westward; then it became simply a stopping place on the railway, some 232 miles west of Baltimore.

The town with its elevation of 2,500 feet above tidewave did not spring immediately in to prominence as a fitting place where people might escape the heat of summer, for in those days there were much less vacationing than today.

Oakland's prominence, of its modest kind, may be said to have begun early in the 70's. At this time there was some little agitation for a division of Allegany, and when the Legislature called upon the people of what is now Garrett county to determine if they wished independence of Allegany county, there were 1297 votes for and 408 against the erection of a new county.

This election, held in accordance with an act passed by the legislature in the early part of 1872, also provided for the choosing of a county-seat. On this question the vote was 653 for Oakland, 590 for Grantsville and 456 for McHenry's Glades. Thus by a very narrow majority Oakland was selected as the governmental seat of the new county, which was named Garrett, in honor of the master-brain of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad.

The people of Garrett were not at first entirely satisfied with the selection of Oakland, and in 1875 there was a strong, but short lived, agitation in favor of a further division. When this met final defeat, then the people who had been responsible for the creation of Oakland originally went about developing the town.

The Baltimore and Ohio Railroad erected an enormous hotel which occupies a fine site just across from the railway station in 1878. A few years later—1881—a company of Methodist Episcopal ministers started Mountain Lake Park, two miles east of Oakland, and since then there has been a big development in Deer Park.

With these three resort points and other summering places adjacent, the country in which Browning found it possible to live so wild and adventurous a life, has become one great playground for very highly civilized city people in the summer.

In winter time and in the late fall and early summer Oakland is a very sedate country settlement. Its citizens stroll the streets at night, or on Wednesdays go to prayer-meeting, but there are no frivolous entertainments—not even, I believe, a moving picture show.

And yet there is some life to the city, even in the days when the good-old-summer-time is resting. The stores of Oakland, crowded closely together on the main thoroughfare, keep open very late on winter nights and so give the impression that they are doing a large business, whether they really are or not. And when the visitor sees Oakland for the first time at night he obtains an impression of the town which the daylight will go a little ways toward spoiling.

Indeed, for visiting the county-seat of Garrett in other than the vacation months, the most fascinating time is night. The air of the mountains here, especially when it is a little cold, gives the miserable city man his initial consciousness of having lungs. The average lungs that have been doing their work quietly in the dusty city for 30 or 40 or 50 years need only a first whiff of Oakland's air to swell up like a pair of leather bellows.

The city man who tumbles into Oakland on a fall or winter night is apt to be taken by surprise when he feels his chest suddenly becoming unduly inflated, and he is likely to gloat over the taste of the pure mountain air as a traveller over a dusty road becomes attached to some welcome wayside spring.

Outside of the hotel and the railroad station, the most notable structures in Oakland are the several public buildings. The Courthouse, but recently completed is a very beautiful and highly ornamental structure. The jail look's rather pleasing from the outside, but doubtless from the interior the bars go far to obstructing the view.

After these buildings, however, the city does not boast any structure of great interest. There are cosy residences and substantial business stores, but neither is different from what may be seen in almost any town of from 500 to 5000 inhabitants. There are several houses of some little historic interest such as the home of General Crook, but these are few and the interest in them is more or less local.

Oakland is spread out just a bit too much for her own advantage. The mountains, which may be seen toward all points of the compass, are massive and dignified, although they lack the beauty of the more easterly hills of the Cumberland valley.

But in the summer time the hotel managers and boarding-house keepers of Oakland decorate the hills of the county-seat and its streets and the windows of the houses with pretty city girls, and then, I am told, Oakland is even more attractive than it ever appeared to Meshach Browning during the 44 years of his hunter life.

"HARVEST HOME" THEY CALLED IT

Thanksgiving Comes From An Old English Tradition.

BEGAN A GREAT MANY YEARS AGO.

Some Curious Customs of the Past. Wheat Always the Most Important Grain—Oxen Always Used to Thresh It.

The American Thanksgiving Day is without a doubt the offspring of that feast which in England is known as "Harvest Home," and in Scotland is called "Mell Supper." But the giving of thanks to some god at the close of the autumn season for the fruits of the earth is ageless, and can be traced back as far as civilization goes. In Exodus the Isrealites are commanded to keep an autumnal feast, more explicit directions for such feast being given in the book of Leviticus. The feast was to last seven days, and on the first day the people were to gather boughs of cedar and willows of the brooks. It may be from this custom that the present day decoration of churches with greens and vegetables arose.

Herodotus mentions this autumn custom of thanksgiving, and Homer writes that "cakes and lumps of dough thrown at the head of the sacrificial victim formed a part of the Greek offering to Apollo, the sun god, at the feast of the ingathering."

In ancient times Apollo received the honors of the harvest festival, but the rustics sacrificed to Vacuna, the goddess. Images of Vacuna were made of straw, wheat, barley and rye, and were carried about with singing and cheering. Even now in England images made of straw crowned with flowers are occasionally carried about and called Ceres—the goddess of agriculture. Apollo was formerly worshipped in Britian and the Maypole is a pretty relic of those days. They decorated it with garlands to welcome the northward coming of Apollo—the sun—at whose appearance the flowers and fruits began to grow.

Various customs, all containing the same idea, have prevailed in different countries. In Scotland, when the reapers had finished their work, a small package of corn, called the "Corn Lady," was hung up in the house. The ancient Egyptians offered sacrifices and made offerings of corn and wine to Leith, the mother of the sun. Wheat, according to both sacred and secular history, was the most important grain grown in Egypt, and the mode of harvesting it is interesting. Instead of the usual method the reapers cut the straw just below the head of the wheat. It was carried in bags to the threshing floor, where it was trodden out by oxen. Sometimes the wheat was reaped in the usual way and bound up in sheaves, but oxen were always employed to separate the wheat from the straw.

What is known as "the shouting of the churn" comes down from the time when Apollo was worshipped in England. The churn or kern means a ring or circle formed by several persons holding hands. The word churn also signifies a chaplet worn around the head or carried suspended on a pole in processions. So "the shouting of the churn" means the merriment that always accompanied wearing a chaplet or dancing in a circle.

Another old custom is the "kemping" of England, in Scotland called "a mell." Mell is sometimes spelled melee, which is better, as a melee, or row, often resulted from contending for leadership in dispatching the last day's work in the field. Each reaper left a handful of the harvest uncut, and the bonniest lass was allowed to gather these handfuls and to make out of them a "corn baby." This was brought home in triumph, set up at the feast, and preserved for the remainder of the year. The lass was called the harvest queen. Sometimes instead of being made into a doll the products of the field would be formed into a mare, and the reapers would amuse the guests by trying to cut down the mare with their sickles. The man who succeeded in the undertaking would declare what should be done with the mare.

Died.

HESEN—Charles Bruce Hesen, aged thirty-nine years, son of Mr. and Mrs. Harmon Hesen, of Oakland, died on last Thursday morning in St. Joseph's Hospital, Baltimore, after an operation, which was performed on Saturday. For several months the deceased suffered intensely from an ailment which resulted from an injury received over a year ago. He went to the hospital two or three weeks previous to his death where he received treatment. His body was received in Oakland Friday night and on Monday the funeral took place from St. Peter's Catholic church with interment in the Catholic cemetery. He leaves a wife and a number of children.

Four Per Cent. Interest.

The First National Bank, Friendsville, pays four per cent. interest on time deposits. Place your money in this bank where its earning capacity will be greater than in any other banking institution in the county.

THE FIRST NATIONAL BANK,
Friendsville, Md.

FOR SALE—A small driving mare; will be sold cheap. Apply to Dr. B. F. Selby, Oakland.

PREPARING FOR THE SUFFRAGE FIGHT NEXT FALL

Republicans Will Hold State Conference This Month.

COLLECTOR STONE TO CALL IT

Realizing The Serious Problem Before Them, They Propose To Start Campaign Early.

Republicans in the State propose to lose no time in beginning their fight against the suffrage amendment which goes before the people next November. Most of them realize that it is a more serious proposition from their standpoint this time than in 1905, and if they are to defeat it they cannot begin too early.

Collector William F. Stone will take the initiative, it is understood, and early in this month, at his suggestion and invitation, a conference of Republicans will be held in Baltimore with a view of outlining plans for the fight. A number of Mr. Stone's friends from the counties have asked him to take some such step to bring together the representative Republicans, and most of these who have talked with him since the election have urged the necessity of an early start.

The idea at first was to gather together only the members of the city committee and certain representative Republicans in the city with a view of impressing the local organization, but recently it has been pointed out that the fight the Republicans want to make is a State-wide one and that the State people should participate in the striking of the keynote. It is likely now that the gathering will take the shape of a dinner, to which will be asked representative Republicans from every Congressional district, including Chairman Thomas Parran, of the State committee, and Mr. Will A. Jackson, the representative of the State on the national committee. It is probable that the dinner will be held about the middle of this month.

The Republican leaders realize that instead of being split, as they were on the first amendment, the Democratic party is going to be united and earnest in its support of this one. Four years ago the Governor, the Attorney-General, both United States Senators and a host of other party men were in the open against the measure, and most of them were on the stump against it. This time it is just the other way around.

Governor Crothers is enthusiastically in favor of the amendment and will probably strike the first blow in its advocacy for the Democrats soon after the holidays. He will go on the stump for it, as will Attorney-General Straus and both United States Senators Smith and Rayner.

Not only this, but most of the independents who opposed the Poe amendment are committed to the support of this amendment, as they participated in drafting it.

Ex-Attorney-General William Shepard Bryan, Jr., who was one of the foremost opponents of the Poe amendment, is for this amendment and is expected to be active in its support.

Mr. William L. Marbury and Mr. R. W. Cull were both members of the committee that framed the measure, and both of them were exceedingly hostile to the Poe amendment in 1905.

The Republican leaders also realize that any proposition to disenfranchise the negro always attracts a considerable number of white Republican votes. To offset all this they know it means a tremendous amount of work, and the managers of the party do not think December a bit too early to begin, although the election will not take place for nearly 11 months. They hope not only to so alarm the negroes in the State about the probability of their losing their votes that they will vote solidly against the amendment without inducements, but to prejudice the big foreign vote in the city against it.

The Gold Mine is the best place to buy Toys. Why? because you can get what you want.

CHILDREN MAKE CONFECTIONERY

a serious matter for the honest candy maker. He must produce a flavor that will satisfy their natural appetites for sweets. He must be careful that his products must be harmless and wholesome.

THE PURITY OF OUR CANDY

is beyond question. None but the best materials are used in even the lowest priced confectionery we sell. As to the flavor, well, buy a box and let the children be the judges—we'll abide by their decision.

OAKLAND MODEL STEAM
HENRY LAUER BAKERY Proprietor

Take me out to the Gold Mine.

THE REPUBLICAN.

VOLUME 32. OAKLAND, MARYLAND, THURSDAY, DECEMBER 10, 1908. NUMBER 41

THE NEW COURT HOUSE WAS DEDICATED MONDAY

Speeches Made By Members of the Bar, the Court and Commission.

Last Monday morning prior to convening court for the December term a very interesting and impressive ceremony took place in the court room, participated in by the Court, members of the bar, members of the Court House Commission and by the Board of County Commissioners, when the new building was dedicated to the purposes for which it had been erected.

The ceremonies were of an informal nature to some extent and occupied about two hours, closing with a prayer of thanksgiving by Rev. E. Manges that the lives of those engaged in erecting the building had been spared and asking God's blessing upon the Court and those connected with it in any way, closing with the benediction.

On the bench were Chief Judge A. Hunter Boyd and Associate Judges Robert R. Henderson and Martin L. Keedy, while occupying the seats reserved for the jurors were assembled the members of the bar and members of the Court House Commission.

The first speaker was State Senator Brown, who is secretary of the Commission having the erection of the building in hand, and in his talk of a few minutes' duration he exhibited a lucid and comprehensive statement of the work accomplished by the Commission and a short history of the growth and wonderful development of Garrett county, making the erection of the new building absolutely necessary for the purposes of the Court and the other county officers. Mr. Brown produced figures showing the amount of money received by the Commission as well as the amount expended by it in building and furnishing the structure, all of which will appear in a report to be published in the near future.

Following Senator Brown, Judge Henderson addressed the assemblage, congratulating the people upon the completion of the building and earnestly urging all by precept and example to aid in keeping the building and the grounds surrounding it neat and presentable, and closing his remarks by presenting to County Commissioner A. C. Smith the keys to the court house, the Commissioners being the custodians of the public property.

Mr. Smith in accepting the keys said: "As a member of the Board of County Commissioners it falls upon me to accept the keys to this beautiful building and I do so gladly, knowing that a mistake has not been made in giving to the people of this county such a structure. We have been awakened to the needs of the county in the matter of more commodious quarters for the public business and we must also become aware of our needs along the lines of public roads, the necessity for the betterment of which becomes more apparent every day."

On the part of the Commission Mr. C. M. Miller spoke freely and fluently upon the great service rendered the county by that body, paying especial tribute to Judges Boyd and Henderson for the interest manifested by them as well as Secretary Brown.

Mr. Fred. A. Thayer, Mr. Gilmor S. Hamill and Mr. Thomas J. Peddicord, on the part of the bar, also made remarks, those of the latter being expressed with deep feeling as he reviewed the past and spoke tenderly of the memory of the members of the Court and bar who have passed away.

The address of Chief Judge A. Hunter Boyd we print in full as follows:

Truly this is a beautiful building, of which the people of Garrett county may justly be proud. It's cost may be somewhat burdensome to the taxpayers, but no well informed person will contend that the Court and other public business of the county could longer be properly conducted in the building which we have just vacated.

For the first time in the history of the county most county officers will be shelter under one roof, and ample provision have been made for the comfort of attorneys, jurors, witnesses and others attending Court, as well as for all residents of the county, who, when in Oakland, desire a pleasant place of rest during business hours, either during the sittings or the recesses of the Court.

Some new departures, for us, have been made in this room and other parts of the building, which at first may not strike you favorably, but the experience of others, with a practical unanimity of approval by those who have tried them elsewhere, caused their adoption. For an occasion such as this, this (court) room may be small, but for the purpose for which it is intended its size is in accord with the most mature modern thought on the subject, for it is now the opinion of the most careful observers that it is not always to the profit of a community to have large court rooms. The trials of certain classes of criminal cases, which unfortunately too often bring large crowds of people, attracted by sensational and other questionable evidence, do harm to many of the spectators, especially the young, and hence it is believed to be better that the court room be of a size which will enable the Court to regulate to some extent the admission of visitors at such trials. In my own experience I have been convinced that some trials attended by large numbers of persons, from curiosity or perhaps less excusable cause, have been productive of harm, and that in such cases the fewer spectators we have the better for the morals of the community.

But it is not of such matters that I am expected to speak, as others have already directed your attention to the beauties, conveniences and advantages of this handsome edifice, and I prefer to let your judgment be based on what they have said, and upon your own inspection.

Within these walls the great powers vested in the Judges of the Circuit Court by the constitution and laws of our State will be exercised; widows, orphans and others interested in the estates of the dead will have their rights determined by the Orphans' Court; the public roads and monies, as well as the county interests in general, will receive consideration from the County Commissioners; the records containing the deeds, mortgages and other liens and papers affecting your properties will be in the custody of the Clerk; the School Board will consider and mature plans for the education of your children: the Supervisors of Elections will perform their important functions which affect your rights pertaining to the elective franchise; the Treasurer will receive and disburse your taxes. These and others officers will be called upon to discharge the duties which may concern your liberties, your properties and other rights.

With the exception of the House of God, no building can be erected in a county within which the interests of its people may be so vitally affected as the court house. While, therefore, the architecture, arrangement and quality of such a structure are to be considered, and, if pleasing, admired, after all the great questions are, whether the duties of its various occupants are well and faithfully performed, and whether the people at large are ready to do their part towards making it truly a "Temple of Justice," where the rights of all, regardless of their position or influence, will be protected and conserved.

In this building there should be no distinction between capital and labor, the rich and the poor, the strong and the weak, Jew and Gentile, Protestant and Catholic. Justice is pictured as blind, and she should be too blind to make such distinctions, but never so blind that she cannot distinguish right from wrong. If its administration here fails in those respects, then the beauty of these material things will be marred by those for whose use the building was erected. If the public officers to be here sheltered do their full duty, then indeed will the people of this county have cause to rejoice that they are the possessors of perhaps the handsomest county court house in the state, but if any of those officers wittingly and materially fails in that, then there will not only be just cause for complaint, but every dollar expended will cry out against the betrayal of such public trust.

As I was to speak particularly for the Circuit Court, I desire to extend the thanks of its judges to this people for furnishing them with quarters in which they can now comfortably, and I believe, more satisfactorily discharge their duties. If their comfort alone had been involved they would gladly have sacrificed it, if desirable, but in the old building they were so hampered by the lack of facilities for themselves and those attending court that delays were at times occasioned, and there was not the opportunity for consultation and study, which are required during the sittings of Court, which is now afforded. I therefore say that their duties can now be more "satisfactorily" discharged—certainly to themselves and doubtless to you.

Permit me to again impress upon you the thought which I suggested more at length in a paper submitted by me at the ceremonies connected with the laying of the cornerstone of this building—that after all, an intelligent and honest administration of justice and a faithful performance of public trusts depend in a great measure upon the people at large, and not wholly upon those in office. An enlightened, pure, and, above all, religious public sentiment, will do more towards eradicating evil and establishing right and justice in a community than the mere enforcement of human laws can possibly accomplish. Laws we have had since the creation of the world, and must have them as long as imperfect man peoples the earth, but it is a fact, which is wise to recognize and remember, that no law can be successfully and thor ughly enforced, if contrary to public sentiment, and that the proper enforcement of a wise and desirable law cannot be accomplished without the aid of the law-abiding citizens of a community.

It is therefore of the utmost importance that public sentiment be correctly and honestly formed. One potent way of accomplishing this is by sustaining the legally constituted authorities, and avoiding careless and unjust criticism of them. You encourage the lawbreaker by every word you utter which reflects upon the officers of the law. You are then in a sense particeps criminis—a partaken in the crime—he breaks, you encourage him to break the law. I would not have you to understand me as denying your right to criticise the actions of the officers of the law, if they deserve it, however high they be, but first be certain that your criticism is just, and in reaching a conclusion on that subject do not be guided by prejudice or too great readiness to attribute improper motives to others. The worst critics are often the worst men; they judge others by themselves and impute bad motives to others because they would in similar situations be influenced by such motives. Some men spend their lives in tearing down, and never build up. Such men are of no good to the community in which they live.

But the way you can best help to create a proper public sentiment, in connection with the subject we are considering, is by fearlessly and faithfully doing your duty. If intelligent jurors always measured up to the standard the law establishes for them when in the jury box, those less intelligent would hesitate more to be influenced by sympathy, prejudice, mercy or other improper motives. It is true that "Earthly power doth then show likest God's When mercy seasons justice."

but when jurors are selected to determine a case, and invoke the presence of Almighty God to witness that they solemnly promise and declare that they will well and truly try the issues before them, or true deliverance make between the prisoner and the State, according to the law and evidence, and yet are influenced to render a verdict contrary to their honest convictions, by their sympathy for the prisoner or his friends, then now easy it is for another jury composed of perhaps less intelligent and weaker men to be guided by their sympathies or prejudices, and thus, perhaps unconsciously, violate their oaths A verdict of a jury clearly contrary to the law and the evidence should not be approved by public sentiment, which should cause jurors to see how such a verdict is regarded by law abiding people. If all jurors were governed by the law and the evidence alone, much of the unfavorable criticism of the administration of justice would cease. If those who are placed in the jury-box, or other positions to administer justice, would arise above fear, favor, prejudice and sympathy, we would then indeed have an ideal government and the rights of all would be protected.

So without further detaining you, I would appeal to you, the law-abiding, honest and intelligent people of Garrett county, to do your part towards making this a place where justice, which Daniel Webster said "is the greatest interest of man on earth," shall always be done; where the humblest citizen of the county can feel assured that he is on an equality with the highest; where "the protest of the weak against the strong" can always have a fair hearing; but where "equal and exact justice to all men, of whatever state or persuasion, religious or political," will be made certain.

Garrett County

4

PER CENT.

Court House Bonds

These Bonds are in Denominations of $500 and represent the Highest Grade of Investment from the standpoint of Security and Income. They afford an excellent opportunity for the investment of your idle funds at a profit able rate of interest.

FOR TERMS, Address

BOND DEPARTMENT

The Second National Bank

OF

Cumberland, Maryland.

BALTIMORE & OHIO R.R. PLANS ANOTHER BRANCH

May Spend $4,800,000 on a Road Along Pennsylvania Border to Open Great Coal Fields.

The construction of 60 miles of new road at a cost of approximately $4,800,000 to extend from Smithfield, Pa., or Morgantown, W. Va., to Wheeling, running along the southeastern border line of Pennsylvania, is the purpose of the Baltimore & Ohio, according to reports current in Pittsburg railroad circles.

It is further declared that additional trackage may be laid from the Deer Park district in Maryland to connect with the new line at Smithfield or Morgantown. The outcome of the latter proposition, it is said, will depend upon what is to be done with the Western Maryland, a Gould road, which other interests are dominating.

Baltimore & Ohio engineering corps are working on the survey for the proposed construction. The line will be low grade, and besides making a considerable reduction in the distance between Morgantown and Wheeling, will open up enormously valuable coal fields, whose output will represent hundreds of thousands of dollars to the trade and much money to the railroad.

Quicker passenger service will also be afforded between Morgantown and Wheeling, and should connections be effected between Morgantown or Smithfield with the main line of the Baltimore & Ohio at Salisbury, a greatly reduced schedule will result between the latter place and Wheeling. Thence to Warwick, O., on the main line, will give the usual outlet to Chicago on a faster schedule.—Pittsburg Gazette.

List of Letters.

Miss Maude Fraiser, O. P. Reynolds, Mrs. Libbie Ryan, Mr. Rines Vas Prines.

10-qt. tin dish pans 10c at Baumgartner's.

DIXON & KELSO

DIXON & KELSO WILL BE IN THE MARKET FOR

2 OR 3 TONS

Fat Dry Picked

TURKEYS

for delivery DECEMBER 17 to 21, with head and feet on and entrails in for which will pay 16c per lb.

Will also want

1000 lbs. Full Dressed Chickens to be delivered MONDAY and TUESDAY BEFORE CHRISTMAS, for which we offer 12½c lb.

Will be unloading a CAR YELLOW SHELLED CORN in a few days, which we will sell at 75c. bushel CASH.

Yours to Please. DIXON & KELSO.

E. A. WEIMER.

GOOD THINGS FOR CHRISTMAS

When you spend your money for Gifts why not get something useful, such as a Hat, a pair of Shoes, Hosiery, Ties, Suspenders, Shirts, Handkerchiefs, Fancy Vests, Pajamas, Skirts, Umbrellas, Muffiers, Gloves, Cuff Buttons, Brooches, Pins, Etc. We have many of these articles in fancy boxes. Come and see before you buy.

Yours Truly. E. A. WEIMER.

NEXT DOOR TO THE POSTOFFICE OAKLAND, MD

INTO THE PRIMITIVE

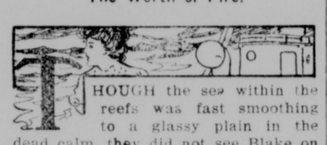
BY ROBERT AMES BENNET

ILLUSTRATIONS BY RAY WALTERS

COPYRIGHT 1908 BY A.C. McCLURG & CO.

CHAPTER III.

The Worth of Fire.



THOUGH the sea within the reefs was fast smoothing to a glassy plain in the dead calm, they did not see Blake on his return until he struck shallow water and stood up to wade ashore. The tide had begun to ebb before he started landward, and though he was a powerful swimmer, the long pull against the current had so tired him that when he took to wading he moved at a tortoise-like gait.

"The bloomin' loafer!" commented Winthrope. He glanced quickly about, and at sight of Miss Leslie's arching brows, hastened to add: "Beg pardon! He—ah—reminds me so much of a navvy, you know."

Miss Leslie made no reply.

At last Blake was out of the water and toiling up the muddy beach to the spot where he had left his clothes. While dressing he seemed to recover from his exertions in the water, for the moment he had finished he sprang to his feet and came forward at a brisk pace.

As he approached, Winthrope waved his fifth cigarette at him with languid enthusiasm, and called out as heartily as his dry lips would permit: "I say, Blake, deuced glad the sharks didn't get you!"

"Sharks?—bah! All you have to do is to splash a little and they haul off."

"How about the steamer, Mr. Blake?" asked Miss Leslie, turning to face him.

"All under but the maintopmast—curse it!—wire rigging at that! Couldn't even get a bolt."

"A bolt?"

"Not a bolt; and here we are as good as naked on this infernal—Hey, you! what you doing with that match? Light your cigarette—light it!— Damnation!"

Heedless of Blake's warning cry, Winthrope had struck his last vesta, and now, angry and bewildered, he stood staring while the little taper burned itself out. With an oath, Blake sprang to catch it as it dropped from between Winthrope's fingers. But he was too far away. It fell among the damp rushes, spluttered, and flared out.

For a moment Blake knelt, staring at the rushes as though stupefied; then he sprang up before Winthrope, his bronzed face purple with anger.

"Where's your matchbox? Got any more?" he demanded.

"Last one, I fancy—yes; last one, and there are still two cigarettes. But look here, Blake, I can't tolerate your talking so deucedly—"

"You idiot! you—you— Hell! and every one for cigarettes!"

From a growl Blake's voice burst into a roar of fury, and sprang upon Winthrope like a wild beast. His hands closed upon the Englishman's throat, and he began to shake him about, paying no heed to the blows his victim showered upon his face and body, blows which soon began to lessen in force.

Terror-stricken, Miss Leslie put her hands over her eyes, and began to scream—the piercing shriek that will unnerve the strongest man. Blake paused as though transfixed, and as the half-suffocated Englishman struggled in his grasp, he flung him on the ground and turned to the screaming girl.

"Stop that squawking!" he said. The girl cowed down. "So; that's better. Next time keep your mouth shut."

"You—you brute!"

"Good! You've got a little spunk, eh?"

"You coward—to attack a man not half your strength!"

"Steady, steady, young lady! I'm warm enough yet; I've still half a mind to wring his fool neck."

"But why should you be so angry? What has he done, that you—"

"Why—why? Lord! what hasn't he done? This coast fairly swarms with beasts. We've not the smell of a gun; and now this idiot—this dough-head—has gone and thrown away our only chance—fire—and on his measly cigarettes!" Blake choked with returning rage.

Winthrope, still panting for breath, began to creep away, at the same time unclasping a small penknife. He was white with fear; but his gray eyes—which on shipboard Blake had never seen other than offensively supercilious—now glinted in a manner that served to alter the American's mood.

"That'll do," he said. "Come here and show me that knife."

"I'll show it you where it will do the most good," muttered Winthrope, rising hastily to repel the expected attack.

"So you've got a little sand, too," said Blake, almost good-naturedly. "Say, that's not so bad. We'll call it quits on the matches. Though how you could go and throw them away—"

"Deuce take it, man! How should I know? I've never before been in a wreck."

"Neither have I—this kind. But I tell you, we've got to keep our think tanks going. It's a guess if we see tomorrow, and that's no joke. Now do you wonder I got hot?"

"Indeed, no! I've been an ass, and here's my hand to it—if you really mean it's quits."

"It's quits all right, long as you don't run out of sand," responded Blake, and he gripped the other's soft hand until the Englishman winced. "So; that's settled. I've got a hot temper, but I don't hold grudges. Now, where're your fish?"

"I—well, they were all spoiled."

"Spoiled?"

"The sun had shriveled them."

"And you call that spoiled! We're like to eat them rotten before we're through with this picnic. How about the pools?"

"Pools? Do you know, Blake, I never thought of the pools. I stopped to watch you, and then we were so anxious about you—"

Blake grunted and turned on his heel to wade into the half-drained pool in whose midst he had been deposited by the hurricane.

Two or three small fish lay faintly wriggling on the surface. As Blake splashed through the water to seize them his foot struck against a living body which floundered violently and flashed a brilliant forked tail above the muddy water. Blake sprang over the fish, which was entangled in the reeds, and with a kick flung it clear out upon the ground.

"A coryphene!" cried Winthrope, and he ran forward to stare at the gorgeously colored prize.

"Coryphene?" repeated Blake, following his example. "Good to eat?"

"Fine as salmon. This is only a small one, but—"

"Fifteen pounds if an ounce!" cried Blake, and he thrust his hand in his pocket. There was a moment's silence, and Winthrope, glancing up, saw the other staring in blank dismay.

"What's up?" he asked.

"Lost my knife."

"When?—in the pool? If we felt about—"

"No; aboard ship, or in the surf—"

"Here is my knife."

"Yes; almost big enough to whittle a match! Mine would have done us some good."

"It is the best steel."

"All right; let's see you cut up the fish."

"But you know, Blake, I shouldn't know how to go about it. I never did such a thing."

"And you, Miss Jenny? Girls are supposed to know about cooking."

"I never cooked anything in all my life, Mr. Blake, and it's alive—and—and I am very thirsty, Mr. Blake!"

"Lord!" commented Blake. "Give me that knife."

Though the blade was so small, the American's hand was strong. After some little haggling, the coryphene was killed and dressed. Blake washed both it and his hands in the pool, and began to cut slices of flesh from the fish's tail.

"We have no fire," Winthrope reminded him, flushing at the word.

"That's true," assented Blake, in a cheerful tone, and he offered Winthrope two of the pieces of raw flesh. "Here's your breakfast. The trimmed piece is for Miss Leslie."

"But it's raw! Really, I could not think of eating raw fish. Could you, Miss Leslie?"

Miss Leslie shuddered. "Oh, no!—and I'm so thirsty I could not eat anything."

"You bet you can!" replied Blake. "Both of you take that fish and go to chewing. It's the stuff to ease your thirst while we look for water. Good Lord!—in a week you'll be glad to eat raw snake. Finnicky over clean fish, when you swallow canvas-back all but raw, and beef running blood, and raw oysters with their stomachs full of disintegrated animal matter, to put it politely. You couldn't tell rattlesnake broth from chicken, and dog makes first-rate veal—when you've got to eat it. I've had it straight from them that knows that over in France they eat snails and fish-worms. It's all a matter of custom or the style."

"To be sure, the Japanese eat raw fish," admitted Winthrope.

"Yes; and you'd swallow your share of it if you had an invite to a swell dinner in Tokyo. Go on now, both of you. It's no joke, I tell you. You've got to eat, if you expect to get to water before night. Understand? See that headland south? Well, it's 100 to 1 we'll not find water short of there, and if we make it by night, we'll be doing better than I figure from the looks of these bogs. Now go to chewing. That's it! That's fine, Miss Jenny!"

Miss Leslie had forced herself to take a nibble of the raw fish. The flavor proved less repulsive than she had expected, and its moisture was so grateful to her parched mouth that she began to eat with eagerness. Not to be outdone, Winthrope promptly followed her lead. Blake had already cut himself a second slice. After he had cut more for his companions, he began to look them over with a closeness that proved embarrassing to Miss Leslie.

"Here's more of the good stuff," he said. "While you're chewing it, we'll sort of take stock. Everybody shell out everything. Here's my outfit—three shillings, half a dozen poker chips, and not another blessed— Say, what's become of that whisky flask? have you seen my flask?

"Here it is, right beside me, Mr. Blake," answered Miss Leslie. "But it is empty."

"Might be worse! What you got?—hairpins, watch? No pocket, I suppose?"

"None; and no watch. Even most of my pins are gone," replied the girl, and she raised her hand to her loosely coiled hair.

"Well, hold on to what you've got left. They may come in for fish-hooks. Let's see your shoes."

Miss Leslie slowly thrust a slender little foot just beyond the hem of her draggled white skirt.

"Good Lord!" groaned Blake, "slippers, and high heels at that! How do you expect to walk in those things?"

"I can at least try," replied the girl, with spirit.

"Hobble! Pass 'em over here, Winnie, my boy."

The slippers were handed over. Blake took one after the other and wrecked off the heel close to its base.

"Now you've at least got a pair of slippers," he said, tossing them back to their owner. "Tie them on tight with a couple of your ribbons, if you don't want to lose them in the mud. Now, Winthrope, what you got beside the knife?"

Winthrope held out a bunch of long flat keys and his cigarette case. He opened the latter and was about to throw away the two remaining cigarettes when Blake grasped his wrist.

"Hold on! even they may come in for something. We'll at least keep them until we need the case."

"And the keys?"

"Make arrow-heads, if we can get fire."

"I've heard of savages making fire by rubbing wood."

"Yes; and we're a long way from being savages—at present. All the show we have is to find some kind of quartz or flint, and the sooner we start to look the better. Got your slippers tied, Miss Jenny?"

"Yes; I think they'll do."

"Think! It's knowing the thing. Here, let me look."

The girl shrank back; but Blake stooped and examined first one slipper and then the other. The ribbons about both were tied in dainty bows. Blake jerked them loose and twisted them firmly over and under the slippers and about the girl's slender ankles before knotting the ends.

"There; that's more like. You're not going to a dance," he growled.

He thrust the empty whisky flask into his hip pocket and went back to pass a sling of reeds through the gills of the coryphene.

"All ready now," he called. "Let's get a move on. Keep my coat closer about your shoulders, Miss Jenny, and keep your shade up, if you don't want a sunstroke."

"Thank you, Blake, I'll see to that," said Winthrope. "I'm going to help Miss Leslie along. I've fastened our two shades together, so that they will answer for both of us."

"How about yourself, Mr. Blake?" inquired the girl. "Do you not find the sun fearfully hot?"

"Sure; but I wet my head in the sea, and here's another souse."

As he rose with dripping head from beside the pool he slung the coryphene on his back and started off without further words.

CHAPTER IV.

A Journey in Desolation.

MORNING was well advanced and the sun beat down upon the three with almost overpowering fierceness. The heat would have rendered their thirst unendurable had not Blake hacked off for them bit after bit of the moist coryphene flesh.

In a temperate climate ten miles over firm ground is a pleasant walk for one accustomed to the exercise. Quite a different matter is ten miles across mud-flats, covered with a tangle of reeds and rushes, and frequently dipping into salt marsh and ooze. Before they had gone a mile Miss Leslie would have lost her slippers had it not been for Blake's forethought in tying them so securely. Within a little more than three miles the girl's strength began to fail.

"Oh, Blake," called Winthrope, for the American was some yards in the lead, "pull up a bit on that knoll. We'll have to rest a while, I fancy. Miss Leslie is about pegged."

"What's that?" demanded Blake. "We're not half-way yet!"

Winthrope did not reply. It was all he could do to drag the girl up on the hummock. She sank, half-fainting, upon the dry reeds, and he sat down beside her to protect her with the shade. Blake stared at the miles of swampy flats which yet lay between them and the out-jutting headland of gray rock. The base of the cliff was screened by a belt of trees; but the nearest clump of green did not look more than a mile nearer than the headland.

"Hell!" muttered Blake, despondently. "Not even a short four miles. Mush and sassiety girls!"

Though he spoke to himself the others heard him. Miss Leslie flushed and would have risen had not Winthrope put his hand on her arm.

"Could you not go on and bring back a flask of water for Miss Leslie?" he asked. "By that time she will be rested."

"No; I don't fetch back any flasks of water. She's going when I go, or you can come on to suit yourselves."

"Mr. Blake, you—you won't go and leave me here! If you have a sister —if your mother—"

"She died of drink, and both my sisters did worse."

"My God, man! do you mean to say you'll abandon a helpless young girl?"

"Not a bit more helpless than were my sisters when you rich folks' guardians of law and order jugged me for the winter 'cause I didn't have a job and turned both girls into the street—onto the street, if you know what that means—one only 16 and the other 17. Talk about helpless young girls—Damnation!"

Miss Leslie cringed back as though she had been struck. Blake, however, seemed to have vented his anger in the curse, for when he again spoke there was nothing more than impatience in his tone. "Come on, now; get aboard. Winthrope couldn't lug you a half-mile, and long's it's the only way don't be all day about it. Here, Winthrope, look to the fish."

"But, my dear fellow, I don't quite take your idea, nor does Miss Leslie, I fancy," ventured Winthrope.

"Well, we've got to get to water or Stopped, Utterly Spent.

die; and as the lady can't walk she's going on my back. It's a case of have-to."

"No! I am not—I am not! I'd sooner die!"

"I'm afraid you'll find that easy enough later on, Miss Jenny. Stand by, Winthrope, to help her up. Do you hear? Take the knife and fish and lend a hand."

There was a note in Blake's voice that neither Winthrope nor Miss Leslie dared disregard. Though scarlet with mortification, she permitted herself to be taken pick-a-back upon Blake's broad shoulders and meekly obeyed his command to clasp her hands about his throat. Yet even at that moment, such are the inconsistencies of human nature, she could not but admire the ease with which he rose under her weight.

Now that he no longer had the slow pace of the girl to consider, he advanced at his natural gait, the quick, tireless stride of an American railroad surveyor. His feet, trained to swamp travel in Louisiana and Panama, seemed to find the firmest ground as by instinct, and whether on the half-dried mud of the hummocks or in the ankle-deep water of the bogs, they felt their way without slip or stumble.

Winthrope, though burdened only with the half-eaten coryphene, toiled along behind, greatly troubled by the mud and the tangled reeds, and now and then flung down by some unlucky misstep. His modish suit, already much damaged by the salt water, was soon smeared afresh with a coating of greenish slime. His one consolation was that Blake, after jeering at his first tumble, paid no more attention to him. On the other hand, he was cut by the seeming indifference of Miss Leslie. Intent on his own misery, he failed to consider that the girl might be suffering far greater discomfort and humiliation.

More than three miles had been covered before Blake stopped on a hummock. Releasing Miss Leslie, he stretched out on the dry crest of the knoll and called for a slice of the fish. At his urging the others took a few mouthfuls, although their throats were so parched that even the moist flesh afforded scant relief. Fortunately for them all, Blake had been thoroughly trained to endure thirst. He rested less than ten minutes; then taking Miss Leslie up again like a rag doll, he swung away at a good pace.

The trees were less than half a mile distant when he halted for the second time. He would have gone to them without a pause, though his muscles were quivering with exhaustion, had not Miss Leslie chanced to look around and discover that Winthrope was no longer following them. For the last mile he had been lagging farther and farther behind, and now he had suddenly disappeared. At the girl's dismayed exclamation, Blake released his hold and she found herself standing in a foot or more of mud and water. The sweat was streaming down Blake's face. As he turned around, he wiped it off with his shirt-sleeves.

"Do you—can it be, Mr. Blake, that he has had a sunstroke?" asked Miss Leslie.

"Sunstroke? No; he's just laid down, that's all. I thought he had more sand—confound him!"

"But the sun is so dreadfully hot, and I have his shade."

"And he's been tumbling into every other pool. No; it's not the sun. I've half a mind to let him lie—the paper-legged swell! It would no more than square our aboard-ship accounts."

"Surely, you would not do that, Mr. Blake! It may be that he has hurt himself in falling."

"In this mud?—bah! But I guess I'm in for the pack-mule stunt all around. Now, now; don't yowl, Miss Jenny. I'm going. But you can't expect me to love the snob."

As he splashed away on the return trail, Miss Leslie dabbed at her eyes to check the starting tears.

"Oh, dear—Oh, dear!" she moaned; "what have I done to be so treated? Such a brute. Oh, dear!—and I am so thirsty!"

In her despair she would have sunk down where she stood had not the sliminess of the water repelled her. She gazed longingly at the trees, in the fore of which stood a grove of stately palms. The half-mile seemed an insuperable distance, but the ride on Blake's back had rested her and thirst goaded her forward.

Stumbling and slipping she waded on across the inundated ground, and came out upon a half-baked mud-flat, where the walking was much easier. But the sun was now almost directly overhead, and between her thirst and the heat she soon found herself faltering. She tottered on a few steps farther, and then stopped, utterly spent. As she sank upon the dried rushes she glanced around and was vaguely conscious of a strange, double-headed figure following her path across the marsh. All about her became black.

The next she knew Blake was splashing her head and face with brackish water out of the whisky flask. She raised her hand to shield her face, and sat up, sick and dizzy.

"That's it!" said Blake. He spoke in a kindly tone, though his voice was harsh and broken with thirst. "You're all right now. Pull yourself together and we'll get to the trees in a jiffy."

"Mr. Winthrope—?"

"I'm here, Miss Genevieve. It was only a wrenched ankle. If I had a stick, Blake, I fancy I could make a go of it over this drier ground."

"And lay yourself up for a month. Come, Miss Jenny, brace up for another try. It's only a quarter-mile, and I've got to pack him."

The girl was gasping with thirst; yet she made an effort, and, assisted by Blake, managed to gain her feet. She was still dizzy; but as Blake swing Winthrope upon his back, he told her to take hold of his arm. Winthrope held the shade over her head. Thus assisted, and sheltered from the direct beat of the sun-rays, she tottered along beside Blake, half-unconscious.

Fortunately the remaining distance lay across a stretch of bare dry ground, for even Blake had all but reached the limit of endurance. Step by step he labored on, staggering under the weight of the Englishman and gasping with a thirst which his exertions rendered even greater than that of his companions. But through the trees and brush which stretched away inland in a wall of verdure he had caught glimpses of a broad stream and the hope of fresh water called out every ounce of his reserve strength.

At last the nearest palm was only a few paces distant. Blake clutched Miss Leslie's arm and dragged her forward with a rush in a final outburst of energy. A moment later all three lay gasping in the shade. But the river was yet another 100 yards distant. Blake waited only to regain his breath; then he staggered up and went on. The others, unable to rise, gazed after him in silent misery.

Soon Blake found himself rushing through the jungle along a broad trail pitted with enormous footprints; but he was so near mad with thirst that he paid no heed to the spoor other than to curse the holes for the trouble they gave him. Suddenly the trail turned to the left and sloped down a low bank into the river. Blind to all else, Blake ran down the slope and dropping upon his knees plunged his head into the water.

At first his throat was so dry that he could no more than rinse his mouth. With the first swallow his swollen tongue mocked him with the salt, bitter taste of sea-water. The tide was flowing! He rose, sputtering and choking and gasping. He stared around. There was no question that he was on the bank of a river and would be certain of fresh water with the ebb tide. But could he endure the agony of his thirst all those hours?

He thought of his companions.

"Good God!" he groaned, "they're goners, anyway!"

He stared dully up the river at the thousands of waterfowl which lined its banks. Within close view were herons and black ibises, geese, pelicans, flamingoes, and a dozen other species of birds of which he did not know the names. But he sat as though in a stupor, and did not move even when one of the driftwood logs on a mud-shoal a few yards up-stream opened an enormous mouth and displayed two rows of hooked fangs. It was otherwise when the noontime stillness was broken by a violent splashing and loud snortings down-stream. He glanced about and saw six or eight monstrous heads drifting towards him with the tide.

"What in— Whee! a whole herd of hippos!" he muttered. "That's what the holes mean."

The foremost hippopotamus was headed directly for him. He glared at the huge head with sullen resentment. For all his stupor he perceived at once that the beast intended to land; and he sat in the middle of its accustomed path. His first impulse was to spring up and yell at the creature. Then he remembered hearing that a white hunter had recently been killed by these beasts on one of the South African lakes. Instead of leaping up he sank down almost flat and crawled back around path. Once certain

TO BE CONTINUED.

THE LAST ACT.

Now Tousiehead is fixed for bed
And, following her habit,
Darts in and out with romp and shout
With no more than a rabbit
On her wee form to keep her warm.
But garmenture is stupid,
And such as she need not to be Clothed any more than Cupid.

At least at night for pillow fight
And rush and roll and fumble
Such things as clothes and shoes and hose
Just help one to a tumble,
And, though she felt no grief at all
Comes to her where she's wriggling,
She gives a roll—God bless her soul!—
And up she scrambles giggling.

And very soon to lulling croon,
In her pink nightie smothered,
She'll softly creep, almost asleep,
To a lap to be mothered,
And, snuggled down for Slumbertown
And for the journey mounted,
Pokes out her feet and coaxes sweet
To have her "piggies" counted.

"This little pig"—that means the big
One—"went to market buying.
This piggie small went not at all,
But staid at home a-sighing.
This piggie wee had roast beef he
Had purchased for a penny,
And this pig small let loose a squall
Because he hadn't any.
"This piggie wee wished some, for he
Imagined he would love it.
He squeaked: 'Wee! Wee! Give some to me!
Now, you give me some of it!'
Did he get it? Nay; not a bit
And nearly died of weeping"—
Here's where I go out tippytoe,
For Tousiehead is sleeping.

—J. M. Lewis in Houston Post.

Her Just Deserts.

Professor Zueblin, glancing around to see where the money would do the most good, comes to bat with a suggestion that we pension the mothers of the land.

There is an idea that may meet with the approval of all, nor should those who fear paternalism is a slow kind of poison raise a howl that could be heard a block away, as the measure would be strictly maternal in its nature.

Mother would certainly know what to do with the money, and father would stay around on pay day as polite and attentive as a book agent who is explaining the latest things in literature to a millionairess.

To the members of the family it would be like having money in the bank. They would always know where they could borrow a quarter while mother had money. On the whole, it looks like a good thing. Let us plug for the mothers' pension.

P'r'aps, P'r'aps Not!

The Patient (having escaped from the chair)—I think perhaps I'll call again tomorrow.—Sketch.

Fixed.

"But," said the good old lady, "why don't you go to work?"

"Why, ma'am," began the disreputable old loafer, "yer see, I got a wife an' five children to support"—

"But how can you support them if you don't go to work?"

"As I was a-sayin', lady, I got a wife an' five children to support me."—Catholic Standard and Times.

Nocturnal Inventions.

Mr. Stubb—This paper states that a genius should never marry. It says that a married man cannot invent things like a single man.

Mrs. Stubb (sarcastically)—Nonsense, John! I notice a married man never has any trouble inventing excuses about getting home late.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Strength of Mind.

Mrs. Oatcake—Your husband 'pears t' be a pow'rful strong minded man.

Mrs. Hayrix — He shore is. I've know'd him t' read a patent medicine almanac from cover t' cover without feelin' that he had enny uv th' symptoms."—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

Setting the Date.

"Have you any idea when the duke's marriage to Miss Richgirl will take place?"

"Well, some time within the next three months. He has a big note to pay which falls due in ninety days."—New York Herald.

The Blessing of Health.

"We don't value health nearly as much as we should."

"There are times when we do. I know I value it highly after listening to that old bore of a Binglewood tell about his numerous ailments."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Couldn't Feel Superior.

"Mabel doesn't make much of a hit with the young men."

"No; she can't hold one."

"Still, she seems to attract them."

"Yes, but they soon find out that she knows as much about baseball as they do."

Very Unkind.

"What is the matter with your eye, man?"

"A cross section of timber I was sawing flew up and hit me."

"Must have been a mighty cross section and ill tempered as well."

THE REPUBLICAN
Job Printing Department

WITHIN the past year the increased made upon the Job Printing Department of The Republican necessitated many improvements, and to meet the requirements of our rapidly increasing business an addition of considerable proportions to our present building is in contemplation; new type and improved machinery must be purchased—but in the meantime all orders will be executed in a most satisfactory manner.

The products of our Job Printery are all models in the class—our customers are numerous and well satisfied, and wnen ordering

Statements, Vouchers,
Envelopes, Cards,
Sale Bills, Posters,
Bank Forms, Billheads,
Letterheads, Tags,
Programs, Folders,

and

Letter Press Printing of all Kinds

They are confident that the work will be Satisfactory in every particular---in WORKMANSHIP, PRICE and PAPER.

WE MAKE A SPECIALTY OF PRINTING

Lumber AND Coal Companies' Forms
Bank Stationery, Hotel Prospectus,
Lodge and Society Laws,
Reports, Etc.

It will cost you nothing to submit your Printing to us. Estimates will be cheerfully furnished you free. It must be borne in mind, however, that we do not do "cheap" printing, but we do Good Printing which has a par value of one hundred cents for every dollar invested in the product of THE REPUBLICAN PRINTERY.

THE REPUBLICAN
Job Printing Departm't
OAKLAND, MARYLAND.

A GRIZZLY HUNT

BY
THEODORE ROOSEVELT

[Copyright, 1893, by G. P. Putnam's Sons. Published under arrangement with G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York and London.]

IF out in the late fall or early spring, it is often possible to follow a bear's trail in the snow; having come upon it either by chance or hard hunting, or else having found where it leads from some carcass on which the beast has been feeding. In the pursuit one must exercise great caution, as at such times the hunter is easily seen a long way off, and game is always especially watchful for any foe that may follow its trail.

Once I killed a grisly in this manner. It was early in the fall, but snow lay on the ground, while the gray weather boded a storm. My camp was in a bleak, wind-swept valley, high among the mountains which form the divide between the head-waters of the Salmon and Clarke's Fork of the Columbia. At dawn I rose and shook myself free of the buffalo robe, coated with hoar-frost. The ashes of the fire were lifeless; in the dim morning the air was bitter cold. I did not linger a moment, but snatched up my rifle, pulled on my fur cap and gloves, and strode off up a side ravine; as I walked I ate some mouthfuls of venison, left over from supper.

A slight whistle brought him to a stand.

Two hours of toil up the steep mountain brought me to the top of a spur. The sun had risen, but was hidden behind a bank of sullen clouds. On the divide I halted, and gazed out over a vast landscape, inconceivably wild and dismal. For two hours I walked onwards across the ridges and valleys. Then among some scattered spruces, where the snow lay to the depth of half a foot, I suddenly came on the fresh, broad trail of a grisly. The brute was evidently roaming restlessly about in search of a winter den, but willing, in passing, to pick up any food that lay handy. At once I took the trail, travelling above and to one side, and keeping a sharp look-out ahead. The bear was going across wind, and this made my task easy. I walked rapidly, though cautiously.

At last, peering cautiously over a ridge crowned with broken rocks, I saw my quarry, a big, burly bear, with silvered fur. He had halted on an open hill-side, and was busily digging up the caches of some rock gophers or squirrels. He seemed absorbed in his work, and the stalk was easy. Slipping quietly back, I ran towards the end of the spur, and in ten minutes struck a ravine, of which one branch ran past within seventy yards of where the bear was working. In this ravine was a rather close growth of stunted evergreens, affording good cover, although in one or two places I had to lie down and crawl through the snow. When I reached the point for which I was aiming, the bear had just finished rooting, and was starting off. A slight whistle brought him to a standstill, and I drew a bead behind his shoulder and low down, resting the rifle across the crooked branch of a dwarf spruce. At the crack he ran off at speed, making no sound, but the thick spatter of blood splashes, showing clear on the white snow, betrayed the mortal nature of the wound. For some minutes I followed the trail; and then, topping a ridge, I saw the dark bulk lying motionless in a snow drift at the foot of a low rock-wall down which he had tumbled.

One day while camped near the Bitter Root Mountains in Montana I found that a bear had been feeding on the carcass of a moose which lay some five miles from the little open glade in which my tent was pitched, and I made up my mind to try to get a shot at it that afternoon. I stayed in camp till about three o'clock, lying lazily back on the bed of sweet-smelling evergreen boughs, watching the pack ponies as they stood under the pines on the edge of the open, stamping now and then, and switching their tails. The air was still, the sky a glorious blue; at that hour in the afternoon even the September sun was hot.

When the shadows began to lengthen, I shouldered my rifle and plunged into the woods. At first my route lay along a mountain side; then for half a mile over a windfall, the dead timber piled about in crazy confusion. After that I went up the bottom of a valley by a little brook, the ground being carpeted with a sponge of soaked moss.

At the head of this brook was a pond covered with water lilies; and a scramble through a rocky pass took me into a high, wet valley, where the thick growth of spruce was broken by occasional strips of meadow. In this valley the moose carcass lay, well at the upper end.

In moccasined feet I trod softly through the soundless woods. Under the dark branches it was already dusk, and the air had the cool chill of evening. As I neared the clump where the body lay I walked with redoubled caution, watching and listening with strained alertness. Then I heard a twig snap; and my blood leaped, for I knew the bear was at his supper. In another moment I saw his shaggy brown form. He was working with all his awkward giant strength, trying to bury the carcass, twisting it to one side and the other with wonderful ease.

One he got angry and suddenly gave it a tremendous cuff with his paw; in his bearing he had something half humorous, half devilish. I crept up within forty yards; but for several minutes he would not keep his head still. Then something attracted his attention in the forest, and he stood motionless looking towards it, broadside to me, with his fore-paws planted on the carcass. This gave me my chance. I drew a very fine bead between his eye and ear, and pulled trigger. He dropped like a steer when struck with a pole-axe.

If there is a good hiding-place handy it is better to lie in wait at the carcass. One day on the head-waters of the Madison, I found that a bear was coming to an elk I had shot some days before; and I at once determined to ambush the beast when he came back that evening. The carcass lay in the middle of a valley a quarter of a mile broad. The bottom of this valley was covered by an open forest of tall pines; a thick jungle of smaller evergreens marked where the mountains rose on either hand. There were a number of large rocks scattered here and there, one, of very convenient shape, being only some seventy or eighty yards from the carcass. Up this I clambered. It hid me perfectly, and on its top was a carpet of soft pine needles, on which I could lie at my ease.

Hour after hour passed by. Every slight noise made my pulses throb as I lay motionless on the rock gazing intently into the gathering gloom. I began to fear that it would grow too dark to shoot before the grisly came.

Suddenly and without warning, the great bear stepped out of the bushes and trod across the pine needles with such swift and silent footsteps that its bulk seemed unreal. It was very cautious, continually halting to peer around; and once it stood up on its hind legs and looked long down the valley towards the red west. As it reached the carcass I put a bullet between its shoulders. It rolled over, while the woods resounded with its savage roaring. Immediately it struggled to its feet and staggered off; and fell again to the next shot, squalling and yelling. Twice this was repeated; the brute being one of those bears which greet every wound with a great outcry, and sometimes seem to lose their feet when hit—although they will occasionally fight as savagely as their more silent brethren. In this case the wounds were mortal, and the bear died before reaching the edge of the thicket.

I spent much of the fall of 1889 hunting on the head-waters of the Salmon and Snake in Idaho and along the Montana boundary line from the Big Hole Basin and the head of the Wisdom River to the neighborhood of Red Rock Pass and to the north and west of Henry's Lake. During the last fortnight my companion was the old mountain man, named Griffeth or Griffin—I cannot tell which, as he was always called either "Hank" or "Griff." He was a crabbedly honest old fellow, and a very skilful hunter; but he was worn out with age and rheumatism, and his temper had failed even faster than his bodily strength. He showed me a greater variety of game than I had ever seen before in so short a time nor did I ever before or after make so successful a hunt. But he was an exceedingly disagreeable companion on account of his surly, moody ways. I generally had to get up first, to kindle the fire and make ready breakfast, and he was very quarrelsome. Finally, during my absence from camp one day, while not very far from Red Rock pass, he found my whiskey-flask, which I kept purely for emergencies, and drank all the contents.

When I came back he was quite drunk. This was unbearable, and after some high words I left him, and struck off homeward through the woods on my own account. We had with us four pack and saddle horses; and of these I took a very intelligent and gentle little bronco mare, which possessed the invaluable trait of always staying near camp, even when not hobbled. I was not hampered with much of an outfit, having only my buffalo sleeping-bag, a fur coat, and my washing kit, with a couple of spare pairs of socks and some handkerchiefs. I walked, while the little mare followed almost like a dog, often without my having hold the lariat which served as halter.

As dusk was coming on I halted and camped in a little open spot by the side of a small, noisy brook, with crystal water. I opened the pack, tossed the bedding on a smooth spot, knee-haltered the little mare, dragged up a few dry logs, and then strolled off, rifle on shoulder, through the frosty gloaming, to see if I could pick up a grouse for supper.

As I was thinking of turning towards camp, I stole up to the crest of one of the ridges, and looked over into the valley some sixty yards off. Immediately I caught the loom of some large, dark object; and another glance showed me a big grisly walking slowly off with his head down. He was quartering to me, and I fired into his flank, the bullet, as I afterwards found, ranging downward and piercing one lung.

At the shot he uttered a loud, moaning grunt and plunged forward at a heavy gallop, while I raced obliquely down the hill to cut him off. After going a few hundred feet he reached a laurel thicket, some thirty yards broad, and two or three times as long which he did not leave. I ran up to the edge and there halted, not liking to venture into the mass of twisted, close-growing stems and glossy foliage. Moreover, as I halted, I heard him utter a peculiar, savage kind of whine from the heart of the brush. Accordingly, I began to skirt the edge, standing on tiptoe and gazing earnestly to see if I could not catch a glimpse of his hide. When I was at the narrowest part of the thicket, he suddenly left it directly opposite, and then wheeled and stood broadside to me on the hill-side, a little above. He turned his head stiffly towards me; scarlet strings of froth hung from his lips; his eyes burned like embers in the gloom.

I held true, aiming behind the shoulder, and my bullet shattered the point or lower end of his heart, taking out a big nick. Instantly the great bear turned with a harsh roar of fury and challenge, blowing the bloody foam from his mouth, so that I saw the gleam of his white fangs; and then he charged straight at me, crashing and bounding through the laurel bushes, so that it was hard to aim. I waited until he came to a fallen tree, raking him as he topped it with a ball, which entered his chest and went through the cavity of his body, but he neither swerved nor flinched, and at the moment I did not know that I had struck him. He came steadily on, and in another second was almost upon me. I fired for his forehead, but my bullet went low, entering his open mouth, smashing his lower jaw and going into the neck. I leaped to one side almost as I pulled trigger; and through the hanging smoke the first thing I saw was his paw as he made a vicious side blow at me. The rush of his charge carried him past. As he struck he lurched forward, leaving a pool of bright blood where his muzzle hit the ground; but he recovered himself and made two or three jumps onwards, while I hurriedly jammed a couple of cartridges into the magazine, my rifle holding only four, all of which I had fired. Then he tried to pull up, but as he did so his muscles seemed suddenly to give way, his head drooped, and he rolled over and over like a shot rabbit. Each of my first three bullets had inflicted a mortal wound.

He made a vicious side blow at me.

THE REPUBLICAN

BENJ. H. SINCELL, EDITOR.

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 10, 1908.

LAST MESSAGE.

Unless something unforseen should occur President Roosevelt has sent his last message to the Sixtieth Congress which convened on Monday at noon. The message reached both houses at the convening of yesterday's session. The communication is written in the President's usual vigorous and argumentative style. There is nothing new especially in the message and is more in the order of an insistence upon his former recommendations in previous messages. With a short introductory upon the financial condition of the country declaring its condition to be excellent although the system has its defects which he recommends congress to remedy, the President launches into the various measures to which he is especially solicitious congress shall give legislative attention, among the most important is "protection for the wage earner." Upon the matter the President says:

There should no longer be any faltering with the question of taking care of the wageworkers who under our present industrial system, become killed, crippled, or worn out as part of the regular incidents of a given business. The majority of wageworkers must have their rights secured for them by State action; but the National Government should legislate in a thoroughgoing and far-reaching fashion not only for all employes of the National Government, but for all persons engaged in interstate commerce. The object sought for could be achieved to a measurable degree, as far as those killed or crippled are concerned, by proper employers' liability laws. As far as concerns those who have been worn out, I call your attention to the fact that definite steps toward providing old-age pensions have been taken in many of our private industries. These may be indefinitely extended through voluntary association and contributory schemes, or through the agency of savings banks, as under the recent Massachusetts plan. To strengthen these practical measures should be our immediate duty; it is not at present necessary to consider the larger and more general goveremental scheme that most European governments have found themselves obliged to adopt.

The President evidently considers the welfare of the working class of paramount importance and is in keeping with his oft-expressed opinion and in line with his action during his presidency, that the government should exercise a parental authority over the large labor employing corporations, whether public or private. This is the business, he believes, of good government and is the basis of the permanance of its institutions. Being the last message of a retiring President whose nearly eight years occupancy of the White House has given the country one of the best and cleanest administrations it ever had, it is entitled to even more consideration at the hands of Congress than perhaps any of his previous communications.

FIKE.

We are having some snow here at this time and the waters are very low.

Mr. F. T. Fike killed five hogs last Saturday.

The past week there have been several traveling salesmen around selling ranges and quite a number sold in this section.

We understand that we will have our rural route established shortly.

Mr. W. H. Thomas went to Oakland last Sunday to act as one of the jurors.

It is reported that Mr. Joseph Thomas has sold his farm to Mr. Jess Laraway and has bought a farm at Fearer.

There will be an interesting program rendered by the school at this place on Friday, December 18.

CARTER.

CHERRY MEADOWS.

Owing to the continued drought many springs and wells are entirely dry and water is very scarce.

While cutting wood one morning last week Mr. Bert Bittinger met with a painful accident, almost severing his thumb from his hand. He was taken immediately to Oakland by Mr. Dan Benders, where medical assistance was rendered.

Our school is progressing nicely under the direction of Ross Durst, with a total of 48 pupils.

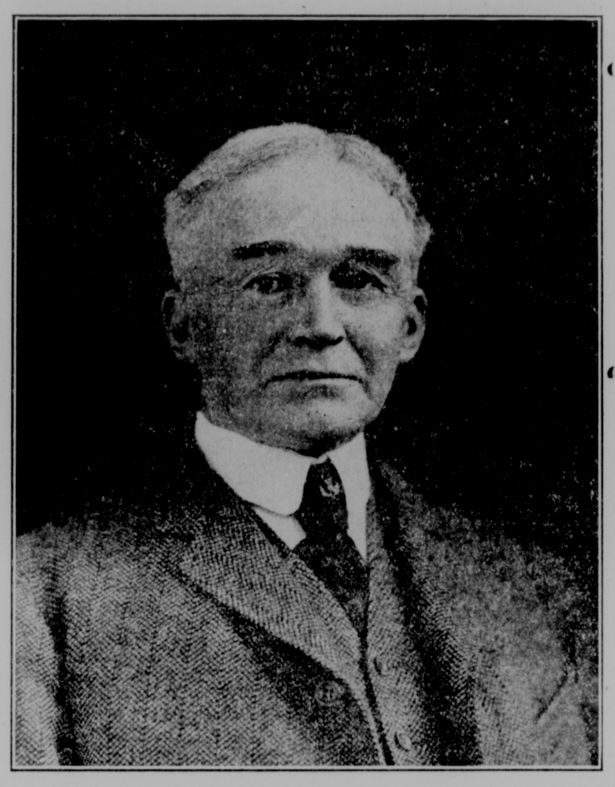
A party composed of Misses Katie Bender, Esther Ash and Mr. John Ash were visiting relatives at Pinto last week.

A surprise party at the home of Mr. Wm. Carr last Saturday night was a pleasant event.

Mr. Adam Teats is the champion scalper and it is necessary for him to make a trip to town with the pelts occasionally.

Butchering is over with many of our good people. Sausage and buckwheat cakes are plentiful.

NEW PRESIDENT OF THE STATE HORTICULTURAL SOCIETY,



STATE SENATOR W. McCULLOH BROWN.

STATE HORTICULTURAL SOCIETY'S ANNUAL MEETING

Senator Brown Elected President—Garrett County Prize Winners.

The recent meeting and exhibit of the Maryland State Horticultural Society in Baltimore was a marked success and attracted great attention.

The 5th Regiment Armory, which has one of the largest unbroken floors in the country, was well filled with exhibits and tastefully decorated. In this fine display Garrett county was well represented, and by the excellence of her products won many prizes in the open competition.

The most notable success was in winning the grand prize for the best exhibit of apples from any county in the State, while the individual growers won twenty-four first premiums, and twenty-four second premiums on apples.

The H. Weber & Sons Co., of Oakland, had a beautiful display of flowers, and won six first premiums on Chrysanthemums, Carnations, Roses and Sweet Peas, while they kept up their reputation won at Jamestown by carrying off four first premiums for as many varieties of cauliflower.

Potatoes were shown by Wm. R. Mason of District No. 8, and Thos. E. Bishoff of No. 6, and in each case won a first premium upon that variety.

In connection with the Horticultural Exhibit, the Maryland Corn, Forage & Cereal Society held their annual meeting, and in this competition Mr. George Porter of Oakland, won first premium upon buckwheat, and second premium upon Fultz wheat.

From the long list of prizes, it will be seen that Garrett county can hold her own with other sections of the State, and it will be to her advantage to come forward annually and display to the world her resources; and it should be especially so in December 1909, when the Society has so honored our county by electing State Senator W. McCulloh Brown as its president.

The visible signs of progress, and success in horticulture, are not the only attraction to these meetings, for they bring together from all sections practical men and experts in the various lines of husbandry, where at the numerous exercises that are held, leading subjects are discussed, and open debate invited.

There is a growing tendency to make the first week in December a harvest home week, and gather together all societies interested in the products of our soil. This year, in addition to the Horticultural meetings, others were held in the Armory, by the Farmers' League; the Corn, Forage and Cereal Society; the Bee Keepers; and by the State Grange.

Garrett county was better represented this time than ever before as there were present Messrs. Steiding and Friend of Swanton; Brown, Conneway and Shaffer of District No. 8. From No. 14, Messrs. Gortner and Porter, and William Weber from Oakland.

Before the close of the exhibition the officers of the State Horticultural Society decided to make a general exhibit of apple at the National Apple Growers' Association meeting, which will be held at Council Bluffs, Iowa, on December 14th to 19th, and many of Garrett county apples were selected to be sent. At Council Bluffs this fruit will be repacked and sent to Wilmington, Del., where it will be exhibited in January, so that some of the apples which were placed in competition in Oakland will carry the name and credit of Garrett county to three large cities, and bring our fruit before the notice of thousands of people.

A list of those winning prizes for apples follows:

George Forter, 2nd on Ewalt; Hurley U. Miller, 1st on Yellow Transparents; John W. Harvey, 1st on Chenango Strawberry; Alexander Kitzmiller, 2nd on Sweet Russet; David F. Mason, 1st on Duchess, 2nd on Wealthy; Peter P. Gortner, 2nd on Wolf River; Riley Murphy, 2nd on Wagner; Jacob S. Miller, 1st on Baltzley Sweet and Gideon, and 2nd on Salome; Walter Beckman, 1st on King, Fallawater and Sweet Russet; Thomas McRobie, 2nd on King; Chas. M. Miller, 2nd Rhode Island Greening; Chas. T. Sweet, 2nd, on York Stripe; Thos. E. Bishoff, 2nd on Baldwin; B. F. Thrasher, 2nd on Holland Pippin and Pewaukee; Rola White, 2nd on Pumpkin Sweet; Ridder Bros., 1st on Rhode Island Greening and Richard Sweet and 2nd on a Seedling; John A. Hughes, 1st on Alexander; H. Weber & Sons, 2nd on Spy; Henry Meyers, 1st on Twenty Ounce; David Gnegy, 1st on Wolf River; Wm. R. Mason, 1st on Famouse and Salome, and 2nd on Alexander, Jersey Sweet, Mother and Deacon Jones; James H. Wilson, 1st on Spy; U. D. Yoder, 1st on Mother; Abe Moon, 2nd on Twenty Ounce; Nicholas Merrill, 1st on Belmont, Ewalt and Stark; John Riley 1st on Vandiver; L. W. Clark, 1st on Pewaukee; W. McCulloh Brown, 1st on Red Astrican and Tetofsky, and 2nd on Yellow Transparent, Bismark, Mann and Maidens Blush.

The full list of those exhibiting apples is as follows:

W. McCulloh Brown, George T. Porter, Hurley U. Miller, John W. Harvey, Alexander Kitzmiller, Wayman Kitzmiller, David F. Mosser, Isaac W. Abernathy, Jerry Harvey, Peter P. Gortner, Mrs. Riley Murphy, James E. Moreland, Lorenzo Fike, Samuel Falkner, Jacob S. Miller, Walter Beckman, H. R. Shank, Thomas McRobie, John Ashenfelter, Charles M. Miller, J. G. Friend, Mollie Friend, Charles T. Sweet, U. J. Swartzendruber, U. M. Fazenbaker, J. M. Lowdermilk, Thomas E. Bishoff, B. F. Thrasher, Rola White, Wesley L. White, Ridder Bros., J. Authur DeWitt, D. J. Slabach, David Enlow, John A. Hughes, H. Weber & Sons, Jesse Warnick, Henry Meyers, David Gnegy, William R. Mason, G. Lee Ridder, James H. Wilson, U. D. Yoder, Daniel Wilson, Abe Moon, Notley B. Browning, Nicholas Merrill, Philip H. Davis, John Riley, L. W. Clark, Frank Lee, Wm. Chisholm.

Potatoes, Thomas E. Bishoff.
Cauliflower, H. Weber & Sons,
Buckwheat, Jos. E. Conneway.

BERGMAN OUT OF JAIL.

Charge of Non-Support Withdrawn and He Was Released.

Last Thursday evening John Bergman, of Oakland, who was sent to jail by Justice Gonder in default of bond in the sum of $100 in failing to support his wife, was released, the complainant in the case, who was Mrs. Bergman, withdrawing the charges filed against him.

Before he was released, however, Bergman made a promise that he would "be good" and look after the welfare of his family, which promise he has religiously kept so far, working every day and night in his tailoring establishment.

Mrs. Bergman has also withdrawn her suit for divorce which was docketed some weeks ago in the Equity Court. Considerable testimony had been taken in the case by Mrs. Bergman's attorneys and the matter was almost ready for a hearing by the court.

DECEMBER TERM CIRCUIT COURT IN SESSION

Mr. Joseph E. Harned of Oakland. Foreman of the Grand Jnry.

The first term of the Circuit Court to be held in the new court house in Oakland convened Monday morning with Chief Justice Boyd and Associate Justices Henderson and Keedy presiding.

The morning session was devoted to the dedicatory exercises of the new building, hence court proper did not open until noon when Mr. Joseph E. Harned, of Oakland, was appointed foreman of the grand jury by Justice Boyd who drew the following named to serve with him as members of that body: J. A. Kelley, Robert R. Liston, Wm. P. Warsaw, I. N. Shillingburg, Lucian Frazee, Ami Rodeheaver, William Weber, W. S. Garlitz, Samuel Mosser, John C. Beckman, George Hipsley, R. W. Saucer, D. E. Bolden, Henry Paugh, Peter Reichenbecker, J W. Whorton, Frank G. Trout, Josiah T Beckman, Harry Bell, George J. Pool, John M. Jarboe and Sherman Friend.

After drawing the jury the usual charge was delivered to it by Justice Boyd.

Monday afternoon the several dockets were called over and proper entries made and on Tuesday the appeal docket was taken up.

Monday next the criminal docket will be called. Indications are that many indictments will be found by the grand jury which will prolong the term until well toward Christmas.

BITTINGER.

Little Teddy had been often reproved by his teacher for coming to school with dirty face and hands. The other morning his hands were dirtier than ever and the teacher said, "Why Teddy, your hands and face are very dirty. What would you say if I were to come to school with dirty hands and face?" Little Teddy inserted one dirty thumb into the corner of his mouth and replied "I'd be too polite to say anything about it."

It was fashionable, last week, to shiver a little when the mercury dropped suddenly to within two degrees of zero.

Mrs. Laura Saunders, of Frostburg, is visiting Mrs. Thomas Stanton here this week.

Amos H. Reckner spent a couple of days last week in Salisbury and other points in Somerset county, Pa.

Jonas Bittinger has been on the sick list for several days past.

Miss Christina Beitzel was considerably, but not seriously, injured in a runaway accident one day last week.

James Speicher has moved his family from this neighborhood to Jennings for the winter.

Rev. Alvin Yugel and his class have announced that they will hold a musical entertainment in the parsonage on the evening of Dec. 18th.

Henry Bender, of near McHenry, is a frequent caller at the "Central."

MOUNTAIN LAKE PARK.

The special meetings at Wesley Chapel are still going on. Twelve have been converted and reclaimed thus far. The pastor has been assisted by Dr W. W. Davis, Rev. L. A. Rudisill and Mr. H. N. Cuppet.

Diphtheria has about disappeared from Loch Lynn. Mountain Lake Park has not had a case of this disease so far this winter.

Mrs. J. A. Hayden spent Sunday and Monday last with her son Grant's family at Westernport, Md.

Rev. Bolton preaches at Bond every Wednesday night and at intervals on Sunday

Mr. Eugene Wilson is still confined to his home though better than he was a few weeks ago.

Mr. F. P. Arnold is plastering Judge Moon's new residence in Ryan's Glade.

Mr. W. C. Dunnington don't believe in being idle, so, being an expert cigar maker, he has concluded to put in the winter months in rolling stogies at his residence here.

Rev. Bolton's Sunday School class now numbers twenty-one young men of Mountain Lake Park and Loch Lynn,

Mrs. Levi Echard has been visiting her daughtdr, Mrs. Mattingly, at Piedmont, W. Va., for the past two weeks.

May Eat Meat On Christmas.

Catholics all over the world will be allowed to eat meat on Friday, December 25.

By a special dispensation granted many years ago by the pope, Catholics are allowed to eat meat on Friday only when Christmas falls on that day. This year for the first time since 1903, the great feast day will be celebrated on Friday, and as a result of the dispensation Catholics may eat turkey with impunity.

The privilege applies to members of the church all over the world. It does not, however, apply to New Year's Day, which also falls on Friday.

The Lonaconing Savings Bank

Of Allegany Couuty.

Capital Stock . $20,000
Surplus and Undivided Profits . $60,000
Deposits . . $625,000

3 PER CENT. Interest Paid Upon all Savings Accounts.

GIVE THEM A START

Tne New Year is rapidly approaching. This would be a good time for you to start your young folks on the road to Success.

Early training in the practice of self-denial; instruction as to the use and value of money; opportunities for earning and saving money; all these tend to fix and fasten the children in the ways of thrift and prosperity.

We most gladly assist the young people in getting started.

One Dollar opens an account and entitles the depositor to one of our Savings Banks.

We shall be pleased to have our Garrett County friends call and receive a 1908 Calendar.

DAVID SLOAN, President. R. R. SLOAN, Treasurer.

The First National Bank

FRIENDSVILLE, MD.

Capital, $25,000. Surplus and Undivided Profits, $24,000.

OFFICERS:

L. E. Friend, President. J. W. McCullough, V. P.
R. C. McCandlish, Cashier.

DIRECTORS:

L. E. Friend, Merchant,
J. W. McCullough, Lumber and Coal.
W. W. Savage, Merchant.
D. S. Custer, Merchant.
H. M. Rumbaugh, Farmer.
W. H. H. Friend, Pension Agent and Surveyor.
Horace R. DeWitt, Treasurer of Garrett County, Md.
R. C. McCandlish.

We will issue time or demand certificates of deposit and pay you 4 per cent. interest if your money is left with us.

In all its dealings this Bank combines absolute safety with satisfactory service and never loses sight of either.

SAFETY DEPOSIT BOXES FOR RENT.

CHILDREN MAKE CONFECTIONERY

a serious matter for the honest candy maker. He must produce a flavor that will satisfy their natural appetites for sweets He must be careful that his products must be harmless and wholesome.

THE PURITY OF OUR CANDY

is beyond question. None but the best materials are used in even the lowest priced confectionery we sell. As to the flavor, well, buy a box and let the children be the judges—we'll abide by their decision.

OAKLAND MODEL STEAM BAKERY

HENRY LAUER Proprietor

A FRESH ARRIVAL OF DRUGS

Is no novelty here. In fact we buy in small quantities on purpose to insure the frequent renewal and the constant freshness of all drugs which deteriorate with time. That plan makes our profits smaller, but it gives you better medicines and remedies. That is one reason why doctors prefer to have their prescriptions filled here.

OAKLAND PHARMACY

JOS. E. HARNED, Proprietor,
OAKLAND, MD.

Notice To Delinquent Tax-Payers.

Notice is hereby given to all delinquent tax-payers that if taxes now due and in arrears are not paid before

JANUARY 1ST, 1909,

I will proceed by law to collect. I refer to Section 50 of Chapter 456 of Acts of the General Assembly of Maryland, which provides as follows:

SECTION 50. The said Treasurer shall during the first week in December in each and every year, give notice to all delinquent tax-payers of said county, by advertisement inserted in two newspapers published in said county, and in hand-bills posted in five of the most public places in each election district of said county, and at the courthouse door, warning them that the payment of all taxes then due and in arrear will be enforced by advertisement and sale unless the same be paid before ths 1st day of January next following.

Please pay promptly and save costs.

W. E. HOLLINGER,
Treasurer of Garrett County.

Notice to Creditors.

This is to give notice, That the subscriber, of Garrett county hath obtained from the Orphans' Court of Garrett county, in Maryland, letters of Administration on the personal estate of

A. F. GEORGE,

late of Garrett county, deceased. All persons having claims against the deceased are hereby warned to exhibit the same, with the vouchers thereof legally authenticated to the subscriber, on or before the 26th day of May next; they may otherwise by law be excluded from all benefit of said estate. All persons knowing themselves indebted to said estate are requested to make immediate payment.

Given under my hand this 24th day of November, 1908.

MARY E. GEORGE,
Administratrix,
Swanton, Md.

Notice to Creditors.

This is to give notice, That the subscriber, of Garrett county hath obtained from the Orphan's Court of Garrett county, in Maryland, letters of Administration on the personal estate of

WILLIAM FRUSH,

late of Garrett county, deceased. All persons having claims against the deceased are hereby warned to exhibit the same, with the vouchers thereof legally authenticated to the subscriber, on or before the 14th day of April, next; they may otherwise by law be excluded from all benefit of said estate. All persons knowing themselves indebted to said estate are requested to make immediate payment.

Given under my hand this 14th day of October, 1908.

JOHN W. FRUSH,
Administrator,
R. F. D., Oakland, Md.

Notice to Creditors.

This is to give notice, That the subscriber of Garrett County, in Maryland, hath obtained from the Orphans' Court of Garrett county, in Maryland, letters Administration on the personal estate of

J. RUSSELL BROWNING,

late of Garrett County, deceased. All persons having claims against the deceased are hereby warned to exhibit the same with the vouchers thereof legally authenticated to the subscriber, on or before the 29th day of April, next; they may otherwise by law be excluded from all benefit of said estate. All persons knowing themselves indebted to said estate are requested to make immediate payment.

Given under my hand this 29th day of October, 1908.

M. A. BROWNING,
Administrator,
Kitzmiller, Md.

Notice to Creditors.

This is to give notice, That the subscribers of Garrett county, hath obtained from the Orphans' Court of Garrett County, in Maryland, Letters of Administration on the personal estate of

JOHN W. BOWERS,

late of Garrett county, deceased. All persons having claims against the deceased are hereby warned to exhibit the same, with vouchers thereof legally authenticated to the subscriber, on or before the 29th day of April next; they may otherwise by law be excluded from all benefit of said estate. All persons knowing themselves indebted to said estate are requested to make immediate payment.

Given under my hand this 26th day of November, 1908.

FLORENCE M. BOWERS,
Administratrix,
Dodson, Md.

Examiners' Notice.

Notice is hereby given, that the undersigned, appointed by the County Commissioners of Garrett County, to view the lands through which the new county road is to be located. Said new road to begin at a point on the county road leading from Thayersville to Altamont, near the residence of Solomon Hogue, running between the lands of Henry Myers, S. O. Clark, Thomas Garrett, Abel Dewitt, Martin Flisinger and Mrs. E. Fundenberg to intersect the Deer Park road at a point near Mrs. Fundenbergs farm, to extend a distance of about one and one-half miles, which is now a private road but used by the public, and examine whether said road shall be located as a county road, will meet on the 16th day of November, 1908 for such purpose, and to determine whether the public convenience requires the said road, and if so, to locate the same and perform their duty in the premises.

ANDREW SHARTZER,
JOHN W. HANEY,
P. J. LOHR,
Examiners.

See our 5 and 10c glassware. Baumgartner.

A Meritorious Institution

Established as a State Bank in 1888 with a capital of $25,000.00; changed to a National Bank in 1903 and capital increased to $50,000.00; TODAY with a capital and surplus of $85,000.00 and total resources of over $500,000.00 we are

BETTER, BIGGER AND STRONGER

than ever. During the 20 years of our existence, our aim has been to extend to our patrons the best possible service. Our steady growth is evidence that the banking institution, which throws the greatest safeguards around its business in order to protect its depositors merits the confidence of the public. If you are not a customer of this Bank let this be your invitation to become one; our relations will be mutually profitable.

Garrett National Bank

Of Oakland, Maryland.

For all kinds of fruit see Baumgartner.

Mr. John J. Winn, of Lonaconing, was in the city Monday and Tuesday attending court.

State Senator W. McCulloh Brown, of near Bavard, was in the city a day or two this week.

Fresh oysters at Baumgartners at 30c quart.

Mr. Elder Humbird, of Cumberland, spent a few days this week in Oakland as the guest of his sister, Mrs. W. R. Offutt.

Miss Nell Stnrgiss, who spent six weeks with relatives in Washington, D. C., returned to her home in Oakland last Saturday evening.

Mr. and Mrs J. L. Brown and two children, who visited friends in Martinsburg, W. Va., last week, returned to their home Monday afternoon.

Dr. and Mrs. W. H. Ravenscraft, who spent a few weeks with relatives and friends at Kingwood, returned to their home in Oakland last Saturday.

Mr. E. J. Hamill, cashier of the Kitzmiller Bank, was in Oakland Monday afternoon for a few hours as the guest of his brother, Mr. M. R. Hamill.

Mr. William Englehart, of Accident, who was here as the guest of his sister, Mrs. J. S. Gnegy, several days recently, returned home Monday morning.

See Baumgartner for your Xmas goods.

Among the attorneys from out of Oakland attending Court here this week are Messrs. Ferdinand Williams, R. T. Semmes and P. C. Barnes, of Cumberland, Miss Mamie Jones, of Elkins, W. Va., daughter of Dr. and Mrs. J. L. B. Jones, who was on an extended visit to the family of Dr. R. B. Ward in Oakland returned home last Saturday.

Miss Teckla Johnson went to Parkersburg, W. Va., Monday morning, where she spent the day with her sister, returning to her home in Oakland Tuesday, accompanied by her little niece, who will remain here until after the holdays.

FOR RENT.—The Rectory on Alder street; house contains 14 rooms; stable and other outbuildings on the property. Apply to BOWIE JOHNSON, Oakland. 3t

Mr. Charles A. Ashby, who recently removed his stock of goods from Deer Park, where he was engaged in the general mercantile business, to Clarksburg, W. Va., went to the latter place last Saturday morning and remained a number of days this week looking after the business.

In an Oakland Sunday school last Sunday the teacher of an infant class, dwelling upon the the lesson, "Solomon's Choice," asked each scholar in turn what they would choose should the opportunity present itself, when all answered wisdom, with one exception he being a bright little boy who said, "I choose a horse and wagon."

Some time ago a prediction was made that the end of world would be on Sunday, and when about three o'clock in the afternoon a rumble of thunder was heard an Oakland lady was reminded of the prediction and said in the presence of her sister, "There the world is coming to an end." "And I am not dressed," was the rejoinder, made in all innocence.

Mr. N. G. Steltz, the Pittsburg representative of the American Type Founders' Company, was in Oakland last Friday when he sold to The Republican Job Department a large assortment of new type faces and other printing office requisites necessary for an up-to-date printing establishment to keep in touch with the present century needs in this line.

Mr. J. Ed. Kildow, of Elkins, W. Va., was in Oakland a few days last week, where he was the guest of relatives, going from here to his home Monday, being accompanied by Miss Mamie Trowbridge, of near Kingwood. Mr. Kildow's recent visit here was the first made by him during the past eight years and he was very much gratified at the progress made by our little city.

A newspaper is in no sense a child of charity. It earns twice over every dollar it receives, and it is second to no enterprise in contributing to the unbuilding of a community. Its patrons reap far more benefits from its pages than its publishers, and in calling for the support of the community in which it is published it asks for no more than in all fairness belongs to it, though generally it receives less. Patronize and help your paper as you would any other enterprise, because it helps you, and not as an act of charity.

CAPITAL 50,0 0.00 — SURPLUS AND PROFITS $29,000.00

THE First National Bank

OAKLAND, MD.

GOVERNMENT DEPOSITORY.

One of the Largest and Best Equipped Banking Houses in Maryland.

Vaults absolutely Fire and Burglar proof.

Safety Deposit Boxes for Rent

Pays 3 Per Cent. on Time Deposits—Compounded Semi-Annually

Every courtesy extended consistent with sound banking.

Home Savings Banks Free. $1.00 will start an account.

The Depositor with a Dollar account receives the same consideration as the largest depositor. COME IN AND GET ACQUAINTED

ROAD COMMITTEE WENT TO BALTIMORE YESTERDAY

Local Representatives to Meet State Highway Commission Today.

Yesterday afternoon the majority of the members of a committee selected at a meeting of Oakland business men held during the month of September to meet and confer with the State Highway Commission in Baltimore, left here for that city where they will confer with the Commission today respecting the route for the new highway to be built through Garrett county at the expense of the state.

Those who went from here to Baltimore were County Commissioners A. C. Smith and Otho S. Fike, Sheriff Austin Brown, Messrs. D. E. Offutt, S. T. Jones, Alexander C. Mason and Dr. W. W. Davis. At Cumberland the Oakland delegation was joined by a large number of representative citizens of Grantsville, among them being C. D. Hershberger, William T. Stanton, Thomas Johnson, Noah Warnick, C. J. Otto and D. W. Dorsey. Accident had a representative in the person of H. J. Speicher, while C. E. Ellithorp represented Bittinger. From Friendsville C. V. Guard and R. C. McClandish composed the delegation.

By some means the impression has gone out that the people of Oakland are opposed to the improvement of the National Road, which is not the case, as it has been a foregone conclusion that the National Road from the Allegany county line west to Grantsville would become a part of the state system.

A Tribute.

In memory of Mrs. Bridget Griffin, who died at her home in Deer Park on Tuesday, Nov. 24th, 1908, at the age of 84 years. In the death of this sainted mother and friend Deer Park has lost one of its best women and her family one of the best mothers that ever adorned a home and leaves an aching void in that beautiful home that can never be filled, but the comforting thought to the devoted and loving family is she has gone to a home beyond the stars to dwell in a mansion, not made with hands, eternally in the heavens.

Mrs. Griffin was born in the County of Tipperary, Ireland, where she was married her late husband, James Griffin, at the age of 25 years and lived a happy married life for 12 years in her own native land, the Emerald Isle, and after consigning three of her first born to mother earth across the sea they with two sons, John and Patrick M., emigrated to this country, landing in August 1866, and lived in Baltimore two years and then moved to Deer Park in 1868. Three daughters and two sons were born here, Bridget (wife of M. J. Garrett), Misses Katie and Josephine, and William B. and Edward.

The father and his two eldest sons worked for Hon. H. G. Davis for 27 years, and were the most efficient of the many employed by him. John, the eldest, is a prosperous business man of Elkins, W. Va.; Patrick M., is in the employ of the B. & O. at this place; Edward is an efficient telegraph operator at Grafton, W. Va.; William B. is is the B. & O. agent of this place and one of the most faithful and accommodating agents of all the system; Misses Katie and Josephine are mistresses of the cozy home of their lamented mother.

By her death the church and those of the world who knew her are the poorer. Her removal leaves a void in the home which nothing can fill, but the rounding out of a noble life has borne her on to a place where there is perfect rest. Many of the poor, the sick and the afflicted will miss her gentle ministrations and the kindly care she heaped upon them.

May her soul rest in peace is the prayer of the one who pens this humble tribute to a friend that he has known for a quarter of a century and to know her was to honor and respect her.

A FRIEND.

MENU FOR CHURCH SUPPER

To Be Served This Evening by the Ladies of St. Mark's Church.

This afternoon and evening the ladies of St. Mark's Ev. Lutheran church will serve supper in the basement of the church, to which all are cordially invited, the following being the bill of fare as prepared by the committee.

Oysters Fried Chicken Cold Ham
(Choice of one)
Potato Salad Cold Slaw
Pickles Jelly
Biscuit Bread Rolls
Coffee.

The above for the sum of 25 cents, the following being charged for extra at the prices indicated:

Baked Beans and Brown Joe, 5 cents
Chicken Salad. 5 cents
Ice Cream, 10 cents
Cake, 5 cents.

Dissolution Notice.

This is to give notice that the firm of Reams & Browning, doing general mercantile business, has been dissolved by mutual consent, Mr. Browning retiring. The business will be continued by Mr. Reams.

REAMS & BROWNING.

Swallow Falls, Aug 8, 1908. 3t

WAS IT GREEN?

Asks The Somerset County Star, Referring to Some Pre-Election Twaddle.

Under the caption "Was It Green?" the last issue of the Somerset County Star contained the following article with reference to some pre-election publications made in the Garrett Journal and severely rubs it into the editor of the Journal for betraying the confidence of a correspondent:

During the late Presidential campaign, a letter appeared in the Oakland Journal, signed "A Republican," purporting to be written at Grantsville, and in it the writer attacked Candidate Taft on account of his religion, and urged all voters, irresponsive of party, to vote for Bryan.

The ignoranmus who wrote the letter dubbed Mr. Taft an infidel, and delivered himself of much other foolish aud narrow-minded rot too numerous to mention.

There was much speculation at the time as to who was guilty of writing such silly twaddle, some blaming one Republican and some another. The Star was not long in arriving at the conclusion that the letter referred to was not written by a Republican at all, but by a big whiskey-fuddle, mushy-brained Democratic lobster, and we still believe that we are right in our surmises.

However, there is nearly always room to be mistaken in such matters, and since a well-known Grantsville Democrat has recently informed us that the letter alluded to was written by none other than Lawrence Green, Republican member of the Maryland Legislature, from Garrett county, it would be well enough for the Republicans of that county to thoroughly investigate the charge. If Mr. Green is guilty of such monkey like and unrepublican conduct, his Republican constituents should promptly "sit down" on him good and hard. If not guilty, he should be given a speedy vindication. Mr. Green should explain, and the editor of the Oakland Journal should also explain' for The Star's informant said: "The editor of the Journal called me in and showed me the letter, which had Mr. Green's signature to it, adding that he did not publish the name because Mr. Green requested him to keep his name a secret."

If our informant told the truth, the editor of the Journal should explain why he betrayed the confidence of a correspondent who requested that his identity should not be made known. That kind of a request is always construed as one of the conditions of publication of a communication, and no publisher has a moral right to betray the confidence of a correspondent, unless the publisher was imposed upon by an untruthful or unlawful article, which he had accepted in good faith, but learned afterwards that it was false. We shall not disclose the name of our informant, as we promised not to do so, unless we can obtain proof that he lied. In that event he shall be thoroughly exposed, as he should be.

Upon our attention being directed to the Star's article a letter was addressed to Mr. Green, who is at present teaching school at Selbysport, asking him for a statement either denying or affirming the charges brought against him by our Pennsylvania contemporary, and in the mail of Tuesday morning Mr. Green's answer came, which we publish below;

To the Editor of THE REPUBLICAN.

The charge of the Somerset Star accusing me of being the author of the pre-election articles concerning President-elect Taft's religion is nothing less than a political scheme of some of my enemies and I challenge them to produce the articles over my signattre.

L. F. GREEN.

Selbysport, Md., Dec. 5, 1908.

The above letter is published as requested by Mr. Green and to thoroughly set him right before the people of Garrett county the editor of the Journal should not hesitate, both in justice to himself as well as to Mr. Green, in making a plain statement of the facts concerning the publications referred to in the article from the Star as published above.

Church Services.

OAKLAND PRESBYTERIAN.

Services on Sunday, to which all are cordially invited, will be preaching at 11 a. m. and 7.3 p. m.

L. B. HENSLEY, Pastor.

ST. PAUL'S M. E.

Services next Sunday as follows: Preaching 10.30 a. m.; Sunday school at 2.15 p. m.; preaching at 7.30 p. m. Epworth League Monday 7.30 p. m. Junior League Wednesday 4.15 p. m. Prayer meeting Wednesday 7.30 p. m. Everybody cordially invited to attend these services.

J. B. WORKMAN, Pastor.

BAPTIST.

Services next Sunday as follows: Elder Hill—Preaching at 11 a. m. Deep Creek—Preaching at 7.30 p. m. Everybody invited to be present.

C. W. HUDSON, Pastor.

Married.

HOGUE—SMITH—Mr. Albert F. Hogue, son of Mr. and Mrs. Solomon Hogue, and Miss Bertha Smith, the youngest daughter of Mrs. Nancy Smith, were married Sunday, Dec. 6, at the Ferndale Baptist church. The pastor, Rev. C. W. Hudson, performed the ceremony, being assisted by Rev. J. D. McIndoe of Maysville, W. Va. A host of friends wish the happy young couple a prosperous journey through life.

Removal Notice.

I have moved from my old location, the Helbig stable, to my new barn on Liberty street opposite the railroad station where my old as well as new patrons will receive the same courteous treatment as heretofore.

Thanking all for past favors and soliciting a continuance of your patronage. I am, J. A. KELLEY.

CLAIM HE WAS TOO LENIENT

Law and Order League Of Elkins Reported to Be After Judge Holt.

A movement is reported to have been started by the Law and Order League of Elkins to impeach Judge John Homer Holt, who is a resident of Grafton, W. Va., and in whose circuit Randolph county, of which Elkins is the county seat, is included. The charge is that Judge Holt went behind the code in extending leniency to gamblers, eight in number, who plead guilty of running gambling tables at Elkins during the races. Judge Holt imposed a fine of $5. The code calls for a fine of $100 to $1,000, and a jail sentence of from two to 12 months. A copy of the indictment, of the court's rulings and order and of the code bearon gambling is to be submitted with the memoranda to Governor Dawson. The law also requires that the gambling paraphernalia be burned. The men indicted were H. A. Kephart, Bliss Riley, H. H. Wier, H. Miller, M. Wolf, Albert Hartman, Rufus Henry and John Boner. The friends of Judge Holt indignantly deny that he is guilty of any overt act, that his course was in thorough harmony with the law. Judge Holt has been holding court at Kingwood and no expression from him regarding the alleged charge could be obtained.

NOTICE OF STOCKHOLDERS' MEETING.

The regular annual meeting of the stockholders of the First National Bank of Kitzmillerville, Maryland, will be held at its banking house on

Tuesday, January 12, 1909,

from 1 to 2 o'clock P. M., for the purpose of electing a board of directors for the ensuing year and for the transaction of any other business that may be brought before them.

E. J HAMILL, Cashier.

NOTICE OF STOCKHOLDERS' MEETING.

The regular meeting of the stockholders of the Garrett National Bank of Oakland, Maryland, will be held at its banking house on

Tuesday, January 12, 1909,

at 2 o'clock P. M., for the purpose of electing a board of directors for the ensuing year, and for the transaction of any other business that may come before them.

S. T. JONES, Cashier.

NOTICE OF STOCKHOLDERS' MEETING.

Pursuant to the required legal notice a meeting of the stockholders of the First National Bank of Friendsville, Maryland, will be held at its banking house on

Tuesday, January 12, 1909,

at 10 o'clock A. M. for the purpose of electing a board of directors for the ensuing year and for the transaction of such other business that may lawfully be done.

R. C. McCANDLISH, Cashier.

NOTICE OF STOCKHOLDERS' MEETING.

The regular annual meeting of the stockholders of the First National Bank of Oakland, Maryland, will be held at its banking house on

Tuesday, January 12, 1909,

from 1 to 2 o'clock P. M., for the purpose of electing a board of directors for the ensuing year and for the transaction of any other business that may be brought before them.

R. E. SLIGER, Cashier.

REPORT OF THE CONDITION OF

The First National Bank

AT FRIENDSVILLE,

In the State of Maryland, at the close of business, November 27, 1908.

RESOURCES.

Loans and Discounts	$115,008 04
Overdrafts secured and unsecured	169 34
U. S. Bonds to secure circulation	25,000 00
Premiums on U. S. Bonds	1,734 37
Bonds, securities, etc	66,018 54
Banking house, furniture and fixtures	6,098 51
Due from National Banks (not reserve agents)	1,320 49
Due from State Banks and Bankers	1,058 15
Due from approved reserve agents	17,367 23
Checks and other cash items	72 68
Notes of other National Bn'ks	1,040 00
Fractional paper currency, nickels and cents	93 43
LAWFUL MONEY RESERVE IN BANK, VIZ:
Specie $ 1,390 25
Legal-tender notes 10,249 00
	11,639 25
Redemption fund with U. S. Treasurer (5 per cent. of circulation	1,250 00
Total	$247,870 03

LIABILITIES.

Capital stock paid in	$ 25,000 00
Surplus fund	25,851 87
Undivided profits loss expenses and taxes paid	2,756 61
National Bank notes outstanding	25,000 00
Due to other National Banks	100 00
Due to State Banks and Bankers	2,839 66
Due to Trust companies and Savings Banks	105 12
Individual deposits subject to check	67,871 26
Time certificates of deposit	98,345 51
Total	$247,870 03

State of Maryland, County of Garrett.

I, R. C. McCandlish, Cashier of the above bank, do solemnly swear that the above statement is true to the best of my knowledge and belief.

R. C. McCANDLISH, Cashier.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 3rd day of December, 1908.

ORVAL A. WELCH, Notary Public.

Correct—Attest: W. W. SAVAGE, H. M. RUMBAUGH, D. S. CUSTER, Directors.

REPORT OF THE CONDITION OF THE GARRETT NATIONAL BANK, at Oakland, in the State of Maryland, at the close of business, November 27th, 1908:

RESOURCES.

Loans and Discounts	$285,425 44
Overdrafts, secured and unsecured	2 55
U. S. Bonds to secure circulation	50,000 00
Premiums on U. S. Bonds	1,500 00
Bonds, securities, etc	105,645 00
Banking house, furniture and fixtures	14,500 00
Due from National Banks (not reserve agents)	813 45
Due from State Banks and Bankers	393 79
Due from approved reserve agents	38,168 36
Checks and other cash items	343 65
Notes of other National Banks	850 00
Fractional paper currency, nickels and cents	172 04
Lawful Money Reserve in Bank, viz:
Specie $21,136 50
Legal-tender notes 7,385 00	28,511 50
Redemption fund with U. S. Treasurer, 5 per cent of circulation	2,500 00
Total	$529,465 78

LIABILITIES.

Capital stock paid in	$ 50,000 00
Surplus fund	35,000 00
Undivided profits, less expenses and taxes paid	4,874 95
National Bank notes outstanding	48,700 00
Due to other National Banks	3,423 49
Due to State Banks and Bankers	779 36
Individual deposits subject to check	161,311 62
Savings Deposits	19,908 20
Time certificates of deposit	204,115 38
Cashie 's checks outstanding	1,262 78
Total	$529,465 78

State of Maryland, County of Garrett, ss:

I, S. T. JONES, Cashier of the above named bank do solemnly swear that the above statement is true to the best of my knowledge and belief. S. T. JONES, Cashier.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 1st day of December, 1908.

HARLAND L. JONES, Notary Public.

Correct—Attest: D. E. OFFUTT, JOHN T. MITCHELL, JOHN M. DAVIS, Directors.

REPORT OF THE CONDITION OF

The First National Bank

AT KITZMILLERVILLE,

In the State of Maryland, at the close of business, November 27, 1908.

RESOURCES.

Loans and Discounts	$3,216 80
U. S. Bonds to secure circulation	6,250 00
Premiums on U. S. Bonds	318 75
Bonds, securities, etc	7,575 00
Banking house, furniture and fixtures	8,347 95
Other real estate owned	400 00
Due from National Banks (not reserve agents)	74 62
Due from approved reserve agents	9,711 59
Checks and other cash items	3 50
Notes of other National Banks	460 00
Fractional paper currency, nickels, and cents	65 05
LAWFUL MONEY RESERVE IN BANK, VIZ:
Specie $7,463 50
Legal-tender notes 72 00	8,213 50
Redemption fund with U. S. Treasurer (5 per cent of circulation	312 50
Due from U. S Treasurer, other than 5 per cent redemption fund	300 00
Total	$63,949 17

LIABILITIES.

Capital stock paid in	$25,000 00
Surplus fund	3,000 00
Undivided profits, less expenses and taxes paid	1,317 90
National Bank notes outstanding	6,250 00
Due to other National Banks	2,563 18
Due to State Banks and Bankers	7-0 08
Individual deposits subject to check	26,388 11
Savings deposits	28,649 50
Cashier's checks outstanding	139 80
Total	$63,949 17

State of Maryland, County of Garrett.

I, E. J. Hamill, Cashier of the above named bank, do solemnly swear that the above statement is true to the best of my knowledge and belief.

E. J. HAMILL, Cashier.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 2nd day of December, 1908.

GEO. J. FOOL, Notary Public.

Correct—Attest: R. A. SMITH, WADE SAPP, A. C. SMITH, Directors.

ARTHUR TOWNSHEND

Santa Claus is Here Again

Loaded down and you can get anything you want in

FANCY BASKETS,
MIRRORS,
TOILET SETTS,
GLOVE BOXES,
WRITING PORTFOLIOS,
COLLAR and CUFF BOXES,
NUT CRACKERS,
PAPER WEIGHTS,
SILK and LINEN HANDKERCHIEFS
LINK BUTTONS,
STICK PINS,
SCARFS,
TIES,
SUSPENDERS,
FANCY CHINA,
FANCY BOX PAPER,
SMOKERS' SETTS, Etc

Xmas For Everybody

Also a Fine Line of

NUTS, CURRANTS,
ORANGES, RAISINS,
CANDR, CITRON,
FIGS, DATES,
FRUITS, Etc.

BARGAINS IN MEN'S & BOYS' OVERCOATS

ARTHUR TOWNSHEND

HOUSE FOR RENT, possession given after October 1st; contains eight rooms; spring water. Apply to Mrs. L. F. Sincell, Oakland. Also cottage of six rooms, either furnisdhe or unfurnished.

To save money see Baumgartner on nuts and candies.

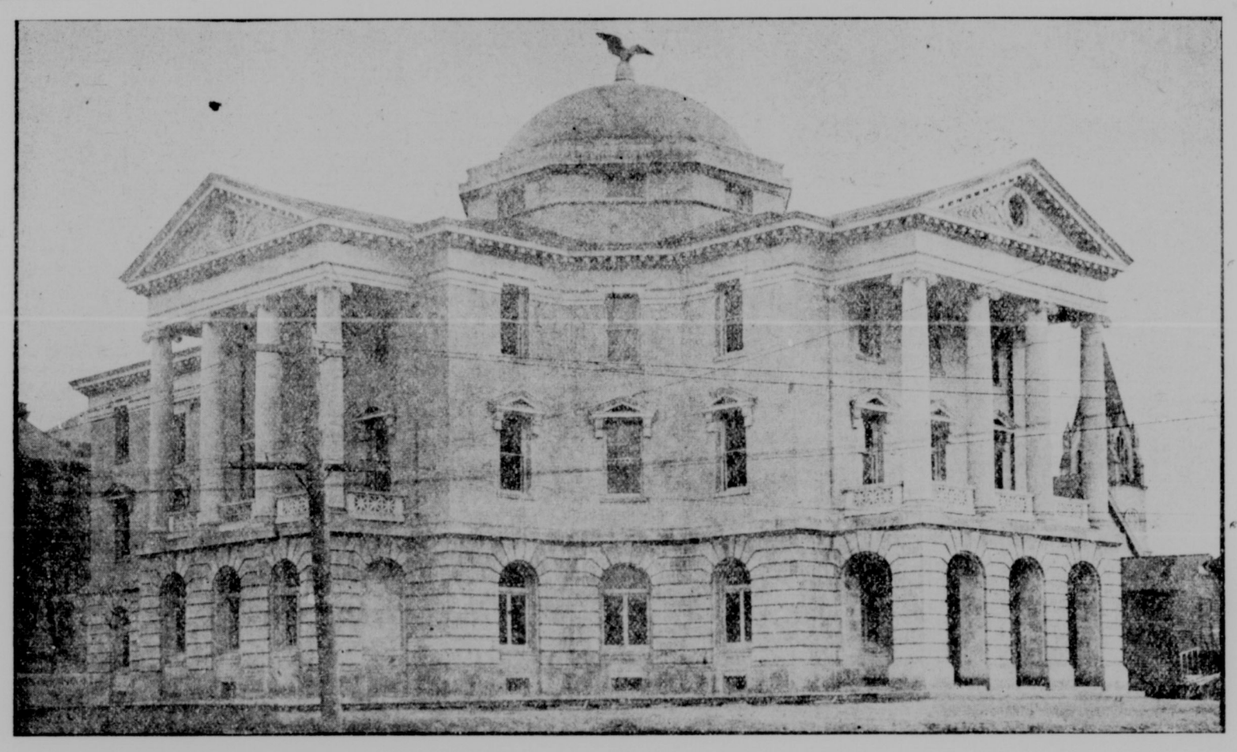
Garrett County's New Court House Has Been Completed.

A MODERN BUILDING IN EVERY PARTICULAR OF WHICH EVERY GARRETT COUNTIAN IS PROUD.

Reprinted from The Republican of November 26th, 1908, by request.

The new temple of justice for Garrett county has been completed and it stands as a monument to the members of the Commission who adopted the plans for its construction, and to the architect as well as the contractor and many others who may have in any manner contributed in giving to this grand old mountain top county of Maryland the finest public building of its character in the State of Maryland outside of Baltimore City.

At a meeting of the Court House Commission held on Monday morning of this week at which all members of the Commission were present with the exception of Associate Judge Martin L. Keedy, County Commissioner Friend, who is extremely ill at his home; therefore unable to attend, and Mr. John W. McCullough, of Friendsville, the building was accepted from the contractor, Mr. W. A. Liller, after it had been thoroughly inspected and passed upon by the architect, Mr. Liller being highly complimented for the manner and mode in which he did the work.



Shortly after the building was accepted the accompanying photograph of the Commission, the builder, the architect and superintendent was taken expressly for THE REPUBLICAN by Mr. Stewart, the photographer.

Capt. John M. Jarboe, of Oakland, who is also a member of the Commission, was appointed to superintend the work on the part of the Commission and he did his duty conscientiously and well.

Going back into history a few years: When Garrett county was created out of that portion of Allegany county lying westward of a certain line drawn due north from the Savage River near the town of Bloomington, it was several years before the then elected County Commissioners would provide suitable buildings for the transaction of the public business. By the intervention of the Court the Commissioners were compelled to erect the old court house on the site selected at that time, and in the year 1877 the building was completed and turned over to the public. From the beginning it was neither convenient nor was it suited for the purpose for which it was intended. Year after year grand jury after grand jury brought in arraignments of the Boards of County Commissioners for the unsanitary conditions which they allowed to exist about the old jail and court house until a few years ago when the new jail was erected, not, however, until after patience ceased to be a virtue. The original intention of the Commissioners was to build the jail on a lot located in the rear of the old jail and court house. They had purchased a lot wholly inadequate for the size of the building in contemplation and it was only after THE REPUBLICAN had taken the matter up and led in the fight for a better and more central location that the present site was purchased, much of the money being contributed by the public spirited citizens of Oakland.

The jail was built by a direct levy upon the taxpayers, no bonds being issued for the purpose, resulting in some hardships upon certain classes.

The act authorizing the issuance of bonds for the erection of the court house was passed at the January session of the legislature of 1906 and was ratified by the people at the election held in November of the same year, carrying by a majority of 118 votes. This act provided for $75,000 and created the Commission having in hand the erection of the building, composed of the three Judges of the Circuit Court, the Board of County Commissioners and five other citizens and taxpayers, the latter under the act being appointed by the Judges of the Court. As provided in the act the Court appointed as membess of the Commission Messrs. D. E. Offutt, John M. Jarboe, C. M. Miller, John W. McCullough and State Senator W. McCulloh Brown, the Commission organizing by electing Judge Robert R. Henderson chairman and Senator Brown secretary.

On May 12th, 1907, the contract for the erection of the building was awarded to W. A. Liller of Keyser, West Va., his bid being $60,982, exclusive of furniture, heating, plumbing and electric wiring and fixtures. The plans for the building were made by Mr. J. Riley Gordon, of New York city, who also drew the specifications. Immediately after the contract was awarded Mr. Liller began work on the building and on Tuesday, October 15th, 1907, the corner stone was laid by Oakland Lodge No. 192, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, the occasion being one long to be remembered by those participating. Ex-United States Senator George L. Wellington, of Cumberland, was the orator upon this occasion and his effort was a masterful one.

The court house is constructed of Indiana limestone and light brick, the first story being the former while the superstructure is of the latter with stone trimmings, entrance to the building being made either from Alder street or Third street, the main entrance being the latter through arched columns beneath the portico, corridors leading into the rotunda, which extends from the first floor to the dome. The corridors as well as the rotunda are tiled with white marble. On this floor will be located the offices of the Clerk of the Circuit Court, Orphans' Court, County Commissioners, County Treasurer and Supervisors of Elections, each suite of rooms being fitted with necessary vaults for the safe keeping of records and public documents.

In the basement is located the furnace room, coal storage and fuel room and a large vault which can be utilized for storage purposes.

On the second floor of the building is the Court room with a seating capacity of nearly three hundred persons. This room has a vaulted ceiling, sloping floors and is fitted with three galleries. In the rear of the court room is located the judges' retiring room, while immediately above are two large jury rooms for the petit jurors.

Leading from the rotunda on the second floor are a number of other rooms which will be utilized for the various public officials, as well as a large room for the Bar Association, a ladies' waiting room, etc.

On the third floor is the grand jury room, which faces Third street, and adjoining are two witnesses rooms, while flanking these are two suites of office rooms.

The building throughout is finished in white with the exception of the balustrades and the stairways which are natural hardwood, the contrast being somewhat distinct but on the whole rather harmonious.

The heating, plumbing, gas fitting and electrical work was put in by Messrs. A. D. Naylor & Co. of Oakland, to whom was awarded the contract by the Commission. The two boilers for the heating weigh eleven tons and have a combined rating of ninety horse power. The plant is the largest that has been put in in Garrett county and the work done by the local firm was highly complimented by both the architect and the Commission. In the plumbing there are ten lavatories and as many toilets, located on different floors of the building. The heating contractors deserve much credit for the manner in which the contract was performed.

Mr. W. A. Roderick, of Keyser, W. Va., superintended the erection of the building for the contractor and gave excellent satisfaction to all concerned, while Mr. Liller received some high compliments from ihe Commission and the architect.

While the building has not as yet been formally turned over to the County Commissioners by the Court House Commission, it is virtually in their hands and at the convening of the court on December 7th the formal ceremony will take place.

The first office to be moved from the old building is that of Clerk E. Z. Tower, who will complete the work of removing the records and papers in his office today.

THE COURT HOUSE COMMISSION, ARCHITECT, CONTRACTOR AND FOREMAN.

Reading from left to right: Foreman Roderick, Contractor W. A. Liller, C. M. Miller, Capt. J. M. Jarboe, Judge Robert R. Henderson, State Senator W. McCulloh Brown, Chief Judge A. Hunter Boyd, D. E. Offutt, Members of the Commission; Architect J. Riley Gordon; County Commissioners Otho J. Fike and A. C. Smith.

The Prophecy of Carolyn.

By ELLIOT WALKER.

Copyrighted, 1908, by Associated Literary Press.

"This is the sweetest, most lovely spot imaginable," said Ara Barr, speaking audibly, as the stream singing below the rock on which she stood gleamed rosily in the sunset.

"Isn't it? The setting, the—merciful heavens!" A deep, unfamiliar voice rose to a horrified cry of consternation.

In her sudden, startled turn the girl's slender foot had slipped. It caught in a crevice. A wrench for release, and she sat down, jarringly, uttering a low shriek.

The man skipped nimbly to her assistance. His face was even more distressed than hers.

"You are hurt!" he exclaimed.

"I certainly am very uncomfortable, sir. My ankle is sprained, I think. Why did you speak to me?"

The stranger's eyes widened.

"I thought you spoke to me. I supposed you saw me. I'm Mr. Elder, Delos Elder, you know. Miss Barr, I'm mighty sorry."

For a moment Ara forgot the pain. She laughed half hysterically. Delos Elder, the man she had long wished to meet—Carolyn Seely's friend, who was coming to Bonnyview, and she, Ara, had begged Carolyn to send him over. Her intention had been to impress Mr. Elder. What would Carolyn say?

A twinge of the ensnared foot brought tears to her eyes. She held out a hand, stammering: "Oh, yes, I—I might have suspected. I left word that if any one called to say I'd gone up the road. I never thought of you."

Elder had dropped her fingers and was working at the imprisoned shoe.

"Brace, now," he said firmly. "It's going to hurt."

It did hurt. The girl tried to smile, but her cheeks went white. She strove against the black dizziness. No, she simply would not faint. She would—not! The man heard her grit her teeth.

HE TRUNDLED HIS DELICATE BURDEN HOME IN THE DUSTY BARROW.

"As plucky as she is pretty," he thought. "Poor child. I'll bet that was agony, but I had to pull. How will I get her home?"

He leaped down and presently was back with a dripping handkerchief. Already twilight had darkened about them. Mosquitoes buzzed; a whippoorwill sounded the call of the night; the brook gurgled melancholy murmurs; a bat swooped—and no helpful sounds came from the lonely highway.

"I guess my countenance is sufficiently sopped," uttered Ara meekly. "I didn't quite faint, did I? I'm much obliged for your arm and shoulder, but, really, I'm all right now. Please take me home, Mr. Elder."

"Directly, Miss Barr." He passed a hand over a wilted shirt front. His bright tie had shed its color on his white vest. Where was his hat? He rubbed his knees; they had ground painfully against the stone, even to sad laceration of cloth.

"I'm thinking of the best way," he added cheerfully. "I can't carry you. Neither can you walk nor hop on one foot. No dwelling is in sight. No team is apt to come along. We must not wait here, and I'm afraid to leave you in this lonesome spot."

"We'll crawl," cried the girl. "My people never worry about my being late."

"No; I might shout for help."

"Oh, anything but that. Besides, who will hear you? I'm going to get up."

"You're going to sit still, Miss Barr. I'll find a way. Wait a minute."

The pair sat in dismal silence. Ara dodged a bat with a shudder. Her injured foot ached. It was growing grewsomely dark in the shadows.

"I have it!" exclaimed Elder, rising. "The wheelbarrow!"

"Where?"

"By the roadside, just beyond the bridge. It was full of stones for walling up a spring. I'll dump the rocks and bring it to the nearest point."

"You'll dump me."

"No, I won't."

In an instant he was gone. The girl pressed his damp handkerchief to her lips.

"It was all his fault," she whispered, "but I'm sort of glad it happened. Carolyn said—pshaw! What am I doing?"

"The thing squeaks frightfully and is dirty, but I've spread my coat in it," informed Mr. Elder returning. "Come! I'll lift you down. Hang on! Don't mind my lugging you, Miss Barr. It's a case of necessity."

"I'll be good," said Ara.

Cautiously picking his way, Delos Elder did not notice the confiding clasp of her arms or her soft cheek pressed against his neck. He was only conscious of her behaving beautifully on a rather perilous journey and that sure footing was the imperative need.

As he trundled his delicate burden home in the dusty barrow all his thoughts were apparently bent on smooth wheeling, lest a jolt should bring her additional pain.

Hatless, coatless, perspiring, on trudged the concerted Delos and up to Judge Barr's summer cottage at last to halt panting, weary and thankful.

"There!" he gasped. "I hope you weren't much joggled. Call some one. I'm going back to find my hat. You have been very brave. Tomorrow, when I am presentable, I shall inquire for you. Let us hope nothing serious will result from this experience. It was entirely my fault, Miss Barr."

"I'll forgive you," said the girl. It was too dark for him to see her eyes, else, disheveled as he was, he might have stayed.

Bearing his dusty coat over an arm, he backed away with a hasty word of farewell, and a portly man strode out to the piazza.

"What's going on here?" demanded a thunderous voice. "Ara, child, why, is anything wrong?"

Delos, in the darkness, heard the girl's laugh and a calm reply. He appreciated the effort.

"Oh, I twisted my ankle, father. A man was kind enough to wheel me home. He wouldn't stop to be thanked. I guess you'll have to carry me in, father."

* * * * * * *

A fortnight later Miss Seely had a call from the judge.

"Carolyn," said he, "what can you tell me of young Elder? He is visiting here, I believe."

Oh! Delos?" replied his hostess, smiling. "Yes, he's still with us. Well, Mr. Elder is an old friend of mine, judge. He has some brains, plenty of money, an excellent character, belongs to a good family and is extremely particular regarding his clothes. Lately I haven't seen much of Delos. He has taken to out of door exercise; goes tramping and meandering about. He must have lost himself one evening awhile ago, for he came in greatly exhausted and a sight to behold. It was the next day he called at your house, I think. I remember he told me that Ara had strained her foot. How is it?"

"That didn't amount to much," said the old gentleman thoughtfully. "She was walking on it in a couple of days."

"Oh, so soon! I didn't know. I wrote her a note, but got no reply, so feared she was badly laid up. I've felt sorry for Delos, for I wanted Ara to see a good deal of him. Once I told her, and not so much in a joke, either, that they were the very ones to fall in love with each other."

The look of disappointment faded from her face as she saw a twinkle in her visitor's eye.

"No?" she exclaimed.

"That's it, Carolyn," observed the judge, bursting into a laugh. "They have!"

His Only Conundrum.

The old pilot of the little steamer Maid of the Mist, which used to carry passengers quite up to the foot of the falls of Niagara until the mist from the falling waters drenched the clothing of every one on board, used to perpetuate one solitary conundrum each trip. It always commenced and ended the same.

Moving his hand along the sides of the pilothouse and examining the woodwork minutely, he would look up mysteriously and remark:

"I say, stranger, do you know what this boat is made of?"

"Made of? Why, pine and oak, isn't she?"

"No, sir."

"Hemlock?"

"No."

"Tisn't cedar, is it?"

"Oh, no!"

And then the old pilot's eyes twinkled and his mouth whistled a crazy tune.

"Well, iron perhaps?"

"No."

"What in thunder is she made of, then?"

"She's Maid of the Mist, stranger; Maid of the Mist."

Then the pilot accepted his morning cigar.

Carrie's Maneuver.

Miss Hurryup—Ah, George, you cannot tell what troubles a girl has who is receiving the attentions of a gentleman.

Mr. Holdoff—Troubles, Carrie? Of what nature, pray?

Miss H.—Well, one's little brothers are always making fun of one, and relatives are always saying, "When is it to come off?" as if marriage were a prizefight. But that is not the worst. There is the inquisitiveness of one's parents. They want to know everything. There's pa, now; he is constantly asking such questions as: "Carrie, what are Mr. Holdoff's intentions? What does he call upon you so regularly for and stay so late when he does call?" And he sometimes looks so angry when he asks these questions that I actually tremble.

Mr. H.—And what answer do you make to his questions, Carrie, dearest?

Miss H.—I can't make any answer at all, for, you see, you haven't said anything to me, and—and—of course, I—I—

Then Mr. Holdoff whispered something in Carrie's ear, and next time her father questions her she will be ready with a satisfactory reply.—Boston Transcript.

POSSIBILITY OF ONE-PARTY STATE

If Disfranchising Amendment Is Approved.

A GREAT ISSUE NEXT YEAR

Democrats to Make a Superhuman Effort to Secure Vote Upon the Proposition in Order That They May Entrench Themselves in Power.

Great and grave are the possibilities of the future of the government of Maryland which are involved in the fate of the Straus disfranchising amendment, to be submitted at the election next year to the voters for their approval or rejection. If approved, and the Democrats will use superhuman efforts to this end, the government of Maryland will be vested for a generation or more in the hands of one party. Boys now in their knickerbockers may be bald-headed and gray-haired and grandfathers before they will see this one-party power uprooted. Men now in the prime of life, although they may reach fourscore years and ten, will probably have gone to join their fathers before they will see the oligarchy overthrown.

It is all nonesense, a snare and delusion, for the advocates of the amendment to say that with the elimination of the colored vote the Republican party will attract thousands of men now Democrats. They know full well that if the amendment is approved sufficient colored men will be permitted to registered to serve the bugaboo cry of the Democratic demagogues that the Republican party is the colored man's party. They know it is a falsehood, but they will believe that the baseless cry will help them in their campaigns.

The time is at hand when the disfranchising amendment, which will be the paramount issue in the campaign next year, must be seriously contemplated, and when steps must be taken to defeat it. It is not for the Republicans alone to conduct the fight. It is the fight of all good citizens, who contemplate the disastrous and disquieting effects to follow the approval of the amendment. Republican leaders are inviting the cooperation of all good citizens in the desperate struggle to come.

Realizing that somebody must take the first step, the friends of Collector Stone in the city and state have requested him to make the preliminary move. He has consented to do so, and about the middle of next month he will have as guests at a dinner the leading Republicans of the state and city. At this function the seriousness of the situation and the possibilities of the future, if the amendment is approved, will be fully and frankly discussed. All citizens with the interests of their state and city at heart, will be invited to cooperate in the movement to defeat the proposition.

The whole question settles itself down to this: Shall the people of Maryland abridge their right to participate in elections, to manacle the state with the tether of race prejudice and without reason to join the disfranchised states of the South that are now chafing under the galling conditions of what is substantially universal disfranchisement?

The disfranchisement amendment passed by the General Assembly of 1908 was prepared in the hour of victory and exultation by a number of men who took an active part to secure the election of Governor Crothers. That campaign was exceptionalty bitter and the only reasonable explanation for the amendment receiving the support of some of the men who assented to it is that the feeling engendered by that campaign had not been permitted to subside. It was born in prejudice and its adoption by the people of the state will mean a general disfranchisement.

It is aimed at two classes of citizens.

First. Negroes; and Second. Naturalized citizens, who becomes such after the adoption of the amendment, and their children. In order to prevent negroes from registering the test is made severe, for the amendment renders it difficult for any negro to register, and the naturalized citizen in the future will find it at least difficult to qualify himself on account of his unfamiliarity with the English language. If the scheme under lying the amendment proves successful it will disfranchise almost 50,000 negro voters. In a small state like Maryland with a total registration of 283,000 it can readily be seen that it would make the state a one-party state. It is a fact that all the negroes do not vote and that all those who do vote do not vote the Republican ticket, but if for the sake of argument it is assumed that at this time the state is equally divided politically and that all the registered voters voted, with the elimination of 50,000 negro voters, the vote would stand 140,000 Democrats to 90,000 Republicans. This would effectively make this state a one-party state with all the political corruption and civic degradation that the term implies.

The greatest political revolution that Maryland has ever seen, the defeat of Mr. Bryan in 1896 by about 33,000 in the state, merely meant that about 12 per cent. of the Democrats voted for William McKinley. Under the altered condition proposed by the disfranchisement amendmdnt a similar change 12 per cent. and would carry the state for Bryan by more than 16,000. So that even a political revolution could not affect the deadly inertia of a one-party state. The trap has been set with great care. The test is not an educational test. but a cunning device to disfranchise. If anything in connection with such a scheme would be amusing an incident at Annapolis when the amendment was under discussion would be. The amendment was introduced by an Eastern Shore lawyer. Delegate Pairo, from Baltimore city, claimed that the man who introduced it could not stand the test himself. The challange was accepted, and curiously enough the lawyer responsible for its introduction failed in three or four particulars. In order for the negro or naturalized citizen to register he must do all of the following things in the presence and to the satisfaction of the registration officers:

1. He must prepare in his own hand writing, without assistance of any kind and without memorandum, a form of registration. In his application with pen and ink he must state:
2. His name, date and place of birth.
3. His residence and occupation for two years preceding his application.
4. Name of his employer or employers for two years preceding his application.
5. The state, county, city, district or precinct in which he last voted.
6. Name in full of the president of the United States.
7. Name in full of one of the justices of the Supreme Court of the United States.
8. Name in full of the governor of Maryland.
9. Name in full of one of the judges of the Court of Appeals of Maryland.
10. Name in full of the Mayor of Baltimore city or the county commissoners.

Citizens who bona fide own property of the assessed value of $500 and who have paid taxes thereon for two years are exempt from the provisions of the amendment. The husbands of women who pay taxes on a like amount of property are exempt.

The same legislature that passed this disfranchisement amendment also passed a law that does away with the advertising of ballots and the issuing of sample ballots in 11 of the 23 counties of the state. In those eleven counties no party designation is affixed to to the names of the candidates. Thus in 11 counties the ballots contain a list of names without party designation, and by taking away the advertising of the ballot and the sample ballot, the voter cannot tell until he enters the voting booth what the ballots will be. The purpose of this law is to strengthen the dominant party, and to insure to it the control of the legislature.

The disfranchisement amendment is contrary to the whole spirit and tendency of American life. When the constitution of the United States was adopted all the 13 original states had property qualifications, the presidential electors actually exercised their individual judgment and elected the president, and it was believed that the people could not be trusted to elect United States Senators. Since then the property qualification has been removed in every state and universal suffrage prevails except in the uufortunate South. The people elect the president; and even in Maryland the people will select the United States Senators.

The disfranchisement amendment would mean the triumph and ascendency of the machine politician. After disfranchising the negro and a large element of naturalized citizens, who can say who will be the next object of the merciless domitation of conscienceless politicians.

NEW LINCOLN STORY.

Comic Side of His Troubles With Radical Republicans.

Several months before President Lincoln issued the great proclamation of emancipation which gave freedom to the whole race of negro slaves in America, my friend, Senator Henderson, of Missouri, came to the White House one day and found Mr. Lincoln in a mood of deepest depression. Finally, the great president said to his caller and friend, that the most constant and acute pressure was being brought upon him by the leaders of the radical element of his party to free the slaves.

"Sumner and Stevens and Wilson simply haunt me," declared Mr. Lincoln, "with their importunities for a proclamation of emancipation. Wherever I may go and whatever way I may turn they are on my trail. And still, in my heart, I have the deep conviction that the hour has not yet come."

Just as he said this, he walked to the window looking out upon Pennsylvania avenue and stood there in silence, his tall figure silhouetted against the light of the window pane, every line of his gracious face expressive of unutterable sadness. Suddenly his lips began to twitch into a smile and his somber eyes lighted with a twinkle of something like mirth.

"The only schooling I ever had, Henderson," he remarked, "was in a log schoolhouse when reading books and grammars were unknown. All our reading was done from the Scriptures and we stood up in a long line and read in turn from the Bible. Our lesson one day was the story of the faithful Israelites who were thrown into the fiery furnace and delivered by the hand of the Lord without so much as the smell of fire on their garments. It fell to one little fellow to read the verse in which occurred, for the first time in the chapter, the names of Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-ne-go. Little Bud stumbled on Shadrach, floundered on Meshach, and went all to pieces on Abed-ne-go. Instantly, the hand of the master dealt him a cuff on the side of the head and left him wailing and blubbering as the next boy in line took up the reading. But before the girl at the end of the line had done reading he had subsided into sniffles and finally became quiet. His blunder and disgrace were forgotten by the others of the class until his turn to read was again approaching. Then, like a thunder-clap out of a clear sky, he set up a wail which even alarmed the master, who, with unusual gentleness, inquired:

" 'What's the matter now?'

"Pointing with a shaking finger to the verse which a few moments later would fall to him to read, Bud managed to quaver out the answer:

" 'Look there, master — there comes them same dam three fellers again.' "

Then his whole face lighted with such a smile as only Lincoln could give, and he beckoned Senator Henderson to his side, silently pointing his long, bony finger to three men who were at that moment crossing Pennsylvania avenue towards the White House. They were Sumner, Wilson, and Thaddeus Stevens. — Adlai E. Stevenson in Woman's World.

A Business Proposition

Did you ever stop to think, Mr. Business Man, that the news of your business is as much a part of the local events as a wedding or a church fair? The ladies are just as much interested in a new fabric you have on the shelves as they are in any home happening. Your store news and anouncements in these columns will reach a large circle of eager buyers. This will enable you to sell your goods while they are new and fresh and you will not have to sacrifice later at remnant counter prices. Think it over.

W. H. RAVENSCRAFT, M.D., PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON, OAKLAND, MD.
Residence on North Third street.
Office in McComas Building.

DR. J. E. LEGGE, PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON,
Offers his Services to the citizens of Oakland and vicinity.
Office in McComas Building, Second street

DR. R. F. BARTLETT, DENTIST.
Office in McComas Building, Second street Oakland, Md.
Special attention given to bridge and crown work.

DR. J. G. ROBINSON, DENTIST, OAKLAND MD.
Office at residence on Liberty street.
GAS ADMINISTERED.

NORMAN S. HEINDELL, ATTORNEY-AT-LAW,
All business given prompt attention.
Office—First National Bank Building.
KLAND, MARYLAND.

GILMOR S. HAMILL, ATTORNEY-AT-LAW AND SOLICITOR IN CHANCERY.
Office in Garrett National Bank Building
Particular attention given to Conveyancing Investigation of land titles and collection of claims. Loans negotiated.

EDWARD H. SINCELL, ATTORNEY-AT-LAW, OAKLAND, MARYLAND.
Will practice inthe Courts of Garrett and Allegany counties, the Court of Appeals of Maryland, and the adjoining counties of West Virginia.

Baltimore & Ohio R. R.

Schedule effective June 2, 1907.

OAKLAND.

* Daily. † Daily except Sunday. § Sunday only.

For WASHINGTON, BALTIMORE, PHILADELPHIA & NEW YORK. Depart *12.27 a. m., *6.31 a. m., *4.17 p. m., *8.29 p. m. Arrive *7.12 a. m., *3.33 p. m., *10.26 p. m., *11.54 p. m.
For CUMBELAND and Way Points, Depart *10.00 a. m., *4.40 p. m. Arrive *9.26 a. m., *7.26 p. m.
For COLUMBUS & CHICAGO, Depart *11.54 p. m. Arrive *6.07 a. m., *4.17 p. m.
For GRAFTON (Accom.), Depart *9.26 a. m., *7.26 p. m. Arrive *10.00 a. m., *4.40 p. m.
For FAIRMONT and WHEELING, Depart *9.26 a. m. (local), *3.33 p. m., *11.54 p. m. Arrive *6.07 a. m., *4.17 p. m., *12.25 night.
For FAIRMONT (Accom.), Depart *7.26 p. m. Arrive *10.00 a. m.
For CINCINNATI, LOUISVILLE and ST LOUIS, Depart *7.12 a. m., *3.33 p. m., *10.26 p. m. Arrive *12.27 a. m., *6.31 a. m., *8.29 p. m.

FOR SALE.

We will sell at private sale at our farms between Mt. Lake Park and Oakland,

1 Gasoline Engine,

8 horse-power, made by the International Harvester Co. Almost new and in perfect running order. Will be sold for $75.

1 Hay Bailer,

operated by horse-power. Makes standard size bales.

For further information call on or write to
THE H. WEBER & SONS CO.,
Oakland, Md.

Oakland Pharmacy

JOS. E. HARNED, Proprietor.

Drugs, Chemicals, Stationery, Cigars

Cameras and Photo Supplies

Land for Sale.

We have for sale the following valuable tracts of land:

One Military Lot of 50 acres, a small portion of which is under cultivation. All good land, and every acre tillable. Watered by several good springs and a never failing small run. Contains some good timber. One-half mile from R. R. siding, and one and one-half miles from Oakland.

Also part of two Military Lots containing about 50 acres. This property is directly East of Oakland, on the South side of the B. & O. R. R. siding on the North side of tracks. Contains valuable grazing land, a portion of which is in cultivation. Valuable R. R. frontage.

Also 10 acres suitable for building sites, just East of Oakland on the North side of the Oakland and Mt. Lake Park road.

For further information, address
THE H. WEBER & SONS CO.,
6-tf Oakland, Md.

A Hint to the Wise Is Sufficient.

Special Sale on
2-qt Blue Enamel Saucepan.
2-qt Blue Fnamel Pudding Pans.
2-qt Blue Enamel Preserve Kettles.

We have just received over 1500 lbs. of our famous 10c Candy.

SUNDAY SCHOOL SUPPLIES.

TAKE our advice — buy now, don't wait, but come and see

THE Little Man

and you will save money on all your Holiday Goods,

Toys, Candies, Novelties, Fancy Goods.

Baumgartner.

CAPITAL $25,000.00

The First National Bank
Of Grantsville, Md.

Safe deposit vault boxes for rent.

SURPLUS $12,500.00

The Savings Department takes care of your money when waiting other investment. The money earns interest from the day it is deposited. It can be withdrawn at any time.

Its Advantages

Any amount from One Dollar up can be deposited, and interest added to principal twice a year. Pass books are issued to every depositor

We Pay 3 Per Cent. Interest.
Open Daily except Sundays and Holidays. 9 a. m. to 4 p. m.

OFFICERS.
C. H. JENNINGS, - - President
U. M. STANTON, - Vice-President
J. O. GETTY, - - - Cashier

DIRECTORS.
C. H. Jennings, J. M. Stanton,
G. C. Keller, Eli Stanton,
W. A. Hitchins, Frank Watts,
J. O. Getty.

A. D. NAYLOR & COMP'Y

You can buy at Reduced Prices

Grain Drills, Harrows AND Plows

AT NAYLOR & CO.'S

Big Stock to select from.

Have the Farmer's Favorite Drills, the Thomas, the Superior Hoe and Disc Drills.

We have the Syracuse, the Imperial and the Wyard Plows.

Also the wood frame Harrows, the wheel and lever Harrows; also the Disc Harrow, all at reduced prices.

We also have a nice line of Spray Pumps.

Muco-Solvent

is an indispensible household remedy because it is a preventive as well as a cure, and because it arrests development of all contageous germs and bacterial diseases. It cures croup, colds, tonsilitis with its associated ills and all inflamed and catarrhal conditions of the mucous surface. It is a harmless vegetable preparation that may safely be administered to the tenderest babe. If not for sale in your neighborhood, write to

THE PIEDMONT SUPPLY CO.,
Sole Agents for Muco-Solvent. Piedmont, W. Va.

Real Estate Bargains

I offer for sale

FARM OF 147 ACRES, 3 miles from Oakland; good 6-room House; plenty of water; over 50 acres cleared; about 25 acres of grass; 2 Orchards, bearing; over 75 acres of White Oak Timber; R. F. D. mail service.

COTTAGE OF 6 ROOMS for sale at Mt. Lake Park.

HOUSE AND LOT on Oak Street, Oakland, for sale or rent. House of 6 rooms—Lot 50x150 feet, with Stable and all necessary Outbuildings.

FOUR VERY DESIRABLE BUILDING LOTS situated on Liberty Street, in Oakland. Also 3 DWELLING HOUSES on Liberty Street, with good water and all necessary outbuildings.

HOUSE AND LOT on Wilson Street. House of 10 rooms; good water. Lot 150 feet front. Best Outbuildings in Oakland.

A VERY GOOD FARM 1 mile from Oakland—all under fence; containing 32 acres; about 25 under cultivation; 2 fine Orchards, and about 2½ acres in small Fruit; 2 Houses, a very good Well and a never failing Spring. A very desirable place for Truck and Poultry Farming. Can be bought at a low price just now.

I have for sale 18 of the very best Building Lots in the town which I will sell for cash—or $5 down and $5 per month.

150 ACRES OF VALUABLE COAL LAND situated less than two miles of Oakland which can be bought at a great bargain. The surface would make fine farming land. This land is well watered with a stream and several good springs.

12 MORE CHOICE BUILDING LOTS at $5 down and $5 per month.

If you want cash for your Real Estate, or Real Estate for your cash, let me hear from you.

☞For further particulars call on or address

James A. Sincell Real Estate Agt and Surveyor
Sincell Building, OAKLAND MD

SINCELL'S | SINCELL'S

IT will be a pleasure to make your Xmas purchases at SINCELL'S, where you will find everything in the line of useful presents. We have made the most careful selection of Xmas Stock this season and sure we can fill your wants in anything.

SILVERWARE	WOMEN'S TOGS	MEN'S TOGS
Manicure Sets	Neckwear	Neckwear
Toilet Sets	Handkerchiefs	Shirts
Hair Brushes	Mufflers	Hose
Cloth Brushes	Furs	Suspenders
Tooth Brushes	Fur Sets	Kid Gloves
Nail Brushes	Umbrellas	Handkerchiefs
Hair Receiver	Kid Gloves	Mufflers
Shaving Sets	Embroid'd Hose	Hats
Shaving Mirrors	Silk Hose	Cuff Links
Hand Mirrors	Underwear	Collars, Cuffs

We are ready to show you the most attractlve assortment of Clothig, Shoes, Hats, Trunks and Traveling Bags, Rain Coats, Smoking Jackets, Bath Robes, and Underwear we have ever had the pleasure of placing before our customers. Will have extra help for the Xmas trade so everyone will be well cared for. Always plecsed to see you. Wishing you a Joyful Xmas.

Any Women's or Children's Winter Coats One-Third Off.

H. C. SINCEL & CO., Oakland, Md.

Malleable Steel Ranges

OUR attention has been called to the fact of a canvass now being made in our county by persons representing a line of malleable steel ranges, claiming to have a range superior to other makes, that are sold direct to the farmers at very high prices, by giving long time and taking notes for same.

This plan is not new, and has been worked several times throughout our county heretofore at a great loss to he farmers. It is a surprising fact that strangers can go among our people and induce them to buy ranges far in access of what they could purchase from a home dealer and that they are willing to buy without any investigation as to what they could do and the amount of money saved by buying through a regular stove dealer.

There are a number of malleable steel ranges now offered to the trade by the best of manufacturers. The Malleable Steel Range Mfg Co., of South Bend, Ind., The Majestic Mfg Co., of St. Louis, Mo., and The Born Steel Range Co., of Cleveland, Ohio, are making a line of malleable ranges, and for finish, durability and beauty, are among the best. The Born Malleable Iron Range is new to the trade, as heretofore they only made steel ranges, but they are now prepared to put their malleable ranges on the market. It is guaranteed to give the best of satisfaction. All Born agents can furnish this range to the trade at from $45 to $50 complete.

Our Davis Range is made by the Born Steel Range Co., after our own ideas and has a number of improvements and advantages not found on any other range. Anyone contemplating buying a range, if they will take the time to investigate the Davis Steel Range, cannot help but see for themselves the many advantages and superior qualities found in its construction. All we ask is a fair chance to show our Ranges in comparison with others, both as to price and quality.

During the past twenty-five years we have sold a number of malleable steel ranges in connection with our cast ranges and have replaced a number of wrough iron ranges with cast and steel ranges, and find that very few customers that have had the wrought iron range willing to pay the advance price asked for malleable iron ranges, as their experience has not been that it will wear enough longer to warrant the difference in price.

It is a well known fact that for a few dollars any manufacturer that is prepared to make malleable iron can put a malleable top on a range at an advance of from $3 to $5 extra over cast, and that no one so far as we know can or has ever used malleable iron in constructing the fire box. The grrtes and liners are the parts that always give out first, and cast iron has proven so far to be the best material known for the fire box; on its construction largely depends the durability of the stove or range.

In planning the Davis Steel Range, we believe we have one of the most durable fire boxes ever offered to the trade. If you are interested or want to know anything about our line of ranges, send your name and address for our booklet that will tell you all about the Davis Steel Range, sold at the reasonable price from $30 to $40 complete, with large steel closet and copper reservoir, guaranteed to givh satisfaction.

J. M. Davis & Sons, Oakland

Only First Quality Printing—The Republican.

PRESIDENT TO PAY HIS SHARE OF THE EXPENSE

But Government Finances the Scientific Expedition Which President Heads.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 9.—President Roosevelt has issued a statement on the plans for his African hunt, telling of his companions and making known the fact that the expedition will be official and will be organized by the Smithsonian Institution. He will be the head of the scientific venture, whose fruits will be devoted to the new National Museum.

The President will pay his own and Kermit's expenses, Edmund Huller, a California naturalist, and Major Edgar A. Means, retired, of the Medical Corps of the army, will pay their way. Expenses of J. Alden Loring, a naturalist in the employ of the Government, and R. J. Cunningham, an English hunter and guide, who is now in Africa, assembling the outfit for the party and making inquiries about the drift of big game, will be borne by the institution.

The start will be made from New York as soon as possible after the inauguration of Mr. Taft next March.

The official statement, which was given out by Secretary Walcott of the Smithsonian Institution, read:

"In March, 1909, Mr. Theodore Roosevelt will head a scientific expedition to Africa outfitted by the Smithsonian Institution, and starting from New York city. The expedition will gather natural history materials for the government collections, to be deposited by the Smithsonian Institution in the new United States National Museum at Washington, D. C.

"Besides the President and his son, Kermit Roosevelt, the personnel of the party, on leaving New York, will consist of three representatives of the Smithsonian Institute: Major Edgar A. Hearns, Medical Corps, U. S. A. (retired); Mr. Edmund Heller, and Mr. J. Alden Loring. On arriving in Africa the party will be enlarged by the addition of Mr. R. J. Cunningham, who is now in Africa preparing the President's outfit. He will have charge of a number of native porters, who, with the necessary animals will be formed into a small caravan.

"Mr. Roosevelt and his son will kill the big game, the skins and skeletons of which will be prepared and shipped to the United States by other members of the party. Kermit Roosevelt is to be the official photographer of the expedition.

"The national collections, are very deficient in natural history materials from the Dark Continent, and an effort will be made by the expedition to gather general collections in zoology and botany to supply some of its deficiencies; but the main effort will be to collect the large and vanishing African animals.

"Mr. R. J. Cunningham, who is now engaged in assembling the materials for Mr. Roosevelt's use, has been employed to act as guide and manager of the caravan. Mr. Cunningham is also an experienced collector of natural history specimens, having made collections for the British Museum in Norway and Africa. He is an English fieldman, who has guided numerous hunting parties in Africa and who was chief hunter for the field Columbian Exposition.

"Mr. Edmund Heller, a graduate of Stanford University, class of 1901, is a thoroughly trained naturalist, whose special work will be the preparation and preservation of specimens of large animals. Mr. Heller is about 30 years of age. His former experience, when associated with Mr. D. G. Eliot and Mr. Ackley of the Field Columbian Museum in collecting big game animals in the same portions of Africa which Mr. Roosevelt will visit, will be a valuable asset to the expedition. Mr. Heller has had large experience in animal collecting in Alaska, British Columbia, United States, Mexico, Central America and South America. In the year 1898 he made a collection trip of eleven months to Gallopagos Islands starting from San Francisco. He is a born enthusiastic collector as well as a well-equipped naturalist. He is also author of scientific papers on mammals, birds, reptiles and fishes. At present he is assistant curator of the Museum of Vertebrate Zoology of the University of California.

"J. Alden Loring is a field naturalist, whose training comprises service in the biological survey of the Department of Agriculture and in the Bronx Zoological Park, New York city, as well as on numerous collecting trips through British Columbia, Mexico and United States.

"He is about 38 years old, of ardent temperament, and intensely energetic. In August, September and October, 1908, he made the highest record for a traveling collector, having sent in to the United States National Museum 900 well prepared specimens of small mammals in the three months' journey from London through Sweden, Germany, Switzerland and Belgium.

"Major Edgar A. Hearns, a retired officer of the Medical Corps of the army, about 53 years of age, will be the physician of the trip and will have charge of the Smithsonian portion of the party. He had twenty-five years experience as an army doctor and is also well known as a naturalist and collector of natural tory specimens.

"No fears need be entertained for the President's safety from the attacks of man or beast, as every member of the party is an excellent rifle shot.

"The party will reach Mombasa in April, 1909. No detailed itineracy has been decided upon; but the general route will be up the Uganda Railway to Nairobi and Lake Victoria Nyanza, a distance of about 650 miles by rail, thence crossing into Uganda, and finally, passing down the Nile to Cairo. Much of the hunting will be done in British East Africa, where the Uganda railroad can be used as a base of supplies and means of ready transportation. At least one great mountain, possibly Mount Kenia, will be visited.

"Khartoum will be reached, if all goes well, about April, 1910. The expedition may be expected to spend about one year on African soil."

Among the callers at the White House Saturday was Representative Humphreys of Washington. He has a reputation as a hunter of big game in Alaska and had a long conference with Mr. Roosevelt concerning the weapons he should take into the jungle. The Westerner indorsed the President's choice of a 40.5, the largest calibre smokeless rifle made in this country.

TOYS! TOYS! TOYS!

Everybody Handles Toys.

But if you wish to see a complete line of Toys call at the Gold Mine Store. We have everything in the Toy line. Come early and you can get your choice before the stock has been picked over. We give you this notice so you can't blame us if some things are sold before you come. We have the only Toy Store in Oakland and can give you a better Toy for your money than you can get elsewhere. Truly yours,

GEO. M. MASON.

Honor Roll of Gauer School.

The following named pupils of the Gauer school have made from 95 to 100 per cent in attendance and 100 per cent in deportment for the month ending November 30, 1908:

Viola Lathrum, Nora Gauer, Stewart Roth, Decoursey Roth, Peter Hamstead, Channing Mann, Glendy Gnegy, Hazel Mosser, Nina Lathrum, Oda Gnegy, Harry Enlow, Kirk Lathrum, Russell Roth, Mabel Lathrum, Marguerite Roth, Hilda Mosser, Ervin Roth, McKinley Gnegy, Anna Martin, Elmer Hamstead, Books Roth.

LLOYD K. FIKE, Principal.

Take me out to the Gold Mine.

PEARRE AFTER WARNER.

Reiterates Charges that Montgomery County Man Was Disloyal.

Editor The Washington Herald.

In a recent issue of your paper the following language appears concerning me: "Representative Geo. A. Pearre's assertion that the reduction of his majority from 4,900 to about 500 in his recent race for re-eleetion to Congress was due to in part, at least, to the opposition of Brainard H. Warner, excites only ridicule on the part of those cognizant of the facts." I assume that this, together with a portion of what follows, is the language of some writer for The Washington Herald because it is not quoted. The article goes on to say, "Mr. Warner took a decided interest in the late election, especially in Maryland and appealed to the business men to support the entire Republican ticket." His slogan was: "This is a business campaign." "He emphasized this issue in a speech he made under the auspices of the Taft, Sherman and Pearre Club of Frederick, October 16, and subsequently at his own expense, circulated through the Sixth district thousands of copies of this speech." &c. Then following is a short extract from the closing of Mr. Warner's alleged speech in which he says: "If you are wise, you will prefer the former and cast your votes on election day for Taft, Sherman and Pearre." This is again followed by an interview with Mr. Warner, in which he undertakes to deny that he was either hostile to Republican success in the Sixth district of Maryland or utterly indifferent to it.

I reiterate a statement which I have frequently made before, and which I will continue to make because it is made upon unquestionable fact, that Mr. Brainard H. Warner was not true to the Republican cause in the last Congressional election.

I have been informed by a gentleman who heard Mr. Warner's speech in Frederick that his reference to my election was only in the most perfunctory way, as above stated, and that those who were present were surprised that he made no further reference to me.

If Mr. Warner were true to the Republican Congressional ticket, as he is trying now to pretend, perhaps he can explain why it was that after writing a letter to Mr. Mortimer O. Stabler, chairman of the county central committee of Montgomery County, which was read at the first meeting of that committee on the eve of the campaign, offering his services in the campaign to aid in the election of a Congressman in the Sixth Congressional district, he failed to keep three speaking appointments in Montgomery County which were made for him by the committee, and of which he was informed. Mr. Warner did not work for the election of the Republican candidate in the Sixth Congressional district, and did not urge his friends to support that candidate loyally at the polls, anything that Mr. Warner may say to the contrary notwithstanding.

The suggestion contained in the quotation from the article appearing in your paper to the effect that the assertion of Mr. Warner's failure to support the Republican Congressional ticket in the Sixth district "excites only ridicule on the part of those cognizant of the facts" is, as you will see, entirely unwarranted. To those who are familiar with the facts, this charge does not excite ridicule but indignation, not only at Mr. Warner's party infidelity, but at his lame effort to escape the proper blame thereof.

I must do Mr. Warner the justice to say that I believe that he is right in his statement that there is no Warner faction in Montgomery county. There could hardly be a faction in Montgomery County dominated by a gentleman whose legal residence is in the city of Washington and whose right to vote in Montgomery County has often been questioned.

I would not exaggerate the importance of Mr. Warner's connection with politics in Maryland by intimating that he alone could accomplish the perfidious result in the Sixth district of Maryland, but when it is remembered that Mr. Warner's county convention at Rockville, controlled by his friends defeated a resolution indorsing Secretary Taft, it is not hard to understand that even as a business man Mr. Warner took little interest in the recent election, except in an effort to close the eyes of the public to his very questionable conduct.

As you have given space to the unwarranted attack upon me in the issue of your paper above referred to, I have no doubt that you will do me the equal courtesy in the publication of this correct statement of the facts.

GEO. A. PEARRE.

Guilty of Attempted Assault.

The jury of John Pacilla, colored, the would be assailant of Nettie Childs, aged 7 years, after being out of the court room but five minutes, brought in a verdict of guilty at Kingwood, W. Va., Saturday. There was a great excitement in the court room when the verdict was pronounced and the aisles were crowed to the doors.

Lot For Sale.

The best building lot in Oakland; opposite new courthouse, at reasonable price. Apply to owner.

HENRY LAUER,
Oakland, Md.

HE KNEW ABOUT LAWYERS.

And That Was Why He Was Not Interested in the Case.

The sudden manner in which the team that was coming down the road halted was enough to show that the driver was surprised at something. He took his hat off and waved it at a man who was working in the field, at the same time calling at the top of his voice:

"S-a-a-y, t-h-e-r-e!"

"What do you want?" asked the man who was working as he came and leaned over the fence without letting go of the lines over his team.

"Didn't you hear 'bout it?"

"'Bout what?"

"It's goin' on."

"What's goin' on?"

"Land sakes! There's a man fur ye! Ye'll be sayin' next yer uncle didn't die an' leave a will that mentions ye ter have a hull lot o' money if the other fellers don't succeed in breakin' it."

"Course I knowed that."

"An' the case come up fur trial this mornin'."

"I knowed that too."

"Then why wasn't ye up to the courthouse takin' an' interest inter it same ez the rest on 'em did?"

"Waal, ye see, this here's a busy season with me. If I hedn't nothin' else ter do I wouldn't mind droppin' in an' hearin' 'em argy back an' forth. But I dunno's I care much which o' the lawyers gits the money."—Detroit Free Press.

They Don't Speak Now.

"You love long rambles in the country?" asked the girl in the white sweater.

"Yes, indeed," responded the young man in the green hat with the purple band and buckled shoes. "When I go out in the country all nature seems to smile."

"Gracious! I don't blame her. It is a wonder she doesn't laugh outright."—New York Herald.

No Wonder.

Mother (viciously scrubbing her small boy's face with soap and water)—Johnny, didn't I tell you never to blacken your face with burnt cork again? Here I have been scrubbing half an hour, and it won't come off.

Boy (between gulps)—I—uch—ain't your little boy—uch! I's Mose, de colored lady's boy.—Judge.

Three Flights High.

The city child was describing to her friends a very tall tree she had seen in the country.

"Oh, it was awful big," she said.

"Well, how big?" they asked.

"Three flights," came the answer.—New York Press.

The First Slow One.

He uttered a joyous cry.

"And I am really and truly the first man you ever kissed?"

"Yes, Clarence," the beautiful girl rejoined, her red lip curling slightly, "The others all took the initiative."—Pittsburg Post.

If They Only Knew.

When on parade the people think
He is a millionaire,
But things look different in his room,
Could they but see him there.
—Baltimore American.

Getting Giddy.

John—Oi tell 'ee, Maria, we did it in style. We 'ad a fly from the station.

Maria—Goo' gracious, John! Ye don' mean to say you bin in one o' the wunnerful nasty ol' airyplunny thinks like ye was tellin' me on?—Tatler.

Realism.

Stage Manager—I wish we could work in a few more realistic touches in this woodland scene. Now, how would it be to have some one growl like a bear?

Author—The very thing! We'll call in the critics!—Harper's Weekly.

Ambition.

"Here's an invitation to the wedding of Alexander Hamilton Jones to Mary Jane Wiggs. Gracious, I wonder what Jones is marrying her for?"

"Probably just to see his name spelled out in full."—Catholic Standard and Times.

Looks No Proof.

"Look at my client," said the attorney for the defense. "Does he look like a hardened criminal?"

"No, I can't say that he does," answered the careful witness, "but that doesn't signify, for neither do you."—Puck.

Extremely Unfashionable.

"Who are those people in that private box?"

"I don't know. Mere nobodies, I guess. They are devoting their whole attention to the play."—Houston Post.

The Height of Affability.

Randall—Falls all over you, does she?

Rogers—She couldn't be any more affable if I were her cook.—Judge.

THE REPUBLICAN.

VOLUME 32. OAKLAND, MARYLAND, THURSDAY, DECEMBER 17, 1908. NUMBER 42

SCHOOL TEACHER BEAHM WAS FOUND NOT GUILTY

Of The Crime With Which He Was Charged and Indicted.

In the Circuit Court for this county the criminal docket was called on Monday morning and up to the hour of going to press today a number of cases have been disposed of, Judge Henderson presiding.

The criminal proceedings have interested large numbers of persons but perhaps the case in which the greatest interest has been taken was that of the State vs. Joseph C. Beahm, recently of Accident, who was arrested sometime during the late summer charged with having had carnal knowledge of a female under the age of sixteen years, the alleged victim being one Etta Bowser. The case against Mr Beahm was taken up Tuesday afternoon when he was arraigned before the Court and the opening statements made by the attorneys on both sides, the State being represented by State's Attorney Renninger and Mr. Thomas J. Peddicord, while Mr. Beahm had as his counsel Messrs. G. S. Hamill and Ferdinand Williams.

Yesterday morning the case was resumed and the Bowser girl was placed on the stand, her examination being conducted by the attorneys and the Court very quietly, in fact in such a manner that many who had gone to the court room thinking that some entertainment of a questionable character would be afforded them were greatly disappointed. The child made a fair witness for the State, but in one or two instances flatly contradicted herself.

In his defense Mr. Beahm denied the charges alleged against him and was extremely earnest in his manner. In the testimony it was shown that on one other occasion he had been tried on a similar charge and found guilty, the higher court reversing the finding of the lower court and remanding the case for another trial, which never took place.

The case was closed about four o'clock and immediately thereafter Judge Henderson reviewing the evidence referred to the fact that the testimony of the prosecuting witness was the only evidence directly against the traverser and pronounced him not guilty.

The State had thirteen witnesses while the defense had thirty-two.

Other cases in this branch of the Court was disposed of as follows:

CRIMINAL APPEALS

1. Richard Newman vs. State; pollution of streams; appeal dismissed, each party to pay his own costs. Hamill—Renninger.

2. Annie Mosser vs. State; assault and battery; appeal from Gonder; stet. Peddicord—Renninger.

3. Mary Pysell vs. State; appeal from Gonder; tried before Court and verdict held sub curia. Hamill—Renninger.

6. Nicholas Paugh vs. State; setting out fire; appeal from Teats who imposed fine of $25 and costs; tried before Court and verdict not guilty. Peddicord—Renninger.

7. Isaac Paugh vs. State; same entries as in No. 6 and submitted to Court on testimony in No. 6; same verdict. Same counsel.

CRIMINAL TRIALS.

4. State vs. Clark Rodeheaver; desertion of wife and children; dismissed.

5. State vs. Mayrod Higgins; larceny of a ham; tried before the Court; verdict guilty. Renninger—Matthews.

6. State vs. Wm. DeWitt; larceny of a bicycle; tried before the Court; not guilty. Renninger—Hamill.

8. State vs. John Adam and Nick Brazika; murder of Tony Lustick. This case went to trial this morning. In it there are more than thirty witnesses, all of them being foreigners and unable to speak English, making the services of an interpreter necessary and thus prolong the taking of the testimony.

10. State vs. Vernon W. Jackson; obtaining money under false pretenses; plea of guilty; sentence suspended and paroled by Court for the term of two years. Renninger—Offutt.

16. State vs. Joseph Sanders; assault and battery on Cleveland Stemple; plea of guilty and sentenced to pay a fine of $5 and costs. Renninger—Hamill.

APPEALS.

1. G. H. Pritchard vs. Martha A. Wortman; judgment for appellant for $90; Semmes.

2. Baker Johnson vs. Gilead Broadwater; continued; Thayer—Sincell.

3. John Shartzer & Co. vs. John Felty; tried before the court; judgment for appellant for $33.39; Semmes—Peddicord.

4. Cuppett, Leighton & Co. vs. Felty & Co.; tried before court; judgment reversed and verdict for appellants; Hamill—Peddicord.

5. John Reynolds vs. Frank McGan; settled; Renninger—S. F. Hamill.

6. O. T. Mackin vs. J. T. Rodeheaver; settled.

7. A. E. Body vs. John Shartzer & Co.; continued.

8. Same vs. Jenny Reedy; continued.

9. Peter Opel vs. John Shartzer & Co.; continued.

10. John Shartzer & Co. vs. The Outlet Mfg. Co.; judgment affirmed; Semmes and Hamill—S. F. Hamill.

11. Doyle Burton vs. C. M. Wilson & Bro.; tried before the court; verdict for appellee for $71.15; Peddicord—Hamill.

12. Felty & Co. vs. Thomas R. Mackey; dismissed by appellant; Peddicord—Renninger & Offutt.

13. Same vs. Oliver S. Lewis; jury trial; verdict for Lewis for $100; Peddicord—Renninger & Offutt.

14. Edward White vs. C. A. Hesen; tried before court; verdict for appellee.

15. Mary Pysell vs. John E. Miller; continued; Hamill—Thayer.

16. B. T. Bray vs. A. J. Rhoades; judgment affirmed with costs.

17. Patrick Hamill vs. P. M. Tornandorf; tried before court; verdict for plaintiff.

TRIALS.

1. Emma F. Root vs. Bear Creek Lumber Co.; trespass; stet; Sincell and Williams—Peddicord.

2. Daniel E. Offutt vs. C. A. and A. M. Ashby; trespass; continued.

3. John F. Friend et al., vs. The Yough Manor Land Co.; trespass; settled on terms to be filed, the defendants agreeing to pay plaintiffs the sum of $3,165.75 and costs. $911.25; Sincell, Thayer and Gordon—Hamill and Semmes.

4. Valley Savings Bank vs. William Mowery; stet; Mitchell—Heindell.

5. W. H. Rhoades vs. Felty & Co.; removed to Allegany county; Peddicord—Williams.

6. John H. Dye vs. H. M. Vanzandt; continued.

7. N. N. Cupp vs. John H. Conneway; nonprossed; Peddicord—Hamill.

8. Samuel Lakel vs. Williamsport Hardwood Lumber Co.; settled; Peddicord—Hamil and Semmes.

9. Mt. Lake Water Co. vs. Mt. Lake Park Association; continued; Peddicord—Hamill.

15. M. H. Frankhouser et al., vs. W. J. Kitzmiller; attachment for unliquidated damages, jury trial; verdict for plaintiff for $1,000; motion made for new trial; Renninger and Offutt—Thayer and Peddicord.

17. Minnie Whetsell vs. S. A. Nally; continued; Renninger and Offutt—Hamill and Peddicord.

23. John J. Winn vs. Donald Simpson; debt; confessed judgment in favor of plaintiff for $2756.90 and costs; Sincell—Thayer.

25. Z. T. Gibson vs. Sarah E. Schmidt; ejectment; continued.

31. M. J. Grove Lime Co. vs. Felty & Co.; judgment for plaintiff for $460.03 and costs; Thayer—Peddicord.

48. Taft & Co. vs. John Shartzer & Co.; judgment for the plaintiffs for $163.17; Sincell.

57. First National Bank of Kitzmiller vs. Gillespie & Stemple; judgment for $2599.60 in favor of the plaintiff: Thayer—Sincell and Peddicord.

96. N. U. Bond and E. H. Sincell vs. Pittsburg and Maryland Coal Company; judgment for plaintiffs for $2946.10.

Garrett County

4

PER CENT.

Court House Bonds

These Bonds are in Denominations of $500 and represent the Highest Grade of Investment from the standpoint of Security and Income. They afford an excellent opportunity for the investment of your idle funds at a profit able rate of interest.

FOR TERMS, Address

BOND DEPARTMENT

The Second National Bank

OF

Cumberland, Maryland.

FARMERS' INSTITUTES TO BE HELD IN COUNTY

Meetings To Be Conducted In Oakland and Accident.

To the Editor of The Republican:

The Farmers' Institute Department of the Maryland Agricultural College will begin its season's work at Cumberland on December 28th.

The purpose of these institutes is to bring before the farmers of the State information which will correct many of the existing evils in the production of crops—feeding and marketing them.

The popular institutes are conducted by men and women chosen by the Director of the Department, William A. Amos, and are selected from experienced and successful farmers, assisted by specialists from the Agricultural College and Experiment Station departments, who, through addresses, aided by illustrations, lay before the farmers the important methods they have adopted in their own practice; or in the case of the specialists, the results obtained through experiments in the laboratory or in field plots, which is supported by the experience of the local men through questions and discussions which add interest and life to the meetings.

The usual practice in conducting farmers' institutes is to send two men from a corps of workers selected for the season's work. Those who will visit Allegany and Garrett counties will be Mr. Joseph Wing, who made a tour of the State in 1900-1901, and told how he made Woodland Farm, his family inheritance, one of the most prosperous in Ohio, through the introduction of alfalfa and the industry of fattening lambs, in which industry he continues with much greater success than when on his first visit here.

Since Mr. Wing's visit to Maryland, alfalfa has been grown successfully in all the counties of the State and bids fair to be one of the most profitable crops that the farmers can grow; it being the plant that enables the farmers to grow the expensive elements he has been purchasing in wheat bran, cotton-seed meal and linseed meal, and, at the same time draw from the air the nitrogen which he has been buying from the fertilizer dealers as 15 cents a pound.

Mr. Wing has often been invited by, and at the present time has an engagement with, the University of Ohio to present the charms of farm life to the student body. He is an easy speaker and has a wonderful power over his audience. He will be aided by Dr. Augustus Stabler, a practicing physician and dairy farmer of Montgomery county.

Dr. Stabler's special work with the department for two years, in other parts of the State, has been to call attention of the residents of rural districts to importance of care in handling milk, of light and ventilation, a study of bacteria and their influence on the health of men and animals.

This line of work is new for the Department, as it has been difficult to obtain one so competent to enlighten the patrons of the institute on this important subject. He was a member of the corps of lecturers that traveled through the dairy section of the State in the interests of dairymen and health boards for milk production. His subjects will be "Cause and Prevention of Disease," "Typhoid Fever and its Cause and Prevention."

In connection with his dairy in Montgomery county, he will present his system of improving a wornout farm through growing the leguminous crops, also their value in the dairy.

Dr. Stabler was a student of the Johns Hopkins University when it was first organized in 1876.

The work of these men alone will justify the farmers and others in attending the institutes. As their subjects indicate, they will make plain how to maintain the health and increase the fertility and productivity of the farms, in which all are interested.

The morning session of the institute in Oakland will open at 10 o'clock, Wednesday, December 30th; the afternoon session at 1:30. At Accident the first session will be at 2:30 p. m., on Thursday, December 31st, followed by morning and afternoon sessions on Friday, January 1st.

The institute is free to all, and it is hoped that farmers will attend with their families.

WM. L. AMOS, Director.

PROVIDENCE.

The order of the day is plenty of snow.

Messrs. Benjamin, William and Scott Paugh were hunting Saturday last and killed a grey fox.

Mr. Charles Harvey killed three red foxes Saturday last.

Mr. Bert Hogue took his little honey in out of the snow Saturday last. They were married at Ferndale church Sunday morning.

Mr. Mark Moon has paid frequent visits at the residence of Miss Lois Paugh during the late moonlight evenings.

Messrs. A. G. Moon and George McCrobie are hauling lumber for the Ravenscroft Lumber Company.

The Providenee school is progressing well under the management of Mr. William Paugh as teacher.

FOR RENT.—The Rectory on Alder street; house contains 14 rooms; stable and other outbuildings on the property. Apply to BOWIE JOHNSON, Oakland. 3t

DIXON & KELSO

DIXON & KELSO will offer their Customers the following PRICES FOR THE HOLIDAY BUSINESS, either cash or trade

Arbuckles Coffee, lb	15c
Loose Roasted Coffee, lb	12½c
French Mixed Candy, lb	7c
" " 4 lbs	25c
½ Ton Strictly Pure Candy, lb	9c
Good Chocolate Candy, lb	15c
Daisy Mixed Nuts. lb	12½c
English Walnuts, lb	15c
Big Sweet Oranges, doz	20c
Big Sour Lemons, doz	20c
Large loose Raisins, lb	8c
1-lb pkg Seeded Raisins, (not 12 oz pkg)	10c
1-lb pkg cleaned Currants, (not 12 oz to pkg)	10c
Bakers, Rockwood or Hershey Chocolate, cake	19c
7 bars Lenox Soap	25c
10 bars good Laundry Soap	25c
2-lb pkg Premier Oats	9c
1-lb box Rumford Bak'g Powder	25c
Best grade Citron, lb	20c
Peanuts, qt	5c
Grain Pepper, lb	12½c
Big Cocoanut with quart milk	5c

Our Stock of HOLIDAY GOODS

Suitable for Presents never was as large—have—

DOLLS
CHRISTMAS TREE ORNAMENTS
LADIES' COLLARS
MUFFLERS
FANCY SHIRTS
WAIST PATTERNS
ROCKERS
SLEDS
BOOKS
TOILET SETS
FANCY SUSPEND'RS
NECKWEAR
LAMPS

and a great many other things both useful and ornamental.

Have more Flour than all the other stores in Oakland put together, to sell at 70c to 80c a sack.

Yours to Please. DIXON & KELSO.

MOUNTAIN LAKE PARK.

Our Sunday School was reorganized Tuesday evening by the election of the following officers: Superintendent, H. N. Cuppett; assistant, J. A. Hayden; secretary, Miss Abbie Chance; treasurer, Mrs. E. E. Friend; librarians, Malcolm Chance and Paul Sperry; organists Misses Edna Chance and Martha Welch. Two new departments—home department and cradle roll—were organized with P. B. Goff superintendent of the former while the latter will be under the direction of Mrs. Adam Long.

Mountain Lake Park was represented on the grand jury at the present term of court by Mr. George Hipsley, while Mr. C. J. Rathbun of Loch Lynn is on the petit jury.

Mr. Stewart, the photographer, is now occupying the Nappenberger cottage in Cosey Row, and is negotiating for its purchase.

Everything is now in readiness for the ice harvest except the water supply.

The special meetings at Wesley Chapel closed last week.

Rev. Bolton's next series of meetings will be at Deer Park immediately after the holidays.

Mr. Bryson Welch is quite ill at this time.

Miss Rose Wilson who was too ill last week to teach took up her school work last Monday.

Removal Notice.

I have moved from my old location, the Helbig stable, to my new barn on Liberty street opposite the railroad station where my old as well as new patrons will receive the same courteous treatment as heretofore.

Thanking all for past favors and soliciting a continuance of your patronage. I am, J. A. KELLEY.

E. A. WEIMER.

GOOD THINGS FOR CHRISTMAS

When you spend your money for Gifts why not get something useful, such as a Hat, a pair of Shoes, Hosiery, Ties, Suspenders, Shirts, Handkerchiefs, Fancy Vests, Pajamas, Skirts, Umbrellas, Muffiers, Gloves, Cuff Buttons, Brooches, Pins, Etc. We have many of these articles in fancy boxes. Come and see before you buy.

Yours Truly. E. A. WEIMER.

NEXT DOOR TO THE POSTOFFICE OAKLAND, MD

INTO THE PRIMITIVE

BY ROBERT AMES BENNET

ILLUSTRATIONS BY RAY WALTERS

COPYRIGHT 1908, BY A. C. McCLURG & CO.

He was almost in view of where he had left Winthrope and Leslie, when he stopped and stood hesitating.

"I can't do it," he muttered; "I can't tell her—poor girl!"

He turned and pushed into the thicket. Forcing a way through the tangle of thorny shrubs and creepers until several yards from the path he began to edge towards the face of the jungle, that he might peer out at his companions unseen by them.

There was more of the thicket before him than he had thought, and he was still fighting his way through it when he was brought to a stand by a peculiar cry that might have been the bleat of a young lamb: "Ba—ba!"

"What's that?" he croaked.

He stood listening, and in a moment he again heard the cry, this time more distinctly: "Blak!—Blak!"

There could be no mistake. It was Winthrope calling for him, and calling with a clearness of voice that would have been physically impossible half an hour since. Blake's sunken eyes lighted with hope. He burst through the last screen of jungle and stared towards the palm under which he had left his companions. They were not there.

Another call from Winthrope directed his gaze more seaward. The two were seated beside a fallen palm, and Miss Leslie had a large round object raised to her lips. Winthrop was waving to him.

"Cocoanuts!" he yelled. "Come on!"

Three of the palms had been overthrown by the hurricane, and when Blake came up he found the ground strewn with nuts. He seized the first he came to; but Winthrope held out one already opened. He snatched it from him and placed the hole to his swollen lips. Never had champagne tasted half so delicious as that cocoanut milk. Before he could drain the last of it through the little opening Winthrope had the husks torn from the ends of two other nuts, and the convenient germinal spots gouged open with his penknife.

Blake emptied the third before he spoke. Even then his voice was hoarse and strained. "How'd you strike 'em?"

"I couldn't help it," explained Winthrope. "Hardly had you disappeared when I noticed the tops of the fallen palms and thought of the nuts. There was one in the grass not 20 feet from where we lay."

"Lucky for you—and for me, too, I guess," said Blake. "We were all three down for the count. But this settles the first round in our favor. How do you like the picnic, Miss Jenny?"

"Miss Leslie, if you please," replied the girl, with hauteur.

"Oh, say, Miss Jenny!" protested Blake, genially. "We live in the same boarding house now. Why not be folksy? You're free to call me Tom. Pass me another nut, Winthrope. Thanks! By the way, what's your front name? Saw it aboard ship—Cyril—"

"Cecil," corrected Winthrope, in a low tone.

"Cecil—Lord Cecil, eh?—or is it only the Honorable Cecil?"

"My dear sir, I have intimated before that, for reasons of—er—state—"

"Oh, yes; you're traveling incog., in the secret service. Sort of detective—"

"Detective!" echoed Winthrope, in a peculiar tone.

Blake grinned. "Well, it is rawther a nawsty business for your honorable ludship. But there's nothing like calling things by their right names."

"Right names—er—I don't quite take you. I have told you distinctly my name is Cecil Winthrope!"

"O-h-h! how lovely!—See-sill! See-seal!—Bet they called you Sissy at school. English chum of mine told me your schools are corkers for nicknames. What'll we make it—Sis or Sissy?"

"I prefer my patronymic, Mr. Blake," replied Winthrope.

"All right, then; we'll make it Pat, if that's your choice. I say, Pat, this juice is the stuff for wetness, but it makes a fellow remember his grub. Where'd you leave that fish?"

"Really, I can't just say, but it must have been where I wrenched my ankle."

"You cawn't just say! And what are we going to eat?"

"Here are the cocoanuts."

"Bright boy! go to the head of the class! Just take some more husk off those empty ones."

Winthrope caught up one of the nuts, and with the aid of his knife stripped it of its husk. At a gesture from Blake he laid it on the bare ground and the American burst it open with a blow of his heel. It was an immature nut, and the meat proved to be little thicker than clotted cream. Blake divided it into three parts, handing Miss Leslie the cleanest.

Though his companions began with more restraint, they finished their shares with equal gusto. Winthrope needed no further orders to return to his husking. One after another the nuts were cracked and divided among the three, until even Blake could not swallow another mouthful of the luscious cream.

Toward the end Miss Leslie had become drowsy. At Winthrope's urging, she now lay down for a nap, Blake's coat serving as a pillow. She fell asleep while Winthrope was yet arranging it for her. Blake had turned his back on her and was staring moodily at the hippopotamus trail when Winthrope hobbled around and sat down on the palm trunk beside him.

"I say, Blake," he suggested, "I feel deuced fagged myself. Why not all take a nap?"

"'And when they awoke, they were all dead men,'" remarked Blake.

"By Jove, that sounds like a joke," protested the Englishman. "Don't rag me now."

"Joke!" repeated Blake. "Why, that's Scripture, Pat, Scripture! Anyway, you'd think it no joke to wake up and find yourself going down the throat of a hippo."

"Hippo?"

"Dozens of them over in the river. Shouldn't wonder if they've all landed and're tracking me down by this time."

"But hippopotami are not carnivorous—they're not at all dangerous, unless one wounds them, out in the water."

"That may be; but I'm not taking chances. They've got mouths like sperm whales—I saw one take a yawn. Another thing, that bayou is chuck full of alligators, and a fellow down on the Rand told me they're like the Central American gavials for keenness to nip a swimmer."

"They will not come out on this dry land."

"Suppose they won't—there're no other animals in Africa but sheep, eh?"

"What can we do? The captain told me that there are both lions and leopards on this coast."

"Nice place for them, too, around these trees," added Blake. "Lucky for us, they're night-birds mostly—if that Rand fellow didn't lie. He was a Boer, so I guess he ought to know."

"To be sure. It's a nasty fix we're in for to-night. Could we not build some kind of a barricade?"

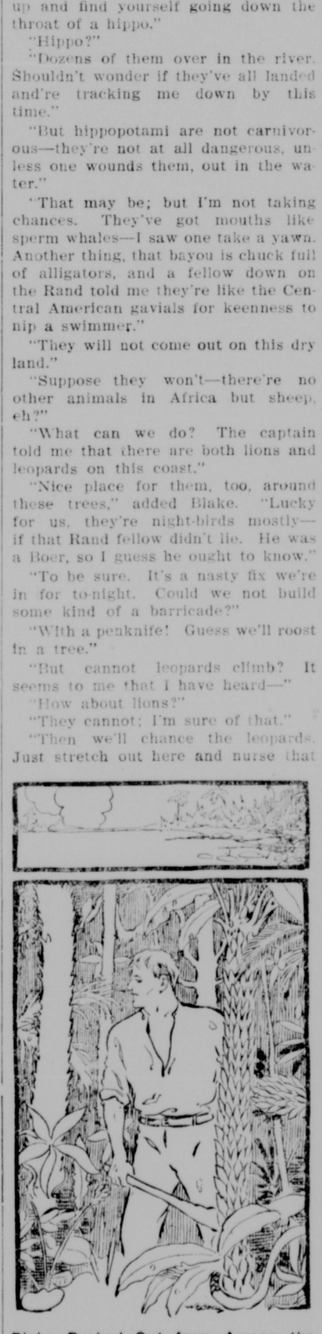
"With a penknife! Guess we'll roost in a tree."

"But cannot leopards climb? It seems to me that I have heard—"

"How about lions?"

"They cannot; I'm sure of that."

"Then we'll chance the leopards. Just stretch out here and nurse that ankle of yours. I don't want to be lugging you all year. I'm going to hunt a likely tree."



Blake Pushed Out from Among the Close Thickets.

CHAPTER V.

The Re-Ascent of Man.

AFTERNOON was far advanced and Winthrope was beginning to feel anxious when at last Blake pushed out from among the close thickets. As he approached he swung an unshapely club of green wood, pausing every few paces to test its weight and balance on a bush or knob of dirt.

"By Jove!" called Winthrope; "that's not half bad! You look as if you could bowl over an ox."

Blake showed that he was flattered. "Oh, I don't know," he responded; "the thing's blamed unhandy. Just the same, I guess we'll be ready for callers to-night."

"How's that?"

"Show you later, Pat, me b'y. Now trot out some nuts. We'll feed before we move camp."

"Miss Leslie is still sleeping."

"Time, then, to roust her out. Hey, Miss Jenny, turn out! Time to chew."

Miss Leslie sat up and gazed around in bewilderment.

"It's all right, Miss Genevieve," reassured Winthrope. "Blake has found a safe place for the night, and he wishes us to eat before we leave here."

"Save lugging the grub," added Blake. "Get busy, Pat."

As Winthrope caught up a nut the girl began to arrange her disordered hair and dress with the deft and graceful movements of a woman thoroughly trained in the art of self-adornment. There was admiration in Blake's deep eyes as he watched her dainty preening. She was not a beautiful girl—at present she could hardly be termed pretty; yet even in her draggled, muddy dress she retained all the subtle charms of culture which appeal so strongly to a man. Blake was subdued. His feelings even carried him so far as an attempt at formal politeness when they had finished their meal.

"Now, Miss Leslie," he began, "it's little more than half an hour to sundown; so, if you please, if you're ready, we'd best be starting."

"Is it far?"

"Not so very. But we've got to chase through the jungle. Are you sure you're quite ready?"

"Quite, thank you. But how about Mr. Winthrope's ankle?"

"He'll ride as far as the trees. I can't squeeze through with him, though."

"I shall walk all the way," put in Winthrope.

"No, you won't. Climb aboard," replied Blake, and catching up his club he stooped for Winthrope to mount his back. As he rose with his burden Miss Leslie caught sight of his coat, which still lay in a roll beside the palm trunk.

"How about your coat, Mr. Blake?" she asked. "Should you not put it on?"

"No; I'm loaded now. Have to ask you to look after it. You may need it before morning, anyway. If the dews here are like those in Central America they are d-darned liable to bring on malarial fever."

Nothing more was said until they had crossed the open space between the palms and the belt of jungle along the river. At other times Winthrope and Miss Leslie might have been interested in the towering screw-palms, festooned to the top with climbers, and in the huge ferns which they could see beneath the mangroves in the swampy ground on their left. Now, however, they were far too concerned with the question of how they should penetrate the dense tangle of thorny brush and creepers which rose before them like a green wall. Even Blake hesitated as he released Winthrope and looked at Miss Leslie's costume. Her white skirt was of stout duck; but the flimsy material of her waist was ill-suited for rough usage.

"Better put the coat on unless you want to come out on the other side in full evening dress," he said. "There's no use kicking, but I wish you'd happened to have on some sort of a jacket when we got spilled."

"Is there no path through the thicket?" inquired Winthrope.

"Only the hippo trail, and it don't go our way. We've got to run our own line. Here's a stick for your game ankle."

Winthrope took the half-green branch which Blake broke from the nearest tree and turned to assist Miss Leslie with the coat. The garment was of such coarse cloth that as Winthrope drew the collar close about her throat Miss Leslie could not forego a little grimace of repugnance. The crease between Blake's eyes deepened, and the girl hastened to utter an explanatory exclamation: "Not so tight, Mr. Winthrope, please! It scratches my neck."

"You'd find those thorns a whole lot worse," muttered Blake.

"To be sure; and Miss Leslie fully appreciates your kindness," interposed Winthrope.

"I do indeed, Mr. Blake! I'm sure I never could go through here without your coat."

"That's all right. Got the handkerchief?"

"I put it in one of the pockets."

"It'll do to tie up your hair."

Miss Leslie took the suggestion, knotting the big square of linen over her fluffy brown hair.

Blake waited only for her to draw out the kerchief before he began to force a way through the jungle. Now and then he beat at the tangled vegetation with his club. Though he held to the line by which he had left the thicket, yet all his efforts failed to open an easy passage for the others. Many of the thorny branches sprang back into place behind him, and as Miss Leslie, who was the first to follow, sought to thrust them aside the thorns pierced her delicate skin until her hands were covered with blood. Nor did Winthrope, stumbling and hobbling behind her, fare any better. Twice he tripped headlong into the brush, scratching his arms and face.

Blake took his own punishment as a matter of course, though his tougher and thicker skin made his injuries less painful. He advanced steadily along the line of bent and broken twigs that marked his outward passage, until the thicket opened on a strip of grassy ground beneath a wild fig-tree.

"By Jove!" exclaimed Winthrope, "a banyan!"

"Banyan? Well, if that's British for a daisy, you've hit it," responded Blake. "Just take a squint up here. How's that for a roost?"

Winthrope and Miss Leslie stared up dubiously at the edge of a bed of reeds gathered in the hollow of one of the huge flattened branches at its junction with the main trunk of the banyan, 20 feet above them.

"Will not the mosquitoes pester us here among the trees?" objected Winthrope.

"Storm must have blown 'em away. I haven't seen any yet."

"There will be millions after sunset."

"Maybe; but I bet they keep below our roost."

"But how are we to get up so high?" inquired Miss Leslie.

"I can swarm this drop root, and I've a creeper ready for you two," explained Blake.

Suiting action to words, he climbed up the small trunk of the air root and swung over into the hollow where he had piled the reeds. Across the broad limb dangled a rope-like creeper, one end of which he had fastened to a branch higher up. He flung down the free end to Winthrope.

"Look lively, Pat," he called. "The sun's most gone, and twilight don't last all night in these parts. Get the line around Miss Leslie, and do what you can on a boost."

"I see; but, you know, the vine is too stiff to tie."

Blake stifled an oath and jerked the end of the creeper up into his hand. When he threw it down again it was looped around and fastened in a bowline knot.

"Now, Miss Leslie, get aboard and we'll have you up in a jiffy," he said.

"Are you sure you can lift me?" asked the girl, as Winthrope slipped the loop over her shoulders.

Blake laughed down at them. "Well, I guess yes! Once hoisted a fellow out of a 50-foot prospect hole—big fat Dutchman at that. You don't weigh over 120."

He had stretched out across the broadest part of the branch. As Miss Leslie seated herself in the loop he reached down and began to haul up on the creeper, hand over hand. Though frightened by the novel manner of ascent the girl clung tightly to the line above her head, and Blake had no difficulty in raising her until she swung directly beneath him. Here, however, he found himself in a quandary. The girl seemed as helpless as a child, and he was lying flat. How could he left her above the level of the branch?

"Take hold the other line," he said. The girl hesitated. "Do you hear? Grab it quick, and pull up hard if you don't want a tumble!"

The girl seized the part of the creeper which was fastened above and drew herself up with convulsive energy. Instantly Blake rose to his knees, and grasping the taut creeper with one hand reached down with the other to swing the girl up beside him on the branch.

"All right, Miss Jenny," he reassured her as he felt her tremble. "Sorry to scare you, but I couldn't have made it without. Now, if you'll just hold down my legs we'll soon hoist his ludship."

He had seated her in the broadest part of the shallow hollow, where the branch joined the main trunk of the fig. Heaped with the reeds which he had gathered during the afternoon it made such a cozy shelter that she at once forgot her dizziness and fright. Nestling among the reeds, she leaned over and pressed down on his ankles with all her strength.

The loose end of the creeper had fallen to the ground when Blake lifted her upon the branch and Winthrope was already slipping into the loop. Blake ordered him to take it off and send up the club. As the creeper was again flung down a black shadow swept over the jungle.

"Hello! Sunset!" called Blake. "Look sharp, there!"

"All ready," responded Winthrope.

Blake drew in a full breath, and began to hoist. The position was an awkward one, and Winthrope weighed 30 or 40 pounds more than Miss Leslie. But as the Englishman came within reach of the descending loop he grasped it and did what he could to ease Blake's efforts. A few moments found him as high above the ground as Blake could raise him. Without waiting for orders, he swung himself upon the upper part of the creeper and climbed the last few feet unaided. Blake grunted with satisfaction as he pulled him in upon the branch.

"You may do, after all," he said. "At any rate, we're all aboard for the night; and none too soon. Hear that?"

"What?"

"Lion, I guess— Not that yelping. Listen!"

The brief twilight was already fading into the darkness of a moonless night, and as the three crouched together in their shallow nest they were soon made audibly aware of the savage nature of their surroundings. With the gathering night the jungle wakened into full life. From all sides came the harsh squawking of birds, the weird cries of monkeys and other small creatures, the crash of heavy animals moving through the jungle, and above all the yelp and howl and roar of beasts of prey.

After some contention with Winthrope, Blake conceded that the roars of his lion might be nothing worse than the snorting of the hippopotami as they came out to browse for the night. In this, however, there was small comfort, since Winthrope presently reasserted his belief in the climbing ability of leopards, and expressed his opinion that, whether or not there were lions in the neighborhood, certain of the barking roars they could hear came from the throats of the spotted climbers. Even Blake's hair bristled as his imagination pictured one of the great cats creeping upon them in the darkness from the far end of their nest limb, or leaping down out of the upper branches.

The nerves of all three were at their highest tension when a dark form swept past through the air within a yard of their faces. Miss Leslie uttered a stifled scream and Blake brandished his club. But Winthrope, who had caught a glimpse of the creature's shape, broke into a nervous laugh.

"It's only a fruit bat," he explained. "They feed on the banyan figs, you know."

In the reaction from this false alarm, both men relaxed and began to yield to the effects of the tramp across the mud-flats. Arranging the reeds as best they could they stretched out on either side of Miss Leslie and fell asleep in the middle of an argument on how the prospective leopard was mostly likely to attack.

Miss Leslie remained awake for two or three hours longer. Naturally she was more nervous than her companions, and she had been refreshed by her afternoon's nap. Her nervousness was not entirely due to the wild beasts. Though Blake had taken pains to secure himself and his companions in loops of the creeper, fastened to the branch above, Winthrope moved about so restlessly in his sleep that the girl feared he would roll from the hollow.

At last her limbs became so cramped that she was compelled to change her position. She leaned back upon her elbow, determined to rise again and maintain her watch the moment she was rested. But sleep was close upon her. There was a lull in the louder noises of the jungle. Her eyes closed, and her head sank lower. In a little time it was lying upon Winthrope's shoulder and she was fast asleep.

As Blake had asserted, the mosquitoes had either been blown away by the cyclone or did not fly to such a height. None came to trouble the exhausted sleepers.

SYNOPSIS.

CHAPTER I.—The story opens with the shipwreck of the steamer on which Miss Genevieve Leslie, an American heiress, Lord Winthrope, an Englishman, and Tom Blake, a brusque American, were passengers. The three were tossed upon an uninhabited island and were the only ones not drowned. Blake recovered from a drunken stupor.

CHAPTER II.—Blake, shunned on the boat, because of his roughness, became a hero as preservers of the helpless pair. The Englishman was suing for the hand of Miss Leslie. Blake started to swim back to the ship to recover what was left.

CHAPTER III.—Blake returned safely. Winthrope wasted his last match on a cigarette, for which he was scored by Blake. Their first meal was a dead fish.

CHAPTER IV.—The trio started a ten mile hike for higher land. Thirst attacked them. Blake was compelled to carry Miss Leslie on account of weariness. He taunted Winthrope.

TO BE CONTINUED.

SURFEIT OF ADVICE.

I've had a cold
And can't endure
The folks to know
A certain cure.
I've been advised
Just what to do
To make a thing
Look good as new.
Suggestions I
Have had my share,
Just what to eat
And what to wear,
But since my baby
Came, I swear,
I get advice
From everywhere.

Some tell us that
We mustn't feed
Her more than such
A child should need.
Two hours apart,
And some say three,
And some whene'er
She cries tell me.
Don't walk the floor,
I have been told.
In time she'll be as Good as gold.
Don't rock her nights,
And, if she cries,
To leave her quite Alone is wise.

If hiccoughs come
'Twere best, some say,
To let them wear
Themselves away,
While others swear
Warm water will Relieve her quick
And keep her still.
I never knew
Till baby smiled
How many folks
Can raise a child.

—Detroit Free Press.

A Country Seat.

Must Have a Drink.

"Mamma, please give me a drink of water; I'm so thirsty."

"No, you are not thirsty. Turn over and go to sleep."

A pause.

"Mamma, won't you please give me a drink? I'm so thirsty."

"If you don't turn over and go to sleep I'll get up and spank you!"

Another pause.

"Mamma, won't you please give me a drink when you get up to spank me?"—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

For all kinds of fruit see Baumgartner.

OF WHAT SHE DIED.

What the Bereaved Customer Told the Sympathetic Bartender.

An old German woman became ill and was taken by her husband to a hospital for treatment. The first day she was there when her husband called to inquire about her the doctor said she was improving. On the second day he was again told she was improving, and on the third and fourth days the assurance was the same. This was very encouraging to the old German, but when he called on the fifth day he was told that his wife was dead. In his grief he sought his favorite saloon to drown his sorrow.

"Vat's de matter?" asked the sympathetic bartender, noticing his customer's despondent condition.

"Ach! My wife iss dead," replied the German.

"So? Vat did she die of?" asked the bartender.

"Improvements," replied the bereaved husband, calling for another glass of beer.—Bellman.

The Colonel's Yarn.

The old fighting colonel was reminiscent.

"Geese saved Rome," he began as he lit his black cigar, "and, gentlemen, at the battle of Bull Run my men were saved by a flock of chickens flying in front of them. It was the greatest coup of the battle, sir."

"That's pretty good, colonel," laughed the comedian boarder. "I suppose you would call that a chicken coup."—Bohemian Magazine.

Curious Woman.

"Henpeck says he has never belonged to a club of any kind, he is not a member of any fraternal order, he does not use tobacco in any form, he is a total abstainer from all alcoholic drinks, and he has eyes for no woman save his wife."

"I know it. And yet she doesn't seem to be absolutely sure that he is an ideal husband. Curious about woman, isn't it?"—New York Herald.

Great Ignorance.

Colonel Fizzletop was under the painful necessity of administering a severe castigation to his son Archie. After he had completed his labors he said sternly to the suffering victim:

"Now tell me why I punish you."

"That's it," sobbed Archie. "You nearly pound the life out of me, and now you don't even know why you did it."—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Good Reason Why.

Porcupine—That's funny. My mamma never licks me that way.

Superfluous.

The architect was explaining the plans for the proposed new mansion.

"Here," he said, "will be the inner court."

"What's the use of that?" sharply asked Mr. Struckoyle. "The girls can do their sparkin' in the front parlor, same as their maw and me did."—Chicago Tribune.

The Family Autocrat.

"The face of that woman who passed us just now is very familiar. Where have I seen her?"

"At my house probably."

"At your house. Do you know her?"

"Yes, she's our cook, but she doesn't notice me on the street."—Houston Post.

One Theory.

Friend—Do you think when that amateur hunter shot you he did it just for a joke or thought you were really a mark?

Victim—All I know is he seemed to be making game of me.—Baltimore American.

The Basis.

He—I wonder if we can get along all right.

She—Certainly. We can buy the auto with the money father left me, and you will surely make enough to pay for running it, don't you think?—Puck.

Keeping Him Quiet.

First Deaf Mute—Who is that fellow over in the corner of the store with his hands tied behind him?

Second Deaf Mute—That is my silent partner.—Harper's Weekly.

They Were Strangers.

Howell—Rowell doesn't seem to be at home much.

Powell—He is there so seldom that he really needs a letter of introduction to his wife.—New York Press.

A Downpour

"They fairly rained congratulations on the prima donna."

"That was the result of her taking the house by storm."—Baltimore American.

THE REPUBLICAN
Job Printing Department

WITHIN the past year the increased made upon the Job Printing Department of The Republican necessitated many improvements, and to meet the requirements of our rapidly increasing business an addition of considerable proportions to our present building is in contemplation; new type and improved machinery must be purchased—but in the meantime all orders will be executed in a most satisfactory manner.

The products of our Job Printery are all models in the class—our customers are numerous and well satisfied, and wnen ordering

Statements, Vouchers,
Envelopes, Cards,
Sale Bills, Posters,
Bank Forms, Billheads,
Letterheads, Tags,
Programs, Folders,

and

Letter Press Printing of all Kinds

They are confident that the work will be Satisfactory in every particular---in WORKMANSHIP, PRICE and PAPER.

WE MAKE A SPECIALTY OF PRINTING

Lumber AND Coal Companies' Forms
Bank Stationery, Hotel Prospectus,
Lodge and Society Laws,
Reports, Etc.

It will cost you nothing to submit your Printing to us. Estimates will be cheerfully furnished you free. It must be borne in mind, however, that we do not do "cheap" printing, but we do Good Printing which has a par value of one hundred cents for every dollar invested in the product of THE REPUBLICAN PRINTERY.

THE REPUBLICAN
Job Printing Departm't
OAKI AND, MARYLAND.

HUNTING THE WHITE-TAILED DEER

BY
THEODORE ROOSEVELT

[Copyright, 1885, by G. P. Putnam's Sons. Published under arrangement with G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York and London.]

ONE afternoon, while most of us were away from the ranch-house, one of the cowboys, riding in from his day's outing over the range, brought word that he had seen two white-tail deer, a buck and a doe, feeding with some cattle on the side of a hill across the river, and not much more than half a mile from the house. There was about an hour of daylight left, and one of the foremen, a tall, fine-looking fellow named Ferris, the best rider on the ranch, but not an unusually good shot, started out at once after the deer. Ferris found the deer easily enough, but they started before he could get a standing shot at them, and when he fired as they ran, he only broke one of the buck's hind legs, just above the ankle. He followed it in the snow for several miles, across the river, and down near the house to the end of the bottom, and then back toward the house. The buck was a cunning old beast, keeping in the densest cover, and often doubling back on his trail and sneaking off to one side as his pursuer passed by. Finally it grew too dark to see the tracks any longer, and Ferris came home.

Next morning early we went out to where he had left the trail, feeling very sure from his description of the place (which was less than a mile from the house) that we would get the buck; for when he had abandoned the pursuit the deer was in a copse of bushes and young trees, some hundreds of yards across, and in this it had doubtless spent the night.

When we got to the thicket we first made a circuit round it to see if the wounded animal had broken cover, but though there were fresh deer tracks leading both in and out of it, none of them were made by a cripple; so we knew he was still within. After working some little time we hit on the right trail, finding where the buck had turned into the thickest growth. While Ferris followed carefully in on the tracks, I stationed myself farther on toward the outside, knowing that the buck would in all likelihood start up wind. In a minute or two Ferris came on the bed where he had passed the night, and which he had evidently just left; a shout informed me that the game was on foot, and immediately afterward the crackling and snapping of the branches were heard as the deer rushed through them. I ran as rapidly and quietly as possible toward the place where the sounds seemed to indicate that he would break cover, stopping under a small tree. A minute afterward he appeared, some thirty yards off on the edge of the thicket, and halted for a second to look round before going into the open. Only his head and antlers were visible above the bushes which hid from view the rest of his body. He turned his head sharply toward me as I raised the rifle, and the bullet went fairly into his throat, just under the jaw, breaking his neck, and bringing him down in his tracks with hardly a kick. He was a fine buck of eight points, unusually fat, considering that the rutting season was just over. We dressed it at once, and, as the house was so near, determined we would drag it there over the snow ourselves, without going back for a horse. Each took an antler, and the body slipped along very easily, but so intense was the cold that we had to keep shifting sides all the time, the hand which grasped the horn becoming numb almost immediately.

Each took an antler, and the body slipped along very easily.

When not much molested white-tail feed in the evening or late afternoon; but if often shot at and chased they only come out at night. They are very partial to the water, and in the warm summer nights will come down into the prairie ponds and stand knee-deep in them, eating the succulent marsh plants. Most of the plains rivers flow through sandy or muddy beds with no vegetable growth, and to these, of course, the deer merely come down to drink or refresh themselves by bathing, as they contain nothing to eat.

At times the white-tail will lie so close that it may almost be trodden on. One June morning I was riding down along the river, and came to a long bottom, crowded with rose-bushes, all in bloom. It was crossed in every direction by cattle paths, and a drove of long-horned Texans were scattered over it. A cow-pony gets accustomed to travelling at speed along the cattle trails, and the one I bestrode threaded its way among the twisted narrow paths with perfect ease, loping rapidly onward through a sea of low rose-bushes, covered with the sweet, pink flowers. They gave a bright color to the whole plain, while the air was filled with the rich, full songs of the yellow-breasted meadow larks, as they perched on the topmost sprays of the little trees. Suddenly a white-tail doe sprang up almost from under the horse's feet, and scudded off with her white flag flaunting. There was no reason for harming her, and she made a pretty picture as she bounded lightly off among the rose-red flowers, passing without heed through the ranks of the long-horned and savage-looking steers.

Doubtless she had a little spotted fawn not far away. These wee fellows soon after birth grow very cunning and able to take care of themselves, keeping in the densest part of the brush, through which they run and dodge like a rabbit. If taken young they grow very tame and are most dainty pets. One which we had round the house answered well to its name. It was at first fed with milk, which it lapped eagerly from a saucer, sharing the meal with the two cats, who rather resented its presence and cuffed it heartily when they thought it was greedy and was taking more than its share. As it grew older it would eat bread or potatoes from our hands, and was perfectly fearless. At night it was let go or put in the cow-shed, whichever was handiest, but it was generally round in time for breakfast next morning. A blue ribbon with a bell attached was hung round its neck, so as to prevent its being shot; but in the end it shared the fate of all pets, for one night it went off and never came back again.

Only once have I ever killed a white-tail buck while hunting on horseback; and at that time I had been expecting to fall in with black-tail.

This was while we had been making a wagon trip to the westward following the old Keogh trail, which was made by the heavy army wagons that journeyed to Fort Keogh in the old days when the soldiers were, except a few daring trappers, the only white men to be seen on the last great hunting-ground of the Indians. It was abandoned as a military route several years ago, and is now only rarely travelled over, either by the canvas-topped ranch-wagon of some wandering cattle-men—like ourselves—or else by a small party of emigrants, in two or three prairie schooners, which contain all their household goods. Nevertheless, it is still as plain and distinct as ever. The two deep parallel ruts, cut into the sod by the wheels of the heavy wagon, stretch for scores of miles in a straight line across the level prairie, and take great turns and doublings to avoid the impassable portions of the Bad Lands. The track is always perfectly plain, for in the dry climate of the western plains the action of the weather tends to preserve rather than to obliterate it; where it leads downhill, the snow water has cut and widened the ruts into deep gullies, so that a wagon has at those places to travel alongside the road. From any little rising in the prairie the road can be seen a long way off, as a dark line, which, when near, resolves itself into two sharply defined parallel cuts.

On the trip in question we had at first very bad weather. Leaving the ranch in the morning, two of us, who were mounted, pushed on ahead to hunt, the wagon following slowly, with a couple of spare saddle ponies leading behind it. Early in the afternoon, while riding over the crest of a great divide, which separates the drainage basins of two important creeks, we saw that a tremendous storm was brewing with that marvellous rapidity which is so marked a characteristic of weather changes on the plains.

We spurred hard to get out of the open, riding with loose reins for the creek. The center of the storm swept by behind us, fairly across our track, and we only got a wipe from the tail of it. Yet this itself we could not have faced in the open. The first gust caught us a few hundred yards from the creek, almost taking us from the saddle, and driving the rain and hail in stinging level sheets against us. We galloped to the edge of a deep wash-out, scrambled into it at the risk of our necks, and huddled up with our horses underneath the windward bank. Here we remained pretty well sheltered until the storm was over. Although it was August, the air became very cold. The wagon was fairly caught, and would have been blown over if the top had been on; the driver and horses escaped without injury, pressing under the leeward side, the storm coming so level that they did not need a roof to protect them from the hail. Where the center of the whirlwind struck it did great damage.

The wagon came on to the creek, along whose banks we had taken shelter, and we then went into camp. It rained all night, and there was a thick mist, with continual sharp showers, all the next day and night. The wheeling was, in consequence, very heavy, and after striking the Keogh trail, we were able to go along it but a few miles before the fagged-out look of the team and the approach of evening warned us that we should have to go into camp while still a dozen miles from any pool or spring. Accordingly we made what would have been a dry camp had it not been for the incessant down-pour of rain, which we gathered in the canvas wagon-sheet and in our oilskin overcoats in sufficient quantity to make coffee, having with infinite difficulty started a smouldering fire just to leeward of the wagon. The horses, feeding on the soaked grass, did not need water. An antelope, with the bold and heedless curiosity sometimes shown by its tribe, came up within two hundred yards of us as we were building the fire, but though one of us took a shot at him, it missed. Our shaps and oilskins had kept us perfectly dry, and as soon as our frugal supper was over, we coiled up among the boxes and bundles inside the wagon and slept soundly till daybreak.

The bright-colored patch disappeared.

When the sun rose next day, the third we were out, the sky was clear, and we two horsemen at once prepared to make a hunt. Some three miles off to the south of where we were camped, the plateau on which we were sloped off into a great expanse of broken ground, with chains upon chains of steep hills, separated by deep valleys, winding and branching in every direction, their bottoms filled with trees and brushwood. Toward this place we rode, intending to go into it some little distance, and then to hunt along through it near the edge.

As soon as we got down near the brushy ravine we rode along without talking, guiding the horses as far as possible on earthy places, where they would neither stumble nor strike their feet against stones, and not letting our rifle barrels or spurs clink against anything. Keeping outside of the brush, a little up the side of the hill, one of us would ride along each side of the ravine, examining intently with our eyes every clump of trees or brushwood. For some time we saw nothing, but, finally, as we were riding both together round the jutting spur of a steep hill, my companion suddenly brought his horse to a halt, and pointing across the shelving bend to a patch of trees well up on the opposite side of a broad ravine, asked me if I did not see a deer in it. I was off the horse in a second, throwing the reins over his head. We were in the shadow of the cliff-shoulder, and with the wind in our favor; so we were unlikely to be observed by the game. I looked long and eagerly toward the spot indicated, which was about a hundred and twenty-five yards from us, but at first could see nothing. By this time, however, the experienced plainsman who was with me was satisfied that he was right in his supposition, and he told me to try again and look for a patch of red. I saw the patch at once, just glimmering through the bushes, but should certainly never have dreamed it was a deer if left to myself. Watching it attentively I soon saw it move enough to satisfy me where the head lay; kneeling on one knee and (as it was a little beyond point-blank range) holding at the top of the portion visible, I pulled trigger, and the bright-colored patch disappeared from among the bushes. The aim was a good one, for, on riding up to the brink of the ravine, we saw a fine white-tail buck lying below us, shot through just behind the shoulder; he was still in the red coat, with his antlers in the velvet.

THE REPUBLICAN

BENJ. H. SINCELL, EDITOR.

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 17, 1908.

PRESIDENT-ELECT TAFT'S stated purpose in visiting Panama in Janaury is "to see the progress of the work on the canal." It would be gratifying if this inspection tour should result in a conviction that the "progress" of the work is not to be measured only by the quantity of earth excavated. The sliding of the soil from under the foundations of the projected Gatun Dam and the similar accident at the Pacific end of the canal, owing to which the proposed dam on that site was abandoned, indicate that energy is possibly being wasted on a plan of construction that will have to be materially altered lest the entire undertaking end in disaster. The law imposes on the President the duty of building the canal. It is a very heavy responsibility, and the incoming President, upon whom the burden is about to fall, should satisfy himself that progress is being made not only swiftly but on the right lines.

OLD ISSUES DEAD.

Mr. Taft stands for one standard for voters—white and black. He has no use for legislative enactments or constitutional amendments so constructed as to make it easy for an illiterate white man to vote and hard or impossible for the colored man. It's a square deal policy and when this rule is applied to the election law of Maryland and the proposed disfranchising amendment, the Maryland Democratic way is found to be based upon greed for power and not because this state is in the slightest danger of negro domination. We have printed in full Mr. Taft's address to the South because we think it is a clear and manly statement of the Republican attitude toward the South. The South is prospering and many of its leading men, who for years have been kept in the Democratic party on dead issues, are awaking to the fact that in many leading policies they are in accord with the Republican party and are becoming tired of their section having so small a part in bringing into close sympathy all sections and we look for a new South politically as it is now new industrially.

STATE CAMPAIGN.

At a meeting held in Frederick city last week, at which were assembled prominent citizens from every section of Frederick county, the first "Fair-ballot League" was organized for aggressive work in this state next year, to the end that fair and honest methods in the regulation of the ballot system may be restored and maintained and to the further purpose of frustrating the general disfranchising scheme by which the manipulative politicians of the Democratic party hope to permanently perpetuate their power. The movement which has been started in Frederick must be extended to every county in the state, says the Baltimore American.

There is already indication that the powers in control of the Democratic organization are preparing for an active propagandism of reform promises next year. It is not likely that the people of the state will have forgotten the promises that were made in 1907 and how those promises were kept by the Democratic majority in the legislature that was elected that year. Those padded payrolls, to which the retiring Governor called specific attention, indicating exactly how $75,000 in legislative expenditures had been a clean waste, continued to be padded, notwithstanding Governor Warfield's warning and admonition. Now a reform "commission" has prepared a legislative reform scheme by which it is suggested that $50,000 of this squandered money will be saved. It would have been saved at the last session if the Democratic majority had been willing. The Democratic managers seem to believe that they can forever hoodwink the people with promises.

There never has been in the political history of this state an election involving issues more crucially affectiug the welfare of the commonwealth than the election that will be held next year. The Frederick meeting last week in the resolutions declaring for the restoration of fair methods to the franchise system invited the co-operation of "all good citizens regardless of party affiliation." The political salvation of this state is dependent upon such co-operation with the effort which the Republican party is making to save the state from the perpetual control of a political machine.

RETRIBUTION.

Under the editorial headline, Ex-Gov. Warfield's Efforts Bear Fruit at Last," the Baltimore News says:

Former Governor Warfield must have rubbed his eyes with amazement this morning when he read Governor Crothers' ringing declaration for economy at Annapolis and Senator Harper's recommendations of how to secure it. Mr. Warfield pointed out many of the extravagances of which Senator Harper now complains. He proved the State was spending too much for clerk hire, for engrossing work and for cleaning the Capitol. He gave a detailed summary of where the money went and how savings could be effected, but the legislature took unusual pains to show its contempt for the views of the outgoing chief executive, and if his successor put into effect any of the reforms that were recommended and urgently called for we failed to notice it.

Who has forgotten the famous controversy when President Seth of the State Senate—incensed at the suggestion that the legislature was spending too much money—held the former Governor up to ridicule? And who has forgotten the letter that, so far as common knowledge goes, has not yet been opened or treated to the courtesy of a reply? Unless memory fails us, all the credit Mr. Warfield got for his effort in behalf of economy was a fierce attack, winding up with the comparison to a red-bridled stallion at a conuty fair.

However, it is well to know that his suggestions fell on fruitful soil, albeit a trifle late in blossoming. Let us hope that the present effort will meet with a kindlier reception at Annapolis.

REPORT OF THE GRAND JURY.

Submitted to the Court Last Friday Morning.

At the conveniug of Court last Friday morning the graud jury submitted the following report of its proceedings and was discharged by Judge Henderson from further service at the present term:

To the Honorable, the Judges of the Circuit Court of Garrett county:

The Grand Jury for the December Term, 1908, of the Circuit Court for Garrett county beg leave to report that we have now concluded our labors and have to the best of our ability performed the duties devolving upon us as member of this body, and we now derire to report our proceedings and receive our discharge.

In the performance of the duties devolving upon us and of the trust reposed in us, we have conscientiously endeavored to do so without fear or favor and in accordance with the oath administered to us and the charge of your Honors.

We have found presentments in all those cases in which we believed the evidence justified and have ignored trivial cases and those cases in which the evidence did not appear to warrant presentments.

We have had before us and have examined one hundred and eleven witnesses and found twenty-four indictments.

There has been, since the last grand jury, some serious crimes committed in this county and in the investigation of the same it appears to us that in many cases the use of intoxicating liquors has been the indirect, if not direct, cause of them.

We note that in some districts of this county there are no constables and we recommend that the County Commissioners make prompt appointments to these vacancies. We have found in two instances that the constables have been remiss and derelict in the performance of their duties, and especially in the case of the constable of Eleetion District No. 11.

We heartily congratulate the people of Garrett county upon the final completion of our splendid aud magnificent new court house, which stands as a monument of architectural beauty, permanee and utility and which demonstrates the progress, advancement and prosperity of the whole people of Garrett county. We desire to express our appreciation to the Court House Commission, not only for their wisdom in the selec ion of the plans, but in their choice and arrangement of the sundry materials of which the edifice is composed, and for their untiring efforts, strict integrity and fidelity to their trust and their economy in the construction and completion thereof.

It was with great pleasure that we attended before the opening of Court the impressive dedicatory services and the turning over of the building to the county, and we most heartily enjoyed the excellent addresses of Judges Boyd and Henderson, also the several addresses of the gentlemen who spoke upon this memorable occasion.

We have visited the several apartments of the court house, as well as in the jail, and we find the jail well kept, but would respectfully recommend that the closets be provided with sufficient flow of water to properly flush and that the walls of the jail be calcimined.

We note that a portion of the court house furniture has not yet arrived. We recommend that lockers for hats and coats be placed in the grand jury room and that a brass rail be placed around the balustrade in the rotunda, and that placards of warning be placed at the foot of the stairs near the toilets advising the people as to the proper care of the building and its conveniences.

We have examined the records in the court house and find them carefully and neatly kept.

We desire to express our thanks to the Court and the several officers of the county for the courtesies shown us while in the discharge of our duties. We desire to express our thanks to our able State's Attorney, Mr. Julius C. Renninger, for the valuable advice and assistance rendered in the performance of our duties.

We now beg to be discharged.

JOSEPH E. HARNED, Foreman.
FRANK G. TROUT,
WILLIAM WEBER, Clerks.

Four Eclipses the Next Year.

According to the announcement of the Naval Observatory authorities, there will be four eclipses next year, two of the sun and two of the moon. The first eclipse of the sun, June 17, will be visible in a large portion of North America, but the second, December 12, will not be visible in the United States. The lunar eclipses will take place on June 3 and November 26. The first will be visible in a part of North America and the second throughout the continent.

The Republican for Job Work.

NEARLY SIXTY MILES OF STATE ROADS PLANNED.

Commission Announced Route of Proposed Roads Last Tuesday.

At the meeting of the State Highway Commission held in Baltimore last Thursday, which was attended by a large delegation of people from different sections of Garrett county and also from Allegany county, at which time the Commission heard arguments for and against the tentative route selected by it at a previous meeting, the proposed route for the new road in Garrett county was definitely fixed as follows:

Beginning at the Allegany county line on the National Road and running through Piney Grove to Grantsville and from thence to Keyser and the Pennsylvania state line west of that point. From an undetermined point on the National Road near Keyser the road will go southerly through Accident, McHenry and Thayerville to Oakland and from Oakland to the Red House on the Northwestern Turnpike, a distance from the starting point of from fifty-eight to sixty miles over the present location of the roads.

This route makes the road or series of roads pass through the most populous section but leaves a marvelously rich portion of the county off the route, that being the country in and about Bittinger, and adds materially to the length of the road from Grantsville to Oakland.

As the roads now run, up hill and down, the location must necessarily be changed in many particulars which will add several miles to the length of the route and pile up the cost of building many thousands of dollars. The amount apportioned to Garrett county by the Commission, $238,000, will be somewhat increased by an apportionment to be made by the Commission at a future meeting.

A surveying corps is already in the field in Allegany county going over the proposed route from Washington county and will shortly come to Garrett county.

In discussing the road question recently the Baltimore Sun contained the following:

Sooner or later the Good Roads Commission will have to deal with what to many is the most serious problem of all those confronting it—namely, the construction of the roads so as to stand the strain of the automobile traffic.

As yet but little thought has been given this subject by the commission, which has been chiefly busy in selecting the routes in the counties and effecting a complete organization for the work which will begin in the spring.

Those who have studied the question, however, realize that the roads must be built so as to stand the automobile traffic or else they will not last and the millions which the State proposes to spend on the roads will be of comparative small value. In the States that can be classed as progressive in the matter of roadbuilding this automobile problem is recognized as a serious one and the road engineers of the country are doing their best to find the right solution.

In Massachusetts, where many thousands of dollars have been spent in constructing roads and where the highways are as fine as anywhere in the country, it has been found that the roads are being rapidly destroyed by the automobiles. The suction of the big tires driven at high speed over the roads loosens the stone and causes the road to disintegrate. In the course of a very little while the road is in bad shape, and the money spent in its construction has practically been thrown away.

This question of the effect of automobile traffic on the modern road was one of the chief subjects discussed recently at the international conference of road engineers held in Paris, which was attended by Chief Engineer W. W. Crosby, of the Good Roads Commission, and the discussion there will, no doubt, be of value to Mr. Crosby when the time arrives for the taking up of this important question by the commission.

The assertion is made that this is a question that cannot be ignored and must be dealt with. While the roads are not being built for the benefit of the automobiles, the automobile is a factor that must be reckoned with. It has come to stay, and each year sees a rapid increase in numbers. Within a short time, it is predicted by many, they will come into general use by farmers, who will haul their crops to market by means of antomobile trucks.

Students of the road question in this State want to see the commission deal with this subject in a broad-minded and liberal manner, and they want the roads built so that they will stand the automobile traffic and not disintegrate under it. They say that it is the duty of the commission to provide roads that will be permanent and not merely transient, and that it must build for the future and not only the present.

The Good Roads Commission realizes this situation, and many weeks ago Governor Crothers, at one of the meetings, made the statement that the automobile question was one with which the commission would have to reckon, and that it was well to recognize at the outset that the automobile is here to stay and the roads must be constructed with this fact in mind and likewise with the knowledge that as the years go on the number of automobiles in Maryland will increase rapidly.

Chief Engineer Crosby fully recognizes the importance of this matter and some years ago pointed out the necessity of a road construction that would stand the strain of the big and fast automobiles that travel over them

Exactly in what way the commission will deal with this condition is uncertain. The time has not yet arrived for the subject to be taken up in detail, and the discussions thus far by the commission have been of a general nature.

Many suggestions have been made, one of which is the mixing with the road construction of some tarry substance that will have the adhesive power to prevent the disintegration that results from continued automobile travel over the best and most modern stone road. Other suggestions have been presented, and these, it is expected, will be sifted and weighed when the time comes. What is chiefly wanted by men interested in good roads is that in building those now proposed in the state this question should be met and dealt with in the light of the best information possible and that Maryland should profit by the experience of other states where the automobiles have played havoc with some of the finest and most modern roads in the country.

RYAN'S GLADE.

Please allow me a space in your valuable paper and I will give you and your readers some of the happenings of this community, as we have not heard from any of your correspondents from this section for quite a while.

A light snow covers the ground at this date and many sleds were on the road Monday.

Water is still low and much inconvenience is experienced by the farmers to procure water for their stock.

The Sunday school at this place is preparing a program to render on Christmas Eve.

Our public school is progressing with an enrollment of thirty-five scholars. T. Bernard is the teacher.

Mr. Robert Neville of Mt. Storm, W. Va., who recently purchased Clarence Rogers' farm is now occupying the same, Mr. Rogers having removed to Davis, W. Va. While we regret to have Clarence leave us, we will welcome Mr. Neville to our midst.

Messrs. K. L. and S. W. White, Jr., have purchased the old Joseph King farm near Mt. Lake Park and expect to move on same in the near future.

Mr. Bell White, of California, is spending the winter with his father, Capt. J. W. White.

Mr. N. B. Harvey is erecting a new and modern poultry house.

Messrs. B. W. Harvey and C. E. Martin are busy opening up a four foot seam of coal on the C. C. Harvey place.

Mr. Charles Thompson is rushed at his coal mine this winter.

Mesers. James and Stanley Harvey, of near Wilson, were visiting friends in this section Saturday and Sunday.

Mr. J. B. Shockey claims the champion porkers of this vicinity, having recently butchered two that were eight months old and netted 581 pounds.

Mr. Faley, of Mt. Storm, W. Va., was a recent visitor at J. T. Steyer's.

Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Harvey visited their sons and daughter at Hubbard last week.

W. W. Steyert while out coon hunting made a mistake and shot his dog instead of the coon.

Rumor says we are to have a wedding in this community ere the new year dawns.

Will now close by wishing the Editor and his host of readers a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year.

U NO ME.

MARRIAGE LICENSES

Issued By Clerk E. Z. Tower Since December 2nd.

Thomas Werter of Callensburg, Pa., and Belle Dotson, of Cairo, W. Va.; Jesse F. Leichty, of Cove, and Clara E. Hollada, of Silbaugh, Pa.; John W. Mathëny and Cora May Taylor, both of Mannington, W. Va.; Peter W. Burdette and Nellie W. Kemper, both of Wallace, W. Va.; Samuel F. Guseman, of Friendsville, and Anna Belle Mason, of Chalk Hill, Pa.; Benj. H. Rexroad and Edna G. Holt, both of Franklin, W. Va.; William C. Poling and Minnie Lee Glenn, both of Grafton, W. Va.; George O. Harding and Maggie F. Warnick, both of Elk Garden, W. Va.; Harry W. Rose and Marie Smith, both of Grafton, W. Va.; Charles E. Warnick and Anna M. Evans, both of Bloomington; Cecil H. Miller and Nettie Keating, both of Fairmont, W. Va.; Wade H. Gillis and Nellie Van Gilder, both of Fairmont, W. Va.; William A. Motter and Gladys E. Satterfield, both of Fairmont, W. Va. One with request not to pbulish.

Engraved calling cards and wedding invitations may be procured by leaving your orders at this office. A very attractive and stylish line at moderate prices is shown.

The Lonaconing Savings Bank

Of Allegany Couuty.

Capital Stock . $20,000
Surplus and Undivided Profits . $60,000
Deposits . . $625,000

3 PER CENT. Interest Paid Upon all Savings Accounts.

GIVE THEM A START

Tne New Year is rapidly approaching. This would be a good time for you to start your young folks on the road to Success.

Early training in the practice of self-denial; instruction as to the use and value of money; opportunities for earning and saving money; all these tend to fix and fasten the children in the ways of thrift and prosperity.

We most gladly assist the young people in getting started.

One Dollar opens an account and entitles the depositor to one of our Savings Banks.

We shall be pleased to have our Garrett County friends call and receive a 1908 Calendar.

DAVID SLOAN, President. R. R. SLOAN, Treasurer.

The First National Bank

FRIENDSVILLE, MD.

Capital, $25,000. Surplus and Undivided Profits, $24,000.

OFFICERS:

L. E. Friend, President. J. W. McCullough, V. P.
R. C. McCandlish, Cashier.

DIRECTORS:

L. E. Friend, Merchant,
J. W. McCullough, Lumber and Coal.
W. W. Savage, Merchant.
D. S. Custer, Merchant.
H. M. Rumbaugh, Farmer.
W. H. H. Friend, Pension Agent and Surveyor.
Horace R. DeWitt, Treasurer of Garrett County, Md.
R. C. McCandlish.

We will issue time or demand certificates of deposit and pay you 4 per cent. interest if your money is left with us.

In all its dealings this Bank combines absolute safety with satisfactory service and never loses sight of either.

SAFETY DEPOSIT BOXES FOR RENT.

CHILDREN MAKE CONFECTIONERY

a serious matter for the honest candy maker. He must produce a flavor that will satisfy their natural appetites for sweets. He must be careful that his products must be harmless and wholesome.

THE PURITY OF OUR CANDY

is beyond question. None but the best materials are used in even the lowest priced confectionery we sell. As to the flavor, well, buy a box and let the children be the judges—we'll abide by their decision.

OAKLAND MODEL STEAM BAKERY

HENRY LAUER Proprietor

WHAT WE RECOMMEND

In the way of drugs, medicines or toilet preparations you can rely on. Everything in this store is intended to improve your health, appearance or comfort. So you can buy with confidence that your medicines will be pure, your toilet aids the best to be had. Make this your drug store and there'll be no cause for regrets.

OAKLAND PHARMACY

JOS. E. HARNED, Proprietor,
OAKLAND, MD.

Notice To Delinquent Tax-Payers.

Notice is hereby given to all delinquent tax-payers that if taxes now due and in arrears are not paid before

JANUARY 1ST, 1909,

I will proceed by law to collect. I refer to Section 50 of Chapter 56 of Acts of the General Assembly of Maryland, which provides as follows:

SECTION 50. The said Treasurer shall during the first week in December in each and every year, give notice to all delinquent tax-payers of said county, by advertisement inserted in two newspapers published in said county, and in hand-bills posted in five of the most public places in each election district of said county, and at the courthouse door, warning them that the payment of all taxes then due and in arrear will be enforced by advertisement and sale unless the same be paid before the 1st day of January next following.

Please pay promptly and save costs.

W. E. HOLLINGER,
Treasurer of Garrett County.

Notice to Creditors.

This is to give notice, That the subscriber of Garrett county hath obtained from the Orphans' Court of Garrett county, in Maryland, letters of Administration on the personal estate of

A. F. GEORGE,

late of Garrett county, deceased. All persons having claims against the deceased are hereby warned to exhibit the same, with the vouchers thereof legally authenticated to the subscriber, on or before the 26th day of May next; they may otherwise by law be excluded from all benefit of said estate. All persons knowing themselves indebted to said estate are requested to make immediate payment.

Given under my hand this 24th day of November, 1908.

MARY E. GEORGE,
Administratrix.
Swanton, Md.

Notice to Creditors.

This is to give notice, That the subscriber, of Garrett county hath obtained from the Orphan's Court of Garrett county, in Maryland, letters of Administration on the personal estate of

WILLIAM FRUSH,

late of Garrett county, deceased. All persons having claims against the deceased are hereby warned to exhibit the same, with the vouchers thereof legally authenticated to the subscriber, on or before the 11th day of April, next; they may otherwise by law be excluded from all benefit of said estate. All persons knowing themselves indebted to said estate are requested to make immediate payment.

Given under my hand this 11th day of October, 1908.

JOHN W. FRUSH,
Administrator,
R. F. D., Oakland, Md.

Notice to Creditors.

This is to give notice, That the subscriber of Garrett County, in Maryland, hath obtained from the Orphans' Court of Garrett county, in Maryland, letters Administration on the personal estate of

J. RUSSELL BROWNING,

late of Garrett County, deceased. All persons having claims against the deceased are hereby warned to exhibit the same with the vouchers thereof legally authenticated to the subscriber, on or before the 29th day of April, next; they may otherwise by law be excluded from all benefit of said estate. All persons knowing themselves indebted to said estate are requested to make immediate payment.

Given under my hand this 29th day of October, 1908.

M. A. BROWNING,
Administrator.
Kitzmiller, Md.

Notice to Creditors.

This is to give notice, That the subscribers of Garrett county, hath obtained from the Orphans' Court of Garrett County, in Maryland, Letters of Administration on the personal estate of

JOHN W. BOWERS,

late of Garrett county, deceased. All persons having claims against the deceased are hereby warned to exhibit the same, with vouchers thereof legally authenticated to the subscriber, on or before the 29th day of April next; they may otherwise by law be excluded from all benefit of said estate. All persons knowing themselves indebted to said estate are requested to make immediate payment.

Given under my hand this 26th day of November, 1908.

FLORENCE M. BOWERS,
Administratrix.
Dodson, Md.

Examiners' Notice.

Notice is hereby given, that the undersigned, appointed by the County Commissioners of Garrett County, to view the lands through which the new county road is to be located. Said new road to begin at a point on the county road leading from Thayersville to Altamont, near the residence of Solomon Hogue, running between the lands of Henry Myers, S. O. Clark, Thomas Garrett, Abel Dewitt, Martin Filsinger and Mrs. E. Fundenberg to intersect the Deer Park road at a point near Mrs. Fundenbergs farm, to extend a distance of about one and one-half miles, which is now a private road but used by the public, and examine whether said road shall be located as a county road, will meet on the 16th day of November, 1908 for such purpose, and to determine whether the public convenience requires the said road, and if so, to locate the same and perform their duty in the premises.

ANDREW SHARTZER,
JOHN W. HANEY,
P. J. LOHR,
Examiners.

See our 5 and 10c glassware. Baumgartner.

A Meritorious Institution

Established as a State Bank in 1888 with a capital of $25,000.00; changed to a National Bank in 1903 and capital increased to $50,000.00; TODAY with a capital and surplus of $85,000.00 and total resources of over $500,000.00 we are

BETTER,

BIGGER

AND

STRONGER

than ever. During the 20 years of our existence, our aim has been to extend to our patrons the best possible service. Our steady growth is evidence that the banking institution, which throws the greatest safeguards around its business in order to protect its depositors merits the confidence of the public. If you are not a customer of this Bank let this be your invitation to become one; our relations will be mutually profitable.

Garrett National Bank

Of Oakland, Maryland.

Mr. C. A. Guthrie, of near Accident, was a visitor to this office yesterday afternoon.

Dr. R. A. Ravenscroft, of Baltimore, was in the city a day or two this week on business.

Mrs. Annie Slabach, of Pittsburg, is in Oakland as the guest of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. John A. Wolf.

Mr. D. Y. Morris returned to Kingwood Tuesday afternoon after spending a short time in Oakland with relatives.

Mrs. Annie Devries, of Cumberland, is the guest of Mr. and Mrs. W. R. Offutt at their residence on Second street.

Mr. E. J. Fringer left Oakland Monday afternoon for Fayetteville, West Va., where he will visit friends for a week or two.

Miss Mabel Thayer, of Thayerville, was the guest on Tuesday night of Mr. and Mrs. N. R. Sanner at their home on Liberty street.

Mr. J. O. Thomas, vice president and manager of the Tioga Tanning Company, Hutton, was in the city yesterday on business.

Mr. and Mrs. Louis Bush, after spending a few days with relatives in Grafton, returned to their home in Oakland Monday afternoon.

Dr. Arnold A. Scherr and Mr. Milton Scherr, of Eglon, spent Tuesday night in Oakland as the guests of their sister, Mrs. Julius C. Renninger.

Mr. N. U. Bond, of Bond, left here Tuesday afternoon for Pocahontas county, W. Va., where he went to look after some business interests.

Mrs. G. Semmes Hamill and two children, after a visit of several weeks to relatives in Baltimore, returned to Oakland last Sunday afternoon.

Rev Dr. R. B. Ward, who was on quite a long to trip to different points in his district, returned to Oakland last Sunday evening, coming here from Grantsville.

The Oakland Literary Society will give a dime entertainment in the High School room Wednesday, Dec. 23d, at 7.30 p. m., proceeds for the benefit of the Library.

Miss Margaret Tower, who spent several weeks at Moscow Mills, where she was the guest of friends and relatives, returned to her home in Oakland on Tuesday.

Mr. Wallace L. Mason, who is filling a supply station in the Parkersburg District, M. E. church, is home for a few days' visit to his parents, Mr. and Mrs. George M. Mason.

Mr. C. Ellwood Offutt and little son started for Chicago, Ill., Tuesday morning where they will be guests of Mrs. Offutt's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Nelson Thomasson, until after the holidays.

Rev. Charles Beachy, of Wheeling, after spending a few days in Oakland with his sister, Mrs. David Durst, returned to Wheeling Tuesday afternoon, where he is engaged in conducting a mission.

Mrs. John Harned, whose health has been greatly impaired for several months, was taken to New York city Tuesday night by her husband, who will place her in a hospital in that city for treatment.

In compliance with the law requiring two public examinations a year in every school in the state, such an examination will be held in all grades of the Oakland school Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, Dec. 21, 22 and 23, to which the patrons are cordially invited.

During the past week this office has been visited by quite a number of patrons of THE REPUBLICAN, among them being Messrs. H. H. Warnick, Peter Wilt and George W. Beaman, of District No. 11; Benj. F. Green, of No. 9; Judge Merrill, of Merrill, and others.

A number of linemen have been engaged the past two or three weeks erecting a new telephone line from Oakland to Terra Alta, the work being done for the Garrett County Company, which will greatly improve the service, not only to our sister town of Terra Alta, but also other towns west of that place.

Rev. J. A. McClelland, pastor of the First Presbyterian church, departed today for Philadelphia, where he is called by the illness of his mother who resides in that city. It will be recalled that the lady underwent a surgical operation in a Philadelphia hospital some months ago for relief from cancer. Her recovery was in the nature of remarkable for one of her advanced years. Recently, however, she has suffered severely with a complication of troubles and at this time is reported as quite ill. —Grafton Republican.

CAPITAL $50,000.00 — SURPLUS AND PROFITS $20,000.00

THE First National Bank

OAKLAND, MD.

GOVERNMENT DEPOSITORY.

One of the Largest and Best Equipped Banking Houses in Maryland.

Vaults absolutely Fire and Burglar proof.

Safety Deposit Boxes for Rent

Pays 3 Per Cent. on Time Deposits—Compounded Semi-Annually

Every courtesy extended consistent with sound banking.

Home Savings Banks Free. $1.00 will start an account.

The Depositor with a Dollar account receives the same consideration as the largest depositor. COME IN AND GET ACQUAINTED

NEW COURT HOUSE WILL BE OPEN FOR INSPECTION

By the Ladies and Their Escorts This Evening from 7.30 Until 9 O'clock.

As Chairman of the Court House Commission Judge Robert R. Henderson announced from the bench yesterday morning when he convened Court that this (Thursday) evening between the hours of 7.30 and 9 o'clock the new court house would be illuminated from cellar to dome, and would be open for inspection by the ladies of Oakland and their escorts.

In the building there are more than four hundred electric lights and all of these will be turned on, lighting the entire structure, making a test of the arrangement of the lights.

In the several offices and compartments of the building officials will be present to explain the method of filing and keeping secure the records of the county and give the expected visitors any other information.

In making the announcement as above Judge Henderson extended an invitato all to avail themselves of this opportunity to see the new court house at its best.

K. of P. Fair.

Garrett Lodge No. 113, Knights of Pythias, of Oakland, will hold a Fair and Supper in their lodge room during the holidays beginning Monday, Dec. 28th, and continuing to and including Dec. 31st. This promises to be an entertaining event and excellent suppers will be served each evening. There will be plenty of amusement. The Mountain City Band, of Oakland, will render music for the occasion.

Fun in a Toyshop.

What can be more enjoyable to look forward to than an evening of delight, spent in a comfortable theatre listening to a new comic opera that is truly comic and filled with new melodies that please and charm the ear? This new musical comedy is called "The Toymakers," and will be seen at the Opera House, Oakland, on Tuesday, Dec 22, for one night only. It was written by Charles Felton Pidgin, the chief of the Massachusetts Bureau of Statistics, who jumped into popular favor when he wrote "Quincy Adams Sawyer," which was read and talked about all over the country. This gentleman who daily feeds on the dry "breakfast food" of statistics has a most versatile genius for amusing people and this latest book "The Toymakers" which he dramatized himself is brimming over with laughter and fun of the best kind. His New England play aroused great interest because of its faithful pictures of rural life and when he takes his audience to old England and of all things hits upon the idea of bringing a mechanical doll to life by electricity in a quaint toy shop which causes the most ridiculous situations and sends the audience into shrieks of laughter that continues for 150 minutes. Mr. Pidgin wrote the twenty-six lyrics, gems of their kind, which Charles D. Blake and John A. Bennett set to music which is of a high order sparkling with bright new tunes that set the feet a-tapping. The names of Charles F. Atkinson and James Thatcher who manage "The Jollities" is guarantee for a clean, clever, amusing entertain. The scenery is new and costumes artistically designed for "The Toymakers" which hould be read by every one if possible, giving double pleasure when listened to later.

Church Services.

OAKLAND PRESBYTERIAN.

Services on Sunday, to which all are cordially invited, will be preaching at 11 a. m. and 7.3 p. m.

L. B. HENSLEY, Pastor.

ST. PAUL'S M. E.

Services next Sunday as follows: Preaching 10.30 a. m.; Sunday school at 2.15 p. m.; preaching at 7.30 p. m.
Epworth League Monday 7.30 p. m.
Junior League Wednesday 4.15 p. m.
Prayer meeting Wednesday 7.30 p. m.
Everybody cordially invited to attend these services.

J. B. WORKMAN, Pastor.

ST. MARK'S LUTHERAN.

Services next Sabbath as follows:
Sunday school at 9.30 a. m.
Preaching 10.30 a. m., and 7.30 p. m.
Luther League every Wednesday at 7.30 p. m.
Preaching at Crellin next Sunday at 3 p. m.
Everybody welcome.

E. MANGES, Pastor.

BAPTIST.

Services next Sunday as follows:
Deer Park—Preaching at 11 a. m.
Loch Lynn—Preaching at 3 p. m.
Ferndale—Preaching next Saturday at 7.30 p. m., instead of Sunday.
Everybody invited to be present.

C. W. HUDSON, Pastor.

MT. LAKE AND DEER PARK M. E. CHARGE

Services next Sunday as follows:
Mt. Lake Park—Class meeting 10 a. m.; preaching at 11 a. m.; Sunday school 2:30 p. m.; Epworth League 7 p. m.
Deer Park—Sunday school at 9.30 and class meeting at 10.30 a. m; Epworth League 6.30 and preaching 7.30 p. m.

JOHN O. BOLTON, Pastor.

GARRETT COUNTIANS IN FLORIDA

A Bunch of Mountain Folks Down There Picking Oranges.

To the Editor of The Republican:

Were it so with you, that the long-standing invitation to visit me in Florida could be accepted, you would find quite a bunch of young Garrett county lads here at Crown Point. Besides "Your's Truly," son Howard and little grandson, John Keller, we have two sons of Rev. Sam'l Miller of Engles Mills, and young Fike of Friendsville. All these chaps are playing, for so much compensation, with the "golden balls."

Oranges, in this immediate section, are fine this year. Pity we cannot say the market is as good as the fruit. Sales have, so for, been unsatisfactory. It would seem but just that the Northern apple grower should reciprocate: we pay $4 to $5 per barrel for apples, and get, often only $1.50 for oranges. However, our shippers spoil the market by sending green fruit. This is done from year to year, resulting in loss of tens of thousands of dollars; still blind selfishness and greed perpetuate the ruinous custom. Then, too, Florida growers have not learned the proper style of handling and packing their fruit. All the world knows that the Florida orange is finer and sweeter than the California, yet, side by side, the Western fruit outsells ours, often 2 to 1, just because, by improved handling and packing, they offer finer looking and better keeping articles. But the Cracker will catch the trick of the Westener, by and by. If Old Boreas does not hurl his frosty wrath down upon us, many millions will come into the pockets of the Florida orange grower for the 1908 crop. Temperature for three weeks past, from 60 to 90 degrees. Come and drink sunshine and eat oranges—both free to welcome visitors.

Transportation people and hotel keepers say such a rush into Florida has not been seen for years: the season is not yet fairly on.

With best wishes for all, and compliments of the season, I am yours truly,

J. B. SHOUP

Crown Point, Fla., Nov. 28.

List of Letters.

Mrs Bummings, Mrs. S. C. Eldridge, Miss Etta Gower, Isaac King, Miss Edith Miller, Mrs. Mary Sebold, M. A. Sendergast, George Wilcox.

The Stork Makes a Visit.

Editor and Mrs. Charles A. Deffinbaugh received a visit from Mr. Stork Tuesday morning, leaving in their care a little son. We extend our fraternal congratulations to the happy parents.

Claims Bryan Mule Award.

Frank A. Perdew, a Democratic member of the bar of Allegany county, who is a great admirer of William J. Bryan, claims that from the vote so far as known the greatest gain for Mr. Bryan in any county in the United States in the last campaign was in Allegany county, Md. The average Democratic vote in the three campaigns—1896, 1900 and 1904—was 3921. The figures for 1908 give the Democratic vote in Allegany county 4791, or a gain of 870 votes over the average of the other three campaigns. This is a gain of 22.18 per cent, the largest of any county in the country so far reported. In that county the largest gain was in Mount Savage district. This district would come in then, it is claimed, for the celebrated Bryan mule award.

Mr. Perdew sent Mr. Bryan a telegram Saturday at Lincoln, Neb., requesting that the mule be sent here on the showing made by Allegany county.

BITTINGER.

C. E. Ellithorp returned last Saturfrom Baltimore, where he had gone to represent the interests and desires of the citizens of this section on the location of the proposed state road, and we regret that the most central and practical route should have been rejected and the tax payers of the county and state be burdened with a debt for the construction of a road which will be of no benefit to two-thirds of the residents of this county and at the same time be a convenience to the citizens of Pennsylvania.

J. B. Harmon was stricken with paralysis on last Friday and at this writing is in a critical conditian.

Miss Nettie Brenninger returned to her home at Sunnyside last Suuday, after spending a few days here with her sister, Mrs. J. T. Loar.

Miss Naomi Orendorf returned last Friday evening from a week's visit on Keyser's Ridge.

While hunting on Meadow Mountain one day last week, Dennis Brenneman and Oliver Buckle routed and had an exciting chase after a black fox, but sly Reynard made good his escape.

Mrs. F. M. Bittinger is visiting her parents at Kime, Pa., for a few days.

Silas Platter had his ankle badly crushed by a piece of railroad iron falling upon it, and as a result he is going about on crutches.

Jacob Brenneman sold a fine spring calf last week receiving for the animal the nice price of $33.

Fresh oysters at Baumgartners at 30c quart.

Four Per Cent. Interest.

The First National Bank, Friendsville, pays four per cent. interest on time deposits. Place your money in this bank where its earning capacity will be greater than in any other banking institution in the county.

THE FIRST NATIONAL BANK,
Friendsville, Md.

Dissolution Notice.

This is to give notice that the firm of Reams & Browning, doing general mercantile business, has been dissolved by mutual consent, Mr. Browning retiring. The business will be continued by Mr. Reams.

REAMS & BROWNING.
Swallow Falls, Aug 8, 1908. 3t

Lot For Sale.

The best building lot in Oakland; opposite new courthouse, at reasonable price. Apply to owner.

HENRY LAUER,
Oakland, Md.

Commissioners' Meeting.

OFFICE OF THE COUNTY COMMISSIONERS FOR GARRETT CO., OAKLAND, MD., Dec. 15, 1908.

The County Commissioners for Garrett county will meet at their office in Oakland on Tuesday, Jan. 5th, 1909, to appoint road supervisors and constables By order of the Board.

A. G. ROSS, Clerk.

NOTICE OF STOCKHOLDERS' MEETING.

The regular annual meeting of the stockholders of the First National Bank of Kitzmillerville, Maryland, will be held at its banking house on

Tuesday, January 12, 1909,

from 1 to 2 o'clock P. M., for the purpose of electing a board of directors for the ensuing year and for the transaction of any other business that may be brought before them.

E. J HAMILL, Cashier.

NOTICE OF STOCKHOLDERS' MEETING.

The regular meeting of the stockholders of the Garrett National Bank of Oakland, Maryland, will be held at its banking house on

Tuesday, January 12, 1909,

at 2 o'clock P. M., for the purpose of electing a board of directors for the ensuing year, and for the transaction of any other business that may come before them.

S. T. JONES, Cashier.

NOTICE OF STOCKHOLDERS' MEETING.

Pursuant to the required legal notice a meeting of the stockholders of the First National Bank of Friendsville, Maryland, will be held at its banking house on

Tuesday, January 12, 1909,

at 10 o'clock A. M. for the purpose of electing a board of directors for the ensuing year and for the transaction of such other business that may lawfully be done.

R. C. McCANDLISH, Cashier.

NOTICE OF STOCKHOLDERS' MEETING.

The regular annual meeting of the stockholders of the First National Bank of Oakland, Maryland, will be held at its banking house on

Tuesday, January 12, 1909,

from 1 to 2 o'clock P. M., for the purpose of electing a board of directors for the ensuing year and for the transaction of any other business that may be brought before them.

R. E. SLIGER, Cashier.

REPORT OF THE CONDITION OF The First National Bank

AT FRIENDSVILLE,

In the State of Maryland, at the close of business, November 27, 1908.

RESOURCES.

Loans and Discounts	$115,008 04
Overdrafts secured and unsecured	169 34
U. S. Bonds to secure circulation	25,000 00
Premiums on U. S. Bonds	1,734 37
Bonds, securities, etc	66,018 54
Banking house, furniture and fixtures	6,098 51
Due from National Banks (not reserve agents)	1,320 49
Due from State Banks and Bankers	1,058 15
Due from approved reserve agents	17,367 23
Checks and other cash items	72 68
Notes of other National Bn'ks	1,040 00
Fractional paper currency, nickels and cents	93 43
LAWFUL MONEY RESERVE IN BANK, VIZ:
Specie $1,390 25
Legal-tender notes 10,249 00
	11,639 25
Redemption fund with U. S. Treasurer (5 per cent. of circulation	1,250 00
Total	$247,870 03

LIABILITIES.

Capital stock paid in	$ 25,000 00
Surplus fund	25,851 87
Undivided profits loss expenses and taxes paid	2,756 61
National Bank notes outstanding	25,000 00
Due to other National Banks	100 00
Due to State Banks and Bankers	2,839 66
Due to Trust companies and Savings Banks	105 12
Individual deposits subject to check	67,871 26
Time certificates of deposit	98,345 51
Total	$247,870 03

State of Maryland, County of Garrett.

I, R. C. McCandlish, Cashier of the above bank, do solemnly swear that the above statement is true to the best of my knowledge and belief.

R. C. McCANDLISH, Cashier.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 3rd day of December, 1908.

ORVAL A. WELCH, Notary Public.

Correct—Attest: W. W. SAVAGE,
H. M. RUMBAUGH,
D. S. CUSTER,
Directors.

REPORT OF THE CONDITION OF THE GARRETT NATIONAL BANK, at Oakland, in the State of Maryland, at the close of business, November 27th, 1908:

RESOURCES.

Loans and Discounts	$285,425 44
Overdrafts, secured and unsecured	2 55
U. S. Bonds to secure circulation	50,000 00
Premiums on U. S. Bonds	1,500 00
Bonds, securities, etc	105,645 00
Banking house, furniture and fixtures	14,500 00
Due from National Banks (not reserve agents)	813 45
Due from State Banks and Bankers	993 79
Due from approved reserve agents	38,168 36
Checks and other cash items	345 05
Notes of other National Banks	800 00
Fractional paper currency, nickels and cents	172 04
Lawful Money Reserve in Bank, viz:
Specie $21,136 50
Legal-tender notes 7,385 00	28,511 50
Redemption fund with U. S. Treasurer, 5 per cent of circulation	2,500 00
Total	$529,405 78

LIABILITIES.

Capital stock paid in	$ 50,000 00
Surplus fund	35,000 00
Undivided profits, less expenses and taxes paid	4,874 95
National bank notes outstanding	48,700 00
Due to other National Banks	2,425 49
Due to State Banks and Bankers	759 56
Individual deposits subject to check	161,311 62
Savings Deposits	19,508 20
Time certificates of deposit	204,115 58
Cashie 's checks outstanding	1,202 78
Total	$529,405 78

State of Maryland, County of Garrett, ss:

I, S. T. JONES, Cashier of the above named bank do solemnly swear that the above statement is true to the best of my knowledge and belief. S. T. JONES, Cashier.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 1st day of December, 1908.

HARLAND L. JONES, Notary Public.

Correct—Attest: D. E. OFFUTT,
JOHN T. MITCHELL,
JOHN M. DAVIS,
Directors.

REPORT OF THE CONDITION OF The First National Bank

AT KITZMILLERVILLE,

In the State of Maryland, at the close of business, November 27, 1908.

RESOURCES.

Loans and Discounts	$53,216 80
U. S. Bonds to secure circulation	6,250 00
Premiums on U. S. Bonds	218 75
Bonds, securities, etc	7,375 00
Banking house, furniture and fixtures	8,347 95
Other real estate owned	400 00
Due from National Banks (not reserve agents)	74 62
Due from approved reserve agents	9,711 57
Checks and other cash items	3 50
Notes of other National Banks	460 00
Fractional paper currency, nickels, and cents	65 05
LAWFUL MONEY RESERVE IN BANK, VIZ:
Specie $7,486 50
Legal-tender notes 72 00
	8,213 50
Redemption fund with U. S. Treasurer (5 per cent. of circulation	312 50
Due from U. S. Treasurer, other than 5 per cent redemption fund	500 00
Total	$89,949 17

LIABILITIES.

Capital stock paid in	$25,000 00
Surplus fund	3,000 00
Undivided profits, less expenses and taxes paid	1,547 80
National Bank notes outstanding	6,250 00
Due to other National Banks	2,250 18
Due to State Banks and Bankers	7 46 68
Individual deposits subject to check	26,598
Savings deposits	28,049 53
Cashier's checks outstanding	150 80
Total	$89,949 17

State of Maryland, County of Garrett.

I, E. J. Hamill, Cashier of the above named bank, do solemnly swear that the above statement is true to the best of my knowledge and belief.

E. J. HAMILL, Cashier.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 2nd day of December, 1908.

GEO. J. FOOL, Notary Public.

Correct—Attest: R. A. SMITH,
WADE SAPP,
A. C. SMITH,
Directors.

ARTHUR TOWNSHEND

Santa Claus is Here Again

Loaded down and you can get anything you want in

FANCY BASKETS,
MIRRORS,
TOILET SETTS,
GLOVE BOXES,
WRITING PORTFOLIOS,
COLLAR and CUFF BOXES,
NUT CRACKERS,
PAPER WEIGHTS,
SILK and LINEN HANDKERCHIEFS
LINK BUTTONS,
STICK PINS,
SCARFS,
TIES,
SUSPENDERS,
FANCY CHINA,
FANCY BOX PAPER,
SMOKERS' SETTS, Etc

Xmas For Everybody

Also a Fine Line of

NUTS, CURRANTS,
ORANGES, RAISINS,
CANDR, CITRON,
FIGS, DATES,
FRUITS, Etc.

BARGAINS IN MEN'S & BOYS' OVERCOATS

ARTHUR TOWNSHEND

HOUSE FOR RENT, possession after October 1st; contains city and spring water. Apply to Mrs. J. Sincell, Oakland. Also cottage of rooms, either furnisdhe or unfurnished.

To save money see Baumgartner's nuts and candies.

Scraps' Christmas

By FRANK H. SWEET.

Copyright, 1907, by F. H. Sweet.

IT was in the Old Ladies' home.

One day Miss Virginia went to her sister with a stern face.

"Adelaide" she said, "where's my gold pin?"

"Have you looked in your best dress, Virginia? You might have left it there."

"I never did such a thing," answered her sister, "but I'll look."

She went to the closet just as Mrs. Slocum and Mrs. Perkins entered the room. With her head among the dresses she did not hear them.

"No, it ain't here, Adelaide!" she called.

"What ain't? What's the matter?" cried Mrs. Perkins, looking from Miss Adelaide's frightened face to Miss Virginia's grim one. "Have you lost something?"

"I can't find my pin," she said coldly. "I suppose I've mislaid it, that's all."

"Miss Virginia, you don't mean you can't find that gold pin! Here comes Miss Pratt. Miss Pratt, poor Miss Virginia has lost her gold pin. Least ways she says she's lost it, but there's other things besides losings."

Miss Virginia looked quickly at her sister. Miss Adelaide's eyes were round and frightened.

"What do you mean?" she faltered.

Mrs. Perkins gave a quick glance around the circle and lowered her voice.

"NO, IT AIN'T HERE."

"I mean," she said, "ain't you often showed that pin to Scraps?"

"Yes."

"And ain't she admired it?"

"Yes," admitted Miss Adelaide in a low voice.

Mrs. Perkins nodded triumphantly.

"Then," she said impressively, "it must either be in the room or have been taken out.

"Of course," she added softly, "there ain't but one person would touch it. I think the best thing would be to settle the matter now. Suppose we—just we five—go to Scraps' room and look. I always did suspect the girl."

"I don't believe she took it!" wailed Miss Adelaide. Mrs. Perkins paid no attention to her, but waited watchfully for the next opinion.

"It don't seem right to do that way. I'd rather ask the girl," said Miss Pratt.

"But if she's honest you'd hurt her feelings for nothing," insinuated Mrs. Perkins.

"And if we waited it might go on," she said, "or others might hear of it, and then 'twould be hard on the girl. Now, if just we five go no one need know. What do you say, Miss Virginia?"

"I'll go," she said briefly.

"Then we'd better go right off," said Mrs. Perkins. "She'll be back from school pretty soon. Come on, all," and she led the way. But Miss Adelaide held back.

"What are you waiting for?" said her sister sharply. "Come along."

So Miss Adelaide miserably joined the procession. They went softly down the corridor till they came to the door of Scraps' room. It was closed. Then for the first time they realized what they were doing. Miss Adelaide put a trembling hand on her sister's arm.

"IT—IT'S LOCKED!"

"Come away, Virginia. 'Tain't very much. Let the poor child have it. It—it seems as if we're housebreakers."

"Perhaps 'twould be better to tell Miss Baker and let her look," answered Miss Virginia irresolutely. Her usual pride had quite deserted her, and she wavered visibly. Mrs. Perkins suddenly darted ahead.

"Goodness me! I never see sech a pack o' cowards! 'Tain't as if she was one of us. She's nothing but a servant. Ain't we got a right to examine our servants' rooms for stolen goods, I'd like to know?" She opened the door violently.

"'Twouldn't take us long to look, at any rate," she said. "The room ain't bigger than a twopenny bit. Now, Miss Pratt, you feel in those clothes, Mis' Slocum, you take the bed, and if Miss Virginia will take one drawer I'll take the other. And there's Adelaide"—

"There don't seem to be any room for me, and I'm only in the way. My head aches too. I guess I'd better go back."

"Adelaide!" said her sister.

"There's that bag under the bed, Miss Adelaide," said Mrs. Perkins sweetly, "if you'd jest as soon take that." Miss Adelaide submitted meekly.

The room had space only for a cot bed, a small bureau, a chair and a corner washstand. There was a row of hooks behind the door, and on these hung Scraps' meager wardrobe, each article drooping forlornly, as if instinct with the pitiful loneliness of the girl. Miss Pratt's ample figure as she stood before the garments searching in the jockets and hems made them seem by contrast only dejected shadows. Mrs. Slocum was poking around the mattress, her spectacles pushed high on her anxious forehead. Miss Adelaide dropped down by the other side of the bed and rested her head against the pillow.

Her thick snuff colored wig had slipped and showed a few thin gray hairs, but her misery was so real as quite to overshadow any humor in the situation. She put out her hand and touched the old bag and then drew it back as if it had burnt her. Her sister looked at her and frowned.

"DEER MIS ADLADE MERY CHRISMUS."

"It—it's locked!" pleaded Miss Adelaide.

"I was wondering how long 'twould be before you'd discover that!" retorted Miss Virginia. Her conscience was troubling her, but she would not yield. She tossed a key to her sister and then put the drawer back.

"'Tain't in my drawer either," said Mrs. Perkins. "I guess it must be in that bag. You'd better hurry, Miss Adelaide. She'll be home pretty soon."

Miss Adelaide pulled the bag out and fitted the key. The four old ladies peered eagerly down at her. Suddenly she drew her hand back again.

"I can't," she said. "One of you must do it."

Mrs. Perkins stooped down and pulled open the bag, which seemed full of bits of silk and ribbon.

"Where'd she get so many?" she asked. "It looks as if we're on the track now, don't it? And see here!"

She pulled from under the rags three little packages carefully tied up in bright colored bits of tissue paper. She distributed them rapidly, passing one to Miss Adelaide, who made no effort to take it, but let it roll under the bed. Mrs. Perkins dived after it and came up flushed just as Mrs. Slocum gave an exclamation of dismay.

"What's the matter?" asked Mrs. Perkins impatiently. Mrs. Slocum laid something on the bed. The others crowded round; only Miss Adelaide never moved. They saw a red pincushion in the shape of a rude heart, and on it in crooked letters the pins formed the words, "Deer Mis Adlade Mery Chrismus."

The silence made Miss Adelaide turn, and she caught up the ugly cushion with a little cry.

"That's what it meant!" she cried. "That's her 'meechin' ways! She was making us Christmas presents—us who'd never done a thing for her, not a thing to make her lonely life less lonely, not a thing to make Christmas a happy time for her, and she feeding her poor starved life on the scraps of kindness we flung her!"

A tear rolled down and splashed on the red cushion. Miss Virginia snatched the cushion away.

"There!" she cried. "Make things better by spotting this!"

Miss Adelaide left the room, and her sister did not oppose her. The rest worked in silence until everything was in order. Then they filed silently out and shut the door.

That night Miss Adelaide had a sick headache. Scraps came up at supper time to bring her some toast. Her thin little face looked sharply through the gloom of the room.

"Here's your toast," she said. "It's dark in here. Shan't I get you a light?"

"No, no," answered Miss Adelaide quickly. It seemed to her she could not meet the child's eyes. Scraps stood a moment, full of sympathy.

"I'm sorry you're sick, Miss Adelaide," she said awkwardly. "I guess you'll feel better in the morning, won't you?"

"Yes," answered Miss Adelaide, burying her face in the pillow. "Run downstairs and get your supper, Scraps. It will be all cold."

Scraps obeyed, as she always did, and Miss Adelaide heard her shuffling down the stairs in her loose old shoes. When Miss Virginia came in she found her sister sitting up in bed, with a flushed, excited face.

"Virginia," she cried, "how much money have I in my purse?"

"Three dollars and five cents," answered Miss Virginia.

"I am going to get Scraps a pair of shoes for Christmas!" Miss Adelaide was frightened when she had said it, for it was understood between them that Miss Virginia should say what was to be bought. But no explosion came.

"I'M SORRY YOU'RE SICK, MISS ADELAIDE."

"You—you ain't angry, are you?" asked Miss Adelaide pleadingly.

"I haven't said I was, have I?" returned her sister. "I was thinking."

"Oh!" answered Miss Adelaide humbly. She felt conscious of her inferiority. She never "thought." There was a knock at the door, and Miss Pratt entered.

"How's your head, Miss Adelaide?" she asked.

"It's some better, thank you."

"Was your toast hot?"

"I guess 'twas. I didn't notice."

There was silence a moment. Suddenly Miss Pratt burst out: "I don't know how to say it, but I feel downright ashamed of this afternoon. The idea of that child, poorer than any church mouse, trying to be giving us something! I—I jest can't stand it I've got an old brown merino I shall fix up. I guess I can afford some trimmings."

"I've been a-knocking, and no one heard me," said Mrs. Slocum, putting in her head. "I couldn't help hearing, and I'm glad! I was so worried I couldn't rest easy in my mind till I'd said I'd do suthin. I don't know what but I've got to make up some way."

"That's real good of you, Mis' Slocum," answered Miss Pratt, "and as I was saying"—

A knock at the door interrupted them.

"There's the last one," said Miss Virginia grimly. A flash of surprise passed over Mrs. Perkins' face as she entered upon seeing the others.

"I wonder if I don't know what you're talking about," she said gayly. "About Scraps? I thought so. Now, I've got a plan. Suppose we make up a scrap bag for her and fill it and hang it on the door so she can find it Christmas morning. A good many of the others will help."

Miss Adelaide sat up in great excitement.

"Oh, Mrs. Perkins," she cried, "how do you think of such things? She will be so pleased!" Miss Adelaide's simple old face, wrinkled as it was, looked like that of a happy child.

"BUT I FEEL DOWNRIGHT ASHAMED."

Mrs. Perkins fluttered consciously. "I thought you'd like it," she said. "But you must be tired, dear Miss Adelaide, so we won't stay. I jest put my head in to tell you."

She rose, and Miss Pratt and Mrs. Slocum followed the hint.

Miss Virginia looked after her ironically, but Miss Adelaide's joy was not to be quenched.

"She will be so happy!" she kept saying.

Suddenly her sister rose and went to the medicine box.

"I'm going to give you some niter, Adelaide," she said. "I don't want to be kept awake all hours, if she will be 'so happy.'"

Miss Adelaide sank back quietly, but her eyes were like two dim stars among the pillows. Suddenly she heard an exclamation.

"Did you cut yourself, Virginia? I always said that broken glass was dangerous!"

Miss Virginia dropped white and speechless into the nearest chair.

"Oh, what is the matter?" cried Miss Adelaide, pushing away the clothes to get down to her sister.

"You lie still!" came in a stern voice from the chair.

Miss Adelaide crawled back and lay there trembling. In a minute Miss Virginia came over to her.

"It's the pin," she said quickly. "I must have dropped it there Sunday night when I went to the box for your cough drops."

"Oh, Virginia!" gasped her sister. "I'm so glad! I'm so sorry—that poor child"—

Miss Virginia interrupted her.

"I guess I know that as well as you. I'm going to give her this pin for Christmas!"

As Christmas day drew near Scraps found herself in a strange kind of fairyland. The rooms were decorated with holly and greens, the air was full of secrets, and, strangest and best of all, everybody was so good to her.

In those few days of kindness the girl seemed to blossom out. The old restraint was banished and never returned. Love crept into her heart and looked out of her eyes, and the old haunted look fled forever.

"I SHALL ALWAYS KEEP IT."

She crept into her little cot Christmas eve with a happy heart. She had left her little gift at each door.

She felt that she, too, would not be quite forgotten.

"Just some little thing to show it's Christmas," she prayed, and a bright star shone down, like one of God's beautiful promises, and she lay there content.

She never heard the five smiling old ladies creep softly up to her door; she did not see until morning the immense bag labeled "A Christmas Scraps-bag." Then she was almost overpowered.

"I don't know what to say," she cried, "only I'm so happy."

She dressed in her new clothes and visited each room, where she was received with admiring looks. The old ladies saw no more the awkward girl with her peaked face and rough, short hair. They had worked for her, they loved her, and—it was Christmas day!

She went to the room of Miss Virginia and Miss Adelaide last, because her visit there was to be the most important and most thrilling of all.

"Miss Virginia, how can I thank you?" she faltered, touching the brooch. "You felt so bad when you thought you had lost it."

Miss Virginia kissed her coldly, but there was a strange quiver in her voice.

"It wasn't lost; it was only put aside for you," she said.

"And, Miss Adelaide," said Scraps, "these shoes are so nice. And your cushion had a spot on it. I'm sorry I don't know how it got there."

Miss Virginia glanced warningly at her sister, but there was no need.

"I like it, spot and all," she said simply. "I shall always keep it."

John Rossiter's Christmas Present.

By GEORGE H. PICARD.

Copyright, 1906, by G. H. Picard.

WHEN Allen Armitage died, which he did suddenly on his sixtieth birthday, everybody wondered what would become of Janet—pretty, irresponsible Janet, his young wife. She had been Armitage's wife since her eighteenth birthday. He had not made up his mind to marry until he was past fifty.

Although he was sufficiently alert as to the main chance in business dealings, Armitage had not been markedly successful in his ventures. The year before his death he discovered a promising bed of fire clay on a piece of land which he owned on the outskirts of the village, and he made up his mind to exploit it to his own advantage. He had little ready money, and he mortgaged his real estate to the limit to obtain the means to float the enterprise. Before it began to yield an appreciable return he was beyond the need of it. It was a promising undertaking—all Crosskill admitted it—but that did not restrain her friends from wondering as to the probable future of Janet.

They had not long to speculate. The day after the funeral Janet told Tom Masterson, her father, who was at least ten years the junior of her late husband, that she intended to devote all her energies to the development of the brickyard. Tom knew from past experience that it would be fruitless to object, but he did and in the course of the argument which followed became so earnest in his opposition that he was led to apply to his daughter an epithet against the use of which the Scriptures are notably explicit.

"I'm not a fool," she dissented proudly, "and now that I have a chance I'm going to demonstrate the fact."

Janet did demonstrate it, and the way she did it was a revelation. In less than two years after she assumed control of the brickmaking business it became so profitable that she was able to pay off all the indebtedness. Then she proceeded to enlarge the plant and to improve the quality of her product. Almost before she realized it she had a most gratifying credit at the village bank. Owing to the superior nature of her product the demand for Janet's wares became greater than she could supply. The man whom she employed as superintendent turned out to be a veritable treasure, and under his honest and clever management there existed the most perfect harmony between the small army of Italian brickmakers and their capable employer.

Before she was thirty-five Janet had become the village magnate. Prosperity and the outdoor life had done great things for her. She had developed into a noble woman, freed from the trivialities which had been a part of her girlhood and endowed with that completed comeliness which is never within the grasp of the very young. So she seemed to everybody who knew her and more especially to John Rossiter, the cashier of the village bank, who had loved her since the very day on which he might do so legitimately and who had told her so as quickly thereafter as decency would permit.

"WHY DID YOU, THEN?" SHE DEMANDED ILLOGICALLY.

At the time Rossiter's declaration had not impressed Janet profoundly, nor had she at any subsequent period found her persistent admirer more engrossing than the business of brick making. Until she should, she assured herself and everybody else who broached the subject, it would be folly to make any change in her way of living. She admitted, to herself only, that John was a man among a thousand, and it was not at all disagreeable to have him fond of her. She had demonstrated, however, that she was abundantly able to look after her own interests, and that fact alone should entitle her to immunity from such a sentimental position as that which John seemed anxious to have her occupy. She liked him well enough, but—

The time came when Janet believed that she hated him. It was the day when she learned that he had given up his position at the bank and had organized a company for the purpose of converting the trap rock of Duke mountain into gravel for commercial uses. At first she refused to credit the story. It seemed incredible that any one who had been born within the shadow of Duke mountain, the historic landmark which made Crosskill distinguished for something nobler than the quality of its fire clay, could be guilty of such vandalism.

It was true, however, and when Janet realized fully that John Rossiter and his company had actually obtained possession of the river side of the mountain and were preparing to erect a stone crushing plant and to install an army of Sicilian diggers at the foot of the beetling height she was shocked and indignant. There was justification sufficient for her wrath. Less than two years previously she had bought a piece of land abutting on the mountain and had built thereon a handsome house in which she had settled herself comfortably with the assurance that no uncongenial neighbor could ever harass her from the mountain side. That the unforeseen was actually imminent and, above all, that John Rossiter should be its agent made her desperate. She resolved that it should not be.

So she went to him with her avalanche of protests and reproaches. To her surprise and infinite chagrin she was unable to lodge them effectively. He listened with admirable gallantry, but Janet Armitage realized before she had launched a tithe of her argument that John Rossiter had made up his mind.

"I couldn't—nobody could—have believed you capable of such—such an awful desecration!" she declared, with a manifest intention to put him on the defensive.

"I hated to do it," he confessed soberly. "I really did."

"Why did you, then?" she demanded illogically.

"I must have money," he replied simply.

"One needs very little in Crosskill," she said. "You certainly must need it very much to be tempted to do what you expect. It must be another case of life or death."

"Oh, hardly as bad as that!" He laughed rather uneasily. Then his face sobered and his voice became lower and somewhat unsteady. "It might not seem necessary to another man, but it does to me. Shall I tell you all about it, Janet?"

"No," she returned hastily. "I must decline to have anything to do with such a detestable thing."

"Then we must let it go at that," he said, with a quick resumption of his business manner. "Let it stand that I want money for precisely the same reasons that influence the average man—for a steam yacht, a house in Fifth avenue, a castle in—in Killarney, a"—

Janet did not remain to hear further. At bay, but still unvanquished, she retired and from that day gave herself up unreservedly to the task of frustrating the design of the trap rock company. The weight of public sentiment was with her, and she manipulated it in every possible manner that her ingenuity could suggest.

Nothing was of the slightest avail. The big crushing machinery came up the river in sections, was unloaded at the foot of the mountain and put together and began at once its merciless reduction of the picturesque outcrop which had been loosened by the mighty fulminations and sharp pickaxes of the gang of dwarfed and noisy Palermitans that had camped just without Janet's inclosure.

It was a trying period for Janet Armitage. She was the most wretched woman in Crosskill when she knew that she should have been the happiest. She was the prey of contending emotions. It almost crushed her to be brought face to face with the knowledge that the power to make her supremely unhappy had been delegated to any one, and it grieved and humiliated her inexpressibly that the person delegated should have been John Rossiter. Most exasperating of all was the tardy conviction—unwelcome, yet unmistakable—that the man who had brought her to this extremity of discomfort was dearer to her than life itself.

All this came home to her with tremendous significance as she sat alone at her dinner on Christmas day. Everything seemed strangely unreal. The season itself was as unlike the typical holiday time as it well could be. Thus far there had not lodged a single snowflake on the hemlocks to herald the approach of winter. The air was soft and balmy, and there was a hazy lull in it that suggested a belated Indian summer. The unseasonableness of the weather was positively disquieting. It was impossible to fit the Christmas essentials into the scene.

"Open the windows, Beppo—wide open!" she called out to a half grown boy who stood looking in on her from the veranda outside. "It's positively stifling." Beppo was a swarthy Sicilian lad whom she had rescued from the mountain gang and befriended and who was repaying her for her protection with a devotion that was almost tragic in its earnestness.

Beppo threw open the unlatched door and windows and stood in one of them in an attitude of rapt admiration. There was nothing at all reserved about Beppo. His effusiveness was a thing to be dreaded and repressed. Standing framed in the tall window, he seemed to Janet to be especially out of place and melodramatic. It irritated her to see him standing there, so suggestive of an opera chorus or a trumpery Neapolitan figurine. It was all very well, she told herself, to have him about when he was a starved and helpless waif left to shift for himself, but now—really she must send him down to the yards to see if anything could be made of him.

Then she saw John Rossiter coming along the river road on his way up the mountain. If it had annoyed her to see how strong and handsome Beppo was growing it was even more disturbing to discover that her arch enemy had lost something of his old time erectness of figure and lightness of step. She even fancied that he was looking worn and that he was less particular in his personal appearance than usual. As he passed the house he saw Janet and raised his hat politely. She bowed frigidly in return and called out sharply to Beppo:

"Close those windows! It's frightfully chilly in here!"

Beppo closed them, himself on the inside. He advanced slowly, with the most theatric and unnatural progression, now and then half turning to shake his clinched fist in the direction of the fast receding figure of the man who was beginning to ascend the mountain.

"I HAVE COME TO OFFER YOU A CHRISTMAS GIFT."

"No more! Nevair more!" he hissed mysteriously.

Janet was speechless with astonishment. She was familiar with the melodramatic, but really this was something out of the ordinary.

"Dis night-a," continued Beppo in a brilliant whisper, "he mus'-a die!"

"Now, what do you mean?" Janet demanded sternly, with the evident intention of getting at the bottom of the matter. "Sit right down in that chair and tell me without any more nonsense."

For a reply Beppo drew his hand across his throat and gurgled suggestively.

Janet was beginning to be seriously alarmed. She knew that the young Sicilian was emotional to the verge of surdity and that he was not to be depended upon in an emergency. She had discovered that he had a passion for exaggeration, but it seemed to her that there must be something real about this.

"Beppo," she commanded in a tone that left no alternative, "do as I tell you!"

Thus brought to terms, the young Sicilian whispered a tale of contemplated assassination and robbery that would have been a veritable boon to one of the operatic maestri of the last generation. Three men of the mountain gang, he declared, had plotted to murder and rob John Rossiter on the very Christmas night, knowing that he would be alone in his office on the mountain. Beppo gave all the details of the dastardly business with the most ingenuous explicitness and seemed to expect Janet to share his enthusiasm over the removal of her enemy.

Janet did not stop to sift the matter. It was sufficient for her that the man she loved was threatened with danger which she might avert. She did not hesitate a moment. Dismissing Beppo, she feigned satisfaction at the prospect of so soon being rid of her enemy and sent the boy to the village on an errand. As soon as he was out of sight she left her house and began to ascend the mountain as quickly as she could.

Half an hour later she stood at the open door of Rossiter's cabin and came face to face with its occupant.

"Janet," he asked her doubtfully, "are you actually here?"

"Yes," she returned breathlessly, without looking at him at all. "I have come to offer you a Christmas gift."

He looked at her amazedly, but did not speak.

"I have come to offer you yours—"

"I don't understand; really I do not, Janet," he said helplessly.

Then she told him Beppo's story.

He heard it to the end without a word of comment. When she had finished he sighed long and deeply.

"I am disappointed," he said, a curious little quaver in his voice, "I am disappointed in my Christmas present. I hoped—I thought perhaps it might be something better."

"What is better than life?"

"You are—far better," he declared audaciously.

Janet knew that the long quarrel was ended, and the knowledge lifted the weight from her heart.

"If you really believe anything of that sort, John"— she began.

* * * * * *

"I forget to tell you that there was a word of truth in your precious Beppo's story," John said as they were descending the mountain. "Why, the very men he named are in the county lockup at the present moment, much holiday, you know. I saw them as I came up from the train. They are all good workmen, and in the spring I shall go down and pay the fines and get them out of limbo."

BOWSER ON NEW TACK

Wrote Speech With Idea of Saving the Country.

HOW IT STRUCK DRUGGIST.

That Impartial Critic Was So Impressed He Called Policeman, Who Took Charge of His Visitor as a Precaution.

[Copyright, 1908, by T. C. McClure.]

For the last two weeks of the recent campaign Mrs. Bowser had a careful eye on Mr. Bowser in the direction of politics. She did not fail to note that as the campaign drew toward its close he was uneasy and evinced a disposition to mix in politics. He read political articles, suspicious men called to see him in the evening, and on several occasions she heard him muttering to himself, as if getting off a speech. It was policy for her to say nothing and continue to watch.

When Mr. Bowser came home from the office the other evening Mrs. Bowser knew that some sort of climax had come. She expected to hear him say that he had engaged to address a great mass meeting of electors, but he didn't. He was noncommunicative and carried a puzzled air until after dinner, and then he broke out with:

"Mrs. Bowser, you will perhaps remember that at the beginning of this campaign I stated in vigorous terms that I should not interest myself in it."

"ARM YOURSELVES WITH DAGGERS AND PISTOLS!"

"Yes, you said so, and I thought it very wise in you."

"I told you that I didn't care a copper cent who was elected."

"I remember."

"That the country would run along just the same."

"Yes."

"And that there would be no real reform."

"Yes, you said that, and you added that things had reached such a pass that honest, decent men would no longer have anything to do with politics. You said you wouldn't cross the street to help any candidate's chances. You said that it was all graft and corruption and that you intended to keep out of it. I thought you a very sensible man."

"Um! Just so," he murmured, hitching around as if he had heard bad news. "There have been dozens of meetings in this district, and you have shown your good sense by staying away from them. I see that there is to be a grand rally tonight, but of course you won't be there. Why can't we go to the theater tonight?"

"Um, um! Mrs. Bowser, who is a patriot?"

"One that loves his country."

"Well, I love her. I can't help it. I thought I could—I thought she might go to thunder for all me—but I find that I can't throw her down after all. It's like trying to go back on one's own mother. Whenever I see that star spangled banner rippling in the breeze"—

"But you are not going to mix up with things now," interrupted Mrs. Bowser.

"I feel that my country is calling me. I can't stand by and see her destroyed. I have hesitated long to answer her appeal, but I can hesitate no longer."

He Didn't Register.

"That's all nonsense. You hear some grafter calling you instead of your country. What on earth can you do to help save her? You didn't register this year, and so you can't even vote. Why not go to the theater with me and let 'em fight it out?"

"Woman, you ask what I can do," sternly replied Mr. Bowser as he rose up and stood before her. "It is true that I cannot cast a ballot, but does my influence end there? Go to the theater! Go to the theater when our beloved country is passing through the crisis of her life! Woman, you must have taken leave of your senses!"

"But you are not going to the meeting tonight to speak? You know you couldn't get up before a howling crowd and say ten words. As for any great crisis, the papers haven't mentioned it. It's just such an election as we have had a dozen times over."

"No, I can't make a political speech," pathetically replied Mr. Bowser as he walked to and fro, with his hands behind his back, "but there are things that count above speeches. If one cannot shout his words from the platform he can put them into print for thinking men to read and reflect upon. I believe that such a course has changed more votes than any oratory."

"Oh, then, you have been writing out a speech?"

There was a plain sneer in Mrs. Bowser's tones, and the wonder was that he didn't grow red in the face and jump up and down and shout. He didn't, however. He hung on to himself and even worked up a smile as he answered:

"Yes, my dear woman, I have been writing a speech. I am not going to the meeting tonight to deliver it in person because I am no speechmaker, but it will be sent there and read as the speech of Samuel Bowser."

"But you will let me see it first?"

"I will quote you some extracts from it. Perhaps when you hear them that sneer will leave your face and you will think I amount to something after all."

"I think so now, dear," replied Mrs. Bowser, "but I do wish you would let politics alone. You are too good a man to mix up with politicians."

"I shall do very little mixing, only sufficient to call the attention of the country to the fact that this is the crisis, and liberty may be strangled and our glorious banner trailed in the dust. Listen to these extracts and see if they move you:

Reads Part of His Speech.

"'The bulwarks of American liberty are tottering to their fall. Freemen, beware!'

"'The infernal opposition would ruin the country body and soul for the sake of the spoils of office.'

"'Freeborn electors, do you know that this country is close upon the verge of anarchy as I write? You must save her by your ballots. If necessary you must shed your blood as freely as did your grandsires before you.'

"'Our country has fallen into the hands of men who clutch the throat of the Goddess of Liberty with one hand while holding out the other for spoils. Shall we sit supinely by and see her strangled, or shall we rally and rescue her at any cost of blood and treasure?'"

Reading the above had brought the sweat to Mr. Bowser's face and neck, and he paused to mop himself and ask:

"Well, what do you think of it thus far?"

"Isn't it a little too strong?" queried Mrs. Bowser.

"It's not half strong enough. Listen to these extracts:

"'Arouse, freemen, and arm yourselves and drive the infernal opposition into the sea!'

"'If one of these liberty stranglers challenges your right to vote, murder him on the spot!'

"'This is no time for honeyed words! Arm yourselves with daggers and pistols!'

"'The infernal opposition is made up of assassins and redhanded murderers! Give them no mercy!'

"'I even regard it as a solemn duty of every man of my party to kill off as many of the others as he can!'

"'Rally, freemen, rally! Don't leave one of the pirate crew alive by sundown of election day!'

"'Don't argue! Don't appeal! Use knife and pistol!'"

Mr. Bowser here folded up the manuscript, mopped more perspiration away and stood looking at Mrs. Bowser in a questioning way.

"I wish you would go over and read those extracts to the druggist," she said.

"What for?"

"He's a politician and can give you a political opinion of them."

Mr. Bowser took the proposition under advisement for a couple of minutes and then decided to go. It happened to be an easy half hour with the druggist, and when he had heard the extracts read he gently took Mr. Bowser by the arm and led him outdoors. A policeman happened to come along just then, and the man of drugs sorrowfully said to him:

"Here is a poor insane man that I found wandering around. I think his name is Bowser and that he lives on the block below. Take him home and tell his wife to put a bread and milk poultice on his head and get him to bed." M. QUAD.

He Knew Better.

Gladys—My brother is just awful. He can't save a cent.

Harold—He has saved a ten spot of mine for the last eight months.—Browning's Magazine.

Explaining It.

"Although my father is an invalid," said Miss Howell, "he takes a deep interest in my musical education. He always encourages me to practice my singing at home, even when he's in greatest pain."

"Well," replied Miss Cutting, "they do say that one may be made to forget a great pain by a greater one."—Catholic Standard and Times.

The Consultation.

First Doctor—This is a most mysterious case. I can't make anything out of it.

Second Doctor—Hasn't the patient any money?—Puck.

BRIGHT RAYS ON MOON'S SURFACE

New Theory of Luna's White Streaks Based on Terrestrial Analogy.

The bright rays or streaks on the moon's surface are explained by H. G. Tompkins, an English astronomer, on a new theory based on terrestrial analogy. The whiteness of the rays he would account for on the supposition that the white material consists of soluble salts of sodium and other minerals. Says Science Abstracts:

"In the case of the earth, these salts are brought to the surface by evaporation in many parts of the globe, such as the arid alkali tracts of north India and Persia. Originally existing below the surface, either as beds of solid salt or salt-impregnated strata, when they come into contact with the subsoil water they rise to the surface in solution, and, on the water drying, are left as a white efflorescence. The configuration of the deposit depends on that of the ground. Radical configurations can be traced in many volcanic regions of the earth. They are due to intrusion of liquid matter from below, which, by pushing up a center of volcanic activity, causes the formation of radial fissures and upheaval of strata round it. They are not always visible on the surface. If such upheavals occurred in the neighborhood of saline deposits, saline strata would be pushed upward along with other strata, and would bring them within reach of evaporation at those places, and result in efflorescence on the surface, which would follow the direction of up heaval and a radical formation would thus occur.

"On the moon all the conditions for such a state of affairs exist. The moon having probably once been part of the earth, the existence thereon of sodium and other terrestrial minerals is to be expected. The water, in its free state, does not exist on the lunar surface, there is no reason why it should not once have existed in the soil, and with the lunar climate, there would have been strong evaporation at some time. Consequently any soluble salts in the crust come to the surface, and owing to the absence of clouds or rain, which might temporarily reverse the process of evaporation, the salts would rise, more ocean would have to be taken into account permanently on the surface, and follow the configuration of the ground. If on the earth water and rain were to disappear from the surface, a similar state of thing would ensue, and, in addition to the countries now affected, the areas occupied by the objection to the above explanation count, with the enormous quantities of salts at present in solution. An object on to the above explanation is the invisibility of the lunar rays when the sun's altitude is low (according to W. H. Pickering under 5 degrees or 10 degrees), which has been regarded by some as indicating physical change of material. This invisibility, however, may be explained on the ground that there is little or nothing except their aldebo (intrinsic whiteness) to notify the presence of the rays, and that a fair amount of illumination is required to produce a contrast between the white material of which they are composed and the surrounding country."—Literary Digest.

THE CENTER OF OUR POPULATION.

Its Migration Westward Has Been Slow and Uniform.

The center of population in 1900 was in the state of Indiana. In 1709 the center was twenty-three miles east of Baltimore, in the state of Maryland, or virtually on the Atlantic shore line.

Its migration has been slow and remarkably uniform, both in rate and in direction. It has hovered for 110 years along the 39th parallel of latitude, and its total variation in latitude has been less than one-third of one degree.

The westward movement has everaged less than a degree in a decade, notwithstanding the incredibly swift occupation of a vacant continent by a movement of population westward. The easterly position of the center of population is in a part due to the fact that the eastern part of the continent was first settled and was settled from the east. The easterly position of the center of population is also due to the more evenly distributed and more abundant resources of the eastern half of the United States.

It should not be forgotten that the geographical center of the United States lies some hundreds of miles west of the Mississippi river. The eastern half of the country, therefore, embraces the Atlantic lowlands, the prairies and the forests and minerals of the Appalachian mountains and Appalachian plateaux. Over against these are the arid and mountainous areas of the west.

Certain areas will be reclaimed to incredible productiveness and the mineral wealth is vast; but the center of population may be expected to remain permanently to the eastward of the geographical center of the land.—Geographical Journal.

FOR RENT.—The Rectory on Alder street; house contains 14 rooms; stable and other outbuildings on the property. Apply to BOWIE JOHNSON, Oakland. 3t

W. H. RAVENSCRAFT, M.D., PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON, OAKLAND, MD. Residence on North Third street. Office in McComas Building.

DR. J. E. LEGGE, PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON, Offers his Services to the citizens of Oakland and vicinity. Office in McComas Building, Second street

DR. R. F. BARTLETT, DENTIST. Office in McComas Building, Second street, Oakland, Md. Special attention given to bridge and crown work.

DR. J. G. ROBINSON, DENTIST, OAKLAND MD. Office at residence on Liberty street. GAS ADMINISTERED.

NORMAN S. HEINDELL, ATTORNEY-AT-LAW, All business given prompt attention. Office—First National Bank Building. KLAND, MARYLAND.

GILMOR S. HAMILL, ATTORNEY-AT-LAW AND SOLICITOR IN CHANCERY, Office in Garrett National Bank Building Particular attention given to Conveyancing investigation of land titles and collection of claims. Loans negotiated.

EDWARD H. SINCELL, ATTORNEY-AT-LAW, OAKLAND, MARYLAND, Will practice in the Courts of Garrett and Allegany counties, the Court of Appeals of Maryland, and the adjoining counties of West Virginia.

Baltimore & Ohio R. R.
Schedule effective June 2, 1907.
OAKLAND.

* Daily. † Daily except Sunday. § Sunday only.

For WASHINGTON, BALTIMORE, PHILADELPHIA & NEW YORK, Depart *12.27 a. m., *6.31 a. m., *4.17 p. m., *8.29 p. m., Arrive *7.12 a. m., *3.53 p. m., *10.26 p. m., *11.54 p. m.
For CUMBERLAND and Way Points, Depart *10.00 a. m., †4.40 p. m. Arrive *9.26 a. m., *7.26 p. m.
For COLUMBUS & CHICAGO, Depart *11.54 p. m. Arrive *6.07 a. m., *4.17 p. m.
For GRAFTON (Accom.), Depart *9.26 a. m., *7.26 p. m. Arrive *10.00 a. m., *4.40 p. m.
For FAIRMONT and WHEELING, Depart *9.26 a. m., (local), *3.53 p. m., *11.54 p. m. Arrive *6.07 a. m., *4.17 p. m., *12.25 night.
For FAIRMONT (Accom.), Depart *7.26 p. m Arrive *10.00 a. m.
For CINCINNATI, LOUISVILLE and ST. LOUIS, Depart *7.12 a. m., *3.53 p. m., *10.26 p. m. Arrive *12.27 a. m., *6.31 a. m., *8.29 p. m.

FOR SALE.

We will sell at private sale at our farms between Mt. Lake Park and Oakland,

1 Gasoline Engine,

8 horse-power, made by the International Harvester Co. Almost new and in perfect running order. Will be sold for $275.

1 Hay Bailer,

operated by horse-power. Makes standard size bales.

For further information call on or write to THE H. WEBER & SONS CO., Oakland, Md.

Oakland Pharmacy

JOS. E. HARNED, Proprietor.

Drugs, Chemicals, Stationery, Cigars

Cameras and Photo Supplies

Land for Sale.

We have for sale the following valuable tracts of land:

One Military Lot of 50 acres, a small portion of which is under cultivation. All good land, and every acre tillable. Watered by several good springs and a never failing small run. Contains some good timber. One-half mile from R. R. siding, and one and one-half miles from Oakland.

Also part of two Military Lots containing about 50 acres. This property is directly East of Oakland, on the South side of the B. & O. R. R. siding on the North side of tracks. Contains valuable grazing land, a portion of which is in cultivation. Valuable R. R. frontage.

Also 10 acres suitable for building sites, just East of Oakland on the North side of the Oakland and Mt. Lake Park road.

For further information, address THE H. WEBER & SONS CO., Oakland, Md.
6-tf

A Hint to the Wise Is Sufficient.

Special Sale on
2-qt Blue Enamel Saucepan.
2-qt Blue Fnamel Pudding Pans.
2-qt Blue Enamel Preserve Kettles.

We have just received over 1500 lbs. of our famous 10c Candy.

SUNDAY SCHOOL SUPPLIES.

TAKE our advice—buy now, don't wait, but come and see

THE Little Man

and you will save money on all your Holiday Goods,

Toys, Candies, Novelties, Fancy Goods.

Baumgartner.

CAPITAL $25,000.00

The First National Bank
Of Grantsville, Md.

Safe deposit vault boxes for rent.

SURPLUS $12,500.00

The Savings Department takes care of your money when waiting other investment. The money earns interest from the day it is deposited. It can be withdrawn at any time.

Its Advantages

Any amount from One Dollar up can be deposited, and interest added to principal twice a year. Pass books are issued to every depositor

We Pay 3 Per Cent. Interest. Open Daily except Sundays and Holidays, 9 a. m. to 4 p. m.

OFFICERS.
C. H. JENNINGS, - - President
U. M. STANTON, - Vice-President
J. O. GETTY, - - Cashier
DIRECTORS.
C. H. Jennings, U. M. Stanton,
G. C. Keller, Eli Stanton,
W. A. Hitchins, Frank Watts,
J. O. Getty.

A. D. NAYLOR & COMP'Y

You can buy at Reduced Prices
Grain Drills, Harrows and Plows
AT NAYLOR & CO.'S

Big Stock to select from.

Have the Farmer's Favorite Drills, the Thomas, the Superior Hoe and Disc Drills.

We have the Syracuse, the Imperial and the Wyard Plows. Also the wood frame Harrows, the wheel and lever Harrows; also the Disc Harrow, all at reduced prices.

We also have a nice line of Spray Pumps.

Muco-Solvent

is an indispensible household remedy because it is a preventive as well as a cure, and because it arrests development of all contageous germs and bacterial diseases. It cures croup, colds, tonsilitis with its associated ills and all inflamed and catarrhal conditions of the mucous surface. It is a harmless vegetable preparation that may safely be administered to the tenderest babe. If not for sale in your neighborhood, write to

THE PIEDMONT SUPPLY CO.,
Sole Agents for Muco-Solvent. Piedmont, W. Va.

Real Estate Bargains

I offer for sale

FARM OF 147 ACRES, 3 miles from Oakland; good 6-room House; plenty of water; over 50 acres cleared; about 25 acres of grass; 2 Orchards, bearing; over 75 acres of White Oak Timber; R. F. D. mail service.

COTTAGE OF 6 ROOMS for sale at Mt. Lake Park.

HOUSE AND LOT on Oak Street, Oakland, for sale or rent. House of 6 rooms—Lot 50x150 feet, with Stable and all necessary Outbuildings.

FOUR VERY DESIRABLE BUILDING LOTS situated on Liberty Street, in Oakland. Also 3 DWELLING HOUSES on Liberty Street, with good water and all necessary outbuildings.

HOUSE AND LOT on Wilson Street. House of 10 rooms; good water. Lot 150 feet front. Best Outbuildings in Oakland.

A VERY GOOD FARM 1 mile from Oakland—all under fence; containing 32 acres; about 25 under cultivation; 2 fine Orchards, and about 2½ acres in small Fruit; 2 Houses, a very good Well and a never failing Spring. A very desirable place for Truck and Poultry Farming. Can be bought at a low price just now.

I have for sale 18 of the very best Building Lots in the town which I will sell for cash—or $5 down and $5 per month.

150 ACRES OF VALUABLE COAL LAND situated less than two miles of Oakland which can be bought at a great bargain. The surface would make fine farming land. This land is well watered with a stream and several good springs.

12 MORE CHOICE BUILDING LOTS at $5 down and $5 per month.

If you want cash for your Real Estate, or Real Estate for your cash, let me hear from you.

☞For further particulars call on or address

James A. Sincell, Real Estate Agt and Surveyor
Sincell Building, OAKLAND MD

SINCELL'S | SINCELL'S

IT will be a pleasure to make your Xmas purchases at SINCELL'S, where you will find everything in the line of useful presents. We have made the most careful selection of Xmas Stock this season and sure we can fill your wants in anything.

SILVERWARE	WOMEN'S TOGS	MEN'S TOGS
Manicure Sets	Neckwear	Neckwear
Toilet Sets	Handkerchiefs	Shirts
Hair Brushes	Mufflers	Hose
Cloth Brushes	Furs	Suspenders
Tooth Brushes	Fur Sets	Kid Gloves
Nail Brushes	Umbrellas	Handkerchiefs
Hair Receiver	Kid Gloves	Mufflers
Shaving Sets	Embroid'd Hose	Hats
Shaving Mirrors	Silk Hose	Cuff Links
Hand Mirrors	Underwear	Collars, Cuffs

We are ready to show you the most attractlve assortment of Clothig, Shoes, Hats, Trunks and Traveling Bags, Rain Coats, Smoking Jackets, Bath Robes, and Underwear we have ever had the pleasure of placing before our customers. Will have extra help for the Xmas trade so everyone will be well cared for. Always plecsed to see you. Wishing you a Joyful Xmas.

Any Women's or Children's Winter Coats One-Third Off.

H. C. SINCEL & CO., Oakland, Md.

TOYS TOYS

EVERYBODY handles Toys; but if you wish to see a complete line of Toys call at the Gold Mine Store. We have everything in the Toy line. Come early and you can get your choice before the stock has picked over. We give you this notice so you can't blame us if some things are sold before you come. We have the only Toy Store in Oakland and can give you a better Toy for your money than you can get elsewhere.

Truly yours,

Geo. M. Mason

A Christmas Sleigh Ride.

By FRANK H. SWEET.

Copyright, 1907, by Frank H. Sweet.

THEY started from the old farm gate,
The happiest boys alive,
With Rob, the roan, and Rust, his mate,
And Uncle Jack to drive.
The snow was packed that Christmas time,
The moon was round and clear,
And when the bells began to chime
They all began to cheer.
Chime, chime, chime, chime—such a merry load
Sleighing in the moonlight along the river road!

They passed the lonely cider mill
That's falling all apart.
The hermit heard them on the hill;
It warmed his frozen heart.
They cheered at every farmhouse gray,
With window panes aglow.
Within, the farmer's wife would say,
"Well, well, I want to know!"
Chime, chime, chime, chime—such a noisy load
Speeding by the homesteads along the river road!

"BOYS WILL BE BOYS."

The river shone an icy sheet
As o'er the bridge they flew.
Then down the quiet village street
Their Christmas horns they blew.
The sober people smiled and said,
"We'll have to give them leave—
Boys will be boys—to make a noise,
Because it's Christmas eve!"
Chime, chime, chime, chime—such a lively load
Scattering songs and laughter along the river road!

But now it's growing hard to keep Awake, and now it seems
The very bells have gone to sleep
And jingle in their dreams.
Then lane at last, the farm gate creaks,
And grandma cries: "It's Jack!
Why, what a peck of apple cheeks
These boys have brought us back!"
Chime, chime, chime, chime—such a hungry load,
Rosy from the Christmas ride along the river road!

"IT'S JACK!"

An Announcement Analyzed.

"You say you wouldn't marry the best man alive," said Miss Cayenne.

"That was my remark," replied the girl who is needlessly emphatic.

"You are quite right. If by any chance you should meet the best man alive and by any future chance should acquire an option on his affections"—

"Well?"

"It would be a pity to run the risk of spoiling his disposition."—Washington Star.

There Were Others.

"And is there no hope for me?" dejectedly asked the rejected suitor.

"Oh, of course there is hope for you!" replied the fair girl. "There are surely lots of girls in the world who are not as particular as I am."—Minneapolis Journal.

Proper Enough.

Tom—Here! You've started your note to Burroughs "Dr. Sir." Don't you know that sort of abbreviation is very slovenly?

Dick—No, sir. "Dr." is all right in this case. He owes me money.—Philadelphia Press.

He'd Been Up.

She—Then you've been up in the air?

He—Oh, yes.

"Balloon or airship?"

"Neither. I was struck by an automobile."—Yonkers Statesman.

His Turn Coming.

"You know Sharpe, the attorney, got rich breaking wills."

"Yes."

"And now keeps worrying about how his heirs will fight over his money."—Kansas City Times.

Discovered.

"We have been hearing a great deal about the superman, but is there any such thing as a superwoman?"

"Yes. She is the lady who doesn't get off the car backward."—Chicago

SUFFRAGE DISCUSSED BY PRESIDENT-ELECT TAFT.

He Holds That Equal Privileges Should Prevail at the Ballot Box.

President-elect Taft was the guest of honor at the annual dinner of the North Carolina Society held Monday night. He made a stirring speech urging a closer union between the North and the South and defining his policy as one of sympathy and interest.

After paying tribute to North Carolina, which he said, presented an admirable type of present condition in the South, the public spirit of its citizens, progress of its industries and the charming companionship which the Northerner always found there, Judge Taft pointed out that the laws were made for the North and South and the functions of the Government extends from the Canadian border to the Gulf of Mexico, Then he led up to this question:

"What is it that sets the South apart and takes from the Southern people the responsibilities which the members of a republic ought to share in respect to the conduct of the national Government?"

He continued:

"Why is it that what is done at Washington seems to be the work of the North and the West, and not of the South? Should this state of affairs continue? These are the questions that force themseles on those of us concerned with the Government and who are most anxious to have a solid, united country of whose will the course of the Government shall be an intelligent interpretation and expression.

"We can answer these questions as the historian would, and we can explain the situation as it is, but I don't think we can justify or excuse a continuance of it. Looking back into the past, of course, the explanation of the differences between the South and the other two sections was in the institution of slavery. It is of no purpose to point out that early in the history of the country the North was as responsible for bringing slaves here as the South, because we are not concerned with whose fault it was that there was such an institution as slavery.

"Nor are we concerned with the probability that, had the Northerners been interested in slaves, they would have viewed the institution exactly as the Southerners viewed it, and would have fought to defend it because as sacred as the institution of private property itself. It doesn't help in the slightest degree in the present day to stir up the embers of the controversy of the past by attempting to fix blame on one part of the country or the other in respect to an institution which has gone and happily gone, on the one hand, or in respect to the consequences of that institution, which we still have with us, on the other. These consequences we are to recognize as a condition and a fact, and a problem for solution rather than as an occasion for crimination or recrimination with respect to whose fault they may involve.

"I am not going to rehearse the painful history of reconstruction or what followed it. I come at once to the present condition of things, stated from a contributional and political standpoint. And that is this: That in all Southern States it is possible, by election laws prescribing proper qualifications for the suffrage which square with the Fifteenth Amendment and which shall be equally administered as between the black and white races, to prevent entirely the possibility of a domination of Southern State, county or municipal governments by an ignorant electorate, white or black.

"It is further true that the sooner such laws, when adopted, and applied with exact equality and justice to the two races the better for the moral tone of the State and community concerned. Negroes should be given an opportunity equally with white, by education and thrift to meet the requirements of eligibility which the State Legislatures in their wisdom shall lay down in order to secure the same exercise of the electoral franchise. The negro should ask nothing other than an equal chance to qualify himself for the franchise, and when that is granted by law, and not denied by Legislative discrimination, he has nothing to complain of.

"The proposal to repeal the Fifteenth Amendment is utterly impracticable and should be relegated to the limits of forgotten issues. What we are considering is something practical, something that means attainable progress, it seems to me to follow, therefore, that there is or ought to be, a common ground upon which we can all stand in respect to the race question in the South and has political bearing that takes away any justification for maintaining the continued solidity of the South to prevent the so-called negro domination.

"The fear that, in some way or other, a social equality between the races shall be enforced by law or brought about by political measures really has no foundation except in the imagination of those who fear such a result. The Federal Government has nothing to do with social equality. The war amendments do not declare in favor of social equality; all that the law or Constitution attempts to secure is equality of opportunity before the law and in the enjoyment of life, liberty and prosperity. Social equality is something that grows out of voluntary concessions of the individuals forming society.

"With the elimination of the race question can we say that there are removed all the reasons why the people of the South are reluctant to give up their political solidarity and divide themselves on party lines in accordance with their economic and political views? No, there are other reasons, perhaps only reasons of sentiment, but with the Southern people, who are high-strung, sensitive and outspoken people, consideration of sentiment are frequently quite as strong as those of some political or economic character.

"In the first place it is now nearly 40 years since the South acquired its political solidarity and the intensity of feeling by which it was maintained, and the ostracism and social proscription imposed on those white Southerners who will not sympathize with the necessity for such solidarity could not but make lasting impression and create a permanent bias that would naturally outlast the reason for its original existence."

Mr. Taft referred to the trials of the Reconstruction period which accentuated the greater trials of the past, and the slow return of prosperity to the South following the civil strife, as further agencies that helped to keep alive the feeling engendered by that controversy, and continued:

"But times change and men change with them in any community, however fixed its thoughts or habits, and many circumstances have blessed us with their influence in this matter. The growth of the South since 1880 has been marvelous. The manufacturing capital in 1880 was $250,000,000; in 1890, $650,000,000; in 1900, $1,100,000,000, and in 1908, $2,100,000,000; while the value of the manufactures increased from $450,000,000 in 1880 to $900,000,000 in 1890 to $2,450,000,000 in 1900 and $2,600,000,000 in 1908. The farm products in 1880 were $660,000,000; in 1890, $770,000,000; in 1900, $1,270,000,000, and in 1908, $2,200,000,000. The exports from the South in 1880 were $260,000,000; in 1890, $306,000,000; in 1900, $494,000,000, and in 1908, $648,000,000.

"In this marvelous growth the manufactures of the South now exceed the agricultural products, and thus a complete change has come over the character of her industries. The South has become rich, and only the surface of her wealth has been scratched. Her growth has exceeded that of the rest of the country and she is now in every way sharing its prosperity.

"Again, the Democratic party has not preserved inviolate its traditional doctrines as to State's rights and other issues, and has for the time adopted new doctrines of possibly doubtful economic truth and wisdom. Southern men adhering to the party and the name, find themselves, through the influence of tradition and the fear of a restoration of conditions which are now impossible, supporting a platform and candidate whose political and economic theories they distrust. Under these conditions there was in the last campaign, and there is throughout the South, among many of its most intelligent citizens, an impatience, a nervousness and a restlessness in voting for one ticket and rejoicing in the success of another.

"Now I am not one of those who are disposed to criticise or emphasize the inconsistency of the position in which these gentlemen find themselves. I believe it would be wiser if all who sympathized with one party and its principles were to vote its ticket, but I can readily understand the weight and inertia of the tradition and the social considerations the make them hesitate.

"I believe that the movement away from political solidarity has started, and ought to be encouraged, and I think one way to encourage it is to have the South understand that the attitude of the North and the Republican party toward it is not of hostility or criticism or opposition, political or otherwise; that they believe in the maintainance of the Fifteenth Amendment, but that as already explained, they do not deem that amendment as inconsistent with the South's obtaining and maintaining what it regards as its political safety from domination of an ignorant electorate; that the North yearns for a closer association with the South; that the citizens deprecate that reserve on the subject of politics which so long has been maintained in the otherwise delightful social relations between Southerners and Northerners as they are more and more frequently thrown together.

"In welcoming to a change of party affiliation many Southerners who have been Democrats we are brought face to face with a delicate situation, which we can only meet with frankness and justice.

"In our anxiety to bring the Democratic Southerner into new political relations we should have, and can have, no desire to pass by or ignore the comparatively few white Southerners who, from principle, have consistently stood for our views in the South when it cost them social ostracism and a loss of all prestige. Nor can we sympathize with an effort to exclude from the support of Republicanism in the South or to read out of the party those colored voters who by their education and thrift have made themselves eligible to exercise the electoral franchise.

"We believe that the solution of the race problem in the South is largely a matter of industrial and thorough education. Some Southerners who have given expression to their thoughts seem to think that the only solution of the negro question is his migration back to Africa, but to me such a proposition is utterly fatuous.

"The negro is essential to the South in order that it may have proper labor. Their ancestors were brought here against their will. They have no country but this. They know no flag but ours. They wish to live under it and are willing to die for it. They are Americans. The proposition to increase the supply of labor in the South by emigration from Europe, it seems to me, instead of being inimical to the cause of the negro will aid him. As the industries of the South continue to grow in the marvelous ratio already shown, the demand for labor must increase.

"Primary and industrial education for the masses, higher education for the leaders of the negro race, for their professional men, their clergymen, their physicians, their lawyers and their teachers will make up a system under which their improvement, which statistics show to have been most noteworthy in the last 40 years, will continue at the same rate.

"On the whole, then, the best public opinion of the North and the best public opinion of the South seems to be coming together in respect to all the economic and political questions growing out of present race conditions.

"The recent election has made it probable that I shall become more or less responsible for the policy of the next Presidential administration, and I improve this opportunity to say that nothing would give me greater pride, because nothing would give me more claim to the gratitude of my fellow-citizens. If I could so direct that policy in respect to the Southern States as to convince its intelligent citizens of the desire of the Administration to aid them in working out satisfactorily the serious problems before them, and of bringing them and their Northern fellow-citizens closer and closer in sympathy and point of view.

"During the last decade in common with all lovers of our country, I have watched with delight and thanksgiving the bond of union between the two sections growing firmer. I pray that it may be given to me to strengthen this movement, to obliterate all sectional lines and leave nothing of differences between the North and the South save friendly emulation for the benefit of our common country."

EXTRAVAGANCE IN THE MARYLAND LEGISLATURE

Senator Harper Submits Plan to Reduce Expenses of Assembly.

Senator Harper, of Queen Anne county, chairman of the commission appointed by Governor Crothers to submit a plan to reduce legislative expenses, has made the following recommendations:

That the employes of the Senate be limited to 33 and of the House to 46.

That employes be selected in open session by elections or on order.

That they be required to report each day to the Secretary of the Senate and Chief Clerk of the House, and receive $5 for each day's attendance unless excused.

That committees composed of the leading officers of each house examine and pass upon the qualifications of each engrossing clerk.

That the first week of each session should not be lost by adjournment.

That each bill be called for after it has been unreported in committee for eight days.

That the State Librarian keep separate accounts with each member as to the issue of supplies of stationery and other articles.

That the system of engrossing be changed in order to expedite business.

That the work of cleaning the State House during the sessions of the legislature be awarded by contract after competitive bids.

That a legislative lawyer be employed to see that bills are in proper legal form.

Senator Harper estimates that his plan of selection of legislative employes will result in a saving of more than $50,000 in that part of the legislative expenses as compared with previous sessions.

TOYS! TOYS! TOYS!

Everybody Handles Toys.

But if you wish to see a complete line of Toys call at the Gold Mine Store. We have everything in the Toy line. Come early and you can get your choice before the stock has been picked over. We give you this notice so you can't blame us if some things are sold before you come. We have the only Toy Store in Oakland and can give you a better Toy for your money than you can get elsewhere. Truly yours,

GEO. M. MASON.

FOR SALE—A National Cash Register. Offutt & Renninger.

Take me out to the Gold Mine.

THE REPUBLICAN.

VOLUME 32. OAKLAND, MARYLAND, THURSDAY, DECEMBER 24, 1908. NUMBER 43

THE MURDER TRIALS HAVE BEEN CONCLUDED

Jury Found Foreigners Guilty of Second Degree Murder and Manslaughter.

Last Thursday morning just as THE REPUBLICAN was going to press the jury before whom John Adam and Nick Brazika, indicted by the grand jury at the present term of the Circuit Court for having murdered Tony Listic at Dodson, this county, in a drunken brawl which took place at that town on the night of July 4th, was being empanneled. Sheriff Brown summoned thirty talismen and later was instructed by the Court to summon an additional number, as many of those first summoned were challenged by either the State or defense.

The jury was completed in the afternoon with Mr. Patrick Hoye, of near Frostburg, as foreman. He had as his associates the following named gentlemen: A. D. Naylor, Luther J. Brown, Alex. C. Mason, Hopwood Kildow, W. D. Dixon, Christian Martin, Wade H. Hinebaugh and John T. Browning, all of Oakland; William Miller, of Accident; Robert Lathrum, of near Grantsville, and M. L. Titchenell, of near Bloomington. The attorneys in the case made their statements before court adjourned Thursday and on the following morning the testimony of witnesses was taken up.

The State produced a strong chain of circumstantial evidence which was not materially broken by the defense in which Brazika was shown to have struck Listic in the head with a shovel and that Adam was more or less implicated in the murder.

Both the traversers were placed on the stand in their own defense and admitted having been at Listic's house on the night of the murder but were not concerned in it.

In all more than thirty witnesses were examined, the majority being Austrians and an interpreter was necessary to repeat the questions to the witnesses and then interpret their answers, making the trial a long and tedious one.

The testimony was completed Saturday afternoon and at night the case was completed with the arguments of Mr. G. S. Hamill for the defense, Mr. Julius C. Renninger, State's Attorney, closing. The jury retired after having been charged by Judge Henderson. A number of ballots were taken, the verdict being arrived at shortly before seven o'clock Sunday morning, when Judge Henderson was notified and repaired to the court chamber where he received the verdict of the jury, which found Brazika guilty of murder in the second degree and Adam guilty of manslaughter.

Yesterday morning when court convened Judge Henderson sentenced the two men to the Maryland Penitentiary, Brazika getting eight years and Adam eighteen months.

The second murder case was taken up Monday morning before Judge Henderson, it being that of George Warnick and Lester Warnick, father and son, indicted for the murder of Ashford T. Broadwater, which took place at Bond Junction sometime during the month of September, when the parties were returning to their homes from Oakland where they had been litigants in a case tried before one of the Justices of the Peace here. The evidence showed that the parties to the crime were more or less under the influence of liquor and that a fight took place when Lester Warnick, to protect his father from an assault made upon him by Broadwater, struck Broadwater in the face with his fist and knocked him down. In falling Broadwater's head come in contact with a post which produced a fracture of the skull, his death ensuing the following day at a Cumberland hospital, where the injured man had been taken for surgical treatment. The Court as a jury found George Warnick not guilty and rendered a verdict of manslaughter against Lester Broadwater.

Yesterday morning Judge Henderson suspended sentence on Lester Warnick for the term of three years from December 23rd, stipulating that during the time he is to pay Mrs. Broadwater, the dead man's widow, the sum of $20 per month and is to report to the Court twice each year. Warnick was also held under $1000 bond.

Tuesday William Warnick, a brother of Lester, was placed on trial for shooting Emma Warnick through the hand. The case was concluded just prior to adjournment Tuesday afternoon and yesterday when Judge Henderson called the traverser to pronounce the verdict he failed to appear, having left town on an early morning train. He was under $1000 bond for his appearance and this was forfeited. His father was his bondsman.

Court adjourned yesterday afternoon after an agreement had been entered into between the attorneys to continue all civil cases until the March Term, hence there will be no need for principals or witnesses in civil cases to report after the holidays as had been arranged. It was conceded that to bring the jury back after the holidays would result in large additional expense upon the county and as the term had been a costly one it appeared to be the universal desire of all concerned to save the county this additional outlay.

Judge Henderson will return to Oakland on Tuesday morning next when he will dispose of the three untried cases yet appearing on the criminal docket.

Farm for Sale

Located ½ mile east of Mt. Lake and 2 from Oakland. 100 acres, rich soil, 60 acres in grass, balance good timber; house, barn, plenty of water. Apply to Jos. FAY, Deer Park. 2t

SIGNED WITH PORTSMOUTH (OHIO) BASE BALL TEAM

One of Oakland's Young Men Will Try His Skill in Other States.

Carl Brown, second son of Sheriff and Mrs. Austin Brown, who has gained considerable local notoriety during the past two or three years as a base ball player, his favorite position being that of pitcher, has signed a contract with the Portsmouth, Ohio, base ball team for the coming year at a remarkably good salary and expenses, taking his position about March 1st of next year, when he will go to Porthmouth to engage in the trying-out preliminaries.

The contract with the Portsmouth manager was signed one day last week by Mr. Brown, the salary stipulated in the contract being $100 per month in additional to all expenses while traveling.

Young Brown has played with the Oakland team and other clubs in nearby towns for the past two or three seasons and always made good. His work was noticed by a semi-professional player last summer who interested himself in securing the positions for Brown with the Portsmouth team.

Subscribe for the Republican.

TRAGEDY ON YOUGH RIVER WAS NARROWLY AVERTED

When a Party of Skaters at Friendsville Broke Through the Ice.

Last Monday night at Friendsville a tradegy was narrowly averted when a party of young people broke through the ice covering the Big Yough at that place, one of the young ladies being rescued after she had gone down the second time by Harry Custer, who was attracted to the spot by the cries for help.

Those composing the skating party were Misses Iva McCullough and Elizabeth Welch and Messrs. Charles Yeast, Charles Collier, William Friend and Stanley Friend. At the point where the ice gave way the water is extremely deep and the entire crowd with two exceptions were precipitated into the water, all of whom succeeded in getting out unaided but Miss Welch, whose frantic efforts to reach a firm foothold soon exhausted her and she had sunk for the second time when the timely arrival and quick action of young Custer saved her life. Although when rescued Miss Welch was unconscious she was soon revived and aside from the shock to her nervous system has entirely recovered from her harrowing experience.

The First Christmas

Why Were the Wise Men Three?

"Why were the Wise Men three, ... Thus in their hands were seen ... God sent them for a sign ...
They had to match, you see, The myrrh of Truth all clean, His good and fair design.
The archangels in Heaven. The frankincense of Duty. However man may falter.

God sent them, sure and swift, And thus they bore away ... Which would mark and reach
By His manifest message, The loving heart's great treasure, ... be heart of man's election
To bear the threefold gift And knowledge clear as day, Must still believe and teach
And take the threefold message. To be our life's new measure. The triplicate perfection.

From "The Wise Men from the East," by Bliss Carman.

ENGINE RAN AWAY

And Left Rails on a Curve, Injuring Fireman Campbell.

Monday afternoon one of the engines used on the narrow gauge railway leading from Kendall to Swallow Falls in this county, ran away after the break holding it had broken and at a sharp curve left the track, going over an embankment and reducing the machine to scrap iron catching Fireman Walter Campbell under the debris and the escaping steam from the boiler literally cooking his leg from the knee to his ankle.

The point where the accident took place was at or near Hoye's Run, where a heavy grade exists. The engine was running light with Engineer Benjamin Campbell and his brother Walter as fireman and Brakeman Walter Friend aboard. At the top of the grade the brake was set and when partly down the incline the chain broke, allowing the engine to run free. Midway down the grade Engineer Campbell and Brakeman friend jumped and thus saved themselves from serious and probably fatal injuries. The fireman was not so fortunate however, as he had no opportunity to leave the swiftly moving engine but clambered upon the tender from which point he was thrown when the engine left the track and falling under the wreck he was pinned down and held while the steam from the boiler rolled out over him. As soon as possible he was released and taken to a near-by house where he was attended by Dr. John E. Legge, who had been summoned by telephone. His injuries were dressed later and he was sent to his home at Kendall where he is being attended by Dr. Mason, of Friendsville.

THOMAS C. NOYES FOR CONGRESS

Montgomery Countian Will Enter Lists.

A Rockville special to the Baltimore Sun of Sunday says:

"Montgomery county Republicans and others are much interested in the announcement that there is a possibility that Mr. Thomas C. Noyes, of Wheaton district, will be a candidate for the Republican nomination for Congress in this district in 1910. Mr. Noyes is being importuned by influential friends in the county and district to allow the use of his name in that connection, and it is said to be probable that he will consent.

"Mr. Noyes has had experience in politics is an organizer and hustler and is recognized as one of the county's most popular Republicans. His friends believe he would experience little difficulty in getting the endorsement of his county should he decide to seek the nomination.

Mr. Brainard H. Warner, of Kensington, who last summer made an unsuccessful fight for the nomination but who carried this county in the primaries, will again seek the honor. He and Mr. Noyes are warm personal friends, and should the two lock horns over the nomination a contest on a high plane will be assured, although it would be sure to be lively.

"Preliminary to the Congressional contest will be the fight next spring for the control of the county organization. Mr. Willis B. Burdette of Rockville, will be the candidate of the present organization for chairman of the county committee, the present chairman, Mr. Mortimer O. Stabler, declining to stand for re-election. Mr. Burdette has twice served as county chairman, and is now a member of the state central committee for the county. He and his friends are for Mr. Noyes for the Congressional nomination.

"It is understood that Mr. Brainard H. Warner, Jr., will also be a candidate for county chairman. If he gets in the fight he will be supported by those who want his father for the Congressional nominee, so the fight next spring promises to be really a test of strength between the elder Mr. Warner and Mr. Noyes."

In this connection it might be added that the Washington Star of yesterday, of which Mr. Noyes is one of the owners and editors, publishes a dispatch from Rockville, stating that Mr. Noyes may seek the congressional nomination. The publication of the item is looked upon as an indication that Mr. Noyes will be in the fight.

List of Letters.

Mr. J. A. Enlow, Edward Dougherty, Miss Maggie Dumire, Mr. Lem Reed, Mrs. Mary F. Sebold, John W. Smith, Samuel Trott, Miss Anna Welch, J. W. White.

HORSE FOUND DEAD AND VEHICLE DAMAGED

Mystery Surrounding Disappearance of Animal Has Been Solved.

The mystery surrounding the disappearance from Mountain Lake Park of the horse and runabout belonging to Mr. C. F. Hammond, of Oakland, upwards of three weeks ago, was solved on Saturday afternoon last when "Doc" Collins, out with his dog and gun in search of a stray rabbit, ran upon the remains of the horse with the vehicle still attached to it, in the woods back of the M. M. Ashby place on the Hoopole Road, a mile and a half from Oakland.

The horse had evidently been driven from the Park over the Hoopole road to a lane leading west from the road running between the Ashby and Nicholas Merrill farm and there turned loose. The horse followed the lane to the top of the Hall hill when it left the defined path and wondered into the woods where the vehicle became entangled in some small growth of timber and a large stump standing in front of the spot where the horse was found prevented it from going in either direction, thus virtually holding it prisoner until it died of thirst and starvation, as every indication pointed to the fact that the animal had been there a number of days before death overtook it.

When the discovery was made the vehicle was intact with the exception of the shafts, both of which were broken, this occurring when the animal fell in its death struggles. The harness was also in good condition, while the whip, lap robes and seat cushion were in their proper places, the latter showing signs of having been run over by the wheels of the vehicle and then replaced.

WATCHMAN SAVED TRAIN

Forethought of John Laffey Prevented Horrible Wreck.

One day last week John Laffey, a watchman on the Seventeen-mile Grade, his station being at Hitchcock Tunnel, saved passenger train No. 14 from being wrecked by his forethought and quick action.

Shortly before the train was due at Hitchcock Mr. Laffey discovered a slide of earth which came down upon the track from the mountain above, completely blocking the rails and piling high over the ties east of the tunnel. Fearing to run through the tunnel to the west end to flag the train he ran around the point of the mountain and notified the watchman there to hold the train which was then in sight, thus preventing a serious and probably fatal wreck.

DIXON & KELSO

DIXON & KELSO will offer their Customers the following PRICES FOR THE HOLIDAY BUSINESS, either cash or trade

Arbuckles Coffee, lb	15c
Loose Roasted Coffee, lb	12½c
French Mixed Candy, lb	7c
" " " 4 lbs	25c
½ Ton Strictly Pure Candy, lb	9c
Good Chocolate Candy, lb	15c
Daisy Mixed Nuts, lb	12½c
English Walnuts, lb	15c
Big Sweet Oranges, doz	20c
Big Sour Lemons, doz	20c
Large loose Raisins, lb	8c
1-lb pkg Seeded Raisins, (not 12 oz pkg)	10c
1-lb pkg cleaned Currants, (not 12 oz to pkg)	10c
Bakers, Rockwood or Hershey Chocolate, cake	19c
7 bars Lenox Soap	25c
10 bars good Laundry Soap	25c
2-lb pkg Premier Oats	9c
1-lb box Rumford Bak'g Powder	25c
Best grade Citron, lb	20c
Peanuts, qt	5c
Grain Pepper, lb	12½c
Big Cocoanut with quart milk	5c

Our Stock of HOLIDAY GOODS

Suitable for Presents never was as large have—

DOLLS
CHRISTMAS TREE ORNAMENTS
LADIES' COLLARS
MUFFLERS
FANCY SHIRTS
WAIST PATTERNS
ROCKERS
SLEDS
BOOKS
TOILET SETS
FANCY SUSPEND'RS
NECKWEAR
LAMPS

and a great many other things both useful and ornamental.

Have more Flour than all the other stores in Oakland put together, to sell at 70c to 80c a sack.

Yours to Please. DIXON & KELSO.

E. A. WEIMER.

GOOD THINGS FOR CHRISTMAS

When you spend your money for Gifts why not get something useful, such as a Hat, a pair of Shoes, Hosiery, Ties, Suspenders, Shirts, Handkerchiefs, Fancy Vests, Pajamas, Skirts, Umbrellas, Mufflers, Gloves, Cuff Buttons, Brooches, Pins, Etc. We have many of these articles in fancy boxes. Come and see before you buy.

Yours Truly. E. A. WEIMER.

NEXT DOOR TO THE POSTOFFICE OAKLAND, MD

KODAK SAFETY FILM

A Song for Christmas

CHANT me a rhyme of Christmas—
Sing me a jovial song—
And though it is filled with laughter,
Let it be pure and strong

Sing of the hearts brimmed over
With the story of the day—
Of the echo of childish voices
That will not die away.—

Of the blare of the tasseled bugle,
And the timeless clatter and beat
Of the drum that throbs to muster
Squadrons of scampering feet.

But, O, let your voice fall fainter,
Till, blent with a minor tone,
You temper your song with the beauty
Of the pity Christ hath shown,

And sing one verse for the voiceless;
And yet, ere the song be done,
A verse for the ears that hear not,
And a verse for the sightless one.

For though it be time for singing
A merry Christmas glee,
Let a low, sweet voice of pathos
Run through the melody.

JAMES WHITCOMB RILEY.

MISS DUPREE'S HOLIDAY JOY

She Recalls One Memorable Christmas Performance in the City of New Orleans.

WHENEVER possible, I prefer spending Christmas with my family out on Long Island, and unless my engagements take me too far away I always make it a point to be with them on that day.

There are times, however, in this profession when the wish must take second place to necessity, and from the viewpoint of actual novelty I suppose my most interesting Christmas was the one I spent in the southland. Our routing took us into New Orleans at Christmas, and to me, who had always up to that time spent the day in the colder north, the novelty of seeing trees in leaf and flowers blooming was as pleasing as it was unusual.

On Christmas afternoon, when others were home enjoying the big dinner with the family, I was getting ready for a special holiday matinee. I was not pleased with myself or with a profession that demanded of its members that they labor on Christmas day—above all others—and it was not with a particularly light heart that I dressed for my part.

But when the curtain went up on the first act and I made my entrance the welcome I received compensated for the disappointment I felt.

It was a special matinee arranged for the poor children of the poorest quarter of New Orleans, and the enjoyment of those childish auditors soon melted the disappointment out of my heart.

After the matinee I had arranged with my manager that I would receive the little folks on the stage, and the wise man in his knowledge of childish hearts sent out a hurry order for candy and other things that make Christmas a day of cheer to kiddies. At the conclusion of the last act the stage was cleared and I held the most unusual reception that I ever experienced.

Clean as pins, but with their little bodies clothed in many cases in garments ragged and frayed, they came up on the stage, were introduced and sent away after a handshake, each with a box of candy.

I have spent many other delightful and out-of-the-ordinary Christmases on the road, but none that afforded me more real satisfaction than the one in New Orleans.

MINNIE DUPREE.

MISS GEORGE'S CHRISTMAS

Happy Memory of a Season When She Did Not Write One Glad Holiday Story.

AH, my happiest Christmas! I did not then realize it, but I recall it now with a radiant glow of delight. It was my first season upon the stage. I was only a novice, one day soaring upon the buoyant wings of boundless ambition; the next plunged in an abysmal depth of doubt, despair and self-depreciation. It was a very tiny part that had fallen to me. The compensation was but sufficient for the barest necessities. The route bristled with all the horrors of the one-night stands.

At midnight, huddled, miserably worn, dejected, and wretched, in the waiting room of a country station, listening in vain for the whistle of a belated train, I confess to a sudden flood of tears. What a mockery this Christmas day had been. Even the chimes had sounded like the tolling of a funeral knell. The cheerless discomforts of a cheap hotel, the unsavory, slatternly served travesty upon a Christmas dinner, the cold chill of a shabby, musty dressing room, the added toil of an extra matinee for a mere handful of people, and now the hungry wait for an accommodation train of dingy day coaches.

That was all Christmas had meant to me. Iowa was blizzard swept. Mails were delayed and tangled wires hung useless in gathering snowdrifts. No message of cheer, no souvenir of remembrance, had come to any of us. Our hollow, half-hearted exchange of Christmas greeting had carried no conviction. We were only strolling vagabonds, outside the pale of sympathy, debarred from the domestic joys of living, mere dispirited rainbow chasers, with success ever mockingly elusive.

But as I recall it all now, I am submerged by a great wave of passionate, longing regret, for I know that such a Yuletide will never come to me again while I am upon the stage. It was my happiest Christmas, because the first and only one, since I began to tread the thorny and tortuous path of my profession, that I have not been called upon to write a Christmas story.

GRACE GEORGE.

Speak as you think: be what you are; pay your debts of all kinds.—Montfort.

WHAT a lot of things can happen between July and Christmas!" Kate said it to herself and said it aloud, so loudly that it startled her. For she was alone. Mother was off on an eleventh-hour and unsatisfactory wrestle with the Christmas shopping problem. Sis had chosen this gray afternoon to call on a chum home from college. So Kate had opportunity to make herself as miserable as she desired.

It was now six weeks since Jack had called—and six weeks is a long time when a man is 25 and a girl is 20, and each is very much interested in the other. Just how much Kate was interested was something unsuspected. Once Jack thought he knew, but now all he knew was that he did not know. When Jack suddenly disappeared from Kate's perspective no one noticed his absence from the picture. To most people Jack had seemed a part of Kate's social background. Some who had seen them together at Grand Traverse had advanced him to the middle distance. But of the foreground no one thought.

What happened in July was this:

The Wilsons were no more than firmly established in their cottage, which looks over Grand Traverse bay, than Jack appeared at the hotel, which looks over them both. That was not remarkable, for all had been members of that particular summer colony for years. Then, the day of the picnic on the Point, Jack and Kate found themselves sitting at the green fringe of the forest looking out over the blue expanse of the bay. A hundred yards in front of them Mrs. Wilson was gathering up the tablecloth and things.

There was a little sense of chill in the air—a harbinger of autumn. And there was a change in the atmosphere between the two. The girl's lips were tremulous. The man was agitated, and strangely tender and brutal in his speech.

"It will not interest you," he said, "but I am going down to-morrow."

"But why so tragic? We will be back in town in a week ourselves—and yet I do not feel so horribly blue about it."

"Well, things down there are different."

"Yes, they are different, but not unpleasant when you first get back to them. I shall miss the canna in front of your hotel; but I have no doubt the fall millinery on State street will be quite as gorgeous."

"You are clever, and, like most clever people, a little heartless. You know how things are different down there. The people are different—why, we are different ourselves. And it is just the difference of which you speak—the difference between these flowers and flowers of silk and satin, between those lilies out there and lily stems of wire and paper."

"You are a little unkind, Jack," she said, gently.

The soft reproof, more suggestive of tears than anger, brought the story to his very lips. He wondered how he should tell it. Then an old schoolboy trick came back to him. He brought out his penknife. Beside them was a little spruce and in the soft, flaky bark he carved a heart. Within its lines he dug deeply the initials of two people. The girl caught her breath and blushed a little, which are the proper and customary things for a girl to do at such a time.

Then he told her what was in his mind. It left her a little panic-stricken and she took the refuge her sisters always have taken—she asked him to wait for his answer.

In such a case there is but one thing for the man to do, and that is to wait—until to-morrow. But when a man is terribly in earnest he takes people seriously.

"When I see this carving of yours again then we will talk about this, Jack—if you still think this way."

She thought she was putting him on a most proper probation. It was only a woman's reluctance to give up her freedom.

But he took her at her word. Next day he went away.

Back in town again, at first he saw her often. His restraint she imagined was resentment. In November, a month of storms and dreary skies, they quarreled. That was six weeks ago.

All that six weeks he pondered the matter by lonely fires and over breakfasts late and bad. Then he resolved to end the suspense and still keep his word.

One day a young man, whom the natives were satisfied was most certainly insane, stepped off the train into a snowdrift. He wanted a team, a guide, a shovel and an ax. As he had money and determination he got them.

This crazy young man drove four miles and waded through two more.

Rang the Door Bell Violently.

On the Point, now bleak with winter, he stopped by a tiny spruce protruding from the snow and began digging as furiously as if he were hunting for buried treasure.

A half dozen little trees he uncovered. At last, with a boyish laugh, he laid the ax at the foot of one until the chips flew.

That night the crazy man who had come 300 miles for a Christmas tree started homeward again. Christmas eve the man and the Christmas tree mounted the steps of the Wilson residence and rang the door bell violently.

Well, what else could she do? That night they went out into the Christmas crowds together and bought the tinsel for the first Christmas tree Kate had had in years—and the very best.

(Copyright, 1908, by Wright A. Patterson.)

Christmas Sweets

WORSHIP AT CROSS OF ICE

Scattered Christian Tribes in Turkey Celebrate Christmas with Impressive Ceremonies.

MOHAMMEDISM is the prevailing religion in Turkey and for that reason only the few scattered Christian tribes observe the birthday of Christ in any manner. The Mohammedan Turks have but two holidays in the entire year, those being "Car Bon Biram," the day of forgiveness, which is the Mohammedan New Year, and "Bairam," the anniversary of the date when Mohammed gave to his people his scripture. The Friday of the Christian is the Sabbath of the Mohammedan and is observed by him in the same manner as Sunday with the Christians.

The Christian Turks, who include the Bulgarians, Servians, Montenegrins and other smaller tribes, observe Christmas with impressive religious ceremonies.

Three days before Christmas the "Bladego" appoints a delegation of 100 men form each congregation, who go to the river and hew out immense cakes of ice, after which they construct a huge pyramid near by. A great cross measuring about 40 by 60 feet and cut from the bed of ice is set up against the pyramid, and the place of worship for Christmas day is completed. Early on Christmas morning all the people march to the pyramid, where the initial exercises are conducted by the "Bladego." A small crucifix used by him in the exercises is the prize of the younger men of the tribe, who dive into the ice-cold water after it as the "Bladego" throws it in. Many are drowned annually in this practice, but they all consider themselves fortunate to die while on such a mission.

From the pyramid the procession marches to the home of the priest, where bread is blessed and broken by the "Bladego" and all present partake of the food.

Keep ever in the path of duty, but fail not to climb the steep of knowledge.—Newton.

IN THE REALM OF THE CZAR

Russians Look Upon Christmas as the Most Sacred and Most Celebrated Holiday.

CHRISTMAS is the most sacred and most celebrated holiday in Russia. Contrary to the custom in nearly all other countries, Christmas there always comes on Sunday, and a continuous celebration is held until midnight on January 2.

The Russian believes in devout religious services in honor of the birth of Christ, and each day during the season each family, including all its members, attends church at least once. On Christmas morning the most important services take place. Each congregation marches solemnly to the nearest river, which is always frozen over, the ice being sometimes as much as three feet thick.

After a large hole has been chopped in the ice the priest dips his cross in the water and prayers are pronounced, after which the priest holds baptismal exercises. Having been blessed by the priest the water is considered to be holy and as fast as the people can file by the hole in the ice bottles of all sizes and descriptions are filled with the water.

This water is prized the most highly of anything in the home, and bottles of it are sometimes found a century or more old. Some fanatics secure large quantities of it and bathe in it at regular intervals during the year.

There is one custom which many Americans would cherish in their own Christmas celebration, and especially the young people. It is that of kissing for on Christmas day every one steals a kiss from whomsoever he meets. In some cases, and among the older people, the hearty handshake is much used, but the younger element clings closely to the old style.

Santa Claus is unknown to Russian children, but the "Babushka," an old woman witch, carrying a long stick and attired in the usual witch costume, visits the homes in every village and city and distributes greetings and then comes at night and leaves the gifts for both old and young.

ELECTIVE FRANCHISE IS THE CRY

Residents of District of Columbia Desire the Right to Vote.

By RALPH M. WHITESIDE.

Washington, D. C., Dec. 18.—That there is going to be a serious and determined effort made to have congress change the district form of government is no longer to be doubted. There is sincere objection to the commission method on the part of a large number of citizens. Beyond that point opinions diverge widely. Some want the system generally prevalent in other cities. Some want the president to appoint our rulers, others want the district given the right to vote and choose its own rulers.

Suffrage for the residents of this city would solve the problem in a short time.

The question of public utilities companies could be settled in time. Regulations could be voted upon, and if the chosen officials failed in their duties they could be ousted at the next election.

Of course, if the franchise were given to the people the taxes might go up, that is the battle cry against suffrage, and along with it comes the argument of the fear of the "nigger" vote.

Organized labor has passed resolutions favoring suffrage for years; has called meetings for the public to come and join hands in the movement, but the phantom of higher taxes has held the business man, the property owners, and likewise those who are willing to let the colored man work, but do not want him to vote.

The down-trodden, abused, overworked and poorly paid government clerk has at last a champion. The government clerk, you know, is a person who has a berth for life, goes to work at 8 a. m. and stops at 4 p. m. with 30 minutes off for lunch; has 30 days annual vacation with pay and 30 days annual sick leave with pay; has all his evenings, Sundays and holidays, and during the summer, Saturday half holidays free in which to follow his own devices, to go to the theatres or other places of amusement, study and practice law or medicine or write for newspapers or magazines with the advantage of having best access to governmental sources of information. Oh, it's a hard life being a government clerk on $50, $60, $75, $100, $150 or $200 a month. So the clerk is always kicking and always looking for some one to champion his cause, the cause of the oppressed. Now the Rev. Dr. Edward Everett Hale, good old soul, has come to that point and in an article in a recent publication espouses the cause of the meek and long suffering clerk.

Dr. Hale bases his defense on the fact that there are able, industrious and conscientious men and women in the departments, which is something no one denies, but that is beside the question raised by the "caluminators" of the clerk, who declare that the government clerk has a pretty soft thing of it, knows it and tries to keep outsiders from knowing it by always kicking. Well, maybe he is right and maybe Dr. Hale is right too. Anyway, I wish I had a nice little clerkship like a friend of mine has. It pays him $1800 a year and he has an outside job at night that pays $600 a year. Pretty bad, isn't it?

Unless all indications fail, the word "economy" will be written on the scroll of the closing session of the Sixtieth Congress. Congressmen have heard Secretary Cortelyou's warning of a big deficit and say that they will exert their influence to put economy pressure on all appropriations.

Unfortunately for the economy program, pressure will be brought to bear for a fat rivers and harbors bill. While Chairman Tawney says the treasury deficit makes a rivers and harbors bill look dubious many members of congress are ready to line up for one of considerable proportions.

Friends of a larger navy are not likely to give ground, and there probably will be the same cry for four battleships, as during the first session of the last congress. Even two will prevent any substantial cut in the naval budget. Advocates of additional regiments for the army promise to enliven the session, while the needs of the interstate commerce commission will make an additional drain on the federal funds.

The new movement for waterway improvements is to be reckoned with, inasmuch as the slogan of the permanent waterways congress is $50,000,000 a year for waterways, and in addition the demand for the conservation of the country's national resources involves a considerable appropriation. The next Decennial census which requires much time and money, must be appropriated for. Economists in congress have a hard row to hoe.

Speaking of economy, Chairman Sereno Payne, of the house committee on ways and means, no longer feels injured because, like the ordinary member of congress, he has been relegated to the new $4,000,000 office building.

Eliott Woods, superintendent of the capitol building, has provided the balm in the shape of the most elaborate committee rooms that have ever been planned in the history of the United Snates. And the end is not yet. Already more than $20,000 has been spent in fitting up the quarters for the committee of which Payne is chairman.

Beautiful red velvet carpets cover the white marble floors, mahogany furniture fills each of the the three rooms and gorgeously upholstered chairs are provided for the members.

Although the hearing room at present looks almost impressive as the chamber of the United States Supreme court, decoration is not yet complete.

The committee sits behind a semi-circular desk or work table, with places for nineteen members.

The base of this semi-circular desk is of Vermont marble, eighteen inches high. Above the base are mahogany panels, in which is a hand carved shield of the United States.

The chairs are proportionately expensive. The frame work is of mahogany, with brass trimmings and upholstered in Spanish leather.

Temporary chandeliers serve for the present, but permanent ones are now in the process of manufacture.

The pendants will be cut glass suspended, as the lights, from silver tubing and all of the metal will be silver.

The great windows will soon be draped in a manner which would suit the most fastidious housewife. The curtains will be of ecru lines, with red velvet draperies at the top. Mural paintings will soon decorate the walls.

In the room reserved for the executive sessions of the committee has been installed a magnificent mahogany table, which cost $800. The other furniture was bought on the same scale.

The architects are now engaged on plans to make a similar suite of rooms at the east end of the building, on an even more elaborate scale than that prevailing in the ways and means committee. No committee has as yet been assigned to these quarters but it has been suggested that they would be appropriate for the House Judiciary committee.

Land for Sale.

We have for sale the following valuable tracts of land :

One Military Lot of 50 acres, a small portion of which is under cultivation. All good land, and every acre tillable. Watered by several good springs and a never failing small run. Contains some good timber. One-half mile from R. R. siding, and one and one-half miles from Oakland.

Also part of two Military Lots containing about 50 acres. This property is directly East of Oakland, on the South side of the B. & O. R. R. siding on the North side of tracks. Contains valuable grazing land, a portion of which is in cultivation. Valuable R. R. frontage.

Also 10 acres suitable for building sites, just East of Oakland on the North side of the Oakland and Mt. Lake Park road.

For further information, address

THE H. WEBER & SONS CO.,
6-tf Oakland, Md.

SOCIETY IN WASHINGTON IS COSMOPOLITAN

Mrs. John A. Logan Treats Entertaining of Social Life in the Capital.

By MRS. JOHN A. LOGAN.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 18.—Washington society is a theme which has been dwelt upon by persons in all conditions of life. There seems to be an impression abroad that Washington sets the pace for all social relations in this country. Apparently no one remembers that the capital is unavoidably one of the most cosmopolitan cities of the Union, and that beyond the few regulations established by Jefferson as to official etiquette, there are no laws governing social intercourse except those which are suggested by civilization and proper decorum. Though one hears much about what they are pleased to call "fashionable society," or rather exclusive society, it mean only that little coterie of wealthy idleborn people who are wont to make pretentions to leadership, or at least membership in the society of their particular set. Of themselves they contribute nothing to the advancement of civilization or the edification of intelligent people, but they affect to be patrons of art, literature and science, and are often useful in raising a fund for the education, mental or artistic training of some one who has been born with more talents, brains and ambition than money. They originate nothing and as their aspirations do not carry them beyond the confines of the set in which they claim membership they are really harmless. They enjoy wining, dining and entertaining each other.

In Washington they endeavor to cultivate official and diplomatic society, and are industrious in having their attentions to prominent personages noticed in the daily press, and if the recipients of these attentions in any way recognize them, they hasten to have the fact announced in the society columns. These strictures apply to those so much in print. The real representatives of the best of what, for want of a better term, is called society at the nation's capital, is composed of people who have done something in the world, persons who have traveled much, who have made good use of the wealth they have inherited or accumulated by their own efforts; of persons who are educated and refined in every sense of the words; persons who have retired but who are active in philanthopic, educational or religious movements for the advancement of civilization. Social functions given by these people—and they give many—are dignified, hospitable and delightful. They extend courtesies to persons entitled to consideration, and if they are financially so situated that they cannot return the compliment they need feel no embarrassment, as their hosts expect nothing but the pleasure they give by their presence and what they contribute intellectually to the company they have been invited to meet.

As at all capitals, Washington has what is known as official and diplomatic society, for which there are accepted regulations fixing the status of each individual according to rank. The president, the lady of the White House, the vice president, the speaker of the house, the cabinet, the supreme court, senators, representatives in congress, the army the navy and heads of bureaus in each department of the government know exactly what is expected of them from a social standpoint. With the natural tendency to hospitality very few are remiss in the discharge of their duties in this respect.

The diplomats are great sticklers for rank, and some emusing incidents have followed mistakes made by hosts in seating these representatives of the persons of the rulers of the country from which they hail and the length of their service at Washington. There is, of course, much interchange of civilities among the official, civilian and diplomatic society. Officials and private citizens are very attentive to the foreigners, who always accept invitations if honors are easy, but they do not trouble themselves by over-much hospitality in return. Some of the embassies and legations are very hospitable and do as much for society as society does for them, but others are less liberal and more indifferent about cancelling social obligations.

It is to be hoped that the incoming administration will establish in the White House some of the customs that began in the early days of the republic, and were kept up until within a few years. The White House strikes the keynote for social affairs, which the denizens of the capital are ready to follow. What is required is consistency in extending to everyone the consideration due. There is no excuse for cordially welcoming a boor or a person who would not be received in private homes, and neglecting those who are entitled to courtesies from the executive mansion. Let all functions be characterized by genuine cordiality and dignity if they must be simple in the matter of appointment.

Washington is without doubt the most delightful residental city in the world, and there is no reason why its society should not be the best that ever existed anywhere.

John C. Calhoun said: "Society and government are intimately connected with and dependent on each other, of the two society is the greater."

W. H. RAVENSCRAFT, M.D., PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON, OAKLAND, MD.
Residence on North Third street.
Office in McComas Building.

DR. J. E. LEGGE, PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON,
Offers his Services to the citizens of Oakland and vicinity.
Office in McComas Building, Second street

DR. R. F. BARTLETT, DENTIST.
Office in McComas Building, Second street Oakland, Md.
Special attention given to bridge and crown work.

DR. J. G. ROBINSON, DENTIST, OAKLAND MD.
Office at residence on Liberty street.
GAS ADMINISTERED.

NORMAN S. HEINDELL, ATTORNEY-AT-LAW,
All business given prompt attention.
Office—First National Bank Building.
KLAND, MARYLAND.

GILMOR S. HAMILL, ATTORNEY-AT-LAW AND SOLICITOR IN CHANCERY,
Office in Garrett National Bank Building
Particular attention given to Conveyancing Investigation of land titles and collection of claims. Loans negotiated.

EDWARD H. SINCELL, ATTORNEY-AT-LAW, OAKLAND, MARYLAND.
Will practice in the Courts of Garrett and Allegany counties, the Court of Appeals of Maryland, and the adjoining counties of West Virginia.

Baltimore & Ohio R. R.

Schedule effective June 2, 1907.

OAKLAND.

* Daily. † Daily except Sunday. § Sunday only.

For WASHINGTON, BALTIMORE, PHILADELPHIA & NEW YORK, Depart *12.27 a. m., *6.34 a. m., *4.17 p. m., *8.29 p. m.; Arrive *7.12 a. m., *3.53 p. m., *10.26 p. m., *11.54 p. m.

For CUMBERLAND and Way Points, Depart *10.09 a. m., *4.40 p. m. Arrive *9.26 a. m., *7.26 p. m.

For COLUMBUS & CHICAGO, Depart *11.54 p. m. Arrive *6.07 a. m., *4.17 p. m.

For GRAFTON (Accom.), Depart *9.26 a. m., *7.26 p. m. Arrive *10.09 a. m., *4.40 p. m.

For FAIRMONT and WHEELING, Depart *9.26 a. m. (local), *3.33 p. m., *11.54 p. m. Arrive *6.07 a. m., *4.17 p. m., *12.25 night.

For FAIRMONT (Accom.), Depart *7.26 p. m. Arrive *10.09 a. m.

For CINCINNATI, LOUISVILLE and ST LOUIS, Depart *7.12 a. m., *3.53 p. m., *10.29 p. m. Arrive *12.27 a. m., *6.31 a. m., *8.29 p. m.

Oakland Pharmacy

JOS. E. HARNED, Proprietor.

Drugs, Chemicals, Stationery, Cigars

Cameras and Photo Supplies

FOR SALE.

We will sell at private sale at our farms between Mt. Lake Park and Oakland,

1 Gasoline Engine,

8 horse-power, made by the International Harvester Co. Almost new and in perfect running order. Will be sold for $275.

1 Hay Bailer,

operated by horse-power. Makes standard size bales.

For further information call on or write to

THE H. WEBER & SONS CO.,
Oakland, Md.

J. B. WILLIAMS CO.
FROSTBURG, MD.
Cheapest place to buy
MONUMENTS
HEADSTONES AND IRON FENCING
Send for prices

Fresh oysters at Baumgartners at 30c quart.

The Republican for Job Work.

A Hint to the Wise Is Sufficient.

Special Sale on
2-qt Blue Enamel Saucepan.
2-qt Blue Fnamel Pudding Pans.
2-qt Blue Enamel Preserve Kettles.

We have just received over 1500 lbs. of our famous 10c Candy.

SUNDAY SCHOOL SUPPLIES.

TAKE our advice—buy now, don't wait, but come and see

THE Little Man

and you will save money on all your Holiday Goods,

Toys, Candies, Novelties, Fancy Goods.

Baumgartner.

CAPITAL $25,000.00

The First National Bank
Of Grantsville, Md.

Safe deposit vault boxes for rent.

SURPLUS $12,500.00

The Savings Department takes care of your money when waiting other investment. The money earns interest from the day it is deposited. It can be withdrawn at any time.

Its Advantages

Any amount from One Dollar up can be deposited, and interest added to principal twice a year. Pass books are issued to every depositor

We Pay 3 Per Cent. Interest.
Open Daily except Sundays and Holidays. 9 a. m. to 4 p. m.

OFFICERS.
C. H. JENNINGS, - - President
U. M. STANTON, - Vice-President
J. O. GETTY, - - - Cashier
DIRECTORS.
C. H. Jennings, U. M. Stanton,
G. C. Keller, Eli Stanton,
W. A. Hitchins, Frank Watts,
J. O. Getty.

A. D. NAYLOR & COMP'Y

You can buy at Reduced Prices
Grain Drills, Harrows AND Plows
AT NAYLOR & CO.'S

Big Stock to select from.

Have the Farmer's Favorite Drills, the Thomas, the Superior Hoe and Disc Drills.

We have the Syracuse, the Imperial and the Wyard Plows.

Also the wood frame Harrows, the wheel and lever Harrows; also the Disc Harrow, all at reduced prices.

We also have a nice line of Spray Pumps.

Muco-Solvent

is an indispensible household remedy because it is a preventive as well as a cure, and because it arrests development of all contageous germs and bacterial diseases. It cures croup, colds, tonsilitis with its associated ills and all inflamed and catarrhal conditions of the mucous surface. It is a harmless vegetable preparation that may safely be administered to the tenderest babe. If not for sale in your neighborhood, write to

THE PIEDMONT SUPPLY CO.,
Sole Agents for Muco-Solvent. Piedmont, W. Va.

Real Estate Bargains

I offer for sale

FARM OF 147 ACRES, 3 miles from Oakland; good 6-room House; plenty of water; over 50 acres cleared; about 25 acres of grass; 2 Orchards, bearing; over 75 acres of White Oak Timber; R. F. D. mail service.

COTTAGE OF 6 ROOMS for sale at Mt. Lake Park.

HOUSE AND LOT on Oak Street, Oakland, for sale or rent. House of 6 rooms—Lot 50x150 feet, with Stable and all necessary Outbuildings.

FOUR VERY DESIRABLE BUILDING LOTS situated on Liberty Street, in Oakland. Also 3 DWELLING HOUSES on Liberty Street, with good water and all necessary outbuildings.

HOUSE AND LOT on Wilson Street. House of 10 rooms; good water. Lot 150 feet front. Best Outbuildings in Oakland.

A VERY GOOD FARM 1 mile from Oakland—all under fence; containing 32 acres; about 25 under cultivation; 2 fine Orchards, and about 2½ acres in small Fruit; 2 Houses, a very good Well and a never failing Spring. A very desirable place for Truck and Poultry Farming. Can be bought at a low price just now.

I have for sale 18 of the very best Building Lots in the town which I will sell for cash—or $5 down and $5 per month.

150 ACRES OF VALUABLE COAL LAND situated less than two miles of Oakland which can be bought at a great bargain. The surface would make fine farming land. This land is well watered with a stream and several good springs.

12 MORE CHOICE BUILDING LOTS at $5 down and $5 per month.

If you want cash for your Real Estate, or Real Estate for your cash, let me hear from you.

☞For further particulars call on or address

James A. Sincell Real Estate Agt and Surveyor
Sincell Building, OAKLAND, MD

THE REPUBLICAN

BENJ. H. SINCELL, EDITOR.

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 24, 1908.

CHRISTMAS THOUGHTS.

Christmas is upon us. It is the festival of the home and the season when the hearts of the fathers are terned to the children and the feet of the children turn back to the homes whence they went out. Little ones hail its coming with exhuberant gladness, and older people enter into its festivities with subdued pleasure, in which memories of home behind and hopes of home ahead are strangely mingled with present joys. What a time it is for cultivating domestic affections and invigorating the virtues which root themselves in these loves! Whence came our Christian homes? They are not found in pagan lands—dwelling places are there, but not homes. Nor are they found in lands where Christian influences are feeble and Christian influences are formal—there are lodges and eating houses. The idea of home comes from Him who, though homeless upon the earth, hath set the solitary in families—from Him of whom the whole family in heaven and earth are named.

Accordingly, at this season our doors should be wide open to His coming in, and nothing else admitted which would shut Him out. He knows how to enter in a festive occasion, and sympathizes with human joy as really as with human sorrow. His presence at our feasts will not diminish their gladness, but exalt their satisfaction. And now, while merriment reigns in all our homes, let us invite Him to sup with us. Let the children play with the Babe of Bethlehem among them, while the angels of Bethlehem sing over them. Let the youthful keep company with the earnest, obedient boy of Nazereth. Let them who come into the Christmas season out of life's busy cares come apart with Him to rest awhile and be fed by His hand.

NUMBERED AMONG THE WORLD'S WELL BELOVED IS THE MAN WHO ALWAYS KEEPS CHRISTMAS.

There is no use pretending that the coming of Christmas is of no importance to anyone outside of a nursery nor that we are all too old, too wise and too up-to-date to care whether it comes or not. This attitude is the oldest of all and had birth in the palace of the Caesars. The accent of openly expressed enjoyment, savoring as it does of sentiment, is shunned by the average Anglo-Saxon, who would rather be caught in murderous intent than openly enjoying himself—or anyone else.

The man who enthusiastically enjoys life through its simple and undevious ways is, in the eyes of his fellowmen, a vain and flippant creature, much too youthful for his age. He is the prophet of the unexpected, and may be discovered taking long walks on country roads plucking unpronouncable weeds—or seeking mistletoe in the woods—when he might be comfortably ensconced in a steam-heated office gleaming information over the telephone. This Christmas man refuses to believe that poetry died out with Homer, the drama with Shakespeare, art with Michael Angelo, pessimists with Jonah, or lovers with Heloise and Abelard. He is a shameless heretic who does not look upon budding genius as an embarrassing ailment, who admits that there is modern poetry and prefers to read it at times, on a crony's hearth rug, when he might be elbowing 500 of his kind in a crowd that would put his name in the morning paper. He is equally perverse in the matter of likes and dislikes, and the majority of his intimates are richer in humor than in silver coined by the mint, and his final enormity is that at Christmas he is prone to hang up a stocking—for some one else.

As for Christmas gifts, his own are usually of no value except to the owner, for he seldom receives automobiles, fur overcoats or edition de luxe. The things that people send him are characteristic of himself. Sometimes they are but letters and messages from absent friends—and he is happy as a fairy-tale king because he was remembered. Perhaps it is a little picture he receives painted by another, and he puts it over his fireplace and cherishes it as if it were a very old master. He has a bunch of holly from another, and is happy as a fairy-tale prince because of it. He owns to a childish fondness for homely sweets and is happy as a fairy-tale orge as he devours them.

He is head jester in the Court of Christmas, this lover of little things, of far-sent messages, of berries that never saw a florist and cakes that never knew a shop, and all such valueless things which have belonged to Christmas since before Christmas could be bought and sold. The Christmas man is altogether a failure as a popular success and worthy of grown-up disdain. He is no good at Bridge and is peculiarly hopeless when it comes to sumptuous Christmas giving, for the money value of gifts does not seem to appeal to him other than in proportion to the extent through which it helps him to keep Christmas for some one else. His social instincts are primitive, and he would rather be a door-keeper in the Court of Christmas than king of a company that has forgotten how to hang up its stocking.

Then; too, he has a preverse way of interpreting the oft-repeated Christmas message practically, and so fixed in his Christmas habit that he finds himself unconsciously keeping it all the year round. There have been many Christmas men since King David who sang of it a song behind them. The keeper of Christmas seldom has a monument built to his memory; his is the ministry of little things, but he is usually found numbered among the world's well beloved.

UNCLE SAM. INTERNATIONAL SANTA CLAUS.

Uncle Sam used to boast that he was rich enough to give us all a farm. He isn't as long of lands as he used to be, but he is rich enough nowadays to give all the world a Christmas present, and he does it with each returning Yuletide. One steamship sailed from New York the other day with presents in money and goods estimated to be worth at least $4,000,000. For weeks past every outbound steamship has been carrying its burden of substantial remembrances to relatives in Europe.

The Christmas season marks the height of the flood of gifts from America to the Old World; but the flow continues every day in the year. The prosperous brothers and sisters, cousins and aunts who have gathered in their share of American bounty, are constantly contributing their mites to help the less fortunate ones in the old home. It has been estimated that from $100,000,000 to $150,000,000 a year goes back to the older continents in the form of presents and allowances in this wise. This is entirely independent of the vast sum which American travelers spend abroad; and this again is quite apart from the millions which go out to pay interest on foreign investments in America.

It is no wonder that the tremendous apparent balance of trade in favor of the United States dwindles when it comes to the remittance of actual gold from the money centers of Europe to pay the final account.

HOUSE BURNED AT FRIENDSVILLE

With All Its Contents, the Latter Property of W. M. Crise.

Last Sunday night a dwelling house located in Friendsville and owned by Mr. Asa E. Riley, of Selbysport, was burned to the ground, the origin of the blaze being shrouded in mystery as no fire had been in the building for more than forty eight hours previous.

The building was located near the Disciple church and had been occupied for some time by Mr. W. M. Crise. On Friday he packed his goods preparatory to removing them to some other point when they were attached for debt and held by the constable of District No. 2, the officer allowed them to remain in the Crise house. When the fire was discovered it had gained so much headway that it was impossible to save the building or any of its contents. The house was insured for $500 and was valued at $800. Mr. Crise had an insurance of $350 on his household effects.

Marriage Licenses.

Charles Garthright Duckworth and Cora Catherine Beachy, both of Keyser Ridge, Md.

William Cuppett and Agatha Rodeheaver, both of Hazelton, W. Va.

George G. Morris and Edna E. Inland, both of Copen, W. Va.

Edward Born and Nettie Overfield, both of Reedville, W. Va.

Cleveland E. Ashby and Ethel M. Edwards, both of Crellin, Md.

Claudius R. Miley and Virginia Koon, both of Clarksburg, W. Va.

Henry Clay Woodson and Mary Dobbs, both of Iron Gate, Va.

Victor H. Kelley and Edna M. Stutler, both of near Oakland.

Samuel W. Sollars and Mary M. Mayhew, both of Gleeson, W. Va.

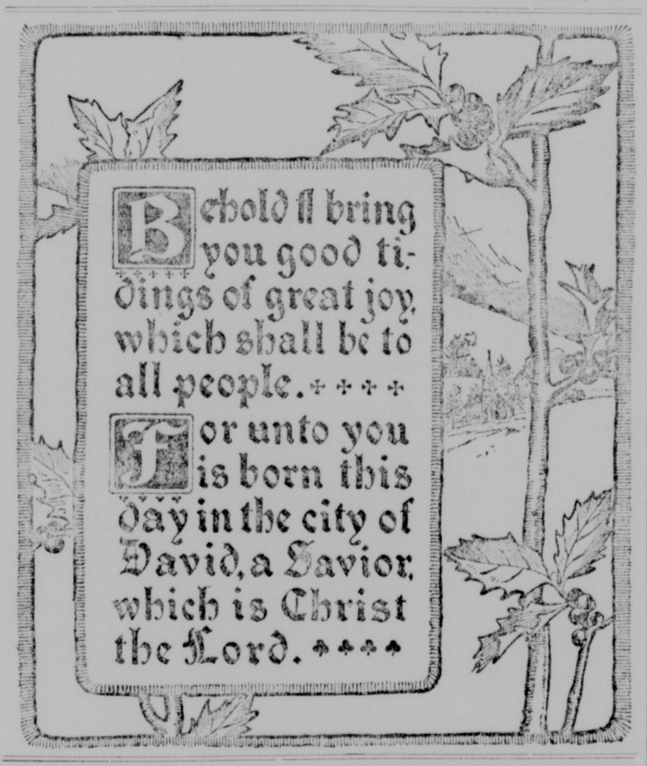
Chauncey O. Broadwater and Rosaline Otto, both of New Germany, Md.

Charles Digman, of Parsons, W. Va., and Blanch E. Past, of Buckhannon, W. Va.

Lot For Sale.

The best building lot in Oakland; opposite new courthouse, at reasonable price. Apply to owner.

HENRY LAUER,
Oakland, Md.



THE VOTE ON PRESIDENTS.

At the November election, Taft, for president, received the largest popular vote ever won by a Republican nominee, 7,659,688, as against 7,623,486 for Roosevelt in 1904. Taft's plurality is 1,208,998, which is less than one-half of Roosevelt's 2,547,206, but is much larger than that of any other man excepting Roosevelt in all our history. Mr. Bryan got 6,450,690 votes. This is the largest number ever cast for a Democratic nominee for president, breaking the previous record vote for Bryan of 6,358,133 in 1900. Oklahoma makes the difference. Though Bryan increased his total vote the second and third times he ran he was beaten worse in 1900 than in 1896 and still worse in 1908 than in 1900. He is waning rather than growing stronger Last month he ran behind his vote of eight years ago in 21 states, while Taft ran ahead of Roosevelt's popular vote of 1904 in 24 states, 11 of these being in the South. In 30 states Bryan ran behind the Democratic nominees for governor. The Socialist and Prohibition votes were both smaller this year than in 1904, In the first case the totals are 401,506 to 402,536 in 1904, while this year the Prohibitionists had but 228,013 as against 258,536 in 1904. Taft's majority was 455,913, The grand aggregation of votes was 14,863,463, which is 892,858 in excess of the largest previous total of 13,970,605, cast in 1900.

Public Schools Closed.

Yesterday afternoon the public schools throughout the county closed for the holidays and will reopen on January 4th.

ACCIDENT.

At this writing we are having nice winter weather. The farmers are plowing since the Lord sent rain to supply the wants of many people.

Our school is making good progress under the management of Prof. Horace Welch, principal, and Francis McGittigan, assistant. They are both energetic and are putting forth their best efforts.

E. J. Spiker made a flying trip to Meyersdale, Pa., Saturday.

Miss Grace Gnagey spent a few days with her sisters, Mrs. H. J. and H. M. Spiker.

Fred Hoffman has moved his saw mill into John Spurline's timber and is now in operation. Fred is a hustler.

The stove salesmen are busy canvassing this community selling wrought iron ranges just in time for Christmas.

H. J. Spiker sold a fine pair of black colts.

Adam Richter has moved into his new house.

John Garringer's child has been quite ill with diphtheria, but is improving.

Floyd Deal has equipped his store and the street fronting with the best light in town. Alvin Englehart put the plant in for him.

The rumor is that we are getting a new flouring mill at this place.

We congratulate the State Road Commission in accepting a route through Garrett county that will be of interest and benefit to almost every taxpayer in the county. We should feel encouraged to think that steps have been taken to bring Garrett county to the front.

BITTINGER.

An appropriate Christmas service and entertainment will be held in the Lutheran church at this place on Christmas evening. The program promises to be pleasing.

Mr. Ahl, a student at the Selin's Grove Theological Seminary, is spending his vacation with Rev. and Mrs. Yugel of this village.

F. M. Bittinger spent Sunday visiting relatives at Kime, Pa.

Merchant O. C. Buckle took a load of fine dressed turkeys to the Georges Creek market this week.

Miss Myrtle Emory went to Friendsville Monday to spend the holidays with her sister, Mrs. C. C. Frederick.

Amos H. Reckner is moving his family to his new home near Swanton this week.

Urner Beachy, who has been employed near Frankville for some time, is back at this place again.

Wade H. Lohr, of Swanton, was a visitor here last week.

We extend to THE REPUBLICAN and all its readers our best wishes for a Merry and Joyous Christmas.

HOYES.

There was preaching services in the M. E. church here last Sunday and Rev. Wolfe delivered one of his most excellent sermons.

Miss Emma Hamill, who has very successfully taught our school this winter, will leave Wednesday evening for Fairmont where she will spend the holidays with her sister.

Jacob Knox, who has been ill for the past three months with typhoid fever, is able to be out again.

Mrs. Jeremiah Enlow, who has been visiting relatives and friends for the past month at Sang Run and Hoyes, returned to her home near Oakland on Tuesday.

John Kitzmiller, of Kalona, Iowa, who was called to this county two weeks ago to attend court and to transact other important business matters, returned to his home Saturday evening. He was accompanied by his brother, George. We wish them both success as we do all who leave our neighborhood.

We are much pleased to see County Commissioner Friend so much improved after such a long and serious illness.

Miss Ethel Dewitt, accompanied by Harry Lowdermilk, spent Sunday with Miss Freda Dewitt.

Miss Olia Mattingly spent a part of last week at Oakland.

Everybody's busy now preparing for a visit from Santa Claus, especially the youngsters and the members of the Sunday school who will have Christmas services on Christmas night.

Miss Della Savage and brother, Bruce, are visiting their sister, Mrs. Smith.

As news of interest is rather scarce at this writing we will close our letter by wishing all a Merry Christmas.

MOUNTAIN LAKE PARK.

Christmas exercises will be held in the U. B. Church, Loch Lynn, this evening, and in the M. E. church, Mt. Lake Park, tomorrow evening. An interesting program has been rehearsed for both occasions.

Messrs. Willard Sperry and Walton Wilson, students at the Maryland Agricultural College, are at home for the holidays.

Miss Louise Sperry, who is employed as stenographer in Baltimore is at home on a vacation of two weeks.

Mis Sada Laughlin, of Deer Park, was a visitor at the Park this week.

Neighbors and friends of Mr. Thomas Harris to the number of ten or fifteen gathered at his residence Tuesday with teams, saws and axes, and hauled and worked up enough wood to supply the family during the winter. The same parties and others will make a like visit to the home of Mr. John Wilt.

Our merchants have had a very large Christmas trade.

Mr. Upton Cuppett and Miss Martha Welch were married two months ago but it was not known to their most intimate friends until last week. Their host of friends wish them a long and happy life.

The railroad company will extend the lake siding so an entire train of cars may be placed above the loading platform and dropped down by gravity as they are loaded. The lake is now full of pure water and with continued cold weather the ice will be of sufficient thickness to begin cutting immediately after the holidays.

The new Baptist church at Loch Lynn is now ready for the roof. With a few days of fair weather it will be so closed in as to enable the workmen to go on to its completion before spring.

Mr. Charles W. Hopkins, our real estate and insurance agent, is in Cincinnati to spend the holidays with the family of his daughter and other relatives and a great host of old friends.

Mr. Harrison Arnold, who has employment at Morgantown, is here visiting his parents.

Miss Abbie Chance will visit friends in and near Baltimore for ten days or two weeks, leaving here Saturday.

The Lonaconing Savings Bank

Of Allegany Couuty.

Capital Stock . $20,000
Surplus and Undivided Profits . $60,000
Deposits . . $625,000

3 PER CENT. Interest Paid Upon all Savings Accounts.

GIVE THEM A START

Tne New Year is rapidly approaching. This would be a good time for you to start your young folks on the road to Success.

Early training in the practice of self-denial; instruction as to the use and value of money; opportunities for earning and saving money; all these tend to fix and fasten the children in the ways of thrift and prosperity.

We most gladly assist the young people in getting started.

One Dollar opens an account and entitles the depositor to one of our Savings Banks.

We shall be pleased to have our Garrett County friends call and receive a 1908 Calendar.

DAVID SLOAN, President. R. R. SLOAN, Treasurer.

The First National Bank

FRIENDSVILLE, MD.

Capital, $25,000. Surplus and Undivided Profits, $24,000.

OFFICERS:

L. E. Friend, President. J. W. McCullough, V. P.
R. C. McCandlish, Cashier.

DIRECTORS:

L. E. Friend, Merchant.
J. W. McCullough, Lumber and Coal.
W. W. Savage, Merchant.
D. S. Custer, Merchant.
H. M. Rumbaugh, Farmer.
W. H. H. Friend, Pension Agent and Surveyor.
Horace R. DeWitt, Treasurer of Garrett County, Md.
R. C. McCandlish.

We will issue time or demand certificates of deposit and pay you 4 per cent. interest if your money is left with us.

In all its dealings this Bank combines absolute safety with satisfactory service and never loses sight of either.

SAFETY DEPOSIT BOXES FOR RENT.

WILSON.

The words of God are fair for naught
Unless our eyes in seeing
See hidden in the thing the thought
That animates its being.

Not seeing any items from Wilson I will jot a few lines for your paper and if they escape the waste basket I may come again.

We have been enjoying a two days' rain which was much needed. About one half of the springs in this section of the country have raised much to the comfort of us all.

Mr. Frank Nine, an old neighbor of this part, who moved to Butte Valley, Col., is back having arrived Saturday last and is among his friends and relatives and gives much interesting information.

Mr. Bert Wilson, who has been on petit jury for the past two weeks, has returned to his home at Wilson and on the twenty-eighth of this month will start for Leesburg, Fla., where he and family expects to spend the winter. We all regret to have them go from among us.

Mr. John W. Harvey reports quite a rapid increase in his fur list which consists of musk rats, skunks, minks, opossums, etc.

Mrs. Jacob Anderson, of near Fairview, has a very serious attack of the grip.

Mr. Jeremiah Harvey has had quite a lot of sickness in his family for the last three months. Miss May Harvey is almost well but Mrs. Jeremian Harvey is not very strong yet, being confined to the bed part of the time.

Wishing the editor and patrons a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year.

GORTNER.

E. R. Hauser, a student of a theological seminary at Gettysburg, Pa., was shaking hands with his many friends at this place Sunday.

L. H. Killius was rusticating in this vicinity Saturday.

A meeting of the Farmers' Union Association and Fire Insurance Company of Garrett Co. was held at the Swan Meadow school house last Friday evening to elect an agent to represent the company in this district, and elected D. E. Liller to succeed Mr. Fred Gortner, who has held that position a number of years.

Mr. and Mrs. Joel Gnegy and Mrs. Samuel Gnegy, of near Red House, spent Sunday at the home of Mr. D. J. Slabach.

Jonas Beachy and sisters Annie and Lizzie, of Garrett, Kansas, who were visiting here, left for Meyersdale, Pa., last Friday.

Wishing THE REPUBLICAN and its many readers a merry, merry Xmas.

HOUSE FOR RENT, possession given after October 1st; contains eight rooms; spring water. Apply to Mrs. L. F. Sincell, Oakland. Also cottage of six rooms, either furnisdhe or unfurnished.

Necessary To Amputate Leg.

Mr. Lee Sebolt, a Baltimore and Ohio railroad brakeman, was jarred from his train Sunday morning, while near Independence, W. Va., and had one leg so badly crushed that it was found necessary to amputate it above the knee. He was taken to Keyser, W. Va., and placed in the hospital there Mr. Sebolt is a young man, twenty-one years old, and resided with his father at No. 16 Boone street, Cumberland.

FOR SALE—A National Cash Register. Offutt & Renninger.

Notice To Delinquent Tax-Payers.

Notice is hereby given to all delinquent tax-payers that if taxes now due and in arrears are not paid before

JANUARY 1ST, 1909,

I will proceed by law to collect. I refer to Section 50 of Chapter 346 of Acts of the General Assembly of Maryland, which provides as follows:

SECTION 50. The said Treasurer shall during the first week in December in each and every year, give notice to all delinquent tax-payers of said county, by advertisement inserted in two newspapers published in said county, and in hand-bills posted in five of the most public places in each election district of said county, and at the courthouse door, warning them that the payment of all taxes then due and in arrear will be enforced by advertisement and sale unless the same be paid before the 1st day of January next following.

Please pay promptly and save costs.

W. E. HOLLINGER,
Treasurer of Garrett County.

Notice to Creditors.

This is to give notice, That the subscriber of Garrett county hath obtained from the Orphans' Court of Garrett county, in Maryland, letters of Administration on the personal estate of

A. F. GEORGE,

late of Garrett county, deceased. All persons having claims against the deceased are hereby warned to exhibit the same, with the vouchers thereof legally authenticated to the subscriber, on or before the 26th day of May next; they may otherwise by law be excluded from all benefit of said estate. All persons knowing themselves indebted to said estate are requested to make immediate payment.

Given under my hand this 24th day of November, 1908.

MARY E. GEORGE,
Administratrix,
Swanton, Md.

Notice to Creditors.

This is to give notice, That the subscriber, of Garrett county hath obtained from the Orphan's Court of Garrett county, in Maryland, letters of Administration on the personal estate of

WILLIAM FRUSH,

late of Garrett county, deceased. All persons having claims against the deceased are hereby warned to exhibit the same, with the vouchers thereof legally authenticated to the subscriber, on or before the 14th day of April, next; they may otherwise by law be excluded from all benefit of said estate. All persons knowing themselves indebted to said estate are requested to make immediate payment.

Given under my hand this 14th day of October, 1908.

JOHN W. FRUSH,
Administrator,
R. F. D., Oakland, Md.

Notice to Creditors.

This is to give notice, That the subscriber of Garrett County, in Maryland, hath obtained from the Orphans' Court of Garrett county, in Maryland, letters Administration on the personal estate of

J. RUSSELL BROWNING,

late of Garrett County, deceased. All persons having claims against the deceased are hereby warned to exhibit the same with the vouchers thereof legally authenticated to the subscriber, on or before the 29th day of April, next; they may otherwise by law be excluded from all benefit of said estate. All persons knowing themselves indebted to said estate are requested to make immediate payment.

Given under my hand this 29th day of October, 1908.

M. A. BROWNING,
Administrator,
Kitzmiller, Md.

A Meritorious Institution

Established as a State Bank in 1888 with a capital of $25,000.00; changed to a National Bank in 1903 and capital increased to $50,000.00; TODAY with a capital and surplus of $85,000.00 and total resources of over $500,000.00 we are

BETTER,

BIGGER

AND

STRONGER

than ever. During the 20 years of our existence, our aim has been to extend to our patrons the best possible service. Our steady growth is evidence that the banking institution, which throws the greatest safeguards around its business in order to protect its depositors merits the confidence of the public. If you are not a customer of this Bank let this be your invitation to become one; our relations will be mutually profitable.

Garrett National Bank

Of Oakland, Maryland.

Mr. Elliot C. Harvey, of near Gorman, was a visitor to Oakland Tuesday.

Mr. Thaddeus C. Hinebaugh, of Lake Delawder, was in Oakland Monday.

Mr. James M. Litzinger, of Grafton, was in the city Tuesday evening on business.

Mr. John H. Ratter, of Kitzmiller, was in the city a day or two this week on business.

Mr. L. L. Savage, of Sang Run, was in the city last Friday when he paid this office a business visit.

Messrs. John T. Harvey and Ed. Harvey, of near Blaine, were in the city Saturday on business.

Miss Grace Jones has returned to her home in Oakland from an extended visit to relatives in Wheeling, W. Va.

Mr. Russell Teats left Oakland last night for Columbus, Ohio, where he expects to remain the balance of the winter.

Mrs. Annie Devries, of Cumberland, who was the guest of her niece, Mrs. W. R. Offutt, for several days, returned home Monday morning.

Mrs. James W. Leathers, who visited relatives and friends in Bloomington and Decatur, Ill., returned to her home in Oakland Saturday night.

Mr. and Mrs. King Delawder went to Piedmont this morning where they will be the guests for a few days of Mr. and Mrs. W. T. Jamesson.

The supper served by the ladies of St. Mark's church one evening last week was quite a success financially, the gross sum realized being $83.

Miss Kate Shirer, of Grafton, arrived in Oakland last night and will remain over Christmas as the guest of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. S. E. Shirer.

Robert Browning has purchased the stock and fixtures in the White restaurant, located in the Litzinger building and will reopen the place this morning.

Mrs. Nettie Loughridge-Thrasher left here Saturday morning for New York City where she will spend the holidays with her sister, Miss May Loughridge.

Mrs. E. Manges, who spent several weeks with her daughters, Misses Catherine and Anna, at York, Pa., returned to her home in Oakland yesterday afternoon.

Mr. Frank E. Bird, who has been engaged for the past several months as a telegragh operator at Pinto, came home yesterday to spend the holidays with his parents.

Mr. George J. Pool, one of the leading business men of Kitzmiller, this county, was in Oakland last Friday on business connected with some interests in his home town.

One of the largest turkeys brought to Oakland in recent years was exhibited in front of Offutt's store yesterday. The bird was dressed and weighed twenty-four pounds.

Mrs. B. F. Selby and little daughter left Tuesday for Philadelphia where they expect to remain for several days as the guests of Mr. and Mrs. McQuay, Mrs. Selby's parents.

Last night the pupils of the Oakland Public School gave an entertainment in the school building which was well patronized and netted $15 which sum will be added to the library fund.

Messr. Peter Yost and Ralph Engle, two of District No.3's best citizens, who served as jurors at the present term of court, receiving their discharge Friday, called at this office prior to their departure for home.

Mr. Ira Beckwith, who spent several days last and this week at Johnstown and Windber, Pa., returned to his home in Oakland Tuesday morning. After the holidays Mr. Beckwith will go to Johnstown where he has a position.

In last week's issue of the Frostburg Mining Journal a note was published stating that thirty years ago on Tuesday of this week the mercury stood at twenty degrees below zero in Oakland, while at Grantsville it registered twenty-two degrees below. Whew! That was pretty chilly.

Mr. Albert A. Hinebaugh, who went to Old Mexico early in the fall where he had charge of a number of coal washers for an American firm operating coal mines in that country, returned to his home in Oakland Sunday night. While in the land of the "greasers" Mr. Hinebaugh had some experiences which are met with by nearly every one visiting that part of the world. Spanish is almost universally spoken and for days at a time Mr. Hinebaugh never heard his native tongue, which fact in a great measure made him long for home and hastened his return.

CAPITAL $50,000.00 — THE — SURPLUS AND PROFITS $29,000.00

First National Bank

OAKLAND, MD.

GOVERNMENT DEPOSITORY.

One of the Largest and Best Equipped Banking Houses in Maryland.

Vaults absolutely Fire and Burglar proof.

Safety Deposit Boxes for Rent

Every courtesy extended consistent with sound banking.

Pays 3 Per Cent.

on Time Deposits—Compounded Semi-Annually

Home Savings Banks Free. $1.00 will start an account.

The Depositor with a Dollar account receives the same consideration as the largest depositor.

COME IN AND GET ACQUAINTED

GARRETT COUNTY WON SOME PRIZES IN THE WEST

Reports From National Apple Growers' Convention Encouraging.

To the Editor of The Republican:

The readers of THE REPUBLICAN will remember that in the edition of December 10th it was stated that the choicest apples from the Baltimore exhibition were to be packed and shipped to Council Bluffs, Iowa, there to be exhibited at the National Apple Growers' Convention. This was done, and I have just received a letter from the secretary of our Maryland Society, saying that thirty-three individual plates of apples were entered by Maryland in the competition, and that on these were won nineteen first premiums, 4 second, and five third premiums. Many of these plates were of Garrett county apples. From Council Bluffs this same fruit will be shipped to Wilmington, Del., and there will be shown for the fourth time in competition. It will thus be seen that it is quite worth while to take some trouble and pains to bring forward the products of our farms, and not only show Maryland, but all the States, what Garrett county can produce. I trust that next fall the interest in helping along our county exhibits will be greater than ever.

The Court House Commission, appreciating the advantage that it would be to the county to have a Bureau of Information and Statistics, and a permanent exhibit of the products of our mines, and of our farms, have designated a room in the new court house for that purpose. A collection has already been secured, and others will be added from time to time. To carry out the idea in full I would ask through your columns, that our farmers take an interest in forming a complete collection of various grains which we produce, and let us have three samples (the best only) of each kind of grain grown in Garrett county on exhibition constantly in this room. When any one can produce a better sample than either of the three, the poorest one to give place. This will create a wholesome rivalry, as has been shown by the many samples of corn placed in the windows of the First National Bank. It will inform our farmers where they can secure the best, cleanest seed, and show what can be done; and to strangers coming to our county it will be an object lesson as to what can be produced in our soil and climate.

We have twice carried off the prize for the best apple collection. I am now anxious to try for prizes upon grain as well. This year, one first on buckwheat, and a second upon wheat, makes a good beginning.

When the Farmers' Institute meeting is held in Oakland, on December 30th, I would suggest that any one who thinks he has particularly good grain or corn, bring in a sample, and let us start our permanent exhibit. Yours truly,

W. McCULLOH BROWN,
Pres. State Horticultural Society.

Mr. Leonard Lochner, of Lonaconing, who has been an employe of this office for the past several months, was forced to relinquish his position this week on account of failing health and returned to his home on Monday afternoon where we hope he will recuperate and return to Oakland shortly.

The price of the paper which is used for THE REPUBLICAN has increased during the past year from $50 per ton to $60 per ton, yet the subscription price remains the same. If the paper makers continue to raise on us we will be compelled to advance the subscription price in order to come out whole, much as we would regret to do so.

Mr. Wallace L. Mason, who recently entered the ministry as a supply with a station dear Parkersburg, has resigned his pastorate and is making arrangements to go into the furniture and undertaking business at Kitzmiller, this county. He will be associated with his brother, Prof. "Teddy" Mason, in the business, the latter being a graduated embalmer and undertaker.

Christmas is what we make it. We know many homes where the gifts would seem poor enough if it were not for the love that goes with them. Trifling toys would seem valueless; but look at the love and sacrifice they represent, and all Gould's ill-gotten wealth could not buy them. The poorer the giver the greater the gift—have we not read how the widow's mite outweighed the whole treasury?

Mr. John R. Browning, residing a few miles north of Oakland near Hoopole Road, was stricken with a peculiar ailment Sunday morning, when he lost the power of articulation and the ability even to write. He was brought to Oakland the same day by a member of his family where he was examined by a physician. The case is a puzzling one but his physician thinks that he will recover his lost faculties.

To save money see Baumgartner on nuts and candies.

THERE'S a little old man with silvery hair
An' a long white beard 'at flies in the air,
With twinklin' black eyes an' a rosy, red face,
An' onct a year he comes to our place,
An' our little maid
An' our little man
Ez anxious to see 'im soon's they can.

But you better take keer, fer some folks say
'At if yer naughty he'll fly away,
An' quicker'n you kin whistle—phew—
Away he's gone up the chimney flue!
So our little maid
An' our little man
Ez tryin' to be jest ez good's they can.

But ef yer good an' 'bey yer pa
An' don't never cry an' vex yer ma
He'll fill yer stockin's with games an toys
An' nuts an' sweets an' all sorts o' joys.
So our little maid
An' our little man
Wants Santy to come jes' as quick 's he can.

ROY GEORGE KILLED NEAR DEER PARK THIS MORNING

By Baltimore and Ohio Passenger Train No. 3.

Roy George, a trackman, aged eighteen years, son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles George, of Deer Park, was killed by Baltimore and Ohio train No. 3 this morning at the tool house located a short distance east of Deer Park.

Track Foreman William Landis and Nathan Friend, another trackman, in company with young George had just arrived at the tool house when an east bound freight passed by, the latter remaining on the track and did not notice the approach of the passenger train, the spot where he was standing being on a sharp curve. The pilot of the engine struck him and knocked him into the ditch alongside the track where he was picked up by his companions in a few moments, but life had fled, the young man's neck being broken by the impact.

He was a splendid type of manhood and was a good moral young man.

Ex-County Commissioner Peter J. Stephen, of New Germany, spent a day or two in Oakland this week, it being his first visit to Oakland since he retired from public office. Mr. Stephen was very much gratified with the appearance of the new court house and expressed it as his opinion that Garrett county need not be ashamed of anything she undertakes looking to the welfare of her citizens. Mr. Stephen was warmly greeted by his many warm friends here.

The Bond Lumber Company at Bond, Md., will give employment to sixty additional men after January 4 to establish two more camps. This plant will be cut out in about one year's time, but another large plant will utilize the Bond plant in cutting out about 8,000 acres of timber in West Virginia which will last for about five additional years. Bond brothers will operate in West Virginia and their partner, Mr. DuBois, will operate the largest saw mill in the world in the tate of Washington. He owns eighty thousand acres of virgin timber land in that state.

Masonic Election.

The annual election of officers for Oakland Lodge, A. F. & A. M., was held by the lodge at the regular communication on Tuesday night, resulting as follows: W. M., R. E. Sliger; S. W., Julius C. Renninger; J. W., A. T. Matthews; treasurer, E. J. Fringer; secretary, Dr. B. F. Selby.

Christmas Service.

In St. Mark's Ev. Lutheran church Rev. E. Manges will deliver a Christmas sermon tomorrow morning at ten o'clock. All are cordially invited.

K. of P. Fair.

Garrett Lodge No. 113, Knights of Pythias, of Oakland, will hold a Fair and Supper in their lodge room during the holidays beginning Monday, Dec. 28th, and continuing to and including Dec. 31st. This promises to be an entertaining event and excellent suppers will be served each evening. There will be plenty of amusement. The Mountain City Band, of Oakland, will render music for the occasion.

Students Home.

Among those who have returned from school at various points to spend the holidays with their parents in Oakland are Miss Anna Gonder, from St. Mary's Seminary; Ralph Thayer, from the West Virginia University at Morgantown; Fred Townshend, from the Randolph-Macon Academy at Roanoke; Milton and Edward Sincell, from Gettysburg College; Dr. W. W. Grant, from Maryland University, Baltimore; Harry L. McComas, from medical department, Maryland University; Miss Nell Workman, from West Virginia Wesleyan University at Buckhannon.

Calendars Received.

This office acknowledges with thanks the receipt of handsome as well as useful calendars from the following:

The Garrett National Bank of Oakland, a very beautiful calendar with a reproduction in colors of Mt. Vernon, Gen. Washington's country seat.

From the Union Central Life Insurance Co., a large calendar worthy of space on any wall, especially that of an office or other business place.

From the First National Bank of Oakland an almanac containing besides the calendar months useful information and data concerning banks and banking rules and laws.

Four Per Cent. Interest.

The First National Bank, Friendsville, pays four per cent. interest on time deposits. Place your money in this bank where its earning capacity will be greater than in any other banking institution in the county.

THE FIRST NATIONAL BANK,
Friendsville, Md.

THE fact that Christmas comes on Friday this year will suggest an explanation to those who are so unlucky as to be overlooked in the distribution of gifts.

NEW COURT HOUSE OPENED

For Inspection Last Thursday Night and Was Visited By Many.

Last Thursday night, as announced from the bench by Judge Henderson, Garrett county's new court house was opened for inspection by the ladies of Oakland and their escorts, many availing themselves of the opportunity to visit the building.

Shortly after the lights in the building were turned on a fuse on the transmitter outside of the structure blew out and instantly the lights went out, leaving the people who had gathered there in utter darkness. The defect in the fuse was remedied in a short time and the lights were again turned on.

In the various rooms the county officials were present and showed the visitors around in their respective offices, while in the court chamber Judge Henderson was present and received.

Hundreds visited the building, all of whom expressed delight for the opportunity thus given them.

DEATH RECORD.

ANDREW B. GONDER.

In the death of Andrew B. Gonder, which sad event occurred at his home on Second street in Oakland, Tuesday evening, December 22nd, Oakland and Garrett county in general, lost one of its best known and highest respected citizens. The deceased exerted an influence for good by his strong personality which will be felt for years to come. For probably thirty years in all, Mr. Gonder was a Justice of the Peace in this town. In all matters brought before him he was a stickler for truth and justice and he allowed no other motive to circumscribe his opinions. He was well versed in law, highly educated and a most interesting conversationalist. He was born and raised in Cumberland, coming to Oakland about the year 1875 and at the time of his death was nearing his sixty-fourth year. He was married in 1883 to Miss Mollie Casteel, daughter of the late William Casteel, of near Oakland. To this union were born seven children, all of whom, with Mrs. Gonder, survive. The children are Andrew, Thomas, Francis, Jean, Kate and Anna, of Oakland, and Bernard, of Butte, Montana. The funeral will probably occur on Saturday morning from St. Peter's Catholic church, of which Mr. Gonder was a life-long member. As soon as his death was announced a meeting of the members of the Garrett county bar was held when it was decided to attend the funeral in a body and a committee consisting of Messrs. G. S. Hamill, E. H. Sincell and J. C. Renninger was appointed to draft suitable resolutions to be presented to the Court on Tuesday morning next.

Notice to Delinquent Renters of Garrett County Telephone Company.

At a meeting of the Board of Directors of the Garrett County Telephone Company, held at Hoyes, Md., Dec. 17, 1908, the following motion was made and adopted by the Board as a whole: That all parties who are in arrears with their rents to the amount of six months that if they are not paid by the 1st day of March, 1909, they will be placed in the proper officers' hands for collection.

C. V. GUARD, Sec'y.

ARTHUR TOWNSHEND

Santa Claus is Here Again

Loaded down and you can get anything you want in

FANCY BASKETS,
MIRRORS,
TOILET SETTS,
GLOVE BOXES,
WRITING PORTFOLIOS,
COLLAR and CUFF BOXES,
NUT CRACKERS,
PAPER WEIGHTS,
SILK and LINEN HANDKERCHIEFS
LINK BUTTONS,
STICK PINS,
SCARFS,
TIES,
SUSPENDERS,
FANCY CHINA,
FANCY BOX PAPER,
SMOKERS' SETTS, Etc

Xmas For Everybody

Also a Fine Line of

NUTS, CURRANTS,
ORANGES, RAISINS,
CANDR, CITRON,
FIGS, DATES,
FRUITS, Etc.

BARGAINS IN MEN'S & BOYS' OVERCOATS

ARTHUR TOWNSHEND

The American Christmas Girl

INTO THE PRIMITIVE

BY ROBERT AMES BENNET

ILLUSTRATIONS BY RAY WALTERS

COPYRIGHT 1905, BY A. C. McCLURG & CO.

CHAPTER VI.

Man and Gentleman.

NIGHT had almost passed, and all three, soothed by the refreshing coolness which preceded the dawn, were sleeping their soundest, when a sudden fierce roar followed instantly by a piercing squeal caused even Blake to start up in panic. Miss Leslie, too terrified to scream, clung to Winthrope, who crouched on his haunches, little less overcome.

"It's Only a Beast That's Killed Something Down Below."

Blake was the first to recover and puzzle out the meaning of the crashing in the jungle and the ferocious growls directly beneath them.

"Lie still," he whispered. "We're all right. It's only a beast that killed something down below us."

All sat listening, and as the noise of the animals in the thicket died away they could hear the beast beneath them tear at the body of its victim.

"The air feels like dawn," whispered Winthrope. "We'll soon be able to see the brute."

"And he us," rejoined Blake.

In this both were mistaken. During the brief false dawn they were puzzled by the odd appearance of the ground. The sudden flood of full daylight found them staring down into a dense white fog.

"So they have that here!" muttered Blake—"fever-fog!"

"Beastly shame!" echoed Winthrope. "I'm sure the creature has gone off."

This assertion was met by an outburst of snarls and yells that made all start back and crouch down again in their sheltering hollow. As before Blake was the first to recover.

"Bet you're right," he said. "The big one has gone off, and a pack of these African coyotes are having a scrap over the bones."

"You mean jackals. It sounds like the nasty beasts."

"If it wasn't for that fog I'd go down and get our share of the game."

"Would it not be very dangerous, Mr. Blake?" asked Miss Leslie. "What a fearful noise!"

"I've chased coyotes off a calf with a rope; but that's not the proposition. You don't find me fooling around in that sewer gas of a fog. We'll roost right where we are till the sun does for it. We've got enough malaria in us already."

"Will it be long, Blake?" asked Winthrope.

"Huh? Getting hungry this quick? Wait till you've tramped around a week, with nothing to eat but your shoes."

"Surely, Mr. Blake, it will not be so bad!" protested Miss Leslie.

"Sorry, Miss Jenny; but cocoanut palms don't blow over every day, and when those nuts are gone what are we going to do for the next meal?"

"Could we not make bows?" suggested Winthrope. "There seems to be no end of game about."

"Bows—and arrows without points! Neither of us could hit a barn door, anyway."

"We could practice."

"Sure—six weeks' training on air pudding. I can do better with a handful of stones."

"Then we should go at once to the cliffs," said Miss Leslie.

"Now you're talking—and it's Pike Peak or bust for ours. Here's one night to the good; but we won't last many more if we don't get fire. It's flints we're after now."

"Could we not make fire by rubbing sticks?" said Winthrope, recalling his suggestion of the previous morning. "I've heard that natives have no trouble—"

"So've I, and what's more, I've seen 'em do it. Never could make a go of it myself, though."

"But if you remember how it is done we have at least some chance—"

"Give you ten to one odds! No; we'll scratch around for a flint good and plenty before we waste time that way."

"The mist is going," observed Miss Leslie.

"That's no lie. Now for our coyotes. Where's my club?"

"They've all left," said Winthrope, peering down. "I can see the ground clearly, and there is not a sign of the beasts."

"There are the bones—what's left of them," added Blake. "It's a small deer, I suppose. Well, here goes."

He threw down his club and dropped the loose end of the creeper after it. As the line straightened he twisted the upper part around his leg and was about to slide to the ground when he remembered Miss Leslie.

"Think you can make it alone?" he asked.

The girl held up her hands, sore and swollen from the lacerations of the thorns. Blake looked at them, frowned, and turned to Winthrope.

"Um! you got it, too, and in the face," he grunted. "How's your ankle?"

Winthrope wriggled his foot about and felt the injured ankle.

"I fancy it is much better," he answered. "There seems to be no swelling, and there is no pain now."

"That's lucky; though it will tune up later. Take a slide, now. We've got to hustle our breakfast and find a way to get over the river."

"How wide is it?" inquired Winthrope, gazing at his swollen hands.

"About 300 yards at high tide. May be narrower at ebb."

"Could you not build a raft?" suggested Miss Leslie.

Blake smiled at her simplicity. "Why not a boat? We've got a penknife."

"Well, then, I can swim."

"Bully for you! Guess, though, we'll try something else. The river is chuck full of alligators. What you waiting for, Pat? We haven't got all day to fool around here."

Winthrope twisted the creeper about his leg and slid to the ground, doing all he could to favor his hands. He found that he could walk without pain, and at once stepped over beside Blake's club, glancing nervously around at the jungle.

Blake jerked up the end of the creeper, and passed the loop about Miss Leslie. Before she had time to become frightened he swung her over and lowered her to the ground lightly as a feather. He followed, hand under hand, and stood for a moment beside her, staring at the dew-dripping foliage of the jungle. Then the remains of the night's quarry caught his eye, and he walked over to examine them.

"Say, Pat," he called, "these don't look like deer bones. I'd say—yes; there's the feet—it's a pig."

"Any tusks?" demanded Winthrope.

Miss Leslie looked away. A heap of bones, however cleanly gnawed, is not a pleasant sight. The skull of the animal seemed to be missing; but Blake stumbled upon it in a tuft of grass and kicked it out upon the open ground. Every shred of hide and gristle had been gnawed from it by the jackals; yet if there had been any doubt as to the creature's identity there was evidence to spare in the savage tusks which projected from the jaws.

"Je-rusalem!" observed Blake; "this old boar must have been something of a scrapper his own self."

"In India they have been known to kill a tiger. Can you knock out the tusks?"

"What for?"

"Well, you said we had nothing for arrow points—"

"Good boy! We'll cinch them and ask questions later."

A few blows with the club loosened the tusks. Blake handed them over to Winthrope, together with the whisky flask, and led the way to the half-broken patch through the thicket. A free use of his club made the path a little more worthy of the name, and as there was less need of haste than on the previous evening, Winthrope and Miss Leslie came through with only a few fresh scratches. Once on open ground again, they soon gained the fallen palms.

At a word from Blake, Miss Leslie hastened to fetch nuts for Winthrope to husk and open. Blake, who had plucked three leaves from a fan palm near the edge of the jungle, began to split long shreds from one of the huge leaves of a cocoanut palm. This gave him a quantity of coarse, stiff fiber, part of which he twisted in a cord and used to tie one of the leaves of the fan palm over her head.

"How's that for a bonnet?" he demanded.

The improvised head-gear bore so grotesque a resemblance to a recent type of picture hat that Winthrope could not repress a derisive laugh. Miss Leslie, however, examined the hat and gave her opinion without a sign of amusement. "I think it is splendid, Mr. Blake. If we must go out in the sun again, it is just the thing to protect one."

"Yes. Here's two more I've fixed for you. Ready yet, Winthrope?"

The Englishman nodded, and the three sat down to their third feast of cocoanuts. They were hungry enough at the start, and Blake added no little keenness even to his own appetite by a grim joke on the slender prospects of the next meal, to the effect that if in the meantime not eaten themselves they might possibly find their next meal within a week.

"But if we must move, could we not take some of the nuts with us?" suggested Winthrope.

Blake pondered over this as he ate, and when fully satisfied he helped himself up with his club he motioned the others to remain seated.

"There are your hats and the strings," he said, "but you won't need them now. I'm going to take a prospect along the river, and while I'm gone, you can make a try at stringing nuts on some of this leaf fiber."

"But, Mr. Blake, do you think it's quite safe?" asked Miss Leslie, and she glanced from him to the jungle.

"Safe?" he repeated. "Well, nothing ate you yesterday, if that's anything to go by. It's all I know about it."

He did not wait for further protests. Swinging his club on his shoulder he started for the break in the jungle which marked the hippopotamus path. The others looked at each other, and Miss Leslie sighed. "If only he were a gentleman!" she complained.

Winthrope turned abruptly to the cocoanuts.

CHAPTER VII.

Around the Headland.

IT was mid morning before Blake reappeared. He came from the mangrove swamp where it ran down into the sea. His trousers were smeared to the thigh with slimy mud; but as he approached the drooping brim of his palm-leaf hat failed to hide his exultant expression.

"Come on!" he called. "I've struck it. We'll be over in half an hour."

"How's that?" asked Winthrope.

"Bar," answered Blake, hurrying forward. "Sling on your hats and get into my coat again, Miss Jenny. The sun's hot as yesterday. How about the nuts?"

"Here they are. Three strings; all that I fancied we could carry," explained Winthrope.

"All right. The big one is mine, I suppose. I'll take two. We'll leave the other. Lean on me if your ankle is still weak."

"Thanks; I can make it alone. But must we go through mud like that?"

"Not on this side, at least. Come on! We don't want to miss the ebb."

Blake's impatience discouraged further inquiries. He had turned as he spoke, and the others followed him, walking close together. The pace was sharp for Winthrope, and his ankle soon began to twinge. He was compelled to accept Miss Leslie's invitation to take her arm. With her help he managed to keep within a few yards of Blake.

Instead of plunging into the mangrove wood, which here was undergrown with a thicket of giant ferns, Blake skirted around in the open until they came to the seashore. The tide was at its lowest, and he waved his club towards a long sand pit which curved out around the seaward edge of the mangroves. Whether this was part of the river's bar or had been heaped up by the cyclone would have been beyond Winthrope's knowledge had the question occurred to him. It was enough for him that the sand was smooth and hard as a race track.

Presently the party came to the end of the spit, where the river water rippled over the sand with the last feeble out-suck of the ebb. On their right they had a sweeping view of the river, around the flank of the mangrove screen. Blake halted at the edge of the water and half turned.

"C'mon up," he said. "It's shallow enough; but do you see those logs over on the mud-bank? Those are alligators."

"Mercy—and you expect me to wade among such creatures?" cried Miss Leslie.

"I went almost across an hour ago and they didn't bother me any. Come on! There's a wind in that cloud out seaward. Inside half an hour the surf'll be rolling up on this bar like all Niagara."

"If we must, we must, Miss Genevieve," urged Winthrope. "Step behind me and gather up your skirts. It's best to keep one's clothes dry in the tropics."

The girl blushed, and retained his arm.

"I prefer to help you," she replied.

"Come on!" called Blake, and he splashed out into the water.

The others followed within arm's-length, nervously conscious of the rows of motionless reptiles on the mud-flat, not 100 yards distant.

In the center of the bar, where the water was a trifle over knee-deep, some large creature came darting downstream beneath the surface and passed with a violent swirl between Blake and his companions. At Miss Leslie's scream, Blake whirled about and jabbed with his club at the supposed alligator.

"Where's the brute? Has he got you?" he shouted.

"No, no; he went by!" gasped Winthrope. "There he is!"

A long bony snout, fringed on either side by a row of lateral teeth, was flung up into view.

"Sawfish!" said Blake, and he waded on across the bar without further comment.

Miss Leslie had been on the point of fainting. The tone of Blake's voice revived her instantly.

There were no more scares. A few minutes later they waded out upon a stretch of clean sand on the south of the river. Before them the beach lay in a flattened curve, which at the far end hooked sharply to the left and appeared to terminate at the foot of the towering limestone cliffs of the headland. A mile or more inland the river jungle edged in close to the cliffs; but from there to the beach the forest was separated from the wall of rock by a little sandy plain, covered with creeping plants and small palms. The greatest width of the open space was hardly more than a quarter of a mile.

Blake paused for a moment at high-tide mark, and Winthrope instantly squatted down to nurse his ankle.

"I say, Blake," he said, "can't you find me some kind of a crutch? It is only a few yards around to those trees."

"Good Lord! you haven't been fool enough to overstrain that ankle— Yes, you have. Dammit! why couldn't you tell me before?"

"It did not feel so painful in the water."

"I helped the best I could," interposed Miss Leslie. "I think if you could get Mr. Winthrope a crutch—"

"Crutch!" growled Blake. "How long do you think it would take me to wade through the mud? And look at that cloud! We're in for a squall. Here!"

He handed the girl the smaller string of cocoanuts, flung the other up the beach and stooped for Winthrope to mount his back. He then started off along the beach at a sharp trot. Miss Leslie followed as best she could, the heavy cocoanuts swinging about with every step and bruising her tender body.

The wind was coming faster than Blake had calculated. Before they had run 200 paces they heard the roar of rain-lashed water, and the squall struck them with a force that almost overthrew the girl. With the wind came torrents of rain that drove through their thickest garments and drenched them to the skin within the first half-minute.

Blake slackened his pace to a walk and plodded sullenly along beneath the driving downpour. He kept to the lower edge of the beach, where the sand was firmest, for the force of the falling deluge beat down the waves and held in check the breakers which the wind sought to roll up the beach.

The rain storm was at its height when they reached the foot of the cliffs. The gray rock towered above them 30 or 40 feet high. Blake deposited Winthrope upon a wet ledge and straightened up to scan the headland. Here and there ledges ran more than half-way up the rocky wall; in other places the crest was notched by deep clefts; but nowhere within sight did either offer a continuous path to the summit. Blake grunted with disgust.

"It'd take a fire ladder to get up this side," he said. "We'll have to try the other, if we can get around the point. I'm going on ahead. You can follow, after Pat has rested his ankle. Keep a sharp eye out for anything in the flint line—quartz or agate. That means fire. Another thing, when this rain blows over, don't let your clothes dry on you. I've got my hands full enough without having to nurse you through malarial fever. Don't forget the cocoanuts, and if I don't show up by noon save me some."

Stopped to Survey the Coast Beyond.

He stooped to drink from a pool in the rock which was overflowing with the cool, pure rainwater, and started off at his sharpest pace. Winthrope and Miss Leslie, seated side by side in dripping misery, watched him swing away through the rain without energy enough to call out a parting word.

Beneath the cliff the sand beach was succeeded by a talus of rocky debris which in places sloped up from the water 10 or 15 feet. The lower part of the slope consisted of bowlders and water-worn stones, over which the surf, reinforced by the rising tide, was beginning to break with an angry roar.

Blake picked his way quickly over the smaller stones near the top of the slope, now and then bending to snatch up a fragment that seemed to differ from the others. Finding nothing but limestone he soon turned his attention solely to the passage around the headland. Here he had expected to find the surf much heavier. But the shore was protected by a double line of reefs, so close in that channel between did not show a whitecap. This was fortunate, since in places the talus here sank down almost to the level of low tide. Even a moderate surf would have rendered farther progress impracticable.

Another 100 paces brought Blake to the second corner of the cliff, which jutted out in a little point. He clambered around it and stopped to survey the coast beyond. Within the last few minutes the squall had blown over and the rain began to moderate its downpour. The sun, bursting through the clouds, told that the storm was almost past, and its flood of direct light cleared the view.

Along the south side of the cliff the sea extended in twice as far as on the north. From the end of the talus the coast trended off four or five miles to the south-southwest in a shallow bight, whose southern extremity was bounded by a second limestone headland. This ridge ran inland parallel to the first, and from a point some little distance back from the shore was covered with a growth of leafless trees.

Between the two ridges lay a plain, open along the shore, but a short distance inland covered with a jungle of tall yellow grass, above which, here and there, rose the tops of scrubby, leafless trees and the graceful crests of slender-shafted palms. Blake's attention was drawn to the latter by that feeling of artificiality which their exotic appearance so often wakens in the mind of the northern-bred man even after long residence in the tropics. But in a moment he turned away with a growl. "More of

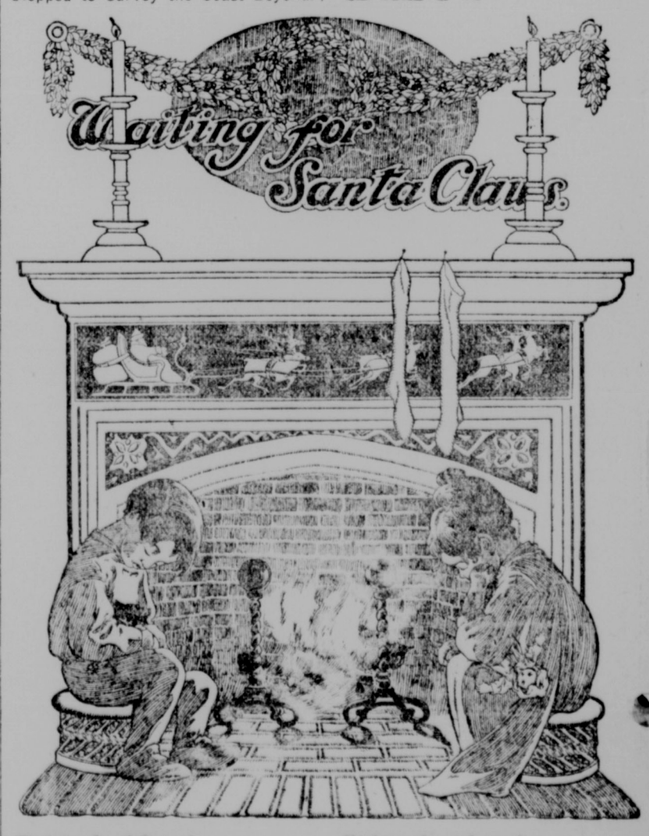
[illegible]

CHAPTER I.—The story opens with the shipwreck of the steamer on which Miss Genevieve Leslie, an American heiress, Lord Winthrope, an Englishman, and Tom Blake, a brusque American, were passengers. The three were tossed upon an uninhabited island and were the only ones not drowned. Blake recovered from a drunken stupor.

CHAPTER II.—Blake, shunned on the boat, because of his roughness, became a hero as preserver of the helpless pair. The Englishman was suing for the hand of Miss Leslie. Blake started to swim back to the ship to recover what was left.

CHAPTER III.—Blake returned safely. Winthrope wasted his last match on a cigarette, for which he was scored by Blake. Their first meal was a dead fish.

CHAPTER IV.—The trio started a ten mile hike for higher land. Thirst attacked them. Blake was compelled to carry Miss Leslie on account of weariness. He taunted Winthrope.



Tick tack, tick tock,
Three minutes to eight by the nursery clock.
Tick tack, tick tock,
"D'you think it's nearly twelve o'clock?"

Tick tack, tick tock,
"Supposing he's forgot us, Jack!"

Tick tack, tick tock,
"Won't nurse be cross when she comes back!"

Tick tack, tick tock,
"Did anyone hear Father Christmas knock?"
Tick tack, tick tock,
(It was nurse who came with a loaded sack!)

E. M. B.

THE REPUBLICAN
Job Printing Department

WITHIN the past year the increased made upon the Job Printing Department of The Republican necessitated many improvements, and to meet the requirements of our rapidly increasing business an addition of considerable proportions to our present building is in contemplation; new type and improved machinery must be purchased—but in the meantime all orders will be executed in a most satisfactory manner.

The products of our Job Printery are all models in the class—our customers are numerous and well satisfied, and wnen ordering

Statements, Vouchers,
Envelopes, Cards,
Sale Bills, Posters,
Bank Forms, Billheads,
Letterheads, Tags,
Programs, Folders,

and

Letter Press Printing of all Kinds

They are confident that the work will be Satisfactory in every particular---in WORKMANSHIP, PRICE and PAPER.

WE MAKE A SPECIALTY OF PRINTING

Lumber AND Coal Companies' Forms
Bank Stationery, Hotel Prospectus,
Lodge and Society Laws,
Reports, Etc.

It will cost you nothing to submit your Printing to us. Estimates will be cheerfully furnished you free. It must be borne in mind, however, that we do not do "cheap" printing, but we do Good Printing which has a par value of one hundred cents for every dollar invested in the product of THE REPUBLICAN PRINTERY.

THE REPUBLICAN
Job Printing Departm't
OAKI AND, MARYLAND.

HUNTING THE ANTELOPE

BY

THEODORE ROOSEVELT

[Copyright, 1885, by G. P. Putnam's Sons. Published under arrangement with G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York and London.]

DURING the morning I came in sight of several small bands or pairs of antelope. Most of them saw me as soon as or before I saw them, and after watching me with intense curiosity as long as I was in sight and at a distance, made off at once as soon as I went into a hollow or appeared to be approaching too near. Twice, in scanning the country narrowly with the glasses, from behind a sheltering divide, bands of prong-horn were seen that had not discovered me.

In each case the horse was at once left to graze, while I started off after the game, nearly a mile distant. For the first half mile I could walk upright or go along half stooping; then, as the distance grew closer, I had to crawl on all fours and keep behind any little broken bank, or take advantage of a small, dry watercourse; and toward the end work my way flat on my face, wriggling like a serpent, using every stunted sagebrush or patch of cactus as a cover, bareheaded under the blazing sun. In each case, after nearly an hour's irksome, thirsty work, the stalk failed. One band simply ran off without a second's warning, alarmed at some awkward movement on my part, and without giving a chance for a shot.

In the other instance, while still at very long and uncertain range, I heard the sharp barking alarm-note of one of the prong-horn; the whole band instantly raising their heads and gazing intently at their would-be destroyer. They were a very long way off; but, seeing it was hopeless to try to get nearer I rested my rifle over a little mound of earth and fired. The dust came up in a puff to one side of the nearest antelope; the whole band took a few jumps and turned again; the second shot struck at their feet, and they went off like so many race-horses, being missed again as they ran. I sat up by a sage-brush thinking they would of course not come back, when to my surprise I saw them wheel round with the precision of a cavalry squadron, all in line and fronting me, the white and brown markings on their heads and throats showing like the facings on soldiers' uniforms; and then back they came charging up till again within long range, when they wheeled their line as if on a pivot and once more made off, this time for good, not heeding an ineffectual fusillade from the Winchester.

Antelope often go through a series of regular evolutions, like so many trained horsemen, wheeling, turning, halting, and running as if under command; and their coming back to again run the (as it proved very harmless) gauntlet of my fire was due either to curiosity or to one of those panicky freaks which occasionally seize those ordinarily wary animals, and cause them to run into danger easily avoided by creatures commonly much more readily approached than they are. I had fired half a dozen shots without effect; but while no one ever gets over his feeling of self indignation at missing an easy shot at close quarters, any one who hunts antelope and is not of a disposition so timid as never to take chances, soon learns that he has to expect to expend a good deal of powder and lead before bagging his game.

Only by frantic struggles and floundering we managed to get over.

By mid-day we reached a dry creek and followed up its course for a mile or so, till a small spot of green in the side of a bank showed the presence of water, a little pool of which lay underneath. The ground was so rotten that it was with difficulty I could get Manitou down where he could drink; but at last both of us satisfied our thirst, and he was turned loose to graze, with his saddle off, so as to cool his back, and I, after eating a biscuit, lay on my face on the ground—there was no shade of any sort near—and dozed until a couple of hours' rest and feed had put the horse in good trim for the afternoon ride. When it came to crossing over the dry creek on whose bank we had rested, we almost went down in a quicksand, and it was only by frantic struggles and flounderings that we managed to get over.

On account of these quicksands and mud-holes, crossing the creeks on the prairie is often very disagreeable work. Even when apparently perfectly dry the bottom may have merely a thin crust of hard mud and underneath a fathomless bed of slime. If the grass appears wet and with here and there a few tussocks of taller blades in it, it is well to avoid it. Often a man may have to go along a creek nearly a mile before he can find a safe crossing, or else run the risk of seeing his horse mired hard and fast. When a horse is once in a mud-hole it will perhaps so exhaust itself by its first desperate and fruitless struggle that it is almost impossible to get it out. Its bridle and saddle have to be taken off; if another horse is along the lariat is drawn from the pommel of the latter's saddle to the neck of the one that is in, and it is hauled out by main force. Otherwise a man may have to work half a day, fixing the horse's legs in the right position and then taking it by the forelock and endeavoring to get it to make a plunge; each plunge bringing it perhaps a few inches nearer the firm ground. Quicksands are even more dangerous than these mud-holes, as, if at all deep, a creature that cannot get out immediately is sure to be speedily engulfed. Many parts of the Little Missouri are impassable on account of these quicksands. Always in crossing unknown ground that looks dangerous it is best to feel your way very cautiously along and, if possible, to find out some cattle trail or even game trail which can be followed.

For some time after leaving the creek nothing was seen; until, on coming over the crest of the next great divide, I came in sight of a band of six or eight prong-horn about a quarter of a mile off to my right hand. There was a slight breeze from the southeast, which blew diagonally across my path towards the antelopes. The latter, after staring at me a minute, as I rode slowly on, suddenly started at full speed to run directly up wind, and therefore in a direction that would cut the line of my course less than half a mile ahead of where I was. Knowing that when antelope begin running in a straight line they are very hard to turn, and seeing that they would have to run a longer distance than my horse would to intercept them, I clapped spurs into Manitou, and the game old fellow, a very fleet runner, stretched himself down to the ground and seemed to go almost as fast as the quarry. As I had expected, the latter, when they saw me running, merely straightened themselves out and went on, possibly even faster than before, without changing the line of their flight, keeping right up wind. Both horse and antelope fairly flew over the ground, their courses being at an angle that would certainly bring them together. Two of the antelope led, by some fifty yards or so, the others, who were all bunched together. Nearer and nearer we came, Manitou, in spite of carrying myself and the pack behind the saddle, gamely holding his own, while the antelope, with outstretched necks, went at an even, regular gait that offered a strong contrast to the springing bounds with which a deer run. At last the two leading animals crossed the line of my flight ahead of me; when I pulled short up, leaped from Manitou's back, and blazed into the band as they went by not forty yards off, aiming well ahead of a fine buck who was on the side nearest me.

An antelope's gait is so even that it offers a good running mark; and as the smoke blew off I saw the buck roll over like a rabbit, with both shoulders broken. I then emptied the Winchester at the rest of the band, breaking one hind leg of a young buck. Hastily cutting the throat of, and opening, the dead buck, I again mounted and started off after the wounded one. But, though only on three legs, it went astonishingly fast, having had a good start; and after following it over a mile I gave up the pursuit, though I had gained a good deal; for the heat was very great, and I did not deem it well to tire the horse at the beginning of the trip. Returning to the carcass, I cut off the hams and strung them beside the saddle; an antelope is so spare that there is very little more meat on the body.

This trick of running in a straight line is another of the antelope's peculiar characteristics which frequently lead it into danger. Although with so much sharper eyes than a deer, antelope are in many ways far stupider animals, more like sheep, and they especially resemble the latter in their habit of following a leader, and in their foolish obstinacy in keeping to a course they have once adopted. If a horseman starts to head off a deer the latter will always turn long before he has come within range, but quite often an antelope will merely increase his speed and try to pass ahead of his foe. Almost always, however, one if alone will keep out of gunshot, owing to the speed at which he goes, but if there are several in a band which is well strung out, the leader only cares for his own safety and passes well ahead himself. The others follow like sheep, without turning in the least from the line the first followed, and thus may pass within close range. If the leader bounds into the air, those following will often go through exactly the same motions; and if he turns, the others are very apt to each in succession run up and turn in the same place, unless the whole band are manoeuvring together, like a squadron of cavalry under orders, as has already been spoken of.

After securing the buck's hams and head (the latter for the sake of the horns, which were unusually long and fine), I pushed rapidly on without stopping to hunt, to reach some large creek which should contain both wood and water, for even in summer a fire adds greatly to the comfort and cosiness of a night camp. When the sun had nearly set we went over a divide and came in sight of a creek fulfilling the required conditions. It wound its way through a valley of rich bottom land, cotton-wood trees of no great height or size growing in thick groves along its banks, while its bed contained many deep pools of water, some of it fresh and good. I rode into a great bend, with a grove of trees on its right and containing excellent feed. Manitou was loosed, with the lariat round his neck, to feed where he wished until I went to bed, when he was to be taken to a place where the grass was thick and succulent, and tethered out for the night. There was any amount of wood with which a fire was started for cheerfulness, and some of the coals were soon raked off apart to cook over. The horse blanket was spread on the ground with the oil-skin over it as a bed, underneath a spreading cotton-wood tree, while the regular blanket served as covering. The metal cup was soon filled with water and simmering over the coals to make tea, while an antelope steak was roasting on a forked stick.

Nearer and nearer we came.

Breaking camp is a simple operation for one man; and but a few minutes after breakfast Manitou and I were off. I headed the horse towards the more rolling country where the prairies begin to break off into the edges of the Bad Lands. Several bands of antelope were seen, and I tried one unsuccessful stalk, not being able to come within rifle range; but towards evening, when only about a mile from a wooded creek on whose banks I intended to sleep, I came across a solitary buck, just as I was topping the ridge of the last divide.

As I was keeping a sharp lookout at the time, I reined in the horse the instant the head of the antelope came in sight, and jumping off crept up till I could see his whole body, when I dropped on my knee and took steady aim. He was a long way off (three hundred yards by actual pacing), and not having made out exactly what we were he stood still, looking intently in our direction and broadside to us. I held well over his shoulder, and at the report he dropped like a shot, the ball having broken his neck. It was a very good shot; the best I ever made at antelope, of which game, as already said, I have killed but very few individuals. Taking the hams and saddle I rode on down to the creek and again went into camp among timber.

Thus on this trip I was never successful in outwitting antelope on the several occasions when I pitted my craft and skill against their wariness and keen senses, always either failing to get within range or else missing them; but nevertheless I got two by taking advantage of the stupidity and curiosity which they occasionally show.

When the neighbors call at his house a boy notices that they all laugh heartily when his father tells how he used to steal watermelons when he was a boy, but the boy remembers that when he tried it his father whipped him for stealing.—Atchison Globe.

SINCELL'S | SINCELL'S

IT will be a pleasure to make your Xmas purchases at SINCELL'S, where you will find everything in the line of useful presents. We have made the most careful selection of Xmas Stock this season and sure we can fill your wants in anything.

SILVERWARE	WOMEN'S TOGS	MEN'S TOGS
Manicure Sets	Neckwear	Neckwear
Toilet Sets	Handkerchiefs	Shirts
Hair Brushes	Mufflers	Hose
Cloth Brushes	Furs	Suspenders
Tooth Brushes	Fur Sets	Kid Gloves
Nail Brushes	Umbrellas	Handkerchiefs
Hair Receiver	Kid Gloves	Mufflers
Shaving Sets	Embroid'd Hose	Hats
Shaving Mirrors	Silk Hose	Cuff Links
Hand Mirrors	Underwear	Collars, Cuffs

We are ready to show you the most attractlve assortment of Clothig, Shoes, Hats, Trunks and Traveling Bags, Rain Coats, Smoking Jackets, Bath Robes, and Underwear we have ever had the pleasure of placing before our customers. Will have extra help for the Xmas trade so everyone will be well cared for. Always plecsed to see you. Wishing you a Joyful Xmas.

Any Women's or Children's Winter Coats One-Third Off.

H. C. SINCEL & CO., Oakland, Md.

Garrett County

4

PER CENT.

Court House Bonds

These Bonds are in Denominations of $500 and represent the Highest Grade of Investment from the standpoint of Security and Income. They afford an excellent opportunity for the investment of your idle funds at a profit able rate of interest.

FOR TERMS, Address

BOND DEPARTMENT

The Second National Bank

OF

Cumberland, Maryland.

OF WHAT SHE DIED.

What the Bereaved Customer Told the Sympathetic Bartender.

An old German woman became ill and was taken by her husband to a hospital for treatment. The first day she was there when her husband called to inquire about her the doctor said she was improving. On the second day he was again told she was improving, and on the third and fourth days the assurance was the same. This was very encouraging to the old German, but when he called on the fifth day he was told that his wife was dead. In his grief he sought his favorite saloon to drown his sorrow.

"Vat's de matter?" asked the sympathetic bartender, noticing his customer's despondent condition.

"Ach! My wife iss dead," replied the German.

"So? Vat did she die of?" asked the bartender.

"Improvements," replied the bereaved husband, calling for another glass of beer.—Bellman.

The Colonel's Yarn.

The old fighting colonel was reminiscent.

"Geese saved Rome," he began as he lit his black cigar, "and, gentlemen, at the battle of Bull Run my men were saved by a flock of chickens flying in front of them. It was the greatest coup of the battle, sir."

"That's pretty good, colonel," laughed the comedian boarder. "I suppose you would call that a chicken coup."—Bohemian Magazine.

Curious Woman.

"Henpeck says he has never belonged to a club of any kind, he is not a member of any fraternal order, he does not use tobacco in any form, he is a total abstainer from all alcoholic drinks, and he has eyes for no woman save his wife."

"I know it. And yet she doesn't seem to be absolutely sure that he is an ideal husband. Curious about woman, isn't it?"—New York Herald.

Great Ignorance.

Colonel Fizzletop was under the painful necessity of administering a severe castigation to his son Archie. After he had completed his labors he said sternly to the suffering victim:

"Now tell me why I punish you."

"That's it," sobbed Archie. "You nearly pound the life out of me, and now you don't even know why you did it."—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Good Reason Why.

Porcupine—That's funny. My mamma never licks me that way.

Superfluous.

The architect was explaining the plans for the proposed new mansion.

"Here," he said, "will be the inner court."

"What's the use of that?" sharply asked Mr. Struckoyle. "The girls can do their sparkin' in the front parlor, same as their maw and me did."—Chicago Tribune.

The Family Autocrat.

"The face of that woman who passed us just now is very familiar. Where have I seen her?"

"At my house probably."

"At your house. Do you know her?"

"Yes, she's our cook, but she doesn't notice me on the street."—Houston Post.

One Theory.

Friend—Do you think when that amateur hunter shot you he did it just for a joke or thought you were really a mark?

Victim—All I know is he seemed to be making game of me.—Baltimore American.

The Basis.

He—I wonder if we can get along all right.

She—Certainly. We can buy the auto with the money father left me, and you will surely make enough to pay for running it, don't you think?—Puck.

Keeping Him Quiet.

First Deaf Mute—Who is that fellow over in the corner of the store with his hands tied behind him?

Second Deaf Mute—That is my silent partner.—Harper's Weekly.

They Were Strangers.

Howell—Rowell doesn't seem to be at home much.

Powell—He is there so seldom that he really needs a letter of introduction to his wife.—New York Press.

A Downpour.

"They fairly rained congratulations on the prima donna."

"That was the result of her taking the house by storm."—Baltimore American.

TOYS TOYS

EVERYBODY handles Toys; but if you wish to see a complete line of Toys call at the Gold Mine Store. We have everything in the Toy line. Come early and you can get your choice before the stock has picked over. We give you this notice so you can't blame us if some things are sold before you come. We have the only Toy Store in Oakland and can give you a better Toy for your money than you can get elsewhere.

Truly yours,

Geo. M. Mason

WHAT WE RECOMMEND

In the way of drugs, medicines or toilet preparations you can rely on. Everything in this store is intended to improve your health, appearance or comfort. So you can buy with confidence that your medicines will be pure, your toilet aids the best to be had. Make this your drug store and there'll be no cause for regrets.

OAKLAND PHARMACY

JOS. E. HARNED, Proprietor,
OAKLAND, MD.

CHILDREN MAKE CONFECTIONERY

a serious matter for the honest candy maker. He must produce a flavor that will satisty their natural appetites for sweets. He must be careful that his products must be harmless and wholesome.

THE PURITY OF OUR CANDY

is beyond question. None but the best materials are used in even the lowest priced confectionery we sell. As to the flavor, well, buy a box and let the children be the judges—we'll abide by their decision.

OAKLAND MODEL STEAM BAKERY

HENRY LAUER Proprietor

Church Services.

OAKLAND PRESBYTERIAN.

Services on Sunday, to which all are cordially invited, will be preaching at 11 a. m. and 7.3 p. m.

L. B. HENSLEY, Pastor.

ST. PAUL'S M. E.

Services next Sunday as follows: Preaching 10.30 a. m.; Sunday school at 2.15 p. m.; preaching at 7.30 p. m.

Epworth League Monday 7.30 p. m.

Junior League Wednesday 4.15 p. m.

Prayer meeting Wednesday 7.30 p. m.

Everybody cordially invited to attend these services.

J. B. WORKMAN, Pastor.

ST. MARK'S LUTHERAN.

Services next Sabbath as follows:

Sunday school at 9.30 a. m.

Preaching 10.30 a. m.

Luther League every Wednesday at 7.30 p. m.

Preaching in Deer Park Lutheran church next Sunday at 7 30 p. m.

Everybody welcome.

E. MANGES, Pastor.

B. and O. Finances.

The Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company's statement of earnings and expenses (exclusive of outside operations) for the month of November, 1908, as compared with November, 1907, shows gross earning, 1908, $5,948,085; 1907, $6,998,553; decrease, $1,050,468. Expenses 1908, $4,007,807; 1907, $4,994,097; decrease, $986,290. Net earnings, 1908, $1,947,278; 1907, $2,004,456; decrease $64,178.

For the five months of the fiscal year, as compared with the same period of 1907, the statement shows: Gross earnings, 1908, $30,952,640; 1907, $37,230,491; decrease, $6,277,851. Expenses, 1908, $19,606,481; 1907, $25,333,501; decrease, $5,727,110. Net earnings, 1908, $11,346,159; 1907, $11,896,000; decrease, $550,741.

Removal Notice.

I have moved from my old location, the Helbig stable, to my new barn on Liberty street opposite the railroad station where my old as well as new patrons will receive the same courteous treatment as heretofore.

Thanking all for past favors and soliciting a continuance of your patronage. I am, J. A. KELLEY.

NOTICE OF STOCKHOLDERS' MEETING.

The annual meeting of the Garrett County Telephone Company will be held at Hoyes, Maryland,

January 4th, 1909,

at the hour of 10 O'clock for the purpose of electing a board of directors f r the coming year a d any other business that may be brought before it.

C. V. GUARD, Sec'y.

NOTICE OF STOCKHOLDERS' MEETING.

Pursuant to the required legal notice a meeting of the stockholders of the First National Bank of Friendsville, Maryland, will be held at its banking house on

Tuesday, January 12, 1909,

at 10 o'clock A. M. for the purpose of electing a board of directors for the ensuing year and for the transaction of such other business that may lawfully be done.

R. C. McCANDLISH, Cashier.

Notice to Creditors.

This is to give notice, That the subscribers of Garrett county, hath obtained from the Orphans' Court of Garrett County, in Maryland, Letters of Administration on the personal estate of

JOHN W. BOWERS,

late of Garrett county, deceased. All persons having claims against the deceased are hereby warned to exhibit the same, with vouchers thereof legally authenticated to the subscriber, on or before the 29th day of April next; they may otherwise by law be excluded from all benefit of said estate. All persons knowing themselves indebted to said estate are requested to make immediate payment.

Given under my hand this 26th day of November, 1908.

FLORENCE M. BOWERS,
Administratrix,
Dodson, Md.

NOTICE OF STOCKHOLDERS' MEETING.

The regular annual meeting of the stockholders of the First National Bank of Kitzmillerville, Maryland, will be held at its banking house on

Tuesday, January 12, 1909,

from 1 to 2 o'clock P. M., for the purpose of electing a board of directors for the ensuing year and for the transaction of any other business that may be brought before them.

E. J HAMILL, Cashier.

NOTICE OF STOCKHOLDERS' MEETING.

The regular meeting of the stockholders of the Garrett National Bank of Oakland, Maryland, will be held at its banking house on

Tuesday, January 12, 1909,

at 2 o'clock P. M., for the purpose of electing a board of directors for the ensuing year, and for the transaction of any other business that may come before them.

S. T. JONES, Cashier.

NOTICE OF STOCKHOLDERS' MEETING.

The regular annual meeting of the stockholders of the First National Bank of Oakland, Maryland, will be held at its banking house on

Tuesday, January 12, 1909,

from 1 to 2 o'clock P. M., for the purpose of electing a board of directors for the ensuing year and for the transaction of any other business that may be brought before them.

R. E. SLIGER, Cashier.

Take me out to the Gold Mine.

FOR RENT.—The Rectory on Alder street; house contains 14 rooms; stable and other outbuildings on the property. Apply to BOWIE JOHNSON, Oakland. 3t

THE REPUBLICAN.

VOLUME 32. OAKLAND, MARYLAND, THURSDAY, DECEMBER 31, 1908. NUMBER 44

GARRETT COUNTY SHEEP BRING ENORMOUS PRICES

One Hundred and Forty-Seven Head Sells for $7,000 in Chicago.

Early during the present month Col. George W Treusdell, proprietor of Altamont Springs Farm, which is located near Altamont, this county, shipped to Chicago four cars of sheep in charge of Messrs. Hugh H. Calderwood, E. C. Friend, Winfield Cormany and Robert Thrasher, for exhibition purposes in that city and after the show sold the animals, realizing from the sale the sum of $7,000.

The shipment to Chicago consisted of 147 head, all of them with the exception of one having been bred in this county, and all were Rambouillets, the exception being an imported ram which Col. Treusdell purchased in France two or three years ago and added to his flock in this country.

At the show many first prizes were awarded Col. Treusdell and he also carried off a number of second prizes, in competition with sheep from all over the world.

After the exhibition closed the animals were sold to buyers from all sections of this and foreign countries, eighteen of them going to representatives of South African breeders.

Edward's Choice, a five year old ram, was sold to the United States Government for $425. This animal will be placed on the government experiment farm at Laramie, Wyoming, for breeding purposes. Altamont, another five year old ram was sold to A. G. Butterfield, of Weiser. Idaho, for $320. This animal sheared forty-two pounds of wool last year and is probably the best animal in the country today.

A yair of yearling rams purchased by the Cunningham Land and Sheep Company of Oregon, brought $342, while individual ewes brought from $45 to $90 each.

In recent years Garrett county has been forging ahead of all competitors in products of the farm and orchard, her recent victory at the State Horticultural Society meeting in Baltimore when she carried off a large number of first prizes for apples and her more recent good showing at the National Apple Growers' Convention held in Indiana, coupled with Col. Treusdell's success in Chicago will sooner or later attract the attention of the entire country to the possibilities of this the greatest county in the Union.

Communion Service.

The mid-winter Communion service will be conducted in St. Mark's Ev. Lutheran church next Sunday, January 3rd, at 10:30 a. m., preced d by the usual preparatory preaching service. Preaching at 7:30 p. m

E. MANGES, Pastor.

CHARLES F. WHITE HAD A MIRACULOUS ESCAPE

Knocked Senseless On Top Of Car By Being Struck By Giessman Bridge

This morning a short time before nine o'clock Mr. Charles F. White, of Hutton, experienced a narrow escape with his life, when, as he was riding on the top of a coal car of an east bound freight train, he was struck on the head by the Giessman bridge in Oakland, rendering him senseless in which condition he remained until the train upon which he was riding had reached Mountain Lake Park.

Mr. White boarded the freight at Hutton with the expectation of getting off when it reached Oakland, but the speed of the train made the undertaking dangerous and he stayed aboard and was making his way over the tops of the cars toward the caboose when the Giessman bridge, an overhead structure at Third street was reached, at which time he was on top of a loaded coal scow. The elevation was just sufficient to raise Mr. White an inch or two above the timbers of the bridge and he was struck in the back of the head, producing a scalp wound several inches long and knocking him on his face on top of the coal. In falling he received a number of cuts and bruises on his face. The blow on the back of Mr. White's head rendered him unconscious until the train was near Mountain Lake Park where he revived. The train was stopped at this point and Mr. White was taken to the residence of Mr. Garthright where Dr. Legge rendered the necessary surgical aid, he having been summoned by telephone.

Mr. White came to Oakland on a later train and went from here to his home at Hutton, very painfully, but we are glad to note, not dangerously injured.

DEATH RECORD.

FREDERICK MITCHELL

Frederick Mitchell, son of the late Charles Mitchell, of Friendsville, died in that town last Saturday afternoon at 3:30 o'clock after an illness extending over more than a year of dropsy and kindred diseases. He was aged 33 years and leaves besides his wife his mother and one brother. He was married three years ago to Miss Margaret Liston, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Liston, of Selbysport. The funeral was held Monday afternoon of this week with interment in the Steele cemetery at Friendsville, Rev. Asa Wolfe, of the M. E. church, conducting these services, which were largely attended, many going from Oakland for the purpose.

See The Republican for Job Printing.

Garrett County

4

PER CENT.

Court House Bonds

These Bonds are in Denominations of $500 and represent the Highest Grade of Investment from the standpoint of Security and Income. They afford an excellent opportunity for the investment of your idle funds at a profit able rate of interest.

FOR TERMS, Address

BOND DEPARTMENT

The Second National Bank

OF

Cumberland, Maryland.

END OF THE DECEMBER TERM CIRCUIT COURT

Adjournment Occurred Tuesday Afternoon With Sentence of Prisoners.

The December Term of the Circuit Court for this county closed on Tuesday afternoon of this week, the Court being in session that day only since the holiday recess was declared on Wednesday afternoon of last week. Judge Henderson presided Tuesday, having arrived in Oakland from his home in Cumberland that morning.

Upon convening Court Judge Henderson declared the bond of William Warnick, who was indicted by the grand jury and tried before the Court for shooting Emma Warnick through the hand, forfeited. The traverser's bond was in the sum of $1000 with his father, George Warnick, his bondsman. The verdict of the Court in the case has not been announced, hence it is a matter of speculation as to his guilt or innocence. His trial was concluded Tuesday afternoon of last week and on Wednesday morning when he was called by the Court to receive the verdict he failed to appear, having left Oakland that morning on an early train.

In the criminal appeal case of the State vs. Mrs. Mary Pysell and Charles Pysell, charged with having resisted and assaulted an officer while in the discharge of his duties, the Court rendered a verdict of not guilty, holding that the officer was a trespasser upon the property of Mrs. Pysell and that she had a right to protect her property inasmuch as a bond had not been executed by the parties seeking to obtain possession of goods under replevin proceedings.

The first case tried Tuesday morning was that of Mary Green, charged with keeping a bawdy house in Oakland. She was found guilty and sentenced to pay a fine of $50 and costs and to remain in jail till such fine and costs were paid. The evidence tended to show that she is a woman of the worst character and that her presence in the community is a detriment to its peace and good reputation. She failed to pay the fine and therefore is in jail.

Benj. Bittinger and Mrs. Sallie Stein, charged with stealing turkeys belonging to William T. Stanton, were next tried, the former being found guilty of theft and the latter of receiving stolen goods. Bittinger was sentenced to one year's imprisonment in the House of Correction and the Stein woman to six months in jail.

The case of the State vs. Van Grimm, indicted for statutory rape, was continued until the March term. Grimm was under bond for his appearance at Court but shortly before it convened he left for parts unknown. He was tracked, however, to a point near Winchester, Va., by his bondsman, who took him into custody and delivered him to the sheriff on Monday night of this week. He is now in jail where he will remain until March unless bond in the sum of $700 is furnished for him.

STATE ROAD ENGINEERS AT WORK ON HOOPPOLE ROAD

Corps of Surveyors Locating State Highway North From Oakland.

Monday morning a corps of engineers in the employ and under the direction of the State Highway Commission began the work of surveying and locating the new state road to be erected, under the road law passed last winter, from Oakland in a northernly direction to the National Road.

The engineers' starting point was at the corporation line on Fourth street and out along Hooppole Road. Last night when the engineers ceased work they had reached a point just beyond the limits of Mr. D. T. Enlow's farm, two and a-half miles from Oakland, their course being indicated by stakes being driven at regular intervals. The location of the stakes indicate that the new road will not touch the old roadbed at many points, in fact, an altogether new location of the road being apparent.

Improved Condition of Roads.

Residents of Deer Park and vicinity and those who have recently had occasion to drive over the public roads of that section of the county, are remarking upon the excellent condition of the highways in that neighborhood, especially those under the supervision of Dr. John K. Mitchell, who was appointed supervisor by the County Commissioners a year or two ago. In the working of the roads under his supervision Dr. Mitchell has combined excellent judgment with modern methods of road construction, consequently the roads are in better condition than ever before, much to his credit and the good judgment of the Commissioners in appointing him.

Card of Thanks.

The pastor of St. Mark's church and Mrs Manges hereby desire to heartily thank their friends who so kindly remembered them at Christmas for the well filled envelope of money; the beautiful lounge cover from the Ladies' Aid Society; the picture from Mr. D. E. Bolden; the Christmas turkey from Mr. Andrew Shartzer and his good wife, and for the good things to eat from the Oakland Bakery.

E. MANGES AND WIFE.

DIXON & KELSO

DIXON & KELSO quote the Following CASH Prices for

Grain, Feed and Flour

Shelled Corn, bu	$ .75
Unbolted Meal, per cwt	1.55
Cracked Corn, "	1.55
White Middlings, "	1.60
Barley Chop, "	1.65
Wheat Bran, "	1.45
Sucrene Dairy Feed, cwt	1.45
Oats, per bu	.60
Sleepy Eye, White Satin or Marvel Flour, in wood	6.25
Any of above in ½ paper	.80
Winter Wheat Flour, wood	5.75
" " " paper	.70

☞Can use ten cars PROPS 10 feet long, 4½ inches, at 10c, delivered at our yard.

☞Can also use large quantities Oak and Chestnut CROSS TIES at 35c to 55c each.

Yours to Please. DIXON & KELSO.

RAILROAD CLAIMED SECOND VICTIM LAST THURSDAY

When William A. Smouse, Retired Engineer, Was Fatally Crushed.

Last Thursday THE REPUBLICAN contained an account of the death of Roy George, of Deer Park, who was killed by train No. 3 that morning as he was preparing to go to work as a trackman at that place. Following the death of that young man, another, equally as appalling, occurred later in the same day when William A. Smouse, a retired Baltimore and Ohio engineer, residing at Mt. Lake Park with his children, was so badly hurt on the railroad at his home town that he died several hours latter as a result of the injuries he sustained.

Mr. Smouse came to Oakland during the day and made some Christmas purchases and intended to return home on the afternoon accommodation train. Repairing to the station about the time No. 14 was due, which runs about half an hour ahead of the accommodation, and which does not stop at Mountain Lake Park, he boarded the engine of the fast train and stated to the engineer that he intended riding with him to his destination. The engineer demurred, it is stated, and requested him to leave the engine, saying that his train did not stop at the Park. Mr. Smouse, however, insisted upon riding on the engine and did so. When the Park station was being approached eye-witnesses to the horrible accident which culminated in the death of Mr. Smouse, state that the train was slowed down and that Mr. Smouse swung from the engine toward the platform, releasing his hold on the engine but retaining a grasp on the tender. He endeavored to regain his hold upon the engine and in doing so he slipped from the step upon which he was standing and fell between the platform and the rail, his arm and leg being horribly crushed by the wheels of the train and his head injured by being struck by the steps of the cars.

As soon as possible he was brought to Oakland by a number of trackmen who were at work at the Park and taken to the office of Dr. McComas, the railroad company's physician, where he received attention until train No. 12 came, when he was taken to the Hoffman Hospital at Keyser, for the purpose of performing an operation. His condition was such, however, that death came soon after his arrival at that place.

His remains were prepared for burial and sent to his home at the Park Christmas evening on train No. 55 and on Sunday morning the funeral services were conducted in the Methodist church at that place by Dr. W. W. Davis, and was attended by a large concourse of sympethetic friends and acquaintances. The interment was made in the Shaffer cemetery, west of Oakland, where the the remains of his wife were buried a few months ago. At the grave the Red Men had charge of the services.

Mr. Smouse was 45 years of age and leaves three daughters and one son. His mother, who is now the wife of Mr. Norman Barnard, also survives him. Since Mr. Smouse retired from the service of the railroad as an engineer he has resided at Mounnain Lake Park and has been a trusted and highly respected employe of the Association, filling a multiplicity of positions with credit and honor.

Jr. O. U. A. M. Officers.

At the last meeting of Garrett Council, No. 35, Jr. O. U. A. M., held on December 26, the following officers were elected for the ensuing year:

Past Counsellor, W. J. Nair; Counsellor, W. F. King; Vice Counsellor, Melvin Calhoun; Recording Secretary, George Little; Financial Secretary, Lewis Walters; Treasurer, A. D. Naylor; Conductor, William Kildow; Warden, Gus Delawder; Inside Sentinel, James Glotfelty; Outside Sentinel, Luther J. Brown, Representative, W. J. Nair; Alternate, George Little; Trustees, W. F. King, W. J. Nair and Harry Hinebaugh.

E. A. WEIMER.

SWEEPING REDUCTIONS IN

CLOTHING

I find in going over my stock I have too much Clothing on hand—especially in the cheaper grades, and to move it out quickly I have decided to sell about

100 Suits for Men and Boys at Just One-Half the Regular Price;

about that many more at one-third off, and a lot more at one-fourth off regular prices. Also a lot of separate PANTS at reduced prices. Lot of OVERCOATS at half-price.

RAINCOATS one-fourth off.

It will pay you to buy now.

Yours Truly. E. A. WEIMER.

NEXT DOOR TO THE POSTOFFICE OAKLAND, MD

Four Celebrations of New Year's Day

NEW YEAR is celebrated in this country at least on four different dates in addition to the regular national New Year's celebration on January 1. The first of these foreign celebrations will be that of the Greeks and Russians and a few other nationalities which adhere to old style dates. They will have New Year on January 14, 13 days later than the New Year of the new style. Next in order comes the Chinese New Year, on February 13, and, but a day later, February 14, comes the Mohammedan first day of the year. The Jewish New Year falls nealy nine months later, about the middle of Sepber, on the first day of the month of "Tishri."

The celebrations vary both in accordance with the religions of the various peoples and their climatic, racial and national characteristics. With the Greeks, Russians, Servians, Bulgarians and Macedonians, all of whom adhere to the Greek Catholic church, New Year's is one of the most pleasant if not the pleasantest festival of the year. With the Jews, on the contrary, the New Year, Rosh Hashana, as it is called, is far from being a pleasant affair. It is a day of retribution, of judgment. It is preceded by weeks of prayer, fasting and penitence, and is followed by ten days known as the days of repentance, which wind up with Yom Kippur, the day of atonement, a most grewsome and weird day, dreaded by every orthodox Jew.

Greeks Celebrate Two Days.

The most interesting and joyous celebration of the New Year is that of the Greeks. The Greek New Year lasts two days. In these two days the Greek nature with its unbounded joy of life comes into its own. The heart of every Greek thrills on that day with unbounded joy. Passionately he awaits the evening, when in his little Greece, in a genuine Greek restaurant, with male cooks and attendants, he can get his genuine Greek food, Hellenic dishes, and wash them away with Greek wine which was purposely imported into this country for the holidays.

"Christmas is a great holiday with us," said a prominent Greek, "but it is after all a solemn day. It is a religious holiday. No gifts are exchanged on Christmas and the three days which the holiday last are given over to religious meditation. How different it is with the New Year! Next to our national holiday on March 25, which commemorates the date of our independence, just as July 4 commemorates the birth of the American nation, New Year's days, for we have two of them, are our greatest holidays. In Greece New Year is essentially a family holiday. There we have a children's afternoon which is devoted entirely to the young ones, who are given the utmost opportunities to enjoy themselves. In this country, however, it is slightly different. Out of the 13,000 Greeks living in Chicago only 200 have their families here. There are only between sixty and eighty children, and as we are only just planning to build a school of our own, we have not yet the means nor the call for a children's afternoon on New Year's day."

Still, many of the Greek families will observe this ancient custom in this country. They will have their children's afternoon. They will have their delicious New Year's pudding known as "king's pudding." In fact, in many cases the pudding will be even more delicious than it would have been in old Athens. For one of the ancient customs among the Greeks is to hide some gold coin in one portion of the pudding and he who gets the share of the pudding with the gold coin in it becomes the favorite as well as the leader of the two days' joy and sport. In this country, where gold is more plentiful than in Greece and where it is more easily earned by the Greek father, the pudding promises to contain more gold and be much more delightful to the finder of the same.

Perhaps the most unique Greek dish on New Year's eve is the roast lamb, set up in Greek style, of which each son of Hellas must partake. The roasting of the lamb is attended with a great deal of pomp. The entire carcass of a lamb is set up on a pole and this is held over a fire until it is duly roasted. Then it is sliced and apportioned among the various persons present at the feast and the roast is eaten along with the other strictly Greek dishes and washed down with Greek wine.

Russians Like Our Food.

Russians in this country celebrate but one day, and they, too, attempt to produce a home atmosphere. However, home food is not thought of. The bread, the meat, and the wine of the United States are considered as good as and even far better than the products of their own land.

The Macedonians, Servians and Bulgarians celebrate the New Year, perhaps less elaborately, also on the same day as their Greek and Russian coreligionists.

The Turks celebrate their first of the year with the modesty characteristic of people who have not yet any hold on a place.

The Chinese will have their customary celebration of the Chinese New Year on February 13 with feasting and enjoyments with which the holiday is observed in the Celestial empire.

In striking opposition to the spirit of joy and happiness which pervades the New Year of the Greeks and Christendom generally is the New Year of the Jews. With the Jews, who also observe the New Year for two days, the days are not days of feasting and enjoyment but days of judgment. According to the belief of every orthodox Jew, every member of the Jewish race is tried on the New Year. The books kept in heaven are opened on that day, the record of each man for the year just ending is looked through, and taken under advisement for ten days. On the tenth day, the day of atonement, the fate of each man for the coming year is drawn up, whether he should live or die, prosper or be poor. On the day of atonement the fate is sealed and nothing can change it any more.

Turning the New Leaf

With reverent heart we turn anew
An untouched page of time.
'Tis ours to fill with noble deeds
Or stain with sin and crime;
Then ere we mar its surface pure—
Ere we begin anew,
'Tis well that o'er our last year's work
We take a short review.

Alas! we scan through tears the page
We meant should be so fair—
The blotted page where records live
Of hope and toil and care;
The page that ends the finished year
Of loss and gain and strife,
Of love and home's sweet happiness,
And peace that blesses life.

So much there is of pleasantness
Our record has to tell—
And so much done unworthily
We might have done so well!
Though mental retrospection shows
That shine exceeds the shade;
Too late we would erase the blots
Of past mistakes we made.

Then turn the new leaf. Look not back
To grieve o'er loss and pain,
But view the future's spotless page
Where we begin again;
And here resolve, by God's own grace,
That we will do our best
To keep life's record clean and pure
And trust Him for the rest.

—Margarrt Scott Hall.

As the Years Mark Time for Mankind

The old-fashioned sun dial, after all, was the true time piece. That little pocket sun dial that we are told counted all the hours "when the sun shone" made the perfect record of human days. The noisy clocks and remorseless calendars that told off the worst and weariest of time's movements literally spoiled the reckoning. History began to build itself upon wretchedness of a people, and all creation to take note of time by its loss instead of its golden gain in the hours of perfect sunlight.

But the reaction has set in. It is the glad hours and not the sad ones that are to be made to count.

Let us tarry awhile
At the sign of the smile is the watchword which even pious pilgrims are sending out to upset the ancient reckoning. "Let the smile become the Christian's rather than the devil's sign" they cry in chorus, and the joy of the spirit become the measure of its days. Good Isaac Barrow's picture of the child of heaven "smiling always with a never-ending serenity of countenance and flourishing in an immortal youth" has at last taken hold of the Christian world and, spurred on by the new thought rhapsodies, promises to turn back the calendar of all our days. Counting time by heart throbs is no new method, to be sure, but the kind of heart throbs that "always find man young and always keep him so" were rather lost with the sun and nature worship of the early world.

When men went to nature for their reckoning it was as Wordsworth tells us:

They felt
As if the moving time had been
A thing as steadfast as the scene
On which they gazed themselves away.

Centuries young were those children of the morning, before even the sun dial had begun to tell them of the flight of time. It remains true still that whether nature or the soul strikes the joy-note in the human breast, the poet's question rises instinctively to the lips:

O what have I to do with time,
For this the day was made.

Man Has His Choice.

Good or bad, the years come out of the bosom of the infinite bearing some boon from the eternal for man to lay hold of if he will. To choose the permanent from out the mutable and fleeting is the life secret they carry, and how much hangs upon the choice eternity alone can tell. There are watchmen at the gates who assure us that each year brings gifts peculiar to itself, and one year or one world does not restore the lost offerings of the other. "Long after we have passed away out of men's sight and out of men's memory the world with something that we have left within it, will be going on still," says Phillips Brooks, "and long after the world has passed away we shall go on somewhere, somehow, the same beings still, carrying into the depths of eternity something that the world has done for us that no other world could do.

Alexander Mocked.

New worlds, with each new year, to conquer, mock the cry of Alexander and declare indeed a new kingdom wherein to reign. Closer and closer comes the promise of that awakening hour when man shall in truth become "a living soul," and "with an eye made quiet by the power of harmony, and the deep power of joy," shall "see into the life of things." How many a rose of morning and ripe fruit of the golden noon shall then return to him the science of life, which permits no lost good, nor wasted atom even, in all creation's bounds, may gloriously declare. "Where are the snows of yesteryear?" whispers the tender poet, but the green of spring and the bloom of summer are nature's answer to his yearning cry.

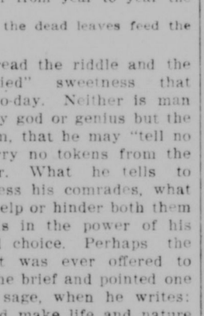
And shall man be less blessed than nature in garnering the treasures of the year? Is that evil genius, that the ancients beheld standing at the door of the new year, forever to give lethe to drink that he may wander blindly into the unknown way, shorn of the best boons and talismans of the past? Ah, the poets who try life and love know better.

Each new year is a leaf of our love's rose;
It falls, but quick another rose leaf grows;
So is the flower from year to year the same,
But riches, for the dead leaves feed the flame.

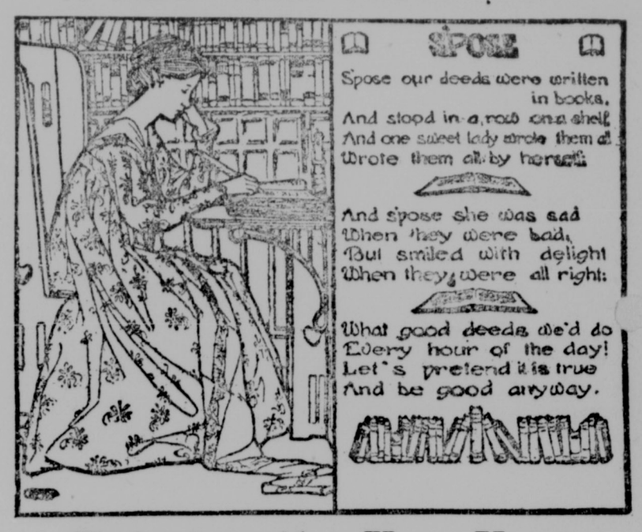
Thus they read the riddle and the "million-centuried" sweetness that goes with it to-day. Neither is man drugged by any god or genius but the one within him, that he may "tell no tales" and carry no tokens from the departing year. What he tells to cheer or depress his comrades, what he carries to help or hinder both them and himself, is in the power of his own open-eyed choice. Perhaps the best hint that was ever offered to guide him is the brief and pointed one given by the sage, when he writes: "A man should make life and nature happier to us, or he had better never been born." It is the one pre-eminently in the air at the present moment. It would fill all the newspapers in the land and drive the quotation-abhorring editors mad if one-quarter of the stout maxims of this nature which the times offer should demand place in their columns. Already their humorous writers are trying to demoralize them and send some of the cheerful and cheering-up people over to his Satanic majesty, where no doubt they are needed since the dry season set in.

Life's Logic Quaint.

If there be such a Satanic monarch, probably he loves the cheerful sinner just as heaven must love the cheerful saint. Yet the logic of life is against him. The smile is not legitimately the devil's sign. It is the pessimist who is playing into his hands, treating his sovereignty as if it could overthrow heaven's and all the power of the Eternal Goodness. To act as if they had a faith worth smiling over would seem to be the altitude of men who believed in a sovereign of love and omnipotence rather than one of malevolence and black arts, and it may be that the Christian world is at last finding it out. Certainly the Gospel evangel "Rejoice, rejoice!" is sounding anew through all the realms of Christendom and becoming a part of culture and philosophy everywhere. Fuller's counsel: "Be happy in the present moment and put not off being so to a time to come, as though that time should be of another make from this," prevails in the intellectual as religious world, and promises to show "life whole" to more than a handful of seers and sages.



A NEW YEAR RESOLUTION



Entering the New Year

Take up the ark of the covenant and pass over.—Joshua, 3:6.

The long journey in the wilderness is over. The endless stretches of sand will haunt the tired eyes of the pilgrims no longer. Beyond the swiftly-gliding river lies Canaan, the Land of Promise.

Joshua is a born leader of men and as such knows what they will do, if appealed to in the right way. The River Jordan flows between the Promised Land and his followers. It must be crossed. With the same feeling that afterward animated Douglas to take from his breast the jeweled heart of the dead Bruce and fling it over the heads of the advancing foe, shouting: "Fight, my men, for the heart of Bruce!" so Joshua, with the deep religious consciousness of a Jew, gives the order to carry forward the Ark of the Covenant. No one of his followers will dream of lagging behind when he sees that sacred symbol in front. And so, following in the footsteps of the priests, the people, old and young, cross the Jordan and enter upon a new phase of their national life.

The parallel between our case, as we stand on the threshold of a new year, and the Jews on the eve of their entering Canaan is so apparent that it can be seen at once. As the tired wanderers from Egypt stood facing the Promised Land, so do you and I stand facing 1909.

How are we going to commence our journey in the new year? Joshua, though he lived long, long ago, and though he was but a leader of a mob of liberated slaves, can show us the way. The captain of the Jewish host sent forward the Ark of the Covenant. We, who are the children of the larger hope, can do nothing better than to send forward into the new year the Cross of Christ. Why? Because only by the power of the Cross can we hope to pass successfully through the trials and temptations and to overcome the kings of passion and selfishness which so surely lie waiting for us in the next 12 months.

It must appeal to nearly every one, this ending of an old year and the beginning of a new one. A man must be dull indeed if it awakens no thoughts of a larger life, a more consecrated manhood, a more devoted discipleship. The past, let us remember, is dead; the future is always alive. It holds aloft in its strong right hand the morning star of hope and whispers to each child of man: "It is never too late to mend."

Let us face the new year with brave hearts and better determinations, placing before us as we advance the Cross of Christ, believing that in proportion as we are loyal to this symbol shall we have strength given us to endure hardness as good soldiers of the Master, patience to suffer without giving way to despair, sorrow and misfortune, and spiritual courage, so that we can come through every temptation triumphant and unafraid.

New Year's in Manila

To occidental eyes New Year's day in Manila is a strange olla podrida of Christmas, Easter and Fourth of July, says the New York Press. The day is ushered in with early mass, celebrated in the cathedral, which is attended by all the women attired in old clothes, and the poorer class barefooted and the wealthy in somber black, with black mantillas or shawls, shrouding their heads. But immediately after breakfast everybody begins to prink and preen for callers. Raven locks are plastered into elaborate coiffures with cocoanut oil and crowned with red or yellow blossoms, or in the case of a maiden who expects her lover to pay his respects to her on the New Year with the sweet starry flowers of the jessamine, which are called throughout the island the "flowers of San Paquita," who is the patron saint of lovers. Stiff, trailing skirts of gay brocade and antebellum cut are donned, wide flowing sleeves of embroidered pina gauze and ample neckerchiefs of the same filmy material are adjusted and there is a tinkling of many bangle bracelets as the fair ones seat themselves to wait the arrival of the first caller.

His entrance is the signal for the jam pot to be brought in. This takes the place of the steaming punch bowl of other lands, and is passed from hand to hand, each one taking a spoonful, no more, and everybody using the same spoon. It would be considered an unpardonable breach of etiquette to refuse to partake. The jam is followed by coffee, which is served very black and strong, and is half sugar. Strong, black cigars are next produced, and everybody lights up, including the hostess. It is a shock to the occidental mind to see young girls of 15 or 16 puffing away at long cigars, but every one smokes in the Philippines. The Spanish women usually confine themselves to cigarettes.

Many of the callers bring their guitars or mandolins, and there is always a little music. Some of the convent-bred girls are really excellent performers on the harp or piano, but pianos are always out of tune, owing to the damp climate. Impromptu concerts are organized, and occasionally there is skirt dancing, in which the Filipino women excel, many elderly dames who are "heavy-weights" executing the difficult native dances with a grace, agility and ease which would turn a New York or London music hall artist green with envy.

Real Purpose of Life

St. James asks: "What is thy life?" and his own answer to the question is: "For ye are a vapor, that appeareth for a little time, and then vanisheth away." The brevity of life has been the subject of deep thought and of anxious solicitude in all ages of the world. The poet tells us: "Our birth is nothing but our death begun." It is likened to a dream, a shadow, a vapor, a swift flying cloud, or the autumn leaf. Such is life! this life we are living away; this life that will so soon be over; this life on whose transient breath hangs everlasting destiny.

But we fail to appreciate life's meaning if we spend our time in sighing over its brevity. Life is not merely a vapor that presently vanisheth, it is a journey to a fixed destination. We are not only going, but we are going somewhere; not into the depths of a mystic solitude to be extinguished and forgotten. Our destiny is not annihilation and nothingness. To go forward aimlessly is the most inexcusable folly. To have around him all the evidences of God—and never to see them—to look upon a thousand church spires that point to an eternal life, and miss all their meanings, to be in a land of Bibles that reveals God's purposes for man's eternal destiny and be ignorant of his own end is indeed a negligence which it is difficult to comprehend. It is not death but life that is before us, not earthly life alone, but life a thread running interminably through the warp of eternity. Life is given us to be used with a view to its eternal destiny. To use it so as to give the soul room for its unfolding capacities, to use it to promote the highest good, to use it so as to make the most of it, that is to have before us a high and true ideal and the greatest hope for any event that can possibly follow. If we but work out our destiny according to the divine purpose it cannot fail to be eternal glory.

ELECTORS ARE ODDLY ASSORTED

Maryland's Electoral Representatives Cannot Explain Tangle.

One of the strangest meetings of Presidential electors ever held in this country will take place at Annapolis on the second Monday in January, when eight tried men and true of Maryland will record the supposed choice of the people of this state for President of the United States.

The word "supposed" is used advisedly, for the voters themselves seem to be a little mixed when it came to expressing a choice, two of the electors on the Taft ticket and six electors on the Bryan ticket having received a plurality of the votes cast. These eight Marylanders are expected to ignore the uncertain attitude of the men who cast the ballots and record the will as expressed for them individually.

Subsequently Judge Taft will get two of Maryland's votes and William Jennings Bryan will receive six of them. Maryland's eight electors are: John A. Robinson, Republican; J. Enos Ray, jr., Democrat; Edwin H. Brown, jr., Democrat; James W. Denny, Democrat; John F. Williams, Democrat; J. Charles Linthicum, Democrat; Hampson H. Biedler, Democrat, and Albert G. Towers, Republican. As the eight electors arise one by one and express their choice for President, N. Winslow Williams, the secretary of state, will record their wishes and prepare an official record of them for transmission to the authorities in Washington. One copy goes to the National House of Representatives and one of the eight electors will be designated as the official messenger of the State for the purpose of delivering the vote with that formality and solemnity which the occasion seems to justify.

None of the six Democrats will, it is supposed, be anxious for this task, for, under the circumstances, there is no glory in it, so the official messenger is likely to be one of the two Republicans, and as John A. Robinson got more votes than any other man on the ticket, it looks as if the task of making the State's vote known belongs to him.

Before Mr. Robinson starts forth to Washington, the governor will, if he follows precedent, invite him and the other electors to the executive mansion for dinner.

Why Mr. Robinson got more votes than any other elector, Democratic or Republican, he does not know. He is rather inclined to be satisfied that he got them without inquiring into the whys and wherefores, since it is an acknowledged fact that he got no more than belonged to him. Other Republican electors think they got less votes than were intended for them, and the fame that is Mr. Robinson's is due to his position as first man on the list of Republican electors.

Plans Mighty Engineering Feat.

After the Pennsylvania railroad has advanced farther with its terminal station and other improvements in New York work will be started on a bridge from Port Morris, a suburb of New York, to Queens county, Long Island.

The bridge as planned in many respects is to be one of the most daring and remarkable engineering structures ever proposed. With the approaches it will be three miles long and span Hell Gate ship channel with an enormous arch 1,000 feet in the clear. The entire bridge, except the piers for the arch, will be of steel having an estimated weight of 80,000 tons. The novel feature of the plans is that the train floor of the bridge instead of resting on the crown of the arch is hung from it. The crown is 300 feet above the water and the floor 140 feet, enabling the largest steamers to pass under with ease.

The bridge will have four tracks, two for passenger trains and two for freight trains.

The main arch is to be flanked by piers from which will rise double towers 200 feet high. The towers will be of massive proportions, with the lower portion of granite and the upper of concrete.

Washington Whisperings

Interesting Bits of News Gathered at the National Capital.

Amazing Increase in Divorce Is Shown

WASHINGTON.—It was generally known that divorces in the United States were getting more numerous each year, but nobody was prepared for the surprising statement made in a census bureau report that one marriage out of every twelve in the country terminates in divorce. Yet such is the case, as shown by the bureau's figures.

The statistics are the result of careful gathering of figures in every state in the union, the period covered being from 1887 to 1906. The last set of national statistics on marriage and divorce covered the period from 1867 to 1886. The present set of statistics, taken in conjunction with the former one, therefore, gives a view of the marriage and divorce question for the past 40 years.

The total number of marriages recorded for the 20-year period from 1887 to 1906 was 12,832,944. The total number of divorces for the period was 945,625.

For the period of the first investigation of the subject, from 1867 to 1886, the total number of divorces was 328,716. At the beginning of the 40-year period covered by both investigations there were in this country 10,000 divorces annually; at the end of the period there were 66,000 annually.

The divorce rate per 100,000 population increased from 29 in 1897 to 82 in 1905. The rate per 100,000 married population was 81 in 1870 and 200 in 1890. "This comparison," says the bulletin, "indicates that divorce is at present two and one-half times as common, compared with married population, as it was 40 years ago."

The Dakotas, which have a national reputation as divorce states, prove, on analysis of the tables, to be nowhere, either in total number of divorces granted or number of divorces per 100,000 of population, as against other states.

In discussing the relation of divorce to population, the bulletin says: "An increase of 30 per cent. in population between the years 1870 to 1880 was accompanied by an increase of 79 per cent. in the number of divorces granted In the next decade, 1880 to 1890, the population increased 25 per cent. and divorces 70 per cent., and in the following decade, 1890 to 1900, an increase of 21 per cent. in population was accompanied by an increase of 66 per cent. in the number of divorces. In the six years from 1900 to 1906, population, as estimated, increased 10.5 per cent. and divorces 29.3 per cent.

"It thus appears that at the end of the 40-year period divorces were increasing about three times as fast as population, while in the first decade (1870 to 1880) they increased only about two and two-thirds as fast.

"Divorce rates appear to be much higher in the United States than in any of the foreign countries for which statistics relating to this subject have been obtained."

Two-thirds of the total number of divorces granted in the 20-year period covered by this investigation were granted to the wife. Children were reported in 39.8 per cent. of the total number of divorce cases.

Ethel Roosevelt Mourns Loss of Lemon

THE strenuous life is not for Lemon, a small bull pup, whose habitat, until recently, was the White House. Lemon noticed a door ajar the other morning while roaming the White House, looking for excitement, and has not returned.

Though his name might not indicate it, Lemon is a puppy of class and caste. But for all that he's a dog and the sight of his vagabond brothers romping in the streets, dodging automobiles and snapping at horses' heels disgusted the Lemon with being the first dog in the land and he beat it.

Lemon is the property of Miss Ethel Roosevelt, debutante elect, who reported her loss to the police. Instanter a general lookout order was sent to every district in the precinct, and by nightfall there was not a dog on the streets of Washington. In the collection held for identification was every species of canine from a mangy mastiff to a flea-bitten flee, but none answered to the name of Lemon.

Various motives, if a dog may have a motive, may be assigned to Lemon's abrupt departure from the Roosevelt household. He might have had a vision of a small bull pup swinging to the port side of a lion in the wilds of Africa, and his master's voice shouting "sic 'em Lemon."

Again, he might have dreaded the time when he would reach the proper age to be harnessed to one of Master Archie's carts, or be matched in a main with the household cat, or wear an empty can attached to his tail. However, Lemon's motive for running away is purely speculative, for it is not given in the police report, and his mistress "can attribute no cause for the rash act."

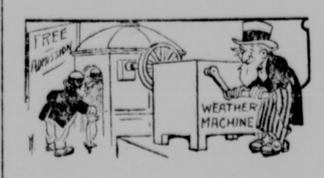
Naval Officers Experts in Diplomacy

WHEN it comes to diplomatic maneuvering to accomplish their designs the officers of the navy can give pointers to the Russians and the Japanese. As an instance the case of the hospital ship Relief may be cited. It will be remembered that last winter President Roosevelt made an order that the Relief should be commanded by a medical officer. The men at the navy department were amazed that a doctor should be given command of a vessel, but there was no appeal from Mr. Roosevelt's order. The Relief was detailed to accompany the fleet on its trip around the world. Letters from men who are with the fleet have been received here telling of the sad experiences of the hospital ship and her commander. In describing these experiences one writer prefaced his letter as follows: "The Relief is the most unpopular institution in the navy. There is no exception. The Relief has everything else beaten."

The story is that the Relief has been burdened with woe ever since the cruise began, and that every officer of the navy, except the doctors, is tickled to death that this is so. The line officers who didn't approve having a doctor as their commander have found many ways, the story goes, of making life miserable to the men in charge of the hospital ship. Of course the suggestion of a service conspiracy to this end would be resented and could not be proven, but there is a sub rosa intimation that something very like a cabal has been formed with the purpose of proving how much a doctor doesn't know about running a ship.

Wherever the fleet has been the Relief has usually limped along behind the procession. She has had trouble getting supplies, getting coal, getting consideration of all kinds. It always just happened this way and nobody in particular was to blame. It is hinted that when the fleet returns suggestions will be made in many quarters that the cruise has demonstrated that nobody is competent to manage a war vessel who is not an accredited officer of the navy. In other words, that the experience of the Relief, with a medical officer in command, has been a hopeless failure.

Weather Kiosk to Be Placed on Street



AN interesting experiment is about to be conducted in Washington. If it meets with success it will be extended to other cities. In the course of a few days there will be opened at one of the busiest points on Pennsylvania avenue a weather kiosk similar to those now in use in Berlin and other places in Germany. The object of the agricultural department in bringing about this innovation is to supply meteorological information in popular form. Behind the curtained windows of the kiosk will be copies of the daily weather charts, forecasts issued by the weather bureau, maximum thermometer and theronograph for recording temperature and rain gauge. There will be no barometer for it is the wish of the department that only meteorological facts in their simplest form shall be shown.

Officials of the weather bureau believe there will be great public interest in their new scheme. If their hopes are realized similar kiosks will be erected in about 15 cities in the course of the next five or six months.

Among other things expected of these kiosks is that they will ruin the reputations held by many cities of the United States, especially Washington, for excessive summer heat, many records of this kind having been established by inaccurate thermometers being hung outside stores and other buildings not conducive to correct readings.

About Right.

A boy was asked to explain the difference between animal instinct and human intelligence. "If we had instinct," he said, "we should know everything we needed to know without learning it; but we've got reason, and so we have to study ourselves 'most blind, or be a fool."—Universalist Leader.

Substitute for Sunlight.

Atmospheric electricity is believed to encourage plant life in the arctic regions, where there is but little sunlight.

The Philosopher of Folly.

"I never sit down," says the Philosopher of Folly, "to contemplate the uncertainties of life. It keeps me busy enough keeping track of the sure things."

Modern Way of Looking at It.

"The first sign of what we call civilization," says the Philosopher of Folly, "is when a nation stops killing people by hand and starts doing it by machinery."

As in a Mirror.

The best cure for drunkenness is while sober to see a drunken man.—Chinese.

Bridesmaid to Grandmother.

At a wedding celebrated at Bologna, in Italy, some days ago, the bride, a widow of 50, had her little granddaughter to act as bridesmaid.

Land for Sale.

We have for sale the following valuable tracts of land:

One Military Lot of 50 acres, a small portion of which is under cultivation. All good land, and every acre tillable. Watered by several good springs and a never failing small run. Contains some good timber. One-half mile from R. R. siding, and one and one-half miles from Oakland.

Also part of two Military Lots containing about 50 acres. This property is directly East of Oakland, on the South side of the B. & O. R. R. siding on the North side of tracks. Contains valuable grazing land, a portion of which is in cultivation. Valuable R. R. frontage.

Also 10 acres suitable for building sites, just East of Oakland on the North side of the Oakland and Mt. Lake Park road.

For further information, address

THE H. WEBER & SONS CO.,
6-tf Oakland, Md.

W. H. RAVENSCRAFT, M.D., PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON, OAKLAND, MD.
Residence on North Third street.
Office in McComas Building.

DR. J. E. LEGGE, PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON,
Offers his Services to the citizens of Oakland and vicinity.
Office in McComas Building, Second street

DR. R. F. BARTLETT, DENTIST.
Office in McComas Building, Second street Oakland, Md.
Special attention given to bridge and crown work.

DR. J. G. ROBINSON, DENTIST, OAKLAND MD.
Office at residence on Liberty street.
GAS ADMINISTERED.

NORMAN S. HEINDELL, ATTORNEY-AT-LAW,
All business given prompt attention.
Office—First National Bank Building.
KLAND, MARYLAND.

GILMOR S. HAMILL, ATTORNEY-AT-LAW AND SOLICITOR IN CHANCERY.
Office in Garrett National Bank Building
Particular attention given to Conveyancing investigation of land titles and collection of claims. Loans negotiated.

EDWARD H. SINCELL, ATTORNEY-AT-LAW, OAKLAND, MARYLAND.
Will practice in the Courts of Garrett and Allegany counties, the Court of Appeals of Maryland, and the adjoining counties of West Virginia.

Baltimore & Ohio R. R.
Schedule effective June 2, 1907.
OAKLAND.
* Daily. † Daily except Sunday. § Sunday only.
For WASHINGTON, BALTIMORE, PHILADELPHIA & NEW YORK, Depart *12.27 a. m., *6.31 a. m., *4.17 p. m., *8.29 p. m. Arrive *7.12 a. m., *3.33 p. m., *10.26 p. m., *11.54 p. m.
For CUMBDELAND and Way Points, Depart †10.00 a. m., *4.40 p. m. Arrive †9.26 a. m., *7.26 p. m.
For COLUMBUS & CHICAGO, Depart *11.54 p. m. Arrive *6.07 a. m., *4.17 p. m.
For GRAFTON (Accom.), Depart †9.26 a. m., *7.26 p. m. Arrive *10.00 a. m., *4.40 p. m.
For FAIRMONT and WHEELING, Depart †9.26 a. m. (local), *3.33 p. m., *11.54 p. m. Arrive *6.07 a. m., *4.17 p. m., *12.25 night.
For FAIRMONT (Accom.), Depart *7.26 p. m Arrive *10.00 a. m.
For CINCINNATI, LOUISVILLE and ST. LOUIS, Depart *7.12 a. m., *3.33 p. m., *10.26 p. m. Arrive *12.27 a. m., *6.31 a. m., *8.29 p. m

Oakland Pharmacy
JOS. E. HARNED, Proprietor.
Drugs, Chemicals, Stationery, Cigars
Cameras and Photo Supplies

FOR SALE.

We will sell at private sale at our farms between Mt. Lake Park and Oakland,

1 Gasoline Engine,

8 horse-power, made by the International Harvester Co. Almost new and in perfect running order. Will be sold for $275.

1 Hay Bailer,

operated by horse-power. Makes standard size bales.

For further information call on or write to
THE H. WEBER & SONS CO.,
Oakland, Md.

J. B. WILLIAMS CO.
FROSTBURG, MD.
Cheapest place to buy
MONUMENTS
HEADSTONES AND IRON FENCING
Send for prices

A Hint to the Wise Is Sufficient.

Special Sale on
2-qt Blue Enamel Saucepan.
2-qt Blue Fnamel Pudding Pans.
2-qt Blue Enamel Preserve Kettles.

We have just received over 1500 lbs. of our famous 10c Candy.

SUNDAY SCHOOL SUPPLIES.

TAKE our advice—buy now, don't wait, but come and see
THE
Little Man
and you will save money on all your Holiday Goods,
Toys, Candies, Novelties, Fancy Goods.
Baumgartner.

CAPITAL $25,000.00

The First National Bank
Of Grantsville, Md.
Safe deposit vault boxes for rent.

SURPLUS $12,500.00

The Savings Department
Takes care of your money when waiting other investment. The money earns interest from the day it is deposited. It can be withdrawn at any time.

Its Advantages
Any amount from One Dollar up can be deposited, and interest added to principal twice a year. Pass books are issued to every depositor.

We Pay 3 Per Cent. Interest.
Open Daily except Sundays and Holidays. 9 a. m. to 4 p. m.

OFFICERS.
C. H. JENNINGS, - - President
U. M. STANTON, - Vice-President
J. O. GETTY, - - - Cashier
DIRECTORS.
C. H. Jennings, J. M. Stanton,
G. C. Keller, Eli Stanton,
W. A. Hitchins, Frank Watts,
J. O. Getty.

A. D. NAYLOR & COMP'Y

You can buy at Reduced Prices
Grain Drills, Harrows AND Plows
AT NAYLOR & CO.'S

Big Stock to select from.

Have the Farmer's Favorite Drills, the Thomas, the Superior Hoe and Disc Drills.

We have the Syracuse, the Imperial and the Wyard Plows.

Also the wood frame Harrows, the wheel and lever Harrows; also the Disc Harrow, all at reduced prices.

We also have a nice line of Spray Pumps.

Muco-Solvent

is an indispensible household remedy because it is a preventive as well as a cure, and because it arrests development of all contageous germs and bacterial diseases. It cures croup, colds, tonsilitis with its associated ills and all inflamed and catarrhal conditions of the mucous surface. It is a harmless vegetable preparation that may safely be administered to the tenderest babe. If not for sale in your neighborhood, write to

THE PIEDMONT SUPPLY CO.,
Sole Agents for Muco-Solvent. Piedmont, W. Va.

Real Estate Bargains

I offer for sale

FARM OF 147 ACRES, 3 miles from Oakland; good 6-room House; plenty of water; over 50 acres cleared; about 25 acres of grass; 2 Orchards, bearing; over 75 acres of White Oak Timber; R. F. D. mail service.

COTTAGE OF 6 ROOMS for sale at Mt. Lake Park.

HOUSE AND LOT on Oak Street, Oakland, for sale or rent. House of 6 rooms—Lot 50x150 feet, with Stable and all necessary Outbuildings.

FOUR VERY DESIRABLE BUILDING LOTS situated on Liberty Street, in Oakland. Also 3 DWELLING HOUSES on Liberty Street, with good water and all necessary outbuildings.

HOUSE AND LOT on Wilson Street. House of 10 rooms; good water. Lot 150 feet front. Best Outbuildings in Oakland.

A VERY GOOD FARM 1 mile from Oakland—all under fence; containing 32 acres; about 25 under cultivation; 2 fine Orchards, and about 2½ acres in small Fruit; 2 Houses, a very good Well and a never failing Spring. A very desirable place for Truck and Poultry Farming. Can be bought at a low price just now.

I have for sale 18 of the very best Building Lots in the town which I will sell for cash—or $5 down and $5 per month.

150 ACRES OF VALUABLE COAL LAND situated less than two miles of Oakland which can be bought at a great bargain. The surface would make fine farming land. This land is well watered with a stream and several good springs.

12 MORE CHOICE BUILDING LOTS at $5 down and $5 per month.

If you want cash for your Real Estate, or Real Estate for your cash, let me hear from you.

☞For further particulars call on or address

James A. Sincell Real Estate Agt and Surveyor
Sincell Building, OAKLAND MD

THE REPUBLICAN

BENJ. H. SINCELL, EDITOR.

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 31, 1908.

NEW YEAR GREETING.

May the New Year be to you a year of the right hand of the Most High. May the path in which you walk, however narrow, be not like a blind alley, but may it be a thoroughfare leading out into wider and greater possibilities, and illumined always by the ever-living Presence, and by the Star of Hope. May your life be ever filled with the Christ-spirit. May the horizon of your life grow broader and broader, and may you ever keep the upward look, remembering Him who says "I will guide thee with Mine eye." Walking close to Him day by day, may this year be the best year of your life.

THE LAW AND THE PROPHETS.

The authorities of Nyack, N. Y., deserve a vote of thanks for preventing the sudden wind-up of things terrestrial. A local prophet had predicted the end of the world for noon on Sunday. He announced that while he would be snatched up to heaven in a chariot of fire, his disciples would follow in more prosaic vehicles. A large number of persons, who half believe predictions were like the man who had "insomnia so bad he conldn't sleep nights." They sat up waiting for the crack of doom while wishing earnestly that it might be indefinitely postponed. Women and children were frightened half out of their wits. Then the authorities stepped in with a warrant for the arrest of Prophet Spangler as a public nuisance, and the prophet stepped out and has not been seen since. When nervous Nyack found that the world rolled on just as it had been doing for quite a few years, it declared that it had always thought that fellow was a fraud.

It must be admitted that the Nyack method of dealing with prophets of evil is the most effective on record. Of course, the end of the world cannot very well take place without the presence of the person who predicted it, and if he takes to the tall timber, that breaks the spell. Everybody who is the least superstitious knows that. Folk who predict the end of the world, especially in this gladsome holiday season, are admittedly the worst kind of a public nuisance. The police should curb their pernicious activities. Then there will be no reason for weak-minded persons to lie awake nights worrying over the fate of this terrestial ball.

RYANS GLADE.

Here we are again, Mr. Editor, asking for a little more space in the columns of the good old REPUBLICAN.

Christmas came and went without bringing the sleighing snow so much desired by the young people.

The program rendered on Christmas Eve by our Sunday school was pronounced by spectators a grand success.

Quite a number of our young people attended a Christmas entertainment at Gorman on Christmas night. They report a good time.

E. P. Idleman preached a very helpful sermon here Sunday morning. In the afternoon he drove over to Oakland where he joined in holy wedlock Mr Elmer Harvey and Miss Annie Steyer, both of this place. We wish them a long and peaceful voyage over the matrimonial sea. They are spending their honeymoon in other parts of this county visiting friends.

Oru E. L. has made quite a growth in membership recently.

Mr. G. N. Steyer, a student in the West Virginia Wesleyan College, Buckhannon, is spending the holidays with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. John T. Steyer.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Neville were visiting at N. B. Harvey's Sunday.

Miss Ida Harvey, who is teaching school near Chaffe, is at home with her parents while school is closed.

Dr. S. A. Moon made a social call at J. T. Steyer on Christmas.

Miss Dora Friend, of Blaine, is visiting Miss Emma Steyer for a few days.

We notice the official election returns show that the Prohibition party is growing like a cow's tail—down hill. Still the temperance cause is spreading.

Quite a number of farmers expect to attend the Farmers' Institute at Oakland tomorrow.

We are sorry to hear of the death of our mail carrier's son, Roy. We extend our sympathy to the bereaved family.

As the New Year dawns let us resolve to live better than we have in the one that is passing into history and then work to make it so.

U NO ME.

Four Per Cent. Interest.

The First National Bank, Friendsville, pays four per cent. interest on time deposits. Place your money in this bank where its earning capacity will be greater than in any other banking institution in the county.

THE FIRST NATIONAL BANK,
Friendsville, Md.

Take me out to the Gold Mine.

TAFT IS OPPOSED TO CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT

Says Maryland Disfranchising Measure Should Be Condemned.

President-elect Taft has written to Collector W. F. Stone, the Republican city leader, Baltimore, saying:

"I don't think anyone can read my North Carolina speech with any care and on that base the belief that I would favor such a bill (disfranchising amendment) as that proposed in Maryland."

Collector Stone wrote to Judge Taft on December 9, saying that the address delivered by the President-elect the preceding day at the annual banquet of the North Carolina Society in New York was being construed as in favor of the Constitutional amendment to be submitted to the voters of Maryland next fall. He inclosed a copy of the amendment.

Judge Taft's reply in full was as follows:

Augusta, Ga., Dec. 22, 1908.

My Dear Mr. Stone:

I have your letter of December 9, but have not been able to answer it until now. I don't think anyone can read my North Caroline speech with any care and on that base the belief that I would favor such as bill as that proposed in Maryland. The provision that the first class of eligible voters shall be those persons who on the first day of January in the year 1869, or prior thereto, were entitledto vote under the laws of Maryland or any other state of the United States wherein they then resided, and that the male decendants of such persons, as second class, shall be entitled to vote, was intended to exempt the persons thus made eligible from the educational or property qualifications which follow in the descriptions of the fifth and sixth classes of persons who shall be entitled to vote. The same thing may be said of the third and fourth classes which include foreign-born citizens of the United States naturalized between January 1. 1869, and the date of the adoption of the proposed section, and the male descendants of such persons. This is in order to exempt such immigrants and their decendants from educational or property qualifications.

Now, we know the first four classes include no negroes at all. In other words, it is intended to free the whites from educational or property qualifications, but to subject all negroes to them.

The whole law ought to be condemned. It is not drawn in the spirit of justice and equality having regard for the Fourteenth and Fifteenth Amendments, and I sincerejy hope that no Republican and no Democrat who desires equality of treatment to the black and white races will vote for it. Sincerely yours,

WM. H. TAFT.

Hon. William F. Stone, Collector of Customs, Baltimore, Md.

Why there should have been, if there really was, any consolation for Democrats and consternation for Republicans in the speech made by Judge Taft seems hard to understand, except for the fact that he discussed the whole subject without any show of feeling and with a full apreciation of all the circumstances surrounding the matter.

He said in his North Carolina speech:

I am not going to rehearse the painful history of reconstruction or what followed it. I come at once to the present condition of things, stated from a constitutional and political standpoint. And that is this: That in all Southern States it is possible, by election laws prescribing proper qualifications for the suffrage which square with the Fifteenth Amendment and which shall be equally administered as between the black and the white races, to prevent entirely the possibility of a domination of Southern State, county or municipal governments by an ignorant electorate, black or white.

It is further true that the sooner such laws, when adopted, are applied with exact equality and justice to the two races the better for the moral tone of the State and community concerned. Negroes should be given an opportunity, equally with white, by education and thrift to meet the requirements of of eligibility which the State Legislatures in their wisdom shall lay down in order to secure the safe exercise of the electoral franchise. The negro should ask nothing other than an equal chance to qualify himself for the franchise, and when that is granted by law and not denied by legislative discrimination, he has nothing to complain of.

The proposal to repeal the Fifteenth Amendment is utterly impracticable, and should be relegated to the limbo of forgotten issues. What we are considering is something practical, something that means attainable progress. It seems to me to follow, therefore, that there is, or ought to be, a common ground upon which we can all stand in respect to the race question in the South and its political bearing that takes away any justification for maintaining the continued solidity of the South to prevent the so-called negro domination.

The fear that, in some way or other, a social equality between the races shall be enforced by law or brought about by political measures really has no foundations except in the imagination of those who fear such a result. The Federal Government has nothing to do with social equality. The war amendments do not declare in favor of social equality; all that the law or Constitution attempts to secure is equality before the law and in the enjoyment of life, liberty and property. Social equality is something that grows out of voluntary concessions by the individuals forming society.

With the elimination of the race question can we say that there are removed all the reasons why the people of the South are reluctant to give up their political solidarity and divide themselves on party lines in accordance with their economic and polical views? No. There are other reasons, perhaps only reasons of sentiment, but with the Southern people, who are a high-strung, sensitive and outspoken people, considerations of sentiment are frequently quite as strong as those of some political or economic character.

In the first place it is now nearly 40 years since the South acquired its political solidarity and the intensity of feeling by which it was maintained, and the ostracism and social proscription imposed on those white Southerners who will not sympathize with the necessity for such solidarity could not but make lasting impression and create a permanent bias that would naturally outlast the reason for its original existence.

MOUNTAIN LAKE PARK.

The terrible death of William Smouse, which occurred Thursday night after his fatal injury at the station here earlier in the evening, cast a gloom over the entire community. Mr. Smouse was very popular here where he has resided for many years and has been a trusted employee of the Mountain Lake Park Association for the past five years. The funeral services took place in the M. E. Church, under the direction of the Order of Red Men, of which the deceased was a member, the sermon being preached by Dr. Davis, Superintendent of Mountain Lake Park, who came here from Baltimore for that purpose.

Miss Irma Squires, of Louisville, Ky., sent a unique Christmas remembrance to her friend Mrs. J. A. Hayden. It was a lage box of candies representing in shape and color all kinds of good things kept in a (candy) "butcher shop," consisting of sliced ham, breakfast bacon, oysters, sausage in casing, doughnuts, sandwiches, pork and beans, green tea, crackers, etc. The present was highly appreciated by Mrs. Hayden.

Mr. and Mrs. Winchel, and a few friends arrived here Tuesday and will occupy their beautiful cottage for some time. They will kill their tame deer, which is as fat as a butter ball, and entertain their friends on venison, turkey, etc.

Mr. and Mrs. Lee N. Hayden spent Christmas in Piedmont and Westernport, returning to the Park Monday evening.

The ice plant is now ready for operation and will be started up as soon as the ice has attained a sufficient thickness which will only require a few more nights such as we have been having. Supt. Davis is offering 15 cents per hour for transient laborers and 17½ cents per hour for men who will remain the entire season.

We are glad to be able to announce that Mr. Henry Lauer, the proprietor of the Oakland Model Steam Bakery, has leased and will conduct the refreshment stand in Chautauqua Park next season.

The fine skating on the lake is being taken advantage of by our young people these spoony moonlight nights.

The Christmas entertainment Friday night last was most enjoyable and reflected credit upon those having the exercises in charge.

An Epworth Leaque social will be held at the residence of Mr. E. E. Friend tonight.

Special services commenced in the U. B. church, Loch Lynn, last Sunday night.

Mr. Samuel Lee is spending the holidays with his parents here.

Mr. Eugene Binkly spent Christmas with his mother. He is employed in a railroad office in Chicago.

NORTH GLADE.

Winter is passing of nicely.

Very quiet for Christmas time.

Rev. Yugel held a Christmas entertainment at the Lutheran Chapel.

We wish to congratulate Mr. Scott Shreves, of Oakland, and Miss Bessie Beckman of this place, who were married at the bride's home on the 24th inst.

We are also informed that Mr. Walter Friend and Miss Comp were married by Rev. Brumbaugh on Christmas.

We are sorry to learn that Wm. Lohr is sick with quinsy.

Thompson Paugh, of Bond, was visiting his parents here Sunday.

Mr. Brumbaugh, of Portsmouth, O., paid us a visit on Sunday. He is a son of Rev. Brumbaugh of Swanton.

Amos Reckner, who recently purchased Salem Lee's farm, has moved on same.

Mason Brothers are running their sawmill to its full capacity. G. W. Moon is also operating his mill. These are some indications that times are improving.

Rev. Brumbaugh preached for us very acceptably on Sunday. He will commence a protracted meeting here on the 11th of January..

A happy New Year to the editor.

Subscribe for The Republican.

TWO SESSIONS OF THE FARMERS' INSTITUTE

Held In the Court House at Oakland Yesterday With Large Attendance.

There were two sessions of the Farmers' Instisute held in the court house here yesterday, one in the morning and one in the afternoon, both of which were attended by large numbers of farmers from many secitons of the county who evinced great interest in the lectures delivered by the speakers, Dr. Augustus Stabler, of Montgomery county, and Dr. Joseph Wing, of Mechanicsburg, Ohio, the former speaking on "Bacteria" and the latter on "Alfalfa Culture" and the sheep industry.

Mr. Wm. Lee Amos, director of the State Department, Farmers' Institutes, presided at both sessions.

The interest manifested in the proceedings was repeatedly shown by the frequent questions asked by those present as to the best methods along certain lines and many apparently knotty problems were unraveled to the satisfaction of the questioners as well as the rest of the audience.

In his talk on "Alfalfa Culture," Mr. Wing said that there was something wrong with soil that would not produce alfalfa, and that soil that would produce alfalfa would grow anything else, hence when the farmer knows that he has produced a good crop of alfalfa on a piece of land he may be certain that he can raise a crop of anything else on the same land. The speaker stated most emphatically that lime in sufficient quantities was necessary to grow alfalfa in Maryland, although it grows in Utah without cultivation. In Alabama alfalfa is grown in large quantities, the land being full of lime, and more money is made out of it in the latter state than any other crop. Mr. Wing said that in Kentucky they told him they could grow alfalfa but he induced the farmers there to try lime and success has followed the experiment. In the same way alfalfa can be grown in this state, the product standing best if sown in the fall, particularly in the eastern states. Mr. Wing's lecture based on "A Story of a Woodland Farm," was composed of a series of anecdotes taken from his own actual experience as a boy and man on his father's farm in Ohio, where he now is a successful farmer. In making a comparison between the farmers of Maryland and those of his section of Ohio, the speaker said that it seemed to him that the main difficulty with the farmers of this state was that they lack faith and determination in their work; that the farmers of Ohio believe more in it, see more in it, work harder and probably borrow a little more money to make things go and that they are doing so. Also that it is necessary to inject the germ of faith and determination to do things in farming, not so much to tell how but to find out from experience for oneself.

Dr. Augustus Stabler, of Sandy Springs, Montgomery county, Md., gave much valuable information on bacteria and hygeine together with facts in connection with the care of cows and milk in both his lectures, and was repeatedly plied with questions. The great points, he said, in connection with the production of pure and wholesome milk are that the stable should be kept clean, that there should be no filth in the stalls, also plenty of light and ventilation, matters of which so many farmers take little heed. The cow, quietly chewing the cud and apparently asleep, requires a certain amount of pure cold air to assist in the great work that is taking place in the preparation of the milk. The highest type of milk cannot be obtained from the cow in a stable not properly ventilated. Some of the reasons that health boards desire a regular inspection of dairy farms are that the farmer is careless, is too busy to give the required attention to his stock, knows little about bacteria and the proper way to preserve the milk and how to deliver it to his customers in perfect condition. The speaker advocated that the farmer should not be required to shoulder any expense of inspection or loss from cattle laid off on account of disease, as these measures were in the interest of the public generally. As it is now, the farmer has to shoulder the loss, which is hardly fair under the circumstances. If the farmer is fairly treated he takes more interest, but under present conditions where he has to bear all loss incurred from the state inspection and what may follow he is apt to be afraid and feel that he may just as well be engaged in a less hazardous business, such as sheep or grain raising, which are also more profitable. The inference drawn by the speaker was that the farmer in providing pure milk for humanity is to a certain extent a philanthropist, if he is doing it right, and that he is not getting paid for it.

Mr. Wing, at the afternoon session, gave an interesting talk on sheep, which found a responsive chord in the minds of every farmer present, as nearly every one is more or less interested in the sheep industry. The subject was given an impetus by reason of the great success of a local sheep breeder whose sales in Chicago a few days ago netted $7,000 from the sale of less than a hudrend and fifty head of animals, photographs of some of the animals being on exhibition and attracted a great deal of attention.

This morning Dr. Stabler and Mr. Wing went to Accident where they will hold an institute this afternoon. Mr. Amoss, who has been quite ill for two weeks, returned to his home from here last night.

The Lonaconing Savings Bank

Of Allegany Couuty.

Capital Stock . $20,000
Surplus and Undivided Profits . $60,000
Deposits . . $625,000

3 PER CENT. Interest Paid Upon all Savings Accounts.

GIVE THEM A START

Tne New Year is rapidly approaching. This would be a good time for you to start your young folks on the road to Success.

Early training in the practice of self-denial; instruction as to the use and value of money; opportunities for earning and saving money; all these tend to fix and fasten the children in the ways of thrift and prosperity.

We most gladly assist the young people in getting started.

One Dollar opens an account and entitles the depositor to one of our Savings Banks.

We shall be pleased to have our Garrett County friends call and receive a 1908 Calendar.

DAVID SLOAN, President. R. R. SLOAN, Treasurer.

The First National Bank

FRIENDSVILLE, MD.

Capital, $25,000. Surplus and Undivided Profits, $24,000.

OFFICERS:

L. E. Friend, President. J. W. McCullough, V. P.
R. C. McCandlish, Cashier.

DIRECTORS:

L. E. Friend, Merchant.
J. W. McCullough, Lumber and Coal.
W. W. Savage, Merchant.
D. S. Custer, Merchant.
H. M. Rumbaugh, Farmer.
W. H. H. Friend, Pension Agent and Surveyor.
Horace R. DeWitt, Treasurer of Garrett County, Md.
R. C. McCandlish.

We will issue time or demand certificates of deposit and pay you 4 per cent. interest if your money is left with us.

In all its dealings this Bank combines absolute safety with satisfactory service and never loses sight of either.

SAFETY DEPOSIT BOXES FOR RENT.

Obituary.

In the sad and unexpected death of our young friend, Mr. Roy George, son of our neighbor Mr. Charles A. George, Deer Park has lost one of her best young men and his family a devoted and loving boy just merging into his 20th year, being 19 years, 6 months and 12 days old; a young man of fine physique and a character unblemished by any of the vices that beset young men of this day. Intoxicants never passed his lips and the use of tobacco was unknown to him. Industrious and self supporting from the age of ten years, it seems strange to us that God in His wise providence takes from us our most precious jewels, yet we know it is for our best good but fail to realize these dispensations of Providence.

The respect and popularity of this noble and devoted son and brother was fully evidenced by the large concourse of our citizens that attended his funeral—not a house in our town but was represented to pay the last sad tribute of respect to his memory.

To his bereaved family we extend our heartfelt symaathy and we know we voice the sentiment of the citizens of our town and vicinity in our expressions of condolence.

In their behalf and at their expressed request the thanks of Mr. and Mrs. George is hereby extended to all the citizens of Deer Park and vicinity for the many acts of kindness and sympathy in this the saddest of their earthly experience in the untimely taking away of their first-born.

Top Notch Price for Dressed TurKeys.

Mr. G. W. Haulenbeek, of Baltimore and Deer Park, always on the lookout for items of interest to his Garrett county friends, sends us the following from Baltimore:

"Shoppers in Lexington market, Baltimore, the day before Christmas, all seemed to want dressed turkeys, and the price went up accordingly. Early in the day they were selling at 25 cents a pound, and the price kept advancing until the only dealer who had any in stock put the price per pound up to 45 cents, and lots of foolish people paid that extravagant price, when other stalls were loaded down with the choicest of beef, lamb and other good things. Poultry dealers who have been in the business a long time declare that dressed turkeys never before reached 45 cents a pound within their recollection."

School Board in New Quarters.

The office of the Board of School Commissioners was moved from the First National Bank building to the rooms set apart for the Board on the second floor of the new court house.

Notice to Delinquent Renters of Garrett County Telephone Company.

At a meeting of the Board of Directors of the Garrett County Telephone Company, held at Hoyes, Md., Dec. 17, 1908, the following motion was made and adopted by the Board as a whole: That all parties who are in arrears with their rents to the amount of six months that if they are not paid by the 1st day of March, 1909, they will be placed in the proper officers' hands for collection.

C. V. GUARD, Sec'y.

FOR SALE—A National Cash Register. Offutt & Renninger.

Notice To Delinquent Tax-Payers.

Notice is hereby given to all delinquent tax-payers that if taxes now due and in arrears are not paid before

JANUARY 1ST, 1909,

I will proceed by law to collect. I refer to Section 50 of Chapter 466 of Acts of the General Assembly of Maryland, which provides as follows:

SECTION 50. The said Treasurer shall during the first week in December in each and every year, give notice to all delinquent tax-payers of said county, by advertisement inserted in two newspapers published in said county, and in hand-bills posted in five of the most public places in each election district of said county, and at the courthouse door, warning them that the payment of all taxes then due and in arrear will be enforced by advertisement and sale unless the same be paid before the 1st day of January next following.

Please pay promptly and save costs.

W. E. HOLLINGER,
Treasurer of Garrett County.

Notice to Creditors.

This is to give notice, That the subscriber of Garrett county hath obtained from the Orphans' Court of Garrett county, in Maryland, letters of Administration on the personal estate of

A. F. GEORGE,

late of Garrett county, deceased. All persons having claims against the deceased are hereby warned to exhibit the same, with the vouchers thereof legally authenticated to the subscriber, on or before the 26th day of May next; they may otherwise by law be excluded from all benefit of said estate. All persons knowing themselves indebted to said estate are requested to make immediate payment.

Given under my hand this 24th day of November, 1908.

MARY E. GEORGE,
Administratrix.
Swanton, Md.

Notice to Creditors.

This is to give notice, That the subscriber, of Garrett county hath obtained from the Orphan's Court of Garrett county, in Maryland, letters of Administration on the personal estate of

WILLIAM FRUSH,

late of Garrett county, deceased. All persons having claims against the deceased are hereby warned to exhibit the same, with the vouchers thereof legally authenticated to the subscriber, on or before the 14th day of April, next; they may otherwise by law be excluded from all benefit of said estate. All persons knowing themselves indebted to said estate are requested to make immediate payment.

Given under my hand this 14th day of October, 1908.

JOHN W. FRUSH,
Administrator.
R. F. D., Oakland, Md.

Notice to Creditors.

This is to give notice, That the subscriber of Garrett County in Maryland, hath obtained from the Orphans' Court of Garrett county, in Maryland, letters Aministration on the personal estate of

J. RUSSELL BROWNING,

late of Garrett County, deceased. All persons having claims against the deceased are hereby warned to exhibit the same with the vouchers thereof legally authenticated to the subscriber, on or before the 29th day of April, next; they may otherwise by law be excluded from all benefit of said estate. All persons knowing themselves indebted to said estate are requested to make immediate payment.

Given under my hand this 29th day of October, 1908.

M. A. BROWNING,
Administrator.
Kitzmiller, Md.

A Meritorious Institution

Estaolished as a State Bank in 1888 with a capital of $25,000.00; changed to a National Bank in 1903 and capital increased to $50,000.00; TODAY with a capital and surplus of $85,000.00 and total resources of over $500,000.00

BETTER, BIGGER AND STRONGER

than ever. During the 20 years of our existence, our aim has been to extend to our patrons the best possible service. Our steady growth is evidence that the banking institution, which throws the greatest safeguards around its business in order to protect its depositors merits the confidence of the public. If you are not a customer of this Bank let this be your invitation to become one; our relations will be mutually profitable.

Garrett National Bank

Of Oakland, Maryland.

K. of P. Fair this evening.

Mr. V. V. Washburne, of Brunswick, Md., spent Sunday in Oakland.

Deputy Sheriff Schaffer, of Kingwood, spent Sunday in Oakland.

Dr. R. A. Ravenscroft, of the Baltimore Custom House, spent Saturday in Oakland on business.

Mr. Leo Rasche, of Grafton, spent Friday in Oakland with his mother and other relatives.

Dr. W. W. Davis, of the Park, spent several days there this week on business.

Mr. J. O. Harvey, of near Deer Park, was a visitor to this office Monday afternoon.

Mr. Charles A. Tower, of Cumberland, was in the city a day or two last week on business.

Mrs. E. Fundenberg and daughter, Miss Teckla, of near Deer Park, were in Oakland yesterday shopping.

Dr. Webster Ravenscroft went to Dawson, Allegany county, Saturday afternoon, where he spent Sunday with his father.

Miss Lulu Fringer, who spent several months at Talbotton, Georgia, returned to her home in Oakland last Wednesday and will remain here until Easter.

Mr. and Mrs. C. F. Hammond and son Roy, spent Christmas in Newburg, W. Va., where they were the guests of relatives.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter Ravenscraft, of Ridgeway, Pa., are here spending the holidays with Dr. and Mrs. W. H. Ravenscraft.

Mr. and Mrs. Julius C. Renninger went to Eglon, W. Va., on Wednesday, where they spent several days as the guests of relatives and friends.

Miss Della Browning spent a day or two last week in Lonaconing, where she was the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Abram Lawton.

Mr. Leonard Lochner, of this office, who spent last week with his parents in Lonaconing, returned to Oakland on Monday.

Mr. E. M. Spedden, of Crellin, spent Sunday in Oakland with his sister, Mrs. S. E. Shirer. At the Sunday morning service in St. Paul's M. E. church, Mr. Spedden assisted with the music, his voice adding volume and melody to the excellent choir of that church.

Attend the K. of P. Fair tonight—your last chance.

Mr. John Geohringer, of Accident, spent yesterday evening in Oakland.

Mr Gilead Broadwater, of near Grantsville, was in the city Tuesday and yesterday on business.

Messrs. A. J. and R. M. Alexander, of Accident District, were in the city Monday on business.

Messrs. H. J. and H. M. Speicher, of Accident, were Oakland visitors yesterday.

Commissioners' meeting next Tuesday for the purpose of appointing road supervisors and contables.

Mr. and Mrs. T. E. Briggs, of Rockville, Md., arrived in Oakland yesterday afternoon where they will remain until Saturday visiting relatives.

Messrs. Daniel Dorsey, of Grantsville, and William T. Stanton, of near Bittinger, were in Oakland Tuesday, attending court as witnesses.

Mr. Fred C. Ries, of Accident, who has been on a business trip east, arrived in Oakland this morning and went from here to his home.

Mr. and Mrs. Roy Hamill, of Upper Potomac, W. Va., spent Wednesday in Oakland, going from here to Morgantown, where they were the guests for several days of Mrs. Hamill's parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. R. Mealy.

Mr. and Mrs. Julius Scherr, of Charleston, W. Va., arrived here on Tuesday, where they remained a day or two as the guests of Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Renninger, and then went to Eglon where they will remain over tomorrow to attend the wedding of their son, Dr. Arnold Scherr, to Miss Zella Shaffer.

Mr. G. A. Bolden, editor of the Grafton Daily Republican, spent Saturday afternoon and Sunday in Oakland as the guest of his brother, Mr. D. E. Bolden. He returned home Sunday afternoon, accompanied by Miss Gertrude Shirer, of this office, who will spend the week as the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Bolden.

Among the students who are home for the holidays and whose names were not mentioned in this paper last week, are Messrs. Stanley Mitchell, from Randolph-Macon Academy, Roanoke, Va., and Mike Boyle, from the Maryland Institute for the Deaf, at Frederick, and Miss Dorothy King, also from the school at Frederick.

CAPITAL 50.0 0.00 — SURPLUS AND PROFITS $29,000.00

THE First National Bank

OAKLAND, MD.

GOVERNMENT DEPOSITORY.

One of the Largest and Best Equipped Banking Houses in Maryland.

Vaults absolutely Fire and Burglar proof.

Safety Deposit Boxes for Rent

Pays 3 Per Cent. on Time Deposits—Compounded Semi-Annually

Every courtesy extended consistent with sound banking.

Home Savings Banks Free. $1.00 will start an account.

The Depositor with a Dollar account receives the same consideration as the largest depositor.

COME IN AND GET ACQUAINTED

The Dying Year

FAREWELL, farewell, old year, to thee
I fondly say adieu;
Like Christmastide, soon wilt thou glide,
To make way for the new.
The birds and buds have disappeared,
I've watched the leaf grow sear,
And, with a melancholy sigh,
I part with thee, old year.

When nineteen-nine is ushered in,
And joybells gayly ring,
I'll keep in mind the bygone days,
'Round memory will they cling;
I'll brush a tear for a missing voice,
Recall a vacant chair;
At the sad and solemn hour of night,
I part with thee, old year.

Thy race is run, brief is thy stay,
Thy bells no longer peal;
Farewell, old wornout castaway,
For thee a pang I feel.
Soon will the new, with rosy hue,
'Mid joyous shouts appear,
And with a melancholy sigh
I say farewell, old year.

PRISONERS TAKEN DOWN.

Three Sentenced to the Penitentiary Taken to That Institution To-Day

This morning Sheriff Austin Brown started from Oakland on train No. 2 with three prisoners who were sentenced to serve terms in the Maryland Penitentiary in Baltimore, the men being John Adam and Nick Brazika, convicted for the part they played in the death of Tony Listic, Adam to serve for eighteen months and Brazika for eight years; and John Higgins, convicted for stealing a ham from the Mountain Lake Park Hotel, who will serve one year.

Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Sturgiss, who spent Christmas in Meyersdale with the parents of Mrs. Sturgiss, returned to their home in Oakland Saturday evening.

Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Stanton and children, who visited relatives in Parkersburg, W. Va., for several days last and this week, returned to their home in Oakland Tuesday night.

Mr. John Harned, who went to New York City two or three weeks ago with Mrs. Harned, whom he placed in a hospital in that city for treatment, is now in Davenport, Iowa, where he will probably spend the winter with his daughter.

Miss Lucinda Hinebaugh entertained a number of her friends at her home in Oakland last Monday night, the occasion being her 'steenth anniversary. Among those present were Mr. and Mrs. H. P. Adams, Mrs. Fannie Butler, Mr. Raymond Adams and Miss Edna Davis, of Keyser, W. Va., and Miss Elizabeth Leary, of Oakland.

Mr. C. Elwood Offutt left Oakland for Chicago last Wednesday where he will remain until after New Year's Day when he will return home, accompanied by Mrs. Offutt, who preceded him to Chicago two weeks ago, where she is the guest of her parents.

Mrs. Elmer Haulenbeek is at her mother's residence on North 41st street, Philadelphia, confined to her room under the doctor's care. Since she submitted to an operation at the Homoepathic Hospital she has not made rapid improvement in health, but her physician now looks forward to an early recovery.

Mr. Stuart Hamill expects to leave Oakland in a few days for Etam, W. Va., where he will spend a portion of his time looking after his lumbering interests. He will be assisted in his work by Mr. Thomas Gonder, also of Oakland. Both young men have the best wishes of their many friends for a successful winter's work.

Mr. Joseph E. Harned left here Tuesday afternoon for Baltimore where he is attending the convention of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, at which more than two thousand noted scientists from all parts of the United States are present and taking part in the deliberations. At Cumberland Mr. Harned was met by Prof. Perdew, who accompanied him to Baltimore.

Last Monday Mr. Henry Lauer, of Oakland, leased the stand located in Chautauqua Park at Mountain Lake Park, for next season, which he will operate in connection with his store and bakery in Oakland. At the Park stand Mr. Lauer will carry a full line of confectionery and will have on sale at all times fresh products of his ovens, thus filling a long felt want at the Park.

We deeply regret to note the illness of Capt. D. A. Litzinger, one of Grafton's oldest and most highly respected citizens, who is now confined to his bed at his home on Washington street, suffering with an affection of the heart, complicated by weakness incident to his age. Captain Litzinger recently celebrated the eighty-fifth anniversary of his birth. He is a veteran of both the Mexican and the Civil wars. His friends are countless, and it will be the hope of all that he may be quickly restored to his accustomed health.—Grafton Republican.

Subscribe for the Republican.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT

Adopted by the Bar of Garrett County in Memory of Andrew B. Gonder.

When Court convened Tuesday morning the following resolutions were presented by the committee appointed to draft the same and adopted unanimously:

WHEREAS, By the decree of an allwise and omnipotent Providence, Andrew B. Gonder, for more than thirty years past an honored and esteemed member of the Bar of Garrett county, and for more than twenty-five years a Magistrate of acknowledged probity, uprightness and intelligence in Garrett county, has gone to his final rest; and

WHEREAS, During the entire term of his activity and usefulness, his professional and official career was marked with zeal in the discharge of his duty and fidelity to every trust reposed in him and committed to his care; and

WHEREAS, Not only did he display in public and professional station these traits of virtuous living, but in his private and home life he was the exemplary husband and loving parent, and a fitting illustration of the good citizen and neighborly friend; therefore, be it

Resolved, By the Bar of the Circuit Court for Garrett county, that in the death of Andrew B. Gonder each and every member feels that he has met with a personal loss and that a friend of long standing has gone from our midst whose place will be hard to fill; and be it further

Resolved, That the Magistracy of this county has lost one of its number whose judgments were founded upon justice and law, and a wise and intelligent application of judicial knowledge to the facts of any given cause brought before him for decision; and be it further

Resolved, That the community at large has lost a valuable and upright citizen and his family a parent whose life was devoted to the welfare of his home and his church a faithful and consistent member; and be it further

Resolved, That these resolutions be presented to the Court at its next sitting with the request that the same be spread upon the minutes and a copy thereof be sent by the Clerk to the family of the deceased.

E. S. SINCELL,
J. C. RENNINGER,
G. S. HAMILL, Committee

Rev. L. B. Hensley, pastor of the Oakland Presbyterian church, accompanied by Mrs. Hensley, have gone to the latter's home near Salem, W. Va., where a month will be spent for the benefit of Mr. Hensley's health. It is the hearty wish of his many friends in Oakland that he may soon be restored to his usual vigor.

The entertainments in the various Sunday schools during Christmas week were highly entertaining and edifying. In the Lutheran church the entertainment consisted of music, recitations, etc, and was strictly the children's evening. In the Methodist church a series of stereopticon views were displayed and the views interspersed with vocal and instrumental music. At the Presbyterian church a musical program was rendered and a genuine Santa Claus distributed the gifts to the assembled children. In all respects the holiday season here was greatly enjoyed, especially by the children.

In Memoriam.

Whereas, Almighty God in His infinite wisdom has called to Himself Andrew B. Gonder, the beloved father of our fellow bandmen W. A. and F. E. Gonder; in manifestation of our sympathy for the bereaved family, be it

Resolved, By the members of the Mountain City Band, that we extend to the bereaved family our sincere and heartfelt sympathy in this hour of affliction; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the bereaved family, a copy be spread on the minutes of the band and a copy be furnished the county papers for publication therein.

ED. WALLACE,
C. H. ECHARD,
DENNIS RASCHE,
Committee.

WHO IS THE LIAR?

Common Decency and Justice Demand an Explanation from the Garrett Journal.

The Somerset County Star, under the above caption, hauls the editor of the Garrett Journal over the coals in the last issue of the Star in a two-column article anent the publication in the Journal of an attack on the religion of President-elect Taft, published in the Journal two weeks prior to the last election.

Our Pennsylvania contemporary handles the Journal editor without gloves, giving him the lie direct and winds up the two-column exposition of the Journal's questionable attitude as follows:

The Star is not fighting the late campaign over, nor is it losing any needed rest, as stated by the Journal. The Star did not strain its conscience nor work overtime during the campaign to make votes for its party by resorting to religious persecution and demogoguery, as the Bryan papers did, hence it is not in need of a rest. We are simply demanding justice and fair play to whom it is due.

Stand up, Mr. Journal man, and tell the public who the liar is—whether the liar is Mr. Green or his Grantsville accuser, and don't lose sight of the fact that if the Grantsville man tells the truth, you must stand as a Judas and betrayer of those who confide in you. We do not care particularly to know who wrote the attacks in your paper upon Mr. Taft, but if Mr. Green is not the guilty man, it is no credit to you to help keep him under suspicion by refusing to either deny or confirm that he is guilty as charged. If he is not guilty, be man enough to say so. And if he is guilty, be man enough to say so, in order that no one may accuse our Grantsville informant, your professing confidential friend, of being a base liar. Therefore, Who is the liar? Common decency and justice demand that you answer. Will you do it? Dare you do it?

Funeral of Late Andrew B. Gonder.

The funeral of the late Andrew B. Gonder, who died at his home in Oakland on Tuesday night of last week, after an illness of several months of dropsy, was held Saturday morning from St. Peter's Catholic church, of which the deceased was a consistent and life-long member. The services at the church were attended by the members of the Oakland bar in a body and a large concourse of friends had also gathered to pay a last mark of respect and esteem to the memory of one whose life and conduct has been blameless. Mr. Gonder was a man among men—upright, God-fearing and God-loving, law-abiding, a sincere Christian gentleman, esteemed for his noble qualities and keen judgment between right and wrong. After a short service at the church his remains were conveyed to the cemetery and interred. Those who attended the funeral from a distance were his son, Bernard, who arrived from Butte, Montana, Saturday morning and Messrs. Frank and Joseph Gonder and families, of Cumberland.

Marriage Licenses.

Since the last issue of THE REPUBLICAN marriage licenses have been issued to the following parties by Clerk E. Z. Tower, of the Circuit Court:

Samuel Alexander Mason and Claudia Virginia Hawk, of Gormania, W. Va.

Roy Lee Steele and Louise Hazel Richard, of Little Falls, W. Va.

Santford Roscoe Stutler and Ida Jane Stoneking, of Cedarville, W. Va.

Samuel Holt Fenton and Helen F Malloy, of Parkersburg, W. Va.

Walter S. Shreve, of Oakland, and Bessie B. Beckman, of Swanton.

Seymour Slocum Bartlett and Lizzie F. Wilson, of Bridgeport, W. Va.

Haymond D. Swearingen and Sarah E. Butler, of Mountain Lake Park.

Perry W. Thayer, of Fearer, and Margaret Humbertson, of Friendsville.

Isaac Walter Friend and Blanche Comp, of Swanton.

Martin U. Shreve aud Gertie Thrash, of Philippi, W. Va.

Samuel D. Hoff and Daisy V. Wilcox, of Harrison county, W. Va.

Amzi Bennett Cunningham, of Pittsburg, and Minnie Sower, of Oakland.

Dent J. Hawkins and Flossie Shaffer, of Fairmont, W. Va.

Henry C. Heskitt and Edna May Gaskill, of Montana, W. Va.

Patrick Moran and Imogene Johnston, of Burnsville, W. Va.

William Evans and Jennie Gray, of Monongah, W. Va.

John Amby Holloway and Hannah Jane Smith, of Bayard, Md.

Ernest Lee, of Bayard, and Annie A. Marshall, of Clearfield, Pa.

Charles D. Bosley and Julia E. Reynolds, of Oakland.

Three licenses were marked "don't publish." Six of the above licenses were issued the day before Christmas and one on Christmas day.

Card of Thanks.

I wish to express my thanks to the good people of Oakland for their remembrance of me and my family on Christmas in the many gifts they kindly sent to me and mine. I appreciate their kindness. May God bless each and every one who so cheerfully contributed to my benefit.

JOHN H. WILT.

THE POOR REMEMBERED.

Baskets of Provisions, Toys, Etc., Distributed by the Ladies.

Following a meeting held in St. Paul's M. E. church last Monday night when plans were matured for the collection of provisions, toys, etc., for distribution among the poor and needy of Oakland and vicinity on Christmas day, the ladies having charge of the affair received at the Lutheran church on the morning set for the distribution large quantities of apples, potatoes, groceries, canned goods, cakes, dolls, dressed chickens, and other necessities, including clothing, all of which was contributed by the merchants and private families of the town.

At eleven o'clock Christmas morning the baskets to the number of twenty containing an assortment of provisions, were all packed and loaded into Thomas Harne's express wagon who made an excellent Santa Claus, and carried to the homes where they were to be left. The recipients of the kindness of the donors and of the ladies of the four Protestant churches having the affair in hand, expressed their high appreciation of the gifts which brought joy and gladness into homes which otherwise would have been desolate.

Married.

CUNNINGHAM—SOWERS—At the home of the bride in Oakland, on Christmas Day, by Rev. J. B. Workman, of St. Paul's M. E. church, Miss Minnie Sowers to Mr. Amzi B. Cunningham, of Pittsburg, Pa. The bride is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John A. Sowers, and is well known for her many excellent qualities. The couple will reside in Pittsburg.

BOSLEY—REYNOLDS—On Monday evening, December 28th, at the residence of the officiating priest, Rev. J. E. Connell, in Oakland, Miss Julia E. Reynolds and Mr. Charles D. Bosley, both of Oakland. The bride is the proprietress of the Manhattan Hotel where the couple will make their home. The groom is a worthy young man and the best wishes of their many friends are extended for their future happiness.

SHREVES—BECKMAN—A pretty but quiet home wedding took place at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Dora Beckman, of near Beckman, this county, when their daughter, Bessie, was joined in the holy bonds of wedlock to Mr. Scott Shreves, of Oakland. The ceremony took place on Thursday evening, Dec. 24th, and was performed by Rev. Alvin Yugel, of the Evangelical Lutheran church.

Stork News.

Sunday morning Mr. Stork visited the home of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Glotfelty and left a little son. Although Christmas had passed the little stranger was welcomed as a Christmas gift.

Farm for Sale

Located ½ mile east of Mt. Lake and 2 from Oakland. 100 acres, rich soil, 60 acres in grass, balance good timber; house, barn, plenty of water. Apply to JOS. FAY, Deer Park. 2t

Bring your friends this evening to the K. of P. Fair.

ARTHUR TOWNSHEND

Santa Claus is Here Again

Loaded down and you can get anything you want in

FANCY BASKETS,
MIRRORS,
TOILET SETTS,
GLOVE BOXES,
WRITING PORTFOLIOS,
COLLAR and CUFF BOXES,
NUT CRACKERS,
PAPER WEIGHTS,
SILK and LINEN HANDKERCHIEFS
LINK BUTTONS,
STICK PINS,
SCARFS,
TIES,
SUSPENDERS,
FANCY CHINA,
FANCY BOX PAPER,
SMOKERS' SETTS, Etc

Xmas For Everybody

Also a Fine Line of

NUTS, CURRANTS,
ORANGES, RAISINS,
CANDR, CITRON,
FIGS, DATES,
FRUITS, Etc.

BARGAINS IN MEN'S & BOYS' OVERCOATS

ARTHUR TOWNSHEND

INTO THE PRIMITIVE

BY ROBERT AMES BENNET

ILLUSTRATIONS BY RAY WALTERS

COPYRIGHT 1908, BY A. C. McCLURG & CO.

CHAPTER I.—The story opens with the shipwreck of the steamer on which Miss Genevieve Leslie, an American heiress, Lord Winthrope, an Englishman, and Tom Blake, a brusque American, were passengers. The three were tossed upon an uninhabited island and were the only ones not drowned. Blake recovered from a drunken stupor.

CHAPTER II.—Blake, shunned on the boat, because of his roughness, became a hero as preservers of the helpless pair. The Englishman was suing for the hand of Miss Leslie. Blake started to swim back to the ship to recover what was left.

CHAPTER III.—Blake returned safely. Winthrope wasted his last match on a cigarette for which he was scored by Blake. Their first meal was a dead fish.

CHAPTER IV.—The trio started a ten mile hike for higher land. Thirst attacked them. Blake was compelled to carry Miss Leslie on account of weariness. He taunted Winthrope.

CHAPTER V.—They entered the jungle. That night was passed roosting high in a tree.

CHAPTER VI.—The next morning they descended to the open again. All three constructed hats to shield themselves from the sun. They then feasted on cocoanuts, the only procurable food. Miss Leslie showed a liking for Blake, but detested his roughness.

CHAPTER VII.—Led by Blake they established a home in some cliffs. Blake found a fresh water spring.

those darned feather-dusters!" He was not looking for palms.

The last ragged bit of cloud, with its showery accompaniment, drifted past before the breeze which followed the squall, and the end of the storm was proclaimed by a deafening chorus of squawks and screams along the higher ledges of the cliff. Staring upward, Blake for the first time observed that the face of the cliff swarmed with seafowl.

"That's luck!" he muttered. "Guess I haven't forgot how to rob nests. Bet our fine lady'll shy at sucking them raw! All the same, she'll have to if I don't run across other rock than this, poor girl!"

He advanced again along the talus, and did not stop until he reached the sand beach. There he halted to make a careful examination, not only of the loose debris, but of the solid rock above. Finding no sign of flint or quartz, he growled out a curse and backed off along the beach to get a view of the cliff top. From a point a little beyond him, outward to the extremity of the headland, he could see that the upper ledges and the crest of the cliff, as well, were fairly crowded with seafowl and their nests. His smile of satisfaction broadened when he glanced inland and saw, less than half a mile distant, a wooded cleft which apparently ran up to the summit of the ridge. From a point near the top a gigantic baobab tree towered up against the skyline like a Brobdingnagian cabbage.

"Say, we may have a run for our money, after all," he murmured. "Shade, and no end of grub, and, by the green of those trees, a spring—limestone water at that. Next thing, I'll find a flint!"

He slapped his leg, and both sound and feeling reminded him that his clothes were drenched.

"Guess we'll wait about that flint," he said, and he made for a clump of thorn scrub a little way inland.

As the tall grass did not grow here within a mile of the shore, there was nothing to obstruct him. The creeping plants which during the rainy season had matted over the sandy soil were now leafless and withered by the heat of the dry season. Even the thorn scrub was half bare of leaves.

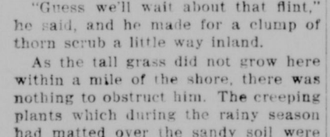
Blake walked around the clump to the shadiest side, and began to strip. In quick succession one garment after another was flung across a branch where the sun would strike it. Last of all, the shoes were emptied of rainwater and set out to dry. Without a pause, he then gave himself a quick, light rub-down, just sufficient to invigorate the skin without starting the perspiration.

Physically the man was magnificent. His muscles were wiry and compact, rather than bulky, and as he moved they played beneath his white skin with the smoothness and ease of a tiger's.

After the rub-down he squatted on his heels and spent some time trying to bend his palm-leaf hat back into shape. When he had placed this also out in the sun he found himself beginning to yawn. The dry, sultry air had made him drowsy. A touch with his bare foot showed him that the sand beneath the thorn bush had already absorbed the rain and offered a dry surface. He glanced around, drew his club nearer and stretched himself out for a nap.

CHAPTER VIII.

The Club Age.



IT was past two o'clock when the sun, striking in where Blake lay outstretched, began to scorch one of his legs. He stirred uneasily, and sat upright. Like a sailor, he was wide awake the moment he opened his eyes. He stood up and peered around through the half leafless branches.

Over the water thousands of gulls and terns, boobies and cormorants were skimming and diving, while above them a number of graceful frigate birds—those swart, scarlet-throated pirates of the air—hung poised, ready to swoop down and rob the weaker birds of their fish. All about the headland and the surrounding water was life in fullest action. Even from where he stood Blake could hear the harsh clamor of the seafowl.

In marked contrast to this scene the plain was apparently lifeless. When Blake rose, a small brown lizard darted away across the sand. Otherwise there was neither sight nor sound of a living creature. Blake pondered this as he gathered his clothes into the shade and began to dress.

"Looks like the siesta is the all-round style in this God-forsaken hole," he grumbled. "Haven't seen so much as a rabbit, nor even one land bird. May be a drought—no; must be the dry season— Whee, these things are hot! I'm thirsty as a shark. Now, where's that softy and her ladyship? 'Fraid she's in for a tough time!"

He drew on his shoes with a jerk, growled at their stiffness, and, club in hand, stepped clear of the brush to look for his companions. The first glance along the foot of the cliff showed him Winthrope lying under the shade of the overhanging ledges, a few yards beyond the sand beach. Of Miss Leslie there was no sign. Half alarmed by this, Blake started for the beach with his swinging stride. Winthrope was awake, and on Blake's approach, sat up to greet him.

"Hello!" he called. "Where have you been all this time?"

"'Sleep. Where's Miss Leslie?"

"She's around the point."

Blake grinned mockingly. "Indeed! But I fawncy she won't be for long."

He would have passed on, but Winthrope stepped before him.

"Don't go out there, Blake," he protested. "I—ah—think it would be better if I went."

"Why?" demanded Blake.

Winthrope hesitated; but an impatient movement by Blake forced an answer: "Well, you remember, this morning, telling us to dry our clothes."

"Yes; I remember," said Blake. "So you want to serve as lady's valet?"

Winthrope's plump face turned a sickly yellow.

"I—ah—valet?—What do you mean, sir? I protest—I do not understand you!" he stammered. But in the midst, catching sight of Blake's bewildered stare, he suddenly flushed crimson, and burst out in unrestrained anger: "You—you bounder—you beastly cad! Any man with an ounce of decency—"

Blake uttered a jeering laugh—"Wow! Hark, how the British lion r-r-roars when his tail's twisted!"

"You beastly cad!" repeated the Englishman, now purple with rage.

Blake's unpleasant pleasantry gave place to a scowl. His jaw thrust out like a bulldog's, and he bent towards Winthrope with a menacing look. For a moment the Englishman faced him, sustained by his anger. But there was a steely light in Blake's eyes that he could not withstand. Winthrope's defiant stare wavered and fell. He shrank back, the color fast ebbing from his cheeks.

"Ugh!" growled Blake. "Guess you won't blat any more about cads! You damned hypocrite! Maybe I'm not on to how you've been hanging around Miss Leslie just because she's an heiress. Anything is fair enough for you swells. But let a fellow so much as open his mouth about your exalted set, and it's perfectly dreadful, you know!"

He paused for a reply. Winthrope only drew back a step farther and eyed him with a furtive, sidelong glance. This brought Blake back to his mocking jeer. "You'll learn, Pat, me b'y. There's lots of things'll show up different to you before we get through this picnic. For one thing, I'm boss here—president, congress and supreme court. Understand?"

"By what right, may I ask?" murmured Winthrope.

"Right!" answered Blake. "That hasn't anything to do with the question—it's might. Back in civilized parts your little crowd has the drop on my big crowd and runs things to suit themselves. But here we're sort of reverted to primitive society. This happens to be the Club Age and I'm the Man with the Big Stick. See?"

"I myself sympathize with the lower classes, Mr. Blake. Above all, I think it barbarous the way they punish one who is forced by circumstances to appropriate part of the ill-gotten gains of the rich upstarts. But do you believe, Mr. Blake, that brute strength—"

"You bet! Now shut up. Where're the cocoanuts?"

Winthrope picked up two nuts and handed them over.

"There were only five," he explained.

"All right. I'm no captain of industry."

"Ah, true; you said we had reverted to barbarism," rejoined Winthrope, venturing an attempt at sarcasm.

"Lucky for you!" retorted Blake. "But where's Miss Leslie all this time? Her clothes must have dried hours ago."

"They did. We had luncheon together just this side of the point."

"Oh, you did! Then why shouldn't I go for her?"

"I—I—there was a shaded pool around the point, and she thought a dip in the salt water would refresh her. She went not more than half an hour ago."

"So that's it. Well, while I eat you go and call her—and say, you keep this side the point. I'm looking out for Miss Leslie now."

Winthrope hurried away, clenching his fists and almost weeping with impotent rage. Truly, matters were now very different from what they had been aboard ship. Fortunately he had not gone a dozen steps before Miss Leslie appeared around the corner of the cliff. He was scrambling along over the loose stones of the slope without the slightest consideration for his ankle. The girl, more thoughtful, waved to him to wait for her where he was.

As she approached, Blake's frown gave place to a look that made his face positively pleasant. He had already drained the cocoanuts; now he proceeded to smash the shells into small bits, that he might eat the meat, and at the same time keep his gaze on the girl. The cliff foot being well shaded by the towering wall of rock, she had taken off his coat and was carrying it on her arm; so that there was nothing to mar the effect of her dainty openwork waist, with its elbow sleeves and graceful collar and the filmy veil of lace over the shoulders and bosom. Her skirt had been washed clean by the rain, and she had managed to stretch it into shape before drying.

Refreshed by a nap in the forenoon and by her salt-water dip, she showed more vivacity than at any time that Winthrope could remember during their acquaintance. Her suffering during and since the storm had left its mark in the dark circles beneath her hazel eyes, but this in no wise lessened their brightness; while the elasticity of her step showed that she had quite recovered her well-bred ease and grace of movement.

She bowed and smiled to the two men impartially. "Good-afternoon, gentlemen."

"Same to you, Miss Leslie!" responded Blake, staring at her with frank admiration. "You look fresh as a daisy."

Genial and sincere as was his tone, the familiarity jarred on her sensitive ear. She colored as she turned from him.

"Is there anything new, Mr. Winthrope?" she asked.

"I'm afraid not, Miss Genevieve. Like ourselves, Blake took a nap."

"Yes; but Blake first took a squint at the scenery. Just see if you've got everything, and fix your hats. We'll be in the sun for half a mile or so. Better get on the coat, Miss Leslie. It's hotter than yesterday."

"Permit me," said Winthrope.

Blake watched while the Englishman held the coat for the girl and rather fussily raised the collar about her neck and turned back the sleeves, which extended beyond the tips of her fingers. The American's face was stolid; but his glance took in every little look and act of his companions. He was not altogether unversed in the ways of good society, and it seemed to him that the Englishman was somewhat overassiduous in his attentions.

"All ready, Blake," remarked Winthrope, finally, with a last lingering touch.

"'Bout time!" grunted Blake. "You're fussy as a tailor. Got the Crept Back Down the Trail.

flask and cigarette case and the knife?"

"All safe, sir—er—all safe, Blake."

"Then you two follow me slow enough not to worry that ankle. I don't want any more of the pack-mule in mine."

"Where are we going, Mr. Blake?" exclaimed Miss Leslie. "You will not leave us again!"

"It's only a half-mile, Miss Jenny. There's a break in the ridge. I'm going on ahead to find if it's hard to climb."

"But why should be climb?"

"Food, for one thing. You see, this end of the cliff is covered with seabirds. Another thing, I expect to strike a spring."

"Oh, I hope you do! The water in the rain pools is already warm."

"They'll be dry in a day or two. Say, Winthrope, you might fetch some of those stones—size of a ball. I used to be a fancy pitcher when I was a kid, and we might scare up a rabbit or something."

"I play cricket myself. But these stones—"

"Better'n a gun, when you haven't got the gun. Come on. We'll go in a bunch, after all, in case I need stones."

With due consideration for Winthrope's ankle—not for Winthrope—Blake set so slow a pace that the half-mile's walk consumed over half an hour. But his smouldering irritation was soon quenched when they drew near the green thicket at the foot of the cleft. In the almost deathlike stillness of mid-afternoon, the sound of trickling water came to their ears, clear and musical.

"'A spring!'" shouted Blake. "I guessed right Look at those green plants and grass; there's the channel where it runs out in the sand and dries up."

The others followed him eagerly as he pushed in among the trees. They saw no running water, for the tiny rill that trickled down the ledges was matted over with vines. But at the foot of the slope lay a pool, some ten yards across, and overshadowed by the surrounding trees. There was no underbrush, and the ground was trampled bare as a floor.

"By Jove," said Winthrope; "see the tracks! There must have been a drove of sheep about."

"Deer, you mean," replied Blake, bending to examine the deeper prints at the edge of the pool. "These ain't sheep tracks. A lot of them are larger."

"Could you not uncover the brook?" asked Miss Leslie. "If animals have been drinking here, one would prefer cleaner water."

"Sure," assented Blake. "If you're game for a climb, and can wait a few minutes, we'll get it out of the spring itself. We've got to go up anyway, to get at our poultry yard!"

"Here's a place that looks like a path," called Winthrope, who had circled about the edge of the pool to the farther side.

Blake ran around beside him and stared at the tunnel-like passage which wound up the limestone ledges beneath the overarching thickets.

"Odd place, is it not?" observed Winthrope. "Looks like a fox run, only larger, you know."

"Too low for deer, though—and their hoofs would have cut up the moss and ferns more. Let's get a close look."

As he spoke, Blake stooped and climbed a few yards up the trail to an overhanging ledge, four or five feet high. Where the trail ran up over this break in the slope the stone was bare of all vegetation. Blake laid his club on the top of the ledge, and was about to vault after it, when, directly beneath his nose, he saw the print of a great catlike paw, outlined in dried mud. At the same instant a deep growl came rumbling down the "fox run." Without waiting for a second warning, Blake drew his club to him, and crept back down the trail. His stealthy movements and furtive backward glances filled his companions with vague terror. He himself was hardly less alarmed.

"Get out of the trees—into the open!" he exclaimed in a hoarse whisper, and as they crept away, white with dread of the unknown danger, he followed at their heels, looking backward, his club raised in readiness to strike.

Once clear of the trees, Winthrope caught Miss Leslie by the hand and broke into a run. In their terror they paid no heed to Blake's command to stop. They had darted off so unexpectedly that he did not overtake them short of 100 yards.

"Hold on!" he said, gripping Winthrope roughly by the shoulder. "It's safe enough here, and you'll knock out that blamed ankle."

"What is it? What did you see?" gasped Miss Leslie.

"Footprint," mumbled Blake, ashamed of his fright.

"A lion's?" cried Winthrope.

"Not so large—'bout the size of a puma's. Must be a leopard's den up there. I heard a growl, and thought it about time to clear out."

"By Jove, we'd better withdraw around the point!"

"Withdraw your aunty! There's no leopard going to tackle us out here in open ground this time of day. The sneaking tomcat! If only I had a match, I'd show him how we smoke rat holes."

"Mr. Winthrope spoke of rubbing sticks to make fire," suggested Miss Leslie.

"Make sweat, you mean. But we may as well try it now, if we're going to at all The sun's hot enough to fry eggs. We'll go back to a shady place and pick up sticks on the way."

Though there was shade under the cliff within some 600 feet, they had to go some distance to the nearest dry wood—a dead thornbush. Here they gathered a quantity of branches, even Miss Leslie volunteering to carry a load.

All was thrown down in a heap near the cliff, and Blake squatted beside it, penknife in hand. Having selected the dryest of the larger sticks, he bored a hole in one side and dropped in a pinch of powdered bark. Laying the stick in the full glare of the sun, he thrust a twig into the hole and began to twirl it between his palms. This movement he kept up for several minutes; but whether he was unable to twirl the twig fast enough or whether the right kind of wood or tinder was lacking all his efforts failed to produce a spark.

Unwilling to accept the failure, Winthrope insisted upon trying in turn, and pride held him to the task until he was drenched with sweat. The result was the same.

"Told you so," jeered Blake from where he lay in the shade. "We'd stand more chance cracking stones together."

"But what shall we do now?" asked Miss Leslie. "I am becoming very tired of cocoanuts, and there seems to be nothing else around here. Indeed, I think this is all such a waste of time. If we had walked straight along the shore this morning we might have reached a town."

"We might, Miss Jenny, and then, again, we mightn't. I happened to overhaul the captain's chart—Quilimane, Mozambique—that's all for hundreds of miles. Towns on this coast are about as thick as hen's-teeth."

"How about native villages?" demanded Winthrope.

"Oh, yes; maybe I'm fool enough to go into a wild nigger town without a gun. Maybe I didn't talk with fellows down on the Rand."

"But what shall we do?" repeated Miss Leslie, with a little frightened catch in her voice. She was at last beginning to realize what this rude break in her sheltered, pampered life might mean. "What shall we do? It's—it's absurd to think of having to stay in this horrid country for weeks or perhaps months—unless some ship comes for us!"

"Look here, Miss Leslie," answered Blake, sharply yet not unkindly; "suppose you just sit back and use your thinker a bit. If you're your daddy's daughter, you've got brains somewhere down under the boarding-school stuff."

"What do you mean, sir?"

"Now, don't get huffy, please! It's a question of think, not of putting on airs. Here we are, worse off than the people of the stone age. They had fire and flint axes; we've got nothing but our think tanks, and as to lions and leopards and that sort of thing, it strikes me we've got about as many on hand as they had."

"Then you and Mr. Winthrope should immediately arm yourselves."

"How?—But we'll leave that till later. What else?"

The girl gazed at the surrounding objects, her forehead wrinkled in the effort at concentration. "We must have water. Think how we suffered yesterday! Then there is shelter from wild beasts, and food, and—"

"All right here under our hands, if we had fire. Understand?"

"I understand about the water. You would frighten the leopard away with the fire; and if it would do that, it would also keep away the other animals at night. But as for food, unless we return for cocoanuts—"

"Don't give it up! Keep your thinker going on the side, while Pat tells us our next move. Now that he's got the fire sticks out of his head—"

"I say, Blake, I wish you would drop that name. It is no harder to say Winthrope."

"You're off, there," rejoined Blake. "But look here, I'll make it Win, if you figure out what we ought to do next."

"Really, Blake, that would not be half bad. They—er—they called me Win at Harrow."

"That so? My English chum went to Harrow—Jimmy Scarbridge."

"Lord James!—your chum?"

"He started in like you, sort of toplofty. But he chummed all right—after I took out a lot of his British starch with a good walloping."

"Oh, really now, Blake, you can't expect any one with brains to believe that, you know!"

"No; I don't know, you know,—and I don't know if you've got any brains, you know. Here's your chance to show us. What's our next move?"

"Really, now, I have had no experience in this sort of thing—don't interrupt, please! It seems to me that our first concern is shelter for the night. If we should return to your tree nest, we should also be near the cocoa palms."

"That's one side. Here's the other. Bar to wade across—sharks and alligators; then swampy ground—malaria, mosquitoes, thorn jungle. Guess the hands of both of you are still sore enough, by their look."

"If only I had a pot of cold cream!" sighed Miss Leslie.

"If only I had a hunk of jerked beef!" echoed Blake.

"I say, why couldn't we chance it for the night around on the seaward face of the cliff?" asked Winthrope. "I noticed a place where the ledges overhang—almost a cave. Do you think it probable that any wild beast would venture so close to the sea?"

"Can't say. Didn't see any tracks; so we'll chance it for to-night. Next?"

"By morning I believe my ankle will be in such shape that I could go back for the string of cocoanuts which we dropped on the beach."

"I'll go myself, to-day, else we'll have no supper. Now we're getting down to bedrock. If those nuts have not been washed away by the tide, we're fixed for to-night; and for two meals, such as they are. But what next? Even the rain pools will be dried up by another day or so."

"Are not sea-birds good to eat?" inquired Miss Leslie.

"Some."

"Then, if only we could climb the cliff—might there not be another place?"

"No; I've looked at both sides. What's more, that spotted tomcat has got a monopoly on our water supply. The river may be fresh at low tide; but we've got nothing to boil water in, and such bayou stuff is just concentrated malaria."

"Then we must find water elsewhere," responded Miss Leslie. "Might we not succeed if we went on to the other ridge?"

"That's the ticket. You've got a headpiece, Miss Jenny! It's too late

TO BE CONTINUED.

Old Heads on Young Shoulders.

Our children are growing more independent. It is not the fault of the parents nor of the children; we are not careless, and they are not ungrateful. The conditions of life are responsible for the modern "youth."—Familien Zeitung, Vienna.

ASCENSION OF OUR LORD

Sunday School Lesson for Jan. 3, 1909

Specially Arranged for This Paper

LESSON TEXT.—Acts 1:1-14. Memory verses, 8, 9.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"And it came to pass, while he blessed them, he was parted from them, and carried into heaven."—Luke 24:51.

TIME.—The spring of A. D. 30. The Ascension, May 18. The ten days' waiting, May 18-28.

PLACE.—The Ascension was from Olivet, near Bethany. The meeting place of the disciples was in the upper room in Jerusalem.

PLACE IN HISTORY.—The close of the earthly life of Jesus Christ. The birth of the Christian religion.

Comment and Suggestive Thought.

The life of Jesus on earth, including (1) What he was; (2) What he did; (3) What he taught; was an essential condition of all his power during the centuries of Christianity.

It made him a real being to us, while unseen on earth.

It illustrates his teachings for all ages.

It was a perpetual ideal, by which to test all we are and do and teach.

It is in itself a supreme power to influence character.

Illustrations.—I know of no discordant note among educators in the testimony that "The greatest thing a teacher ever brings to a child is not the subject matter, but the uplift which comes from heart contact with a great personality."

President Charles F. Thwing records the results of "a very interesting study of 50 representative men to questions involving the best thing college does for a man." The entire drift of the testimony was that the most these men got from college was inspiration from life contact with great leaders.

"No nobler feeling," says Carlyle, "than admiration for one higher than himself dwells in the breast of man. It is to this hour, and at all hours, the vivifying influence in man's life."

The promise of the Father was the special, overflowing gift of the Holy Spirit, as we learn from verses 5 and 8, and the fulfillment of the promise in the next chapter. The Father had promised this gift through Joel (2:28, 29) as shown in Acts 2: 17, 18; through Isaiah (32:15; 44:3); Haggai (2:5); Zechariah (4:6; 12:10). 12:10).

The promise is called The Promise, for it really includes all the promises of the coming of the kingdom of God.

The disciples were the instrumentality used by the Great Leader. God works not only directly on the hearts of men, but through his people on other men. God in men is the power through which the kingdom of God has so far come, and is to come in its fullness. "The agencies he employs must, by their very nature, be the Divine Spirit and the human disciple."—Kirtley. The achievements of the apostles in the story of the Acts were the account of what Jesus continued to do after his ascension. The author of "The Fifth Gospel" (i. e., Saint Paul's gospel as recorded in his epistles, many of them written before the first of our four gospels,) shows that the apostles not only preached the facts of Jesus' life, but the significance of the life which Jesus continued to teach them through their own experience guided and inspired by the Holy Spirit.

1. They had their ideal in the promise of the Father.

2. They were imbued with power by the Holy Spirit.

3. They were changed, transformed, by the Holy Spirit, into new men fitted to carry on the work of Christ.

4. They knew the facts about Christ, and they experienced his presence and his teachings, so that they could be witnesses to the whole world.

It was at this time, doubtless, that the great change came over his body described in 1 Cor. 15:51-53. For such a change is signified by his appearance as John saw him (Rev. 1:12-16).

The Importance of the Ascension.—1. It is the one fitting ending to the earthly life of Jesus. Coming from the Father he returns to the Father.

2. The last view of Jesus is not on the cross, but going home in glory.

3. It kept before the disciples the fact that he is their ever living Saviour. We do not worship and serve and trust a dead Savious, but one who is alive forevermore.

4. He can rule and guide his people infinitely better there than on any earthly place, where but few could come into his near presence.

5. It places Jesus before all men as their ideal.

6. "It enables us to realize his divinity, without losing his humanity."

7. It gives us the true idea of his kingdom as a spiritual kingdom of righteousness.

8. The doctrine of the ascension, with its hope of future glory, with its transfigured son of man (not son of Jew or Greek, but of man) on the throne, "adds new dignity to life," for the lowliest shall be changed into the likeness of his glorified body.

The power of faith in a supreme leader. The church without him would be an army without a general, the evolution of nature without a God. Never has been such a leader as the ascended and enthroned Christ.

The power of an ideal before all Christians, the ideal for each personal life in Jesus himself; the ideal to be gained by the church as a whole for which each disciple is laboring and to which he has consecrated himself and all he has and is.

The assurance of success is a mighty inspiration in the times of struggle with the powers of evil.

THE REPUBLICAN
Job Printing Department

WITHIN the past year the increased made upon the Job Printing Department of The Republican necessitated many improvements, and to meet the requirements of our rapidly increasing business an addition of considerable proportions to our present building is in contemplation; new type and improved machinery must be purchased—but in the meantime all orders will be executed in a most satisfactory manner.

The products of our Job Printery are all models in the class—our customers are numerous and well satisfied, and wnen ordering

Statements, Vouchers,
Envelopes, Cards,
Sale Bills, Posters,
Bank Forms, Billheads,
Letterheads, Tags,
Programs, Folders,

and

Letter Press Printing of all Kinds

They are confident that the work will be Satisfactory in every particular---in WORKMANSHIP, PRICE and PAPER.

WE MAKE A SPECIALTY OF PRINTING

Lumber AND Coal Companies' Forms
Bank Stationery, Hotel Prospectus,
Lodge and Society Laws,
Reports, Etc.

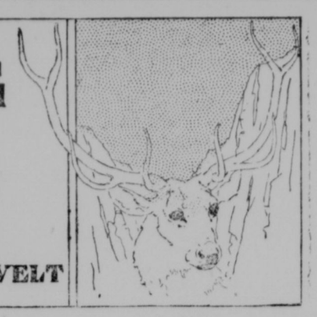
It will cost you nothing to submit your Printing to us. Estimates will be cheerfully furnished you free. It must be borne in mind, however, that we do not do "cheap" printing, but we do Good Printing which has a par value of one hundred cents for every dollar invested in the product of THE REPUBLICAN PRINTERY.

THE REPUBLICAN
Job Printing Departm't
OAKI AND, MARYLAND.

HUNTING THE WAPITI

BY

THEODORE ROOSEVELT



[Copyright, 1893, by G. P. Putnam's Sons. Published under arrangement with G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York and London.]

ONCE, while on a hunt with John Willis, I spent a week in a vain effort to kill moose among the outlying mountains at the southern end of the Bitter Root range. Then, as we had no meat, we determined to try for elk.

We were camped with a wagon, as high among the foot-hills as wheels could go, but several hours' walk from the range of the game; for it was still early in the season, and they had not yet come down from the upper slopes. Accordingly we made a practice of leaving the wagon for two or three days at a time to hunt; returning to get a night's rest in the tent, preparatory to a fresh start. On these trips we carried neither blankets nor packs, as the walking was difficult and we had much ground to cover. Each merely put on his jacket with a loaf of frying-pan bread and a paper of salt stuffed into the pockets. We were cumbered with nothing save our rifles and cartridges.

On the morning in question we left camp at sunrise. For two or three hours we walked up-hill through a rather open growth of small pines and spruces, the traveling being easy. Then we came to the edge of a deep valley, a couple of miles across. Into this we scrambled, down a steep slide, where the forest had grown up among the immense boulder masses. Finally, in the afternoon, we left the valley and began to climb a steep gorge, down which a mountain torrent roared and foamed in a succession of cataracts.

Three hours' hard climbing brought us to another valley, but of an entirely different character. It was several miles long, but less than a mile broad. Save at the mouth, it was walled in completely by chains of high rock-peaks, their summits snow-capped; the forest extended a short distance up their sides. Hardly had we entered this valley before we caught a glimpse of a yearling elk walking rapidly along a game path some distance ahead. We followed as quickly as we could without making a noise, but after the first glimpse never saw it again; for it is astonishing how fast an elk travels, with its ground-covering walk.

The crash of the meeting antlers resounding through the valley.

By the time the sun set we were sure the elk were towards the head of the valley. We utilized the short twilight in arranging our sleeping place for the night, choosing a thick grove of spruce beside a small mountain tarn, at the foot of a great cliff. As the first faint streak of dawn appeared in the dark sky my companion touched me lightly on the arm. The fire was nearly out; we felt numbed by the chill air. At once we sprang up, stretched our arms, shook ourselves, examined our rifles, swallowed a mouthful or two of bread, and walked off through the gloomy forest. At first we could scarcely see our way, but it grew rapidly lighter.

Then, as we trod noiselessly over the dense moss, and on the pine needles under the scattered trees, we heard a sharp clang and clatter up the valley ahead of us. In a little glade, a hundred and twenty-five yards from us, two bull elk were engaged in deadly combat, while two others were looking on. It was a splendid sight. The great beasts faced each other with lowered horns, the manes that covered their thick necks, and the hair on their shoulders, bristling and erect. Then they charged furiously, the crash of the meeting antlers resounding through the valley. The shock threw them both on their haunches; with locked horns and glaring eyes they strove against each other, getting their hind legs well under them, straining every muscle in their huge bodies, and squealing savagely. They were evenly matched in weight, strength, and courage; and push as they might, neither got the upper hand, first one yielding a few inches, then the other, while they swayed to and fro in their struggles, smashing the bushes and ploughing up the soil.

Finally they separated and stood some little distance apart, under the great pines; their sides heaving, and columns of steams rising from their nostrils through the frosty air of the brightening morning. Again they rushed together with a crash, and each strove mightily to overthrow the other, or get past his guard; but the branching antlers caught every vicious lunge and thrust. This set-to was stopped rather curiously. One of the onlooking elk was a yearling; the other, though scarcely as heavy-bodied as either of the fighters, had a finer head. He was evidently much excited by the battle, and he now began to walk towards the two combatants, nodding his head and uttering a queer, whistling noise. They dared not leave their flanks uncovered to his assault; and as he approached they promptly separated, and walked off side by side a few yards apart. In a moment, however, one spun round and jumped at his old adversary, seeking to stab him in his unprotected flank; but the latter was just as quick, and as before caught the rush on his horns. They closed as furiously as ever; but the utmost either could do was to inflict one or two punches on the neck and shoulders of his foe, where the thick hide served as a shield. Again the peace-maker approached, nodding his head, whistling, and threatening; and again they separated.

This was repeated once or twice; and I began to be afraid lest the breeze which was very light and puffy should shift and give them my wind. So, resting my rifle on my knee I fired twice, putting one bullet behind the shoulder of the peace-maker, and the other behind the shoulder of one of the combatants. Both were deadly shots, but, as so often with wapiti, neither of the wounded animals at the moment showed any signs of being hit. The yearling ran off unscathed. The other three crowded together and trotted behind some spruce on the left, while we ran forward for another shot. In a moment one fell; whereupon the remaining two turned and came back across the glade, trotting to the right. As we opened fire they broke into a lumbering gallop, but were both downed before they got out of sight in the timber.

The wapiti is, next to the moose, the most quarrelsome and pugnacious of American deer. It cannot be said that it is ordinarily a dangerous beast to hunt; yet there are instances in which wounded wapiti, incautiously approached to within striking distance, have severely misused their assailants, both with their antlers and their forefeet.

However, the fiercest wapiti bull, when in a wild state, flees the neighborhood of man with the same panic terror shown by the cows; and he makes no stand against a grisly, though when his horns are grown he has little fear of either wolf or cougar if on his guard and attacked fairly. The chief battles of the bulls are of course waged with one another. Before the beginning of the rut they keep by themselves: singly, while the sprouting horns are still very young, at which time they lie in secluded spots and move about as little as possible; in large bands, later in the season. At the beginning of the fall these bands join with one another and with the bands of cows and calves, which have likewise been keeping to themselves during the late winter, the spring, and the summer. Vast herds are thus sometimes formed, containing, in the old days when wapiti were plenty, thousands of head. The bulls now begin to fight furiously with one another, and the great herd becomes split into smaller ones. Each of these has one master bull, who has won his position by savage battle, and keeps it by overcoming every rival, whether a solitary bull, or the lord of another harem, who challenges him. When not fighting or love-making he is kept on the run, chasing away the young bulls who venture to pay court to the cows. He has hardly time to eat or sleep, and soon becomes gaunt and worn to a degree.

The battles between the bulls rarely result fatally. After a longer or shorter period of charging, pushing, and struggling the heavier or more enduring of the two begins to shove his weaker antagonist back and round; and the latter then watches his chance and bolts, hotly, but as a rule harmlessly, pursued for a few hundred yards. The massive branching antlers serve as effective guards against the most wicked thrusts. While the antagonists are head on, the worst that can happen is a punch on the shoulder which will not break the thick hide, though it may bruise the flesh underneath.

Wapiti keep their antlers until the spring, whereas deer and moose lose theirs by mid-winter. The bull's behavior in relation to the cow is merely that of a vicious and brutal coward. He bullies her continually, and in times of danger his one thought is for sneaking off to secure his own safety. For all his noble looks he is a very unamiable beast, who behaves with brutal ferocity to the weak, and shows abject terror of the strong. According to his powers, he is guilty of rape, robbery, and even murder. I never felt the least compunction at shooting a bull, but I hate to shoot a cow, even when forced by necessity.

During the rut the bulls are very noisy; and their notes of amorous challenge are called "whistling" by the frontiersmen,—very inappropriately. They begin to whistle about ten days before they begin to run; and they have in addition an odd kind of bark, which is only heard occasionally.

Heard at a little distance, and in its proper place, the call of the wapiti is one of the grandest and most beautiful sounds in nature. Especially is this the case when several rivals are answering one another, on some frosty moonlight night in the mountains. Once, while in the mountains, I listened to a peculiarly grand chorus of this kind. We were traveling with pack ponies at the time, and our tent was pitched in a grove of yellow pine, by a brook in the bottom of a valley. On either hand rose the mountains, covered with spruce forest. It was in September, and the first snow had just fallen.

He plunged wildly forward.

The day before we had walked long and hard; and during the night I slept the heavy sleep of the weary. Early in the morning, just as the east began to grow gray, I waked; and as I did so, the sounds that smote on my ear, caused me to sit up and throw off the warm blankets. Bull elk were challenging among the mountains on both sides of the valley, a little way from us, their notes echoing like the calling of silver bugles. Groping about in the dark, I drew on my trousers, an extra pair of thick socks, and my moccasins, donned a warm jacket, found my fur cap and gloves, and stole out of the tent with my rifle. Two herds were approaching one another from opposite sides of the valley, a short distance above our camp; and the master bulls were roaring defiance as they mustered their harems.

I walked stealthily up the valley, until I felt that I was nearly between the two herds; and then stood motionless under a tall pine. I made up my mind, from the sound of the challenging, now very near me, that one bull on my right was advancing towards a rival on my left, who was answering every call. Soon the former approached so near that I could hear him crack the branches, and beat the bushes with his horns; and I slipped quietly from tree to tree, so as to meet him when he came out into the more open woodland. Day broke, and crimson gleams played across the snow-clad mountains beyond.

At last, just as the sun flamed red above the hill-tops, I heard the roar of the wapiti's challenge not fifty yards away; and I cocked and half raised my rifle, and stood motionless. In a moment more, the belt of spruces in front of me swayed and opened, and the lordly bull stepped out. He bore his massive antlers aloft; the snow lay thick on his mane; he snuffed the air and stamped on the ground as he walked. As I drew a bead, the motion caught his eye; and instantly his bearing of haughty and warlike self-confidence changed to one of alarm. My bullet smote through his shoulder-blades, and he plunged wildly forward, and fell full length on the blood-stained snow.

Nothing can be finer than a wapiti bull's carriage when excited or alarmed; he then seems the embodiment of strength and stately grace. But at ordinary times his looks are less attractive, as he walks with his neck level with his body and his head outstretched, his horns lying almost on his shoulders. The favorite gait of the wapiti is the trot, which is very fast, and which they can keep up for countless miles; when suddenly and greatly alarmed, they break into an awkward gallop, which is faster, but which speedily tires them.

VISITS WITH UNCLE BY

Tending the Turkey.

Jones had intended going to meet the company expected for Thanksgiving dinner, but Wednesday at the office had been chaos and there were still two stories to write when he hurried across town to get his suburban train. These stories had to be in the hands of the printers Friday morning. Wednesday evening he was to escort his wife and a party to a Thanksgiving Eve ball and of course, after the company came, there would be no time to write.

So it was arranged that Jones should stay at home Thanksgiving morning and get those two stories on paper while his wife went to town after the guests.

"Now, Henry," she admonished, "I will be gone a long time, and I want you to be sure and watch that turkey!"

Henry promised.

"Oh, dear, I just know you won't," almost sobbed Mrs. Jones. "You will get so interested in the plot of those stories that you will forget all about the dinner and let it burn!"

"Why, my dear, I—"

"Yes, Henry, I know your intentions are good, but I am an experienced woman, and you know how many times I have had to say, 'I told you so!'"

Then she went away to the train, a trim little figure in brown in a becoming magenta hat.

Jones sat down to his typewriter and began working out a grudge of long standing. How the keys rattled as he let the narrative he was producing run from his finger tips! One of the stories was finished and the other begun when he chanced to think of the baking turkey left to his tender mercies.

"Whew! I mustn't forget that or Mrs. Jones will never forgive me," he exclaimed, dashing into the kitchen where the aroma of roasting meat greeted his nostrils! Throwing open the door of the oven, he discovered to his horror that the turkey seemed to be burned fast to the pan!

He tried to pry it over with the basting spoon, but the bird would not budge! Jones grunted his displeasure and attacked the gobbler with the carving fork. The best he could do was to lift the pan from the bottom of the oven when he endeavored to roll the turkey over!

"That thing has got to be turned somehow," he mentally anathematized, grabbing the pan in his bare hands and attempting to haul it onto the floor!

With a cry of pain, he let the pan slip and stuck his burned fingers in his mouth, soot and all!

When Jones fixed the furnace he wore a pair of old gloves. Remembering this, he dashed madly into the cellar, donned the gloves and once more attacked the offending bird. This time he managed to get the turkey from the oven, and setting the pan down upon the spotless floor, he proceeded with a fixed expression of revenge, to turn that turkey on its other side!

And just as he had jerked it loose and flopped it over, he heard voices in the hall and Mrs. Jones approached. Grasping the pan by each side he made haste to replace it in the oven. In some unaccountable way, a drumstick caught, the pan slipped and just as Mrs. Jones opened the kitchen door, a look of suspicion on her face, that rascally turkey flopped clear of the pan, sped straight under Jones' feet and deliberately tripped him up!

"Are you riding the turkey to water?" Mrs. Jones asked, scornfully, as Jones floundered about on the kitchen floor!

And then the humorous side appealed to her and her shrieking laugh brought a half dozen guests just in time to see Jones disappear up the back stairway toward the bathroom! Inasmuch as he closed the door promptly and locked it, none of the party ever heard just what he said, but they imagined enough to do justice to the occasion!

o o o

Flub Dubs.

We cannot all own automobiles. The rest of us have to belong to the "quick and the dead" class.

☆ ☆ ☆

We cannot all lead the band—but, by jing, I'm takin' lessons on the big bass drum.

☆ ☆ ☆

If all were star actors who would drop peanuts into the pit?

☆ ☆ ☆

Many forgive, but it is only mother who forgives and forgets.

Byron Williams

INDUSTRY AND MECHANICS

FOR AMATEUR PHOTOGRAPHER.

How You Can Make an Adjustable Negative Washer.

The sketch herewith shows a washbox for negatives made from an ordinary wooden box. As can be seen, the grooved partition; A, is removable, and as several places are provided for its insertion, the tank can be made to accommodate any one of several sizes of plates, says Camera Craft. The other stationary partition, B, which does not reach quite to the bottom of the tank, is placed immediately next to the end of the tank, leaving a channel between the two for the inflow of the wash water. A narrow, thin strip, C, is fastened to the bottom of the tank to keep the plates slightly raised, at the same time allowing a clearer flow of the water from the bottom upwards to the discharge.

The Washing Box.

The water enters the narrow partition at the end, flows under the partitions B and A, then upward between and parallel to the surface of the plates, escaping at the opposite end over the top of the tank end, in which the upper part has been cut away for that purpose. The depth of this cut, in the upper part of the tank end, should allow the overflow to be a trifle higher than the width of the largest size plate for which the tank is fitted. Partition B being stationary, can be nailed in position permanently, allowing the bottom edge to clear the bottom of the tank the desired distance. Partition A being movable should have attached to its bottom edge a couple of nails, D, or better still, wooden pegs, which will keep it also above the bottom of the tank at the desired height.

A coat of paraffin paint should be applied, and, just before it sets perfectly hard, any rough spots trimmed down with a knife or chisel and a second lighter coat applied. If the wood is very dry and porous a preliminary coat of the paint should be applied and allowed to soak into the pores. It is also well to apply a coat of the paint to the joints at the corners and around the edge of the bottom before nailing together.

NEW USE FOR AUTOMOBILES

Canal Boats Towed in a Unique Manner in France.

A new solution of the problem of mechanical traction in canals, depending upon the use of automobiles for towage, on an ordinary tow path, has been proposed by a French engineer, Ernest Lorin of Doulaincourt. A writer in La Nature (Paris) notes that among the present systems of mechanical propulsion on canals some use electricity applied directly to the boats themselves, and some through the intermediary of trolleys. Lorin's plan is of a different type entirely. Says the writer:

"He utilizes an automobile tractor, built precisely like an ordinary motor car, but provided in the rear with a drum mounted on a special frame and bearing devices intended to limit the force of traction and to follow the direction imposed upon it by the cable joining it to the towed boat. Along the edge of the canal are arranged, at intervals, posts to which the tractor is moored by means of hooks like antennae, which it bears in front. The motor serves alternately as a means of progression and to apply a tractive force to the cable through an appropriate system of gears.

Mechanical Tractor for Canals.

"The working of such a system may easily be understood. The boat being connected by its cable with the drum, the autocar sets out toward one of the mooring posts, the cable meanwhile unrolling from the drum. The tractor being moored to its post, the drum is then geared to the motor, and the cable is rolled up, drawing to it the boat at a speed that is easily regulated. When it has caught up with the tractor, the boat continues its motion by reason of its acquired velocity, during a time sufficient to allow the tractor to leave its post and to run forward to another one, to be moored there. The boat's progress is thus very nearly continuous.

"The inventor has also another plan in which the drum is placed on the boat itself and rotated by a motor using alcohol, naphtha or steam. The part played by the automobile is then reduced to that of carrying forward the cable from mooring to mooring.

"Again, the motor on the boat may be used to drive a dynamo whose current is transmitted to the tractor, which is then operated by electricity.

"It will thus be seen that various combinations may be made by the use of this autotractive device, whose chief advantage is the realization of a speed much greater than those hitherto at our disposal."

A COSTLY TASK.

Dome of Philadelphia's City Hall to Be Covered with Gold.

The entire dome of Philadelphia's great city hall is to be covered with gold, and more than 10,000,000 sheets of gold leaf will be used before the task is completed. So that as little of the precious metal as possible shall be wasted, each workman will be inclosed in a screen adjusted about his waist as he puts the metal in place, leaf by leaf, hundreds of feet above the streets.

The gold leaf to be used is being manufactured especially for the city in book form, each book containing 25 leaves, 3⅜ inches square. These are delivered in packs of 20 books. To allow a single leaf for every 3⅜ inches of space to be covered will necessitate the use of 20,161 packs, which makes 409,220 books, or 10,230,000 leaves.

The work of preparing the dome for its covering of gold is also stupendous. The metal part must first be cleaned with steel brushes to remove all rust and scale, and gone over with emery cloth adjusted to wooden blocks, until the cast metal is thoroughly cleaned. After this task is completed the metal will be treated to clear benzine, followed by a rust preventive composed of red paint. The portion to be gilded will then be covered with a solution of varnish and turpentine, and when this becomes hard the gold size (a preparation used in laying gold leaf) will be applied.

When completed the dome will shine like the sun, and the gilding will be so storm proof that the ravages of time and climatic changes will not tarnish it.

Cattle and Tuberculosis.

The government bureau of animal industry estimates that 3½ per cent. of the cattle in the United States are affected with tuberculosis.

Paint Bolts with White Lead.

Where bolts are subject to rust, the threads should be painted with pure white lead; then they will not rust fast.

EASY WHEN YOU KNOW HOW.

A Simple Method for the Making of a Coiled Spring.

Get a metal rod the same diameter as the spring desired; drill a hole near the end to admit end of the wire. Give the wire two or three turns around rod, spacing the turns according to the desired pitch. Clamp it between two blocks of wood in a vice, having the rod in the direction of the grain of the wood. Revolve the rod, explains Scientific American, by means of a monkey wrench fitted on flattened end of rod. The wire will follow in and wind a spring as true and perfect as though it had been wound with a lathe.

Simple Method of Making a Coiled Spring.

MAKE IT TIGHT.

How Hammer Handle Can Be Put On to Stay.

To secure the handle of a hammer or ax, a special wedge made with a piece of wood as at a, in the sketch, held in place by a fence staple, b, has been devised. The prongs of the staple should be bent slightly outward before it is driven in, so that they will spread in the handle. There is little danger of handles coming loose when they are attached in this manner.

MEMORIES OF MARYLAND.

Writer Recalls Barbara Frietchie Incident.

[C. W. Archbold, in Parkersburg Dispatch-News.]

A most interesting feature of the trip about which I am writing consisted in traveling about somewhat on the same soil traversed by me in the fall of 1862. I refer specially to that part of Maryland lying between Harpers Ferry, W. Va., and Frederick, Md. During the campaigns of that dreadful autumn the section in question had been overrun by both Lee's and McClelland's armies. Some of Stonewall Jackson's men told me that they had had but little to eat for several weeks but green corn, taken of course from the regions over which they had marched. The farmers had been despoiled of their crops and in many instances their fences had been burned as fuel used in cooking by the hungry soldiers.

As illustrating the horrors of war, I remember as our company of paroled prisoners approached Frederick we passed by a small farm where a large number of cattle had been slaughtered by Confederate soldiers for the purpose of securing necessary food. They had left the debris from this slaughter on the surface of the ground and the effluvia from it had become so terrible at the time of our arrival that many of us found it necessary to fall face downward on the ground and bury our noses in the soil to escape an odor otherwise intolerable. All this section is again "fair as the garden of the Lord," with no evil smells discoverable. We found the visit to Frederick (town) an attractive episode. I confess to a hearty liking for this quaint old town founded in 1745 and named for Frederick, Prince of Wales.

One object in visiting Frederick was to reassure ourselves somewhat regarding the story of Barbara Frietchie, the heroine of the famous wartime poem by the Quaker poet, John G. Whittier. In my judgment, this is the most notable poem of the war-time, though I am free to confess that "Maryland, My Maryland" is a good second. I have noticed within a few days that some people in Texas have made a protest because certain passages from "Barbara Frietchrie" were included in a grammar used in their schools and insisted that such passages should be excluded. This is certainly an exhibition of a very narrow spirit, but I should have as little patience with any Northern community that would protest against the rendering by Northern bands of that beautiful tune identified with the poem "Maryland, My Maryland." We found our way to the site of Barbara Frietchie's house, which is now really a part of the bed of a creek flowing through the town, as at the time of a flood this creek encroached upon her house to such an extent that it had to be torn down. We found a tablet on the site of of Barbara Frietchie's home reading as follows:

"This tablet marks the spot where stood the home of Barbara Frietchie, bravest of all in Fredericktown. She took up the flag the men hauled down. —J. G. Whittier."

We were led to believe through interviews with people in Frederick and the reading of the life of Barbara Frietchie that the statements made by the poet in the poem were substantially correct. There is no doubt that Stonewall Jackson's corps marched by the home of Barbara Frietchie, but we found that there was some doubt as to whether Jackson himself actually gave the order to fire on Barbara Frietchie's flag, as stated in the poem, but if not such an order might easily have been given by another officer. The belief seems to be general in Frederick that Stonewall Jackson turned aside from marching with his command for a time for the purpose of visiting a friend—a Presbyterian minister. The people of Frederick seem proud of the fame of Dame Barbara, who died in December, 1963, aged a little over 96 years. We visited her grave in what is called the Reformed Cemetery. The ladies of our party recalling this couplet from the poem—

"Over Barbara Frietchie's grave
Flag of Freedom and Union wave"

—said surely there ought to be a flag over her grave. Our guide thereupon reached down and picked up a flag staff from which the flag had been ruthlessly torn away—showing that the insatiable relic hunter had visited the grave of the good old dame. As illustrating the spirit of the Quaker poet, I would like to quote another couplet:

"Honor to her! and let a tear
Fall for her sake on Stonewall's bier."

It may be of interest to note that Frederick was also the birthplace and is the burial place of Francis Scott Key, author of "The Star-Spangled Banner," in whose honor a beautiful monument has been erected in Mount Olivet Cemetery.

Also I may add that Frederick was the birthplace of Admiral Schley. As illustrating the attractiveness of this old city I would like to quote another couplet from Whittier's poem:

"The clustered spires of Frederick stand
Green-walled by the hills of Maryland."

We read in the "Life of Barbara Frietchie," by her friend and neighbor, Henry M. Nixdorff, that Mrs. Southworth, the distinguished authoress, then in Washington, wrote the poet, Whittier, concerning Barbara Frietchie, inclosing a newspaper slip relating to her action when General Lee's army entered Frederick, and this led to the writing of that wonderful poem. In closing this sketch I would like to refer to the meeting of three noble States—Virginia, Maryland and West Virginia—at the junction of the Potomac and Shenandoah rivers at Harpers Ferry. I have had occasion heretofore to express in the columns of the Dispatch-News my affection for my own State—West Virginia—and also my admiration for Virginia, the Old Dominion, which has charms peculiarly its own. I would like in this connection to pay a brief tribute to Maryland, which was the home State of some of my ancestors over 100 years ago. I feel like repeating with an affectionate up-to-date meaning "Maryland, My Maryland." I am fond of Maryland from the standpoint of its metropolis—the beautiful Monumental City, in the environs of which near the Washington Monument, my regiment encamped for a time in the spring of 1862. Also from the standpoint of Maryland Heights, on which splendid mountain I would be glad to look every day of my life; also quaint Frederick and the country thereabout, with its corn fields and "apple and peach trees fruited deep," and last, but not least, lovely Mt. Lake Park, where we have spent many happy days and never an uncomfortable night.

Lot For Sale.

The best building lot in Oakland; opposite new courthouse, at reasonable price. Apply to owner.

HENRY LAUER,
Oakland, Md.

K. of P. Fair.

The Knights of Pythias Fair, which started Monday night will be closed this evening. The patronage accorded the fair has been satisfactory, a handsome sum having already been realized. Tonight, however, a much larger crowd than heretofore is expected. Everybody invited.

Removal Notice.

I have moved from my old location, the Helbig stable, to my new barn on Liberty street opposite the railroad station where my old as well as new patrons will receive the same courteous treatment as heretofore.

Thanking all for past favors and soliciting a continuance of your patronage. I am, J. A. KELLEY.

BITTINGER.

Our Accident friends seem to be building lofty hopes upon the rapid development of their village as soon as the proposed state road is built by their doors, but we feel safe in predicting that before they see the fulfillment of these hopes many suns will have gone down on that quiet hamlet. The reports from road construction from all over the country show that the amount of money required to construct the kind of a highway proposed by the commission is nearly three times as much as has been estimated, per mile, for the road in Garrett county, therefore we reason that when the work on the pike is completed there will not be enough of the $238,000 appropriation left to boom Accident and the thrifty farmers and willing taxpayers of the county may continue to rumble along over stony roads as they haul their good things to market.

Mrs. Elias Orendorf is spending the holiday week with her sister, Mrs. Katie Miller, at Springs, Pa.

P. Y. Lohr, of Oakland, spent a day or two with his brother at this place this week.

P. M. Bittinger is confined to his home by an attack of rheumatism and other complications.

Miss Laura Engle, of Frostburg, is a guest at Thomas Stanton's this week.

Charles Stark had his wrist badly injured last week while at work on Mason Bros. saw mill and is now off duty.

Mrs. K. A. Bittinger and son Austin were shopping in Grantsville last Monday.

The special Christmas exercises rendered in the Lutheran church at this place on Christmas evening were largely attended and the occasion was thoroughly enjoyed.

A happy New Year to THE REPUBLICAN and its readers.

FOR RENT.—The Rectory on Alder street; house contains 14 rooms; stable and other outbuildings on the property. Apply to BOWIE JOHNSON, Oakland. 3t

DOES IT PAY?

to tramp errands, lose time and suffer inconvenience—to save the cost of a telephone message.

The C. &P. LONG DISTANCE TELEPHONE Telephone Comp'y

WHAT WE RECOMMEND

In the way of drugs, medicines or toilet preparations you can rely on. Everything in this store is intended to improve your health, appearance or comfort. So you can buy with confidence that your medicines will be pure, your toilet aids the best to be had. Make this your drug store and there'll be no cause for regrets.

OAKLAND PHARMACY
JOS. E. HARNED, Proprietor,
OAKLAND, MD.

CHILDREN MAKE CONFECTIONERY

a serious matter for the honest candy maker. He must produce a flavor that will satisfy their natural appetites for sweets. He must be careful that his products must be harmless and wholesome.

THE PURITY OF OUR CANDY

is beyond question. None but the best materials are used in even the lowest priced confectionery we sell. As to the flavor, well, buy a box and let the children be the judges—we'll abide by their decision.

OAKLAND MODEL STEAM
HENRY LAUER BAKERY Proprietor

NOTICE OF STOCKHOLDERS' MEETING.

The regular annual meeting of the stockholders of the First National Bank of Kitzmillerville, Maryland, will be held at its banking house on

Tuesday, January 12, 1909,

from 1 to 2 o'clock P. M., for the purpose of electing a board of directors for the ensuing year and for the transaction of any other business that may be brought before them.

E. J HAMILL, Cashier.

NOTICE OF STOCKHOLDERS' MEETING.

The regular meeting of the stockholders of the Garrett National Bank of Oakland, Maryland, will be held at its banking house on

Tuesday, January 12, 1909,

at 2 o'clock P. M., for the purpose of electing a board of directors for the ensuing year, and for the transaction of any other business that may come before them.

S. T. JONES, Cashier.

NOTICE OF STOCKHOLDERS' MEETING.

The regular annual meeting of the stockholders of the First National Bank of Oakland, Maryland, will be held at its banking house on

Tuesday, January 12, 1909,

from 1 to 2 o'clock P. M., for the purpose of electing a board of directors for the ensuing year and for the transaction of any other business that may be brought before them.

R. E. SLIGER, Cashier.

NOTICE OF STOCKHOLDERS' MEETING.

The annual meeting of the Garrett County Telephone Company will be held at Hoyes, Maryland.

January 4th, 1909,

at the hour of 10 O'clock for the purpose of electing a board of directors for the coming year and any other business that may be brought before it.

C. V. GUARD, Sec'y.

NOTICE OF STOCKHOLDERS' MEETING.

Pursuant to the required legal notice a meeting of the stockholders of the First National Bank of Friendsville, Maryland, will be held at its banking house on

Tuesday, January 12, 1909,

at 10 o'clock A. M. for the purpose of electing a board of directors for the ensuing year and for the transaction of such other business that may lawfully be done.

R. C. McCANDLISH, Cashier.

Notice to Creditors.

This is to give notice, That the subscribers of Garrett county, hath obtained from the Orphans' Court of Garrett County, in Maryland, Letters of Administration on the personal estate of

JOHN W. BOWERS,

late of Garrett county, deceased. All persons having claims against the deceased are hereby warned to exhibit the same, with vouchers thereof legally authenticated to the subscriber, on or before the 26th day of April next; they may otherwise by law be excluded from all benefit of said estate. All persons knowing themselves indebted to said estate are requested to make immediate payment.

Given under my hand this 26th day of November, 1908.

FLORENCE M. BOWERS,
Administratrix,
Dodson, Md.

The Republican for Job Work.

THE REPUBLICAN.

VOLUME 32. OAKLAND, MARYLAND, THURSDAY, JANUARY 7, 1909. NUMBER 45

MARRIAGE STATISTICS FOR THE PAST YEAR

Some Interesting Information Has Been Gleamed from the Records.

A study of the marriage records in the office of the Clerk of the Circuit Court for Garrett county reveals some interesting facts and readily places Oakland at the head of the Gretna Greens of Maryland and West Virginia.

An examination of the records above referred to shows that during the year just closed licenses were granted 487 couples to contract in marriage; six couples were refused licenses and two licenses were returned unused.

West Virginia furnished the greater number of couples, the records showing that of the total number granted that State furnished 321; Maryland came second with 133 couples; Pennsylvania third with 24 couples; Ohio furnished seven couples, whilst Old Virginia contributed two couples. In many cases the husband and wife came from different states in and making up the record this has not been taken into consideration both the man and woman in the case being credited to the State from which the man hailed.

Another phase of the record is that licenses were granted fifteen men who had been divorced. Four women also figure in the records as divorcees. There were thirty-four widowers who secured licenses and fifteen widows. In only two cases did widowers marry widows.

In the returns made by the ministers who performed the marriage ceremonies during the past year it appears that twenty have not been filed. According to the certificates filed, however, the ministers in Oakland performed nearly 80 per cent. of the marriage ceremonies. Rev. J. B. Workman, of the M. E. church, stands first with 176 weddings to his credit. Rev. E. Manges, of the Lutheran church, comes second with a total of 158 ceremonies. Rev. John M. Davis officiated at twenty weddings, and Rev. L. B Hensley, of the Presbyterian church, married eleven couples. Rev. Connell, of the Catholic church, had five ceremonies, and Rev. R. B. Ward had three. Certificates filed shows that forty other ministers located in different sections of the county had performed from one to eight ceremonies.

DEATH RECORD.

MRS. MARY SCHULTZ

Mrs. Mary Schultz, nee Brown, died yesterday in St. Louis, Mo. She was a native of Grantsville, Md., and was the wife of a wealthy manufacturer.

Subscribe for the Republican.

MOUNTAIN LAKE PARK.

Married, at the parsonage, Loch Lynn, Monday evening last, by Rev. Stoneking, Mr. Joseph E. Callis and Miss Rosanna Welch. The former of Loch Lynn and the latter of Mt. Lake Park. This is a worthy young couple and they have the best wishes of all in our two towns.

The special meetings in the U. B. church, Loch Lynn, are creating quite an interest. A considerable number have been reclaimed and converted. Rev. Stoneking is a strong preacher. He is being ably assisted by Rev. Johnson and many lay workers.

Rev. Bolton, pastor of the M. F. church, commenced special services at Deer Park Sunday last.

Mr. Jas. G. Jarboe is at home for a short time. He has been in Clarksburg for some weeks.

The following from the Fairmont Times of Wednesday will doubtless be of interest as a number of the parties named are well known summer residents here:

"One of the most delightful functions of the holiday season was the reception last evening given by the Misses Margaret and Kathleen Bishop at their home on Main street. Miss Marguerite Olston, of Parkersburg, who is the guest of Miss Margaret Bishop, was the honor guest. Miss Brown, of Kingwood, who was expected to be here, was detained from coming on account of illness.

"In the receiving line were Mrs. F. Carl Fame, the Misses Bishop, Miss Olston, Misses Teresa Nuzum and Ethel Kennedy, of Tuscaloosa, Ala., Miss Fanny McDonough, of Washington, Pa.; Miss Ann Williams, of Cincinnati; Miss Helen Tuttle. Mrs. G. H. Brownfield met the guests and invited them to the dining room where an elegant course of refreshments was served. Mrs. Harry F. Smith presided at the coffee urn and others who assisted in serving were Mrs. Laura Lee Jackson, Mrs. Fred Fleming, Misses Zoe Jolliff, Mary Fleming, Mary Deveny and Virginia Abbott. In the library delicious punch was served during the evening, and Miss Louise Fitch presided at the punch bowl with some aides. Others who assisted in dispensing the hospitality of the evening were Mrs. F. W. Hill, Miss Lucy Haymond, Mrs. Allie Haymond and Mrs. Cora Bishop. A very large number of friends were received during the evening."

Calendars Received.

This office acknowledges the receipt of handsome calendars from the First National Bank of Friendsville; Holbert & Spedden, of Fairmont; E. A. Weimer, the merchant, and R. K. Maroney, liveryman, of Oakland.

Mr. E. A. Weimer spent Monday in Wheeling and nearby towns on business.

NEW AMENDMENT IS WORSE THAN LAST

Archibald H. Taylor Says It Puts Premium On Ignorance.

Archibald H. Taylor considers the disfranching amendment to be voted on next fall worse than the former one and he proposes to do everything in his power to bring about its defeat. He believes that its enforcement would be in direct violation of the Fifteenth Amendment to the Federal Constitution but mindful of the seeming policy of the Supreme Court to permit each State to pass on questions of franchise, he is not disposed to place any reliance on the legal aspect of the case. Neither is his opposition to it based on these grounds.

The amendment would, he says, put a premium on ignorance by permitting every white man to vote regardless of his disqualification and bar out every negro, no matter how deserving he might be. Mr. Taylor refers to the clauses of the amendment, taking in one class after another among white people, and then takes up the memory test for negroes, declaring it so sweeping that not one man out of a dozen, no matter how intelligent he may be, can comply with it.

The measure has a property clause, but Mr. Taylor practically ignores it, because it would not, if applied to the white people of the State, permit more than one out of twenty to vote, and the proportion of negroes will be much greater.

So far as the white people of Maryland are concerned, the amendment is inclusive, but it is most exclusive when applied to the negroes. As the result of it, every white man, no matter how ignorant he may be, will vote, and no negro practically will enjoy this privilege. With such a law in force and the politicians in the saddle, the best thought in the community will be absolutely ignored, and the politicians will devote their attention to the ignorant and irresponsible voter. This means stagnation for Maryland not only in material advancement, for the ignorant white man, enjoying unusual power in spite of his ignorance, will feel no incentive to educate his children. This is why Mr. Taylor feels that the amendment is a premium on ignorance.

He calls attention to the fact that West Virginia has twice turned down a disfranchising amendment, and he declares that no doubt could exist of the attitude of Kentucky, Missouri and other border States. Even the Southern States in which it is applied have nothing so drastic as the amendment proposed for Maryland, for they are so framed as leave open a door of hope for the negro of the future.

In the South the people had a choice of two evils—ignorant domination by the blacks or unusual power for the politicians. They accepted the latter. Here in Maryland the black vote has never been an element of danger. Mr. Taylor declares that it is impossible to point to a single official chosen exclusively by them, and those few they have aided in electing have so acted as to lead to the conclusion that they can be compared very favorably with others for whom no black votes were cast.

Under these circumstances, with everything to lose by adopting the amendment and nothing to gain from it, Mr. Taylor believes it would be the height of folly for the white people of Maryland to permit itto become a law.

He believes, moreover, that it would let in every white man vote now disbarred because of crime. Some lawyers, he says, differ with him on this point, but he feels confident that he is right.

FIKE.

The weather is cold but no snow.

The Farmers Union Telephone Co. met at Markleysburg, Pa., and held a meeting last Thursday.

W. H. Thomas was out buying furs a few days last week.

Messrs. L. C. and Hiram Fike had ranges delivered to them last Tuesday.

There are many suffering with colds and coughs in our vicinity.

Mr. L. K. Fike made a trip to Markleysburg, Pa , last week on business.

The Brethren will hold their quarterly council on Jan. 9, 1909, at this place.

There will be church at this place on Jan. 10, at 10:30 o'clock.

Mr. James Evans, our horse jockey, has quit the business and is now going to school at Parkersburg, W. Va.

FOR RENT.—The Rectory on Alder street; house contains 14 rooms; stable and other outbuildings on the property. Apply to BOWIE JOHNSON, Oakland. 3t

CAUGHT WITH DECOY LETTERS ON HIS PERSON

Roy Powell, Western Maryland Mail Clerk, Arrested on Serious Charge.

Roy Powell, of Gormania, W. Va., a railway mail clerk, running between Cumberland and Durbin on the Western Maryland Railroad, was placed under arrest at the Cumberland post office Sunday night, shortly after the arrival of the evening Western Maryland railroad train in Cumberland, charged with stealing letters containing money, which charge he admitted to be true after the marked money and an unopened decoy letter had been found on his person. The arrest was made by Police Sergeant Steepe at the direction of Postal Inspectors J. C. Koons and James B. Robertson, of Washington, who were detailed to work on the case.

Numerous complaints from Cumberland merchants, wholesale dealers of that vicinity and dealers along the line of the railroad had been filed with the postoffice department, charging that someone was lifting letters containing money. For several weeks the inspectors had been on the case when they came to the conclusion that Powell was the guilty man. Sunday Inspectors Koons and Robertson went up the Western Maryland railroad, and Inspector Koons mailed a decoy letter at Davis, W. Va., while Mr. Robertson handed in a similar letter at Dobbin, W. Va. Both letters contained orders for whiskey from the firm of John J. Stump & Co., which firm has suffered greatly from Powell's stealing, and with the marked money for same were enclosed in one of the John J. Stump & Co. addressed envelopes.

Upon the arrival of the train here the inspectors hurriedly went through the mail sacks and found the decoy letters addressed to the above named firm missing. Going to the postoffice the inspectors waited for Powell to turn in his mail, including registered letters, and after he had "signed in," Powell was requested to step into the room of Postmaster William Pearre, where in the presence of the two inspectors and Assistant Postmaster George C. Shuck, the two decoy letters were found on Powell, one of which had been opened and the marked money taken therefrom. Powell stated that he had intended putting the unopened letter in the mail, but that he forgot he had placed it in his pocket after closing the mail pouch. He made no attempt whatever to deny his guilt, but acknowledged that he had been rifling the letters and destroying same after taking out the money.

He was at once turned over to Sergeant Steepe who conducted Powell to a cell in the police station. He will likely be given a preliminary hearing today before United States Commissioner Thomas J. Anderson and held for the action of the federal grand jury to be convened here under Judge Morris. If held and unable to give the necessary bail, Powell will very likely be the first prisoner confined in the cells in the federal building, as it is presumed that in those quarters Deputy U. S. Marshal Jacob George will place him.

Powell has a wife residing at Gormania.—Cumberland News.

BITTINGER.

Clear skies and bright sunshine has marked each day of the new year and the exceptionally mild temperature makes this a most delightful midwinter season.

Miss Nettie Brininger, of Sunnyside, is spending a few days at the Lutheran parsonage, in this village, and is being instructed in music by Rev. Alvin Yugel

At the annual meeting of the Mutual Telephone Company, held here on last Saturday afternoon, the entire body of officers were re-elected to serve another year.

Wm. Ahl, a student at Selins Grove, Pa., returned to school last Saturday after spending his vacation here as the guest of Rev. and Mrs. Yugel

Mrs. E. S. Brenneman entertained a company of her lady friends at a quilting party on New Year's day.

F. M. Bittinger, who has been ill for some time, is recovering rapidly and will soon be out again.

Mrs. Elias Orendorf returned to her home at this place last Monday after spending several days with her sister at Springs, Pa.

Mr. Roy Hetrick and Miss Cora Bittinger were among the village promenaders on last Sunday afternoon.

See The Republican for Job Printing.

SWANTON.

Swanton has had her Christmas and while the merry spirit is in her soul she daintily flings at you her New Year's greetings, with the wish that you may burnish up your smiles for fifty-two visits this year to each patron and prove a compendium of news and knowledge, pleasure and instruction to the students of your columns. Do not seek to evade the fact, but confess how nervously anxious you are to hear how Swanton spent her Christmas day, what were her amusements, festivities and ceremonies; but we will not now gratify that curiosity and will doom you to wait and hope. But in the darkness of the midnight hour we watched the parting of the ways. While the old year trembled on the brink of dissolution, Swanton was assembled in the pleasantly warmed and brightly lighted Methodist church to take a look back over the twelve billows of the old year, listening to their dying serge just at the point upon the sea of time where the first billow of 1909 lifts its crest and bounds into being.

Miss Brumbaugh was at the organ and enlivened the evening with many of her brightest renderings.

Swanton, perhaps, remembering her close proximity to Oakland and desirious of future safety, concluded that she may not have been strictly temperate in each of the 366 days then ending, made up her mind to try to do better, and 36 united in a pledge of one year from date not to drink intoxicants. Mr. Editor, did you do as well? Now, honest Indian, did you? The Rev. Mr. Brumbaugh made a temperance address bristling in facts and fervent in appeal, and was followed in supplementary remarks by C. M. Miller and others. The last moments of the old year found us in prayer and the new New Year came in to the music of the church bells—

"Ring in the valiant man and true,
The larger heart, the kindlier hand;
Ring out the darkness of the land,
Ring in the Christ that is to be."

At this writing our accommodating postmaster, Mr. William W. Sweet, is confined to his bed by a deep cold and general debility.

Mrs. Daniel Mosser died at her residence in Swanton just before noon Saturday, January 2nd, 1909. For several years Mrs. Mosser has been the victim of a fatal malady which eventually has terminated in deatn. The funeral rites will be conducted by the Rev. Horace W. Stowell of the Protestant Episcopal church Monday afternoon at 3 o'clock in Anderson Chapel, and the interment will be the in grounds of that chapel.

The death of Mr. Andrew B. Gonder, of Oakland, creates a profound sorrow in every section of Garrett and in every shade of public opinion. Indeed, among the many and deservedly popular gentlemen and officials who have died in the 36 years of Garrett's being as a county, no one death has caused more universal or sincere expressions of regret than that of this widely known and highly esteemed conservator of the law. Mr. Gonder was so modest and unassuming, holding with such unrelaxing grasp the light of his high attainments ever under a bushel that but few beyond the circle of his most intimate friends understood either the wealth or the range of his classically cultured and finely poised mind, or how that mind had been enriched by both American and English legal jurisprudence. To an analytical training in his profession he added traits of such unimpeachable virtues and character as to make him a Justice of exceptionable usefulness and clothed his decisions with a confidence as satisfatory to the litigant as when handed down by the Circuit Court.

In this death the administration of justice in Garrett suffers an irreparable loss. With Mr. Gonder, the consciousness of an upright and stainless life, consecrated to duty, and a peaceful fellowship with all men entitled him to approach without dread the gateway of Eternity satisfied that—

"For tho' from out bourne of time and place,
The flood may bear me far,
I hope to see my Pilot face to face
When I have crossed the bar."

RELLIM.

TEACHERS' ASSOCIATION MAY MEET AT MT. LAKE

The Annual Session This Summer Will Probably Be Held There.

Mr. Ed. A. Browning, County Superintendent of the public schools for Garrett county, returned to Oakland from Baltimore yesterday afternoon where he had attended a meeting of the executive committee of the State Teachers' Association held Tuesday for the purpose of arranging the preliminaries for the meeting of the Association during the coming summer.

At the meeting of the committee Mr. Browning championed Mountain Lake Park as a most desirable place for the sessions of the Association to be held. Other places in the state were mentioned as suitable and it was decided to have another meeting of the committee on the 16th inst., when the place for the meeting will be definitely determined.

Livery Removed.

Messrs. Maroney Bros., the Quality Hill liverymen, have removed from their old location to the Helbig barn which was recently vacated by Mr J. A. Kelly. The equipment of the Maroney Bros. stable compares very favorably with that of other liverymen and they aim to please their patrons.

DIXON & KELSO

DIXON & KELSO quote the Following CASH Prices for

Grain, Feed and Flour

Shelled Corn, bu	$ .75
Unbolted Meal, per cwt	1.55
Cracked Corn, "	1.55
White Middlings, "	1.60
Barley Chop, "	1.65
Wheat Bran, "	1.45
Sucrene Dairy Feed, cwt	1.45
Oats, per bu	.60
Sleepy Eye, White Satin or Marvel Flour, in wood	6.25
Any of above in ⅛ paper	.80
Winter Wheat Flour, wood	5.75
" " " paper	.70

☞Can use ten cars PROPS 10 feet long, 4½ inches, at 10c, delivered at our yard.

☞Can also use large quantities Oak and Chestnut CROSS TIES at 35c to 55c each.

Yours to Please. DIXON & KELSO.

E. A. WEIMER.

SWEEPING REDUCTIONS
IN CLOTHING

I find in going over my stock I have too much Clothing on hand—especially in the cheaper grades, and to move it out quickly I have decided to sell about

100 Suits for Men and Boys at Just One-Half the Regular Price;

about that many more at one-third off, and a lot more at one-fourth off regular prices. Also a lot of separate PANTS at reduced prices. Lot of OVERCOATS at half-price.

RAINCOATS one-fourth off.

It will pay you to buy now.

Yours Truly. E. A. WEIMER.
NEXT DOOR TO THE POSTOFFICE OAKLAND, MD

INTO THE PRIMITIVE

BY ROBERT AMES BENNET

ILLUSTRATIONS BY RAY WALTERS.

COPYRIGHT 1908, BY A.C. McCLURG & CO.

CHAPTER I.—The story opens with the shipwreck of the steamer on which Miss Genevieve Leslie, an American heiress, Lord Winthrope, an Englishman, and Tom Blake, a brusque American, were passengers. The three were tossed upon an uninhabited island and were the only ones not drowned. Blake recovered from a drunken stupor.

CHAPTER II.—Blake, shunned on the boat, because of his roughness, became a hero as preservers of the helpless pair. The Englishman was suing for the hand of Miss Leslie. Blake started to swim back to the ship to recover what was left.

CHAPTER III.—Blake returned safely. Winthrope wasted his last match on a cigarette, for which he was scored by Blake. Their first meal was a dead fish.

CHAPTER IV.—The trio started a ten mile hike for higher land. Thirst attacked them. Blake was compelled to carry Miss Leslie on account of weariness. He taunted Winthrope.

CHAPTER V.—They entered the jungle. That night was passed roosting high in a tree.

CHAPTER VI.—The next morning they descended to the open again. All three constructed hats to shield themselves from the sun. They then feasted on cocoanuts, the only procurable food. Miss Leslie showed a liking for Blake, but detested his roughness.

CHAPTER VII.—Led by Blake they established a home in some cliffs. Blake found a fresh water spring.

to start now. But first thing to-morrow I'll take a run down that way, while you two lay around camp and see if you can twist some sort of fish-line out of cocoanut fiber. By braiding your hair, Miss Jenny, you can spare us your hair-pins for hooks."

"But, Mr. Blake, I'm afraid—I'd rather you'd take us with you. With that dreadful creature so near—"

"Well, I don't know. Let's see your feet?"

Miss Leslie glanced at him, and thrust a slender foot from beneath her skirt.

"Um-m—stocking torn; but those slippers are tougher than I thought. Most of the way will be good walking, along the beach. We'll leave the fishing to Pat—er—beg pardon—Win! With his ankle—"

"By Jove, Blake, I'll chance the ankle. Don't leave me behind. I

"Bitten? Yes, by John Barleycorn!"

give you my word, you'll not have to lug me."

"Oh, of course, Mr. Winthrope must go with us!"

"'Fraid to go alone, eh?" demanded Blake, frowning.

His tone startled and offended her; yet all he saw was a politely quizzical lifting of her brows.

"Why should I be afraid, Mr. Blake?" she asked.

Blake stared at her moodily. But when she met his gaze with a confiding smile, he flushed and looked away.

"All right," he muttered; "we'll move camp together. But don't expect me to pack his ludship, if we draw a blank and have to trek back without food or water."

CHAPTER IX.

The Leopards' Den.

WHILE Blake made a successful trip for the abandoned cocoanuts, his companions leveled the stones beneath the ledges chosen by Winthrope, and gathered enough dried sea-weed along the talus to soften the hard beds.

Soothed by the monotonous wash of the sea among the rocks, even Miss Leslie slept well. Blake, who had insisted that she should retain his coat, was wakened by the chilliness preceding the dawn. Five minutes later they started on their journey.

The starlight glimmered on the waves and shed a faint radiance over the rocks. This and their knowledge of the way enabled them to pick a path along the foot of the cliff without difficulty. Once on the beach, they swung along at a smart gait, invigorated by the cool air.

Dawn found them half way to their goal. Blake called a halt when the first red streaks shot up the eastern sky. All stood waiting until the quickly following sun sprang forth from the sea. Blake's first act was to glance from one headland to the other, estimating their relative distances. His grunt of satisfaction was lost in Winthrope's exclamation: "By Jove, look at the cattle!"

Blake and Miss Leslie turned to stare at the droves of animals moving about between them and the border of the tall grass. Miss Leslie was the first to speak. "They can't be cattle, Mr. Winthrope. There are some with stripes. I do believe they're zebras!"

"Get down!" commanded Blake. "They're all wild game. Those big ox-like fellows to the left of the zebras are eland. Whee! wouldn't we be in it if we owned that water hole? I'll bet I'd have one of those fat beeves inside three days."

"How I should enjoy a juicy steak!" murmured Miss Leslie.

"Raw or jerked?" questioned Blake.

"What is 'jerked?'"

"Dried."

"Oh, no; I mean broiled—just red inside."

"I prefer mine quite rare," added Winthrope.

"That's the way you'll get it, damned rare—Beg your pardon, Miss Jenny! Without fire, we'll have the choice of raw or jerked."

"Horrors!"

"Jerked meat is all right. You cut your game in strips—"

"With a penknife!" laughed Miss Leslie.

Blake stared at her glumly. "That's so. You've got it back on me—Butcher a beef with a penknife! We'll have to take it raw, and dog-fashion at that."

"Haven't I heard of bamboo knives?" said Winthrope.

"Bamboo?"

"Im sure I can't say, but as I remember, it seems to me that the varnish-like glaze—"

"Silica? Say, that would cut meat. But where in—where in hades are the bamboos?"

"I'm sure I can't say. Only I remember that I have seen them in other tropical places, you know."

"Meantime I prefer cocoanuts, until we have a fire to broil our steaks," remarked Miss Leslie.

"Ditto, Miss Jenny, long's we have the nuts and no meat. I'm a vegetarian now—but maybe my mouth ain't watering for something else. Look at all those chops and roasts and stews running around out there!"

"They are making for the grass," observed Winthrope. "Hadn't we better start?"

"Nuts won't weigh so much without the shells. We'll eat right here."

There were only a few nuts left. They were drained and cracked and scooped out, one after another. The last chanced to break evenly across the middle.

"Hello," said Blake, "the lower part of this will do for a bowl, Miss Jenny. When you've eaten the cream, put it in your pocket. Say, Win, have you got the bottle and keys and—"

"All safe—everything."

"Are you sure, Mr. Winthrope?" asked Miss Leslie. "Men's pockets seem so open. Twice I've had to pick up Mr. Blake's locket."

"Locket?" echoed Blake.

"The ivory locket. Women may be curious, Mr. Blake, but I assure you, I did not look inside, though—"

"Let me—give it here—quick!" gasped Blake.

Startled by his tone and look, Miss Leslie caught an oval shaped object from the side pocket of the coat, and thrust it into Blake's outstretched hand. For a moment he stared at it, unable to believe his eyes; then he leaped up, with a yell that sent the droves of zebras and antelope flying into the tall grass.

"Oh! oh!" screamed Miss Leslie. "Is it a snake? Are you bitten?"

"Bitten?—Yes, by John Barleycorn! Must have been fuzzy drunk to put it in my coat. Always carry it in my fob pocket. What a blasted infernal idiot I've been! Kick me, Win,—kick me hard!"

"I say, Blake, what is it? I don't quite take you. If you would only—"

"Fire!—fire! Can't you see? We've got all hell beat! Look here."

He snapped open the slide of the supposed locket, and before either of his companions could realize what he would be about, was focusing the lens of a surveyor's magnifying-glass upon the back of Winthrope's hand. The Englishman jerked the hand away—

"Ow! That burns!"

Blake shook the glass in their bewildered faces.

"Look there!" he shouted, "there's fire; there's water; there's birds' eggs and beefsteaks! Here's where we trek on the back trail. We'll smoke out that leopard in short order!"

"You don't mean to say, Blake—"

"No; I mean to do! Don't worry. You can hide with Miss Jenny on the point, while I engineer the deal. Fall in."

The day was still fresh when they found themselves back at the foot of the cliff. Here arose a heated debate between the men. Winthrope, stung by Blake's jeering words, insisted upon sharing the attack, though with no great enthusiasm. Much to Blake's surprise, Miss Leslie came to the support of the Englishman.

"But, Mr. Blake," she argued, "you say it will be perfectly safe for us here. If so, it will be safe for myself alone."

"I can play this game without him."

"No doubt. Yet if, as you say, you expect to keep off the leopard with a torch, would it not be well to have Mr. Winthrope at hand with other torches, should yours burn out?"

"Yes; if I thought he'd be at hand after the first scare."

Winthrope started off almost on a run. At that moment he might have faced the leopard single-handed. Blake chuckled as he swung away after his victim. Within ten paces, however, he paused to call back over his shoulder: "Get around the point, Miss Jenny, and if you want something to do, try braiding the cocoanut fiber."

Miss Leslie made no response; but she stood for some time gazing after the two men. There was so much that was characteristic even in this rear view. For all his anger and his haste, the Englishman bore himself with an air of well-bred nicety. His trim, erect figure needed only a fresh suit to be irreproachable. On the other hand, a careless observer, at first glance, might have mistaken Blake, with his flannel shirt and shouldered club, for a hulking navvy. But there was nothing of the navvy in his swinging stride or in the resolute poise of his head as he came up with Winthrope.

Though the girl was not given to reflection, the contrast between the two could not but impress her. How well her countryman—coarse, uncultured, but full of brute strength and courage—fitted in with these primitive surroundings. Whereas Winthrope—and herself—

She fell into a kind of disquieted brown study. Her eyes had an odd look, both startled and meditative—such a look as might be expected of one who for the first time is peering beneath the surface of things, and sees the naked Realities of Life, the real values, bared of masking conventions. It may have been that she was seeking to ponder the meaning of her own existence—that she had caught a glimpse of the vanity and wastefulness, the utter futility of her life. At the best, it could only have been a glimpse. But was not that enough?

"Of what use are such people as I?" she cried. "That man may be rough and coarse—even a brute; but he at least does things—I'll show him that I can do things, too!"

She hastened out around the corner of the cliff to the spot where they had spent the night. Here she gathered together the cocoanut husks, and seating herself in the shade of the overhanging ledges began to pick at the coarse fiber. It was cruel work for her soft fingers, not yet fully healed from the thorn wounds. At times the pain and an overpowering sense of injury brought tears to her eyes; still more often she dropped the work in despair of her awkwardness. Yet always she returned to the task with renewed energy.

After no little perseverance, she found how to twist the fiber and plait it into cord. At best it was slow work, and she did not see how she should ever make enough cord for a fish-line. Yet, as she caught the knack of the work and her fingers became more nimble she began to enjoy the novel pleasure of producing something.

She had quite forgotten to feel injured, and was learning to endure with patience the rasping of the fiber between her fingers, when Winthrope came clambering around the corner of the cliff.

"What is it?" she exclaimed, springing up and hurrying to meet him. He was white and quivering, and the look in his eyes filled her with dread.

Her voice shrilled to a scream: "He's dead!"

Winthrope shook his head.

"Then he's hurt!—he's hurt by that savage creature, and you've run off and left him—"

"No, no, Miss Genevieve, I must insist! The fellow is not even scratched."

"Then why—?"

"It was the horror of it all. It actually made me ill."

"You frightened me almost to death. Did the beast chase you?"

"That would have been better, in a way. Really, it was horrible! I'm still sick over it, Miss Genevieve."

"But tell me about it. Did you set fire to the bushes in the cleft, as Mr. Blake—"

"Yes; after we had fetched what we could carry of that long grass—two big trusses. It grows 10 or 12 feet tall, and is now quite dry. Part of it Blake made into torches, and we fired the bush all across the foot of the cleft. Really, one would not have thought there was that much dry wood in so green a dell. On either side of the rill the grass and brush flared like tinder, and the flames swept up the cleft far quicker than we had expected. We could hear them crackling and roaring louder than ever after the smoke shut out our view."

"Surely, there is nothing so very horrible in that."

"No, oh, no; it was not that. But the beast—the leopard! At first we heard one roar; then it was that dreadful snarling and yelling—most awful squalling! The wretched thing came leaping and tumbling down the path, all singed and blinded. Blake fired the big truss of grass, and the brute rolled right into the flames. It was shocking—dreadfully shocking! The wretched creature writhed and leaped about till it plunged into the pool. When it sought to crawl out, all black and hideous. Blake went up and killed it with his club—crushed in its skull— Ugh!"

Miss Leslie gazed at the unnerved Englishman with calm scrutiny.

"But why should you feel so about it?" she asked. "Was it not the beast's life against ours?"

"But so horrible a death!"

"I'm sure Mr. Blake would have preferred to shoot the creature had he a gun. Having nothing else than fire, I think it was all very brave of him. Now we are sure of water and food. Had we not best be going?"

"It was to fetch you that Blake sent me."

Winthrope spoke with perceptible stiffness. He was chagrined, not only by her commendation of Blake, but by the indifference with which she had met his agitation.

They started at once, Miss Leslie in the lead. As they rounded the point she caught sight of the smoke still rising from the cleft. A little later she noticed the vultures which were streaming down out of the sky from all quarters other than seaward. Their focal point seemed to be the trees at the foot of the cleft. A nearer view showed that they were alighting in the thorn bushes on the south border of the wood.

Of Blake there was nothing to be seen until Miss Leslie, still in the lead, pushed in among the trees. There they found him crouched beside a small fire, near the edge of the pool. He did not look up. His eyes were riveted in a hungry stare upon several pieces of flesh, suspended over the flames on spits of green twigs.

"Hello!" he sang out, as he heard their footsteps. "Just in time, Miss Jenny. Your broiled steak'll be ready in short order."

"Oh, build up the fire! I'm simply ravenous!" she exclaimed, between impatience and delight.

Winthrope was hardly less keen; yet his hunger did not altogether blunt his curiosity.

"I say, Blake," he inquired, "where did you get the meat?"

"Stow it, Win, my boy. This ain't a packing house. The stuff may be tough, but it's not—er—the other thing. Here you are, Miss Jenny. Chew it off the stick."

Though Winthrope had his suspicions, he took the piece of half-burned flesh which Blake handed him in turn and fell to eating without further question. As Blake had surmised, the roast proved far other than tender. Hunger, however, lent it a most appetizing flavor. The repast ended when there was nothing left to devour. Blake threw away his empty spit and rose to stretch. He waited for Miss Leslie to swallow her last mouthful and then began to chuckle.

"What's the joke?" asked Winthrope.

Blake looked at him solemnly.

"Well now, that was downright mean of me," he drawled; "after robbing them, to laugh at it!"

"Robbing who?"

"The buzzards."

"You've fed us on leopard meat! It's—it's disgusting!"

"I found it filling. How about you, Miss Jenny?"

Miss Leslie did not know whether to laugh or to give way to a feeling of nausea. She did neither.

"Can we not find the spring of which you spoke?" she asked. "I am thirsty."

"Well, I guess the fire is about burnt out," assented Blake. "Come on; we'll see."

The cleft now had a far different aspect from what it had presented on their first visit. The largest of the trees, though scorched about the base, still stood with unwithered foliage, little harmed by the fire. But many of their small companions had been killed and partly destroyed by the heat and flames from the burning brush. In places the fire was yet smouldering.

Blake picked a path along the edge of the rill, where the moist vegetation, though scorched, had refused to burn. After the first abrupt ledge, up which Blake had to drag his companions, the ascent was easy. But as they climbed around an outjutting corner of the steep right wall of the cleft Blake muttered a curse of disappointment. He could now see that the cleft did not run to the top of the cliff, but through it, like a tiny box canyon. The sides rose sheer and smooth as walls. Midway, at the highest point of the cleft, the baobab towered high above the ridge crest, its gigantic trunk filling a third of the breadth of the little gorge. Unfortunately it stood close to the left wall.

"Here's luck for you!" growled Blake. "Why couldn't the blamed old tree have grown on the other side? We might have found a way to climb it. Guess we'll have to smoke out another leopard. We're no nearer those birds' nests than we were yesterday."

"By Jove, look here!" exclaimed Winthrope. "This is our chance for antelope! Here by the spring are bamboos—real bamboos—and only half the thicket burned."

"What of them?" demanded Blake.

"Bows—arrows—and did you not agree that they would make knives?"

"Umph—we'll see. What is it, Miss Jenny?"

"Isn't that a hole in the big tree?"

"Looks like it. These baobabs are often hollow."

"Perhaps that is where the leopard had his den," added Winthrope.

"Shouldn't wonder. We'll go and see."

"But, Mr. Blake," protested the girl, "may there not be other leopards?"

"Might have been; but I'll bet they lit out with the other. Look how the tree is scorched. Must have been stacks of dry brush around the hole, 'nough to smoke out a fireman. We'll look and see if they left any soup bones lying around. First, though, here's your drink, Miss Jenny."

As he spoke, Blake kicked aside some smouldering branches and led the way to the crevice whence the spring trickled from the rock into a shallow stone basin. When all had drunk their fill of the clear cool water Blake took up his club and walked straight across to the baobab. Less than 30 steps brought him to the narrow opening in the trunk of the huge tree. At first he could make out nothing in the dimly lit interior; but the fetid, catty odor was enough to convince him that he had found the leopards' den.

One Moment After Another Passed, and He Stood Poised for the Shock.

He caught the vague outlines of a long body, crouched five or six yards away, on the far side of the hollow. He sprang back, his club brandished to strike. But the expected attack did not follow. Blake glanced about as though considering the advisability of a retreat. Winthrope and Miss Leslie were staring at him, white-faced. The sight of their terror seemed to spur him to dare-devil bravado; though his actions may rather have been due to the fact that he realized the futility of flight, and so rose to the requirements of the situation—the grim need to stand and face the danger.

"Get behind the bamboos!" he called, and as they hurriedly obeyed, he caught up a stone and flung it in at the crouching beast.

He heard the missile strike with a soft thud that told him he had not missed his mark, and he swung up his club in both hands. Given half a chance he would smash the skull of the female as he had crushed her blinded mate. One moment after another passed, and he stood poised for the shock, tense and scowling. Not so much as a snarl came from within. The truth flashed upon him.

"Smothered!" he yelled.

The other saw him dart in through the hole. A moment later two limp grayish bodies were flung out into the open. Immediately after Blake reappeared, dragging the body of the mother leopard.

"It's all right; they're dead!" cried Winthrope, and he ran forward to look at the bodies.

Miss Leslie followed, hardly less curious.

"Are they all dead, Mr. Blake?" she inquired.

"Wiped out—whole family. The old cat stayed by her kittens, and all smothered together—lucky for us! Get busy with those bamboos, Win. I'm going to have these skins, and the sooner we get the cub meat hung up and curing, the better for us."

"Leopard meat again!" rejoined Winthrope.

"Spring leopard, young and tender! What more could you ask? Get a move on you."

"Can I do anything, Mr. Blake?" asked Miss Leslie.

"Hunt a shady spot."

"But I really mean it."

"Well, if that's straight, you might go on along the gully, and see if there's any place to get to the top. You could pick up sticks on the way back, if any are left. We'll have to fumigate this tree hole before we adopt it for a residence."

"Will it be long before you finish with your—with the bodies?"

"Well, now, look here, Miss Jenny; it's going to be a mess, and I wouldn't mind hauling the carcasses clear down the gully, out of sight, if it was to be the only time. But it's not, and you have got to get used to it, sooner or later. So we'll start now."

"I suppose, if I must, Mr. Blake—Really, I wish to help."

"Good. That's something like! Think you can learn to cook?"

"See what I did this morning."

Blake took the cord of cocoanut fiber which she held out to him, and tested its strength.

"Well, I'll be blessed!" he said. "This is something like. If you don't look out, you'll make quite a camp-mate, Miss Jenny. But now, trot along. This is hardly arctic weather, and our abattoir don't include a cold-storage plant. The sooner these lambs are dressed, the better."

TO BE CONTINUED.

Profits from Cat Breeding.

Taken all round, cat breeding is not a royal road to fortune. It is all a matter of luck, and some people may manage for a few years to make a handsome profit, but it cannot be kept up. I myself made about £60 out of my cats one year, not allowing for rent and labor, but as a rule I was out of pocket.—Ladies' Field.

DESCENT OF THE HOLY SPIRIT

Sunday School Lesson for Jan. 10, 1909

Specially Arranged for This Paper

LESSON TEXT.—Acts 2:1-21. Memory verses, 2-4.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you for ever; even the Spirit of Truth."—John 14:16, 17.

TIME.—May 27 or 28, A. D. 30, on a Saturday or Sunday morning. The day of Pentecost, 50 days after the Passover at which Christ was crucified. The modern Whitsunday.

CONNECTION.—Ten days after the last lesson, the Ascension, were spent in prayer and waiting.

PLACE.—Jerusalem. Perhaps the oft-mentioned upper room; perhaps one of the rooms in the temple courts.

Comment and Suggestive Thought.

Three outward manifestations of the Holy Spirit's presence.—V. 2. "And suddenly." As they were praying. So the lightning breaks forth suddenly from the cloud, but the electricity that prepared for it had been gathering silently for hours. (1.) The "sound from heaven" (its source) "as of a rushing mighty wind." More clearly in the revisions, "as of the rushing of a mighty wind." It does not say that there was any wind, but only a sound as of a wind. No "whirlwind shook the building." "The audible sign filling the room announced the power represented by it as doing the same."—Prof. Hovey. "It (the sound) filled all the house," and was heard beyond its walls by the multitudes (v. 6).

(2.) V. 3. The manifestation to the ear was followed by its manifestation to the eye. "Cloven tongues," not each tongue cleft into two parts, forked, but "the fire was in the form of tongues which distributed themselves over the company, a tongue settling upon the head of each one."—Rackam. "Like as of fire." It was not real fire, as an organ of destruction, but with the appearance and brightness of fire, like that of the burning bush which Moses saw.

(3.) The third manifestation was through the gift of tongues.

The Significance of the Symbols of the Spirit—the Symbol of the Wind.—The Greek word, as the Hebrew word, for "spirit" is the same as that for "wind," which is a natural metaphor to represent the spirit. Jesus himself so uses it in John 3: 8.

1. It is an invisible power of which no one knows "whence it cometh or whither it goeth." But you cannot tell the causes, which are beyond our reach. Even to-day, when we have daily reports from the weather bureau, no one knows where and when a storm will arise. We see the storm and its direction, and can tell with great probability to what place it is going and when it will get there. But for beginning and end we know not whence it cometh nor whither it goeth.

2. But we recognize it by its effects, in sound, in music, in force, in life.

3. It is essential to life.

4. It is all-pervasive.

5. It is very powerful. The air is so powerful that even free dynamite smiting against it on one side crushes the rocks on the other. The other day the air from an explosion of dynamite swept away nearly a whole village.

6. Yet it is very gentle and delicate, breathing around the rose, and gently touching the little child.

The Symbol of the Flame and Light.—1. It is mysterious in nature, ineffably glorious, everywhere present, swift winged, undefiled, and undefilable.

2. It represents the healing power of the Holy Spirit, changing night into day.

3. It expresses this purifying power. It is a disease destroyer, a refiner of gold.

4. It symbolized the comfort, warmth, cheer, fresh life, joy, peace, which the Holy Spirit imparts.

5. Fire is the symbol of intense energy and zeal. The Holy Spirit fills the soul vith glowing enthusiasms and unconquerable energy and zeal.

6. Light convinces the world of dust, of dirt, of a thousand evil things unknown in the darkness. For examples, a ray of light in a dusty room, and Tyndall's ray through the glass tube, showing seed germs that no other process could make known. So the Spirit convinces of sin, of the evils in the heart.

The truth of this lesson applies to boys and girls as well as to adults. It is said of the boy Jesus that "the grace of God" was upon him, while he "waxed strong, advanced in wisdom and stature, and in favor with God and man." John the Baptist also was filled with the Holy Spirit even from his birth.

Children need the Holy Spirit to help them to be good, and enable them to be disciples of Jesus.

The gift of tongues was an indorsement of the command to disciple all nations, an inspiration to obey it, and a pointer to the means. "The human tongue, illuminated and sancitified by fire from the inner sanctuary, was about to be the instrument of the gospel's advancement."

The Transformation of the Apostles.—One effect of this gift of the Holy Spirit upon the apostles was a wonderful change in them. It was almost a transfiguration experience.

This is the power we need for our own growth in grace, and in every good word and work.

The great need of the church is a fuller reception of this power of the Holy Spirit. We are too cold, too afraid of deep feeling, too conventional, not too practical, but too inclined to let our practice of good works be barren of love and devotion.

THE REPUBLICAN
Job Printing Department

WITHIN the past year the increased made upon the Job Printing Department of The Republican necessitated many improvements, and to meet the requirements of our rapidly increasing business an addition of considerable proportions to our present building is in contemplation; new type and improved machinery must be purchased—but in the meantime all orders will be executed in a most satisfactory manner.

The products of our Job Printery are all models in the class—our customers are numerous and well satisfied, and wnen ordering

Statements, Vouchers,
Envelopes, Cards,
Sale Bills, Posters,
Bank Forms, Billheads,
Letterheads, Tags,
Programs, Folders,

and

Letter Press Printing of all Kinds

They are confident that the work will be Satisfactory in every particular---in WORKMANSHIP, PRICE and PAPER.

WE MAKE A SPECIALTY OF PRINTING

Lumber AND Coal Companies' Forms
Bank Stationery, Hotel Prospectus,
Lodge and Society Laws,
Reports, Etc.

It will cost you nothing to submit your Printing to us. Estimates will be cheerfully furnished you free. It must be borne in mind, however, that we do not do "cheap" printing, but we do Good Printing which has a par value of one hundred cents for every dollar invested in the product of THE REPUBLICAN PRINTERY.

THE REPUBLICAN
Job Printing Departm't
OAKI AND, MARYLAND.

ELK HUNT AT TWO OCEAN PASS

BY

THEODORE ROOSEVELT

[Copyright, 1893, by G. P. Putnam's Sons. Published under arrangement with G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York and London.]

WOODY and I started to hunt over the great table-land, and led our stout horses up the mountain-side, by elk-trails so bad that they had to climb like goats. All these elk-trails have one striking peculiarity. They lead through thick timber, but every now and then send off short, well-w[illegible]n branches to some cliff-edge or juttin[illegible]g, commanding a view far and wi[illegible]r the country beneath. Elk love t[illegible]nd on these lookout points, and scan [illegible]e valleys and mountains round about.

Blue grouse rose from beside our path; Clarke's crows flew past us, with a hollow, flapping sound, or lit in the pine-tops, calling and flirting their tails; the gray-clad whisky-jacks, with multitudinous cries, hopped and fluttered near us. Snow-shoe rabbits scuttled away, the big furry feet which give them their name already turning white. At last we came out on the great plateau, seamed with deep, narrow ravines. Reaches of pasture alternated with groves and open forests of varying size. Almost immediately we heard the bugle of a bull elk, and saw a big band of cows and calves on the other side of a valley. There were three bulls with them, one very large, and we tried to creep up on them; but the wind was baffling and spoiled our stalk. So we returned to our horses, mounted them, and rode a mile farther, toward a large open wood on a hill-side. When within two hundred yards we heard directly ahead the bugle of a bull, and pulled up short. In a moment I saw him walking through an open glade; he had not seen us. The slight breeze brought us down his scent. Elk have a strong characteristic smell; it is usually sweet, like that of a herd of Alderney cows; but in old bulls, while rutting, it is rank, pungent, and lasting. We stood motionless till the bull was out of sight, then stole to the wood, tied our horses, and trotted after him. He was traveling fast, occasionally calling; whereupon others in the neighborhood would answer. Evidently he had been driven out of some herd by the master bull.

He went faster than we did, and while we were vainly trying to overtake him we heard another very loud and sonorous challenge to our left. It came from a ridge-crest at the edge of the woods, among some scattered clumps of the northern nut-pine or pinyon—a queer conifer, growing very high on the mountains, its multiforked trunk and wide-spreading branches giving it the rounded top, and, at a distance, the general look of an oak rather than a pine. We at once walked toward the ridge, up-wind. In a minute or two, to our chagrin, we stumbled on an outlying spike bull, evidently kept on the outskirts of the herd by the master bull. I thought he would alarm all the rest; but, as we stood motionless, he could not see clearly what we were. He stood, ran, stood again, gazed at us, and trotted slowly off.

I peered over the crest.

We hurried forward as fast as we dared, and with too little care; for we suddenly came in view of two cows. As they raised their heads to look, Woody squatted down where he was, to keep their attention fixed, while I cautiously tried to slip off to one side unobserved. Favored by the neutral tint of my buckskin hunting-shirt, with which my shoes, leggins, and soft hat matched, I succeeded. As soon as I was out of sight I ran hard and came up to a hillock crested with pinyons, behind which I judged I should find the herd. As I approached the crest, their strong, sweet smell smote my nostrils. In another moment I saw the tips of a pair of mighty antlers, and I peered over the crest with my rifle at the ready. Thirty yards off, behind a clump of pinyons, stood a huge bull, his head thrown back as he rubbed his shoulders with his horns. There were several cows around him, and one saw me immediately, and took alarm. I fired into the bull's shoulder, inflicting a mortal wound; but he went off, and I raced after him at top speed, firing twice into his flank; then he stopped, very sick, and I broke his neck with a fourth bullet. An elk often hesitates in the first moments of surprise and fright, and does not get really under way for two or three hundred yards; but, when once fairly started, he may go several miles, even though mortally wounded; therefore, the hunter, after his first shot, should run forward as fast as he can, and shoot again and again until the quarry drops. In this way many animals that would otherwise be lost are obtained, especially by the man who has a repeating-rifle.

The elk I thus slew was a giant. His body was the size of a steer's, and his antlers, though not unusually long, were very massive and heavy. He lay in a glade, on the edge of a great cliff. Standing on its brink we overlooked a most beautiful country, the home of all homes for the elk: a wilderness of mountains, the immense evergreen forest broken by park and glade, by meadow and pasture, by bare hill-side and barren table-land. Some five miles off lay the sheet of water known to the old hunters as Spotted Lake; two or three shallow, sedgy places, and spots of geyser formation, made pale green blotches on its wind-rippled surface. Far to the southwest, in daring beauty and majesty, the grand domes and lofty spires of the Tetons shot into the blue sky.

That night, as on more than one night afterward, a bull elk came down whistling to within two or three hundred yards of the tents, and tried to join the horse herd. The moon had set, so I could not go after it. Elk are very restless and active throughout the night in the rutting season; but where undisturbed they feed freely in the daytime, resting for two or three hours about noon.

Next day, which was rainy, we spent in getting in the antlers and meat of the two dead elk; and I shot off the heads of two or three blue grouse on the way home. The following day I killed another bull elk, following him by the strong, not unpleasing, smell, and hitting him twice as he ran, at about eighty yards. So far I had had good luck, killing everything I had shot at; but now the luck changed, through no fault of mine, as far as I could see, and Ferguson had his innings. The day after I killed this bull he shot two fine mountain rams; and during the remainder of our hunt he killed five elk—one cow, for meat, and four good bulls. The two rams were with three others, all old and with fine horns; Ferguson peeped over a lofty precipice and saw them coming up it only fifty yards below him. His two first and finest bulls were obtained by hard running and good shooting; the herds were on the move at the time, and only his speed of foot and soundness of wind enabled him to get near enough for a shot. One herd started before he got close, and he killed the master bull by a shot right through the heart, as it trotted past, a hundred and fifty yards distant.

As for me, during the next ten days I killed nothing save one cow for meat; and this though I hunted hard every day from morning till night, no matter what the weather. Our ill success was in part due to sheer bad luck; but the chief element therein was the presence of a great hunting-party of Shoshone Indians. Split into bands of eight to ten each, they scoured the whole country on their tough, sure-footed ponies. As they slew whatever they could, but by preference cows and calves, and as they were very persevering, but also very excitable and generally poor shots, so that they wasted much powder, they not only wrought havoc among the elk, but also scared the survivors out of all the country over which they hunted.

Day in and day out we plodded on. In a hunting trip the days of long monotony in getting to the ground, and the days of unrequited toil after it has been reached, always far outnumber the red-letter days of success. But it is just these times of failure that really test the hunter. In the long run, common-sense and dogged perseverance avail him more than any other qualities. The man who does not give up, but hunts steadily and resolutely through the spells of bad luck until the luck turns, is the man who wins success in the end.

After a week at Two-Ocean Pass, we gathered our pack-animals one frosty morning, and again set off across the mountains. A two-days' jaunt took us to the summit of Wolverine Pass, near Pinyon Peak, beside a little mountain tarn; each morning we found its surface skimmed with black ice, for the nights were cold. After three or four days, we shifted camp to the mouth of Wolverine Creek, to get off the hunting grounds of the Indians. We had used up our last elk-meat that morning, and when we were within a couple of hours' journey of our intended halting-place, Woody and I struck off on foot for a hunt. Just before sunset we came on three or four elk; a spike bull stood for a moment behind some thick evergreens a hundred yards off. Guessing at his shoulder, I fired, and he fell dead after running a few rods. I had broken the luck, after ten days of ill success.

Next morning Woody and I, with the packer, rode to where this elk lay. We loaded the meat on a pack-horse, and let the packer take both the loaded animal and our saddle-horses back to camp, while we made a hunt on foot. We went up the steep, forest-clad mountain-side, and before we had walked an hour heard two elk whistling ahead of us. The woods were open, and quite free from undergrowth, and we were able to advance noiselessly; there was no wind, for the weather was still, clear, and cold. Both of the elk were evidently very much excited, answering each other continually; they had probably been master bulls, but had become so exhausted that their rivals had driven them from the herds, forcing them to remain in seclusion until they regained their lost strength. As we crept stealthily forward, the calling grew louder and louder, until we could hear the grunting sounds with which the challenge of the nearest ended. He was in a large wallow, which was also a lick. When we were still sixty yards off, he heard us, and rushed out, but wheeled and stood a moment to gaze, puzzled by my buckskin suit. I fired into his throat, breaking his neck, and down he went in a heap. Rushing in and turning, I called to Woody, "He's a twelve-pointer, but the horns are small!" As I spoke I heard the roar of the challenger of the other bull not two hundred yards ahead, as if in defiant answer to my shot.

Running quietly forward, I speedily caught a glimpse of his body. He was behind some fir-trees about seventy yards off, and I could not see which way he was standing, and so fired into the patch of flank which was visible, aiming high, to break the back. My aim was true, and the huge beast crashed down-hill through the evergreens, pulling himself on his fore legs for fifteen or twenty rods, his hind quarters trailing. Racing forward, I broke his neck. His antlers were the finest I ever got. A couple of whisky-jacks appeared at the first crack of the rifle with their customary astonishing familiarity and heedlessness of the hunter; they followed the wounded bull as he dragged his great carcass down the hill, and pounced with ghoulish bloodthirstiness on the gouts of blood that were sprinkled over the green herbage.

I raced after him.

These two bulls lay only a couple of hundred yards apart, on a broad game-trail, which was as well beaten as a good bridle-path. We began to skin out the heads; and as we were finishing we heard another bull challenging far up the mountain. He came nearer and nearer, and as soon as we had ended our work we grasped our rifles and trotted toward him along the game-trail. He was very noisy, uttering his loud, singing challenge every minute or two. The trail was so broad and firm that we walked in perfect silence. After going only five or six hundred yards, we got very close indeed, and stole forward on tip-toe, listening to the roaring music. The sound came from a steep, narrow ravine, to one side of the trail, and I walked toward it with my rifle at the ready. A slight puff gave the elk my wind, and he dashed out of the ravine like a deer; but he was only thirty yards off, and my bullet went into his shoulder as he passed behind a clump of young spruce. I plunged into the ravine, scrambled out of it, and raced after him. In a minute I saw him standing with drooping head, and two more shots finished him. He also bore fine antlers. It was a great piece of luck to get three such fine bulls at the cost of half a day's light work; but we had fairly earned them, having worked hard for ten days, through rain, cold, hunger, and fatigue, to no purpose. That evening my home-coming to camp, with three elk-tongues and a brace of ruffed grouse hung at my belt, was most happy.

THE REPUBLICAN

BENJ. H. SINCELL, EDITOR.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 7, 1909.

THE WHIPPING POST FOR WIFE-BEATERS.

The whipping post is far from edifying. It is very brutal, but not near so brutal as wifebeating. Twice within the last few months has Squire J. Francis Smith, of Frederick, sentenced wife-beaters to receive from the Sheriff lashes on the bare back. Not long ago the same measure of justice was meted out to a wifebeater in Washington connty. The Sheriff of Frederick county, before laying the lash on the back of John Englebright, delivered a short sermon to the culprit and hoped that the correction would be a warning to him. The whipping post is a most appropriate remedy and preventative for wifebeating. To send these scoundrels to jail or to the House of Correction is but a slight punishment. They cannot be hurt in their pride or self-respect, for they have none. They are brutes in this regard. Indeed, it is almost a libel upon brutes to call the wifebeater a brute, for we believe the wifebeater is the only animal which will attack the female of his own species. The only way to reach the sensibilities of the wifebeater is with the lash on his bare back, well laid on. A brutal, husky man, drunk or in a bad temper, comes home and diverts himself by kicking or mauling t e helpless woman whose protection is almost his highest duty. Such a creature cannot be reached by reason nor by any punishment except the lash and it should not be spared. Ten applications were altogether too few. If each one of these brutes could know for a certainty that whenever he beats his wife he will have to feel the Sheriff's lash, women would be safer. Let the good work go on until wife-beating becomes an unpopular diversion.

FRENCH VS. AMERICAN ROADS.

A recent official report from Consul-General R. P. Skinner, of Marseilles, France, gives some highly important information regarding the public roads of that country. As is generally known, France has the best and most complete road system in the world, and its splendid public highways fill with envy and admiration all foreigners, particularly those from the United States, where the roads in general are about the worst in any country professing to be civilized.

The superiority of the French road system is stated by Consul-General Skinner to be due to the fact that the construction and maintenance of the principal roads is carried on under the supervision of a corps of experts in road-construction, who find in their profession opportunities for advancement and distinction such as could not and does not exist under a local road administration. French roads are good not because of superiority of road making material, nor because the French people possess any special talent for road building, but because the initiative in matters pertaining to the public highways is taken by the highly trained engineers and administrators under the direction of the National Government.

All the principal French highways, or "national routes," of which there are 23,656 miles, are constructed and maintained by the National Government, which has expended on them over $300,000,000. The superiority of these roads over those constructed or maintained by the local authorities is very marked, but even the local roads are kept in good condition, so that the standard French road is one upon which in a rolling country a draft horse hauling 3,300 pounds is expected to travel about 20 miles per day. This fact alone will serve to indicate the difference between the roads in France and those in the United States, where the load hauled by one horse over the average level country road is only 1,400 pounds, and on roads with 5 per cent. grades only 1,000 pounds.

The basis of the French highway system is the School of Bridges and Roads, one of the finest technical colleges in the world, where engineers are trained for positions in the public road administrative system. These engineers co-operate with the local authorities, and the result is that there is available for the work of road construction an effective body of competent administrators whose influence extend throughout the whole country.

A beginning has been made in a small way in this country by the Bureau of Public Roads of the United States Department of Agriculture, to introduce the methods by which the French road system has been so satisfactorily developed. The organization of this Bureau and the funds at its disposal are wholly inadequate. What is needed is a National Highways Commission which shall have general power to promote the construction and improvement of the public roads, and for which liberal appropriations should be made by Congress. The National Government's co-operation in this matter will greatly stimulate action by the various State, county and township authorities and will result in the establishment of a complete system of properly constructed roads, rivaling those of France, in all sections of the country.—Report of the National Grange, Patrons of Husbandry.

THE AMENDMENT MAY BE THE LAST STRAW.

The News prints elsewhere an article by Alfred Henry Lewis on the proposed suffrage amendment in this State. Mr. Lewis is one of the best known of the Washington newspaper and magazine writers and fairly expresses, no doubt, the view many of them will take of the effort to disfranchise the negro in Maryland and how they will picture it to the people of the country.

There are two reasons why The News has argued that Maryland ought not to pass this amendment. One of them is that the elimination of the negro vote will make this a one-party State; that there will not be enough independent voters to hold the scales even. It is all right to talk about parties splitting up as soon as the negro is disposed of; but we have not a particle of faith in the prediction. Party loyalty grips many persons as strongly as does religion, and they would as soon think of changing one as the other. We do not think many persons stay out of the Republican party of Maryland because it is the "negro party." In any event the negro is what holds them to the Democratic party, the suffrage amendment will not change their attitude, since we do not understand anyone to contend that all the negroes will be disfranchised. There will still be enough of them in politics to serve as the "negro bugaboo." The idea that the amendment will get rid of the negro issue is an iridescent dream.

Another reason why we object to the amendment is that Northern States have been chafing under conditions that give the South disproportionate representation in Congress and in the national conventions, and that this may be a last straw. This feeling may not be entirely logical, but it is intensely human. There have been mutterings of discontent as the disfranchisement of the negro farther South has proceeded, but there has been a disposition, on the whole, not to look too closely at what was done or how it was done. But it would be a great mistake to assume, because there has not been more resentment displayed at the disregard of the Fifteenth Amendment, that many fair-minded men are not restive under it. Unless we are much mistaken, there will be constant protest that the Maryland amendment is a thing meant not for the good of the negro and not for the good of the white man, but that it is a political trick designed to give a coterie of politicians control of the State.

What shall be said in reply to the statement that, but for the Republican party and its negro vote, the independent vote would not have been able to rescue this city or the State from the old ring that frightfully misgoverned it? Or what shall be said in reply to the statement that each time the State has been saved from following Mr. Bryan—that in order to save it even in 1896, when the credit of the nation was believed to be at stake—the independent vote was again effective by reason of the fact that it combines with the Republicans and their negro allies? What is to be said when, in view of political history in this State and city, the question is asked, "Why is Maryland disfranchising the negro?"

And if the efforts succeed and the case is taken to the Supreme Court of the United States, where the best authorities believe it will be pronounced unconstitutional, what will happen to the States south of us which have been compelled by entirely different circumstances to seek to get rid of the negro as a political issue? There will be many more warnings like that conveyed in the article we reprint, and it is tempting fate—not only so much our own, but that of the whole South—to ignore them.—Baltimore News.

GORTNER.

Mr. and Mrs. M. Schrock, of Bittinger, who were visiting relatives here last week returned home Sunday.

L. H. Killius and William Sander left for Clarksburg, W. Va., last Sunday where they have secured employment for the winter months.

D. W. Dodge was calling on relatives at Terra Alta Monday.

Fred Gortner, who sold his large farm at this place, has purchased the Joe Meese property near Loch Lynn.

Mr. and Mrs. Hervey Bittner, of Breedlove, W. Va., who were visiting their many friends here last week, left Monday for Pennsylvania.

Mrs. Lydia Miller and Miss Kate Hershberger, of Springs, Pa., spent the past week with their sister, Mrs. S. J. Lichty.

The Gortner Sabbath School has been discontinued till Sunday, April 4th.

Services next Sunday at 10:30 a. m. and 7:30 p. m. by the Mennonites.

Lot For Sale.

The best building lot in Oakland; opposite new courthouse, at reasonable price. Apply to owner.

HENRY LAUER,
Oakland, Md.

Tells of John Brown's Raid

Last Tuesday marked the anniversary of the execution of John Brown and his band of raiders at Charles Town, W. Va., December 29, 1859, following their attack upon the United States arsenal at Harpers Ferry, and probably the most interesting survivor of those ante-bellum days is Patrick Higgins, who for more than forty years watched the Baltimore & Ohio railroad bridge at the Ferry, was on duty at time of the attack, and, so far as can be learned, is the only living acquaintance of Brown's. Mr. Higgins' record as a railroad man antedates the civil war and was begun on the Baltimore & Ohio way back in 1853, just five months after the railroad had opened the first trunk line in the country from Baltimore to Wheeling, on the Ohio river, and when, as he expressed it, "the father of American development, the railroad, was an infant." Well may he be termed a railroad man of the old school, for since starting in his life's work more than fifty years ago, he has seen many conditions of railroading and improved methods of operation. His first employment with the B. & O. was as a trackman on the first division, between Baltimore and Martinsburg, W. Va., and he was later made a watchman on the Harpers Ferry bridge, where he remained throughout the war.

Mr. Higgins considers that no one agency so served to improve railroad conditions of the early days as the telegraph. It is rather amusing to listen to him tell of the construction of the line through Harper's Ferry. "It was in 1854 that the wires were strung through here," said he, "and when I asked the linemen the use to be made of the poles they were planting, and they told me that it was a telegraph, which would enable officials in their offices at Baltimore to keep in touch with train movements out on the road, I really thought the man was crazy. You see, before that time train schedules called for certain meeting places along the line, and if upon the arrival of the train the one going in the opposite direction had not made its appearance the rules required the first train to wait an hour and allow five minutes for a possible variation of watches before proceeding.

"And in those days," continued Mr. Higgins, "for a man to be a railroad man meant that he could endure countless hardships. There were no cabooses and other present day accommodations for crews, our pay was much less and there was no overtime then such as is allowed the trainmen of today. Why, I remember well making a trip from Martinsburg to Baltimore, when I was out on the road twenty-two and three-quarter hours, and received for my day's work $1.75. The cars in those days were of smaller capacity than our present ones, and on each train was carried a house-car, in which were the extra lamps. You see the roadbed was not as smooth as our 'wentieth century seventy-mile-an-hour right-of-way, and the jolting of the train would extinguish the lights and markers."

Owing to his varied railroad duties Mr. Higgins was closely identified with the thrilling events of the wartime history of this quaint little mountain town, and though at present retired from active duty, he is as hale and hearty as a young man of one-third his years, his memory is as retentive as a schoolboy's and he delights in reminiscing of bygone days, when John Brown and his abolitionist followers were inciting outbreaks of violence among the negroes of the vicinity.

"Yes, I knew John Brown very well" said Mr. Higgins when recently referring to the event that will forever brand Harper's Ferry as the spark that enkindled the greatest conflagration of modern times, "but it will be getting considerably ahead of my story to refer to him as 'John Brown.' About the middle of March, 1858, a man giving his name as John Smith—Captain John Smith—came to Harper's Ferry and procured boarding accommodations over at Sandy Hook. I was at the time employed as a watchman on the old wooden bridge at the Ferry, and boarded also in Sandy Hook, a few doors from 'Captain Smith.' Naturally I got to see a good bit of the Captain and he told me he was a prospector who had come to Harper's Ferry in hope of discovering some valuable minerals in the surrounding mountains. He used to carry a pick with him and would frequently take long strolls, and I remember on two occasions that he showed me manganese that he claimed to have obtained here and also some silver, which he likewise said he found in the vicinity.

"Of course, we people of the locality were very much interested in 'Captain Smith's' pretended discovery, and he said he intended opening some mines. Later he rented the Kennedy farm, over on the Antietam road, about six miles from Harper's Ferry, and said it was his aim to start at once on his mining venture. Shortly after moving into the Kennedy property he bought a horse and small wagon and pretty soon 'Captain Smith' began receiving—almost daily—boxes from the depot, explaining that it was mining machinery. But by the length of those mysterious boxes I have since come to believe that they containedthe rifles, revolvers, etc., which he afterwards used in his attack on the arsenal.

"But as I have said, I was employed watching the bridge and before a great while, and during the summer, a number of strangers came over the bridge and inquired from me whether I knew where a 'John Smith' lived in the neighborhood and to direct them there. These men usually came at intervals of about a week, always alone, and, as I later learned, were the men who comprised 'Captain Smith's' following in his attack on the arsenal. Historians have repeatedly written that the insurrection was created by negroes, but this is entirely incorrect and there were not more than three negroes in the party. I personally saw the men who made the attack, and with one or two exceptions, recognized every man.

"Employed with me in watching the old railraod bridge here at the Ferry, was a man named William Williams, and we relieved each other at six hour intervals. The railroad then had a time clock on the bridge, such as in use in the large offices today, and we were required to register every thirty minutes. On Sunday night, October 16, 1859, I remember it well I was due to report at midnight, but Williams and myself never quarreled with each other if one happened to be a few minutes later. On this night I arrived at the bridge at exactly 12:20 and was surprised to find that Williams wasn't there and had not registered on the clock since 10:30. I immediately started back across the bridge in search of him and was accosted on my way by two armed strangers, this being the first intimation I had of the siege. I was commanded by the men to 'halt' but not being familiar with military life, didn't obey. After my failure to stop upon the second command I was struck in the side by a bayonet and rendered almost unconscious by the blow. Regaining my feet, I asked the reason for their molestation and told them I was the watchman on the bridge. 'Well,' answered the man that I afterwards learned was John Brown's son, Oilver, 'we will watch the bridge tonight—you come with us.' As we started back across the bridge I saw several long spears and was almost frantic from fear. I struck young Brown a powerful blow with my fist, knocked him down and made my escape. In those days I was a swift runner and, scared as I was, I lost no time in getting back into the town.

"The railroad company's agent at Harper's Ferry at that time was Fountain Beckman, who was also the mayor of the town. He had a negro by the name of Hayward Sheppard, whom he had freed some time before and employed around the station, and Sheppard slept in the building. After making my escape from the bridge I awoke Sheppard and told him what had taken place. I discovered that a bullet had slightly grazed my head, but proceeded to Williams house to see if he had returned home. Mrs. Williams told me he had not, so not wanting to frighten her I said I had just come over to see him about my lantern.

"About this time the western express was due from Cincinnati so I returned to the station. She was on time that night, I remember well, and reached the Ferry at 1.28. The conductor in charge of her was 'Jake' Phillips and I cautioned him not to cross the bridge with his train as it had been beseiged and such action would be dangerous. 'Jake' was a large and powerful man—a typical railroader of the time—who didn't know the meaning of the word fear. He took his lantern and started over towards the bridge, asking me to join him. While I was terribly scared I didn't want to be a coward so went with him. We were fired at by the abolitionists, though I am convinced they merely wanted to scare us. A man carrying a lantern makes an excellent target for those skilled in the use of firearms, but the raiders commanded us to advance no further, saying they wanted liberty and that it was only some negroes fighting for freedom.

"Together Conductor Phillips and myself returned to the station and shortly afterward Hayward Sheppard, the negro, ventured out and was mortally wounded. In the meantime a farmer by the name of Gist and his sons, who had been attending a religious meeting and were returning home by way of the bridge, were taken prisoners, the sons held and the father dispatched by 'Captain Smith' to tell Phillips to proceed with the train. The message was to the effect that the idea was not to molest the railroad or delay the United States mail. Still Phillips refused to move his train during the night and it was not until after 7 o'clock Monday morning, when Captain Smith himself had come and assured Phillips that no harm would befall the train that it resumed its journey east.

"The abolitionists held the arsenal all day Monday, the 17th of October," continued Mr. Higgins, "and kept the village in a state of terror. On Monday afternoon the negro Sheppard, who had been wounded the previous night, appeared so be dying and pleaded with me to give him a drink of water The poor fellow's sufferings were so agonizing that I determined to risk going for the water, starting for the Shenandoah river with a pitcher. I was halted, as expected, by a son-in-law of Smith's named Thompson, who on learning my mission made me get the negro the water. He made a remark, however, that has caused me to ponder many, many times during these years since. As I returned from the river with the water he said: 'It serves the nigger right and if he had listened and taken our advice he would not have been shot.' From this I am certain Hayward Sheppard was approached and asked to join in the uprising, which he likely declined in the event he told.

On Tuesday, October 18, a company of United States Marines from Washington under the command of Col. Rob't E. Lee, afterwards the great Confederate leader, and Major Greer, arrived at Sandy Hook by freight train over the Baltimore & Ohio and marched to the Ferry prepared to take possession of the government arsenal. Major Green advanced toward the fort waiving a white handkerchief, went the raider. Returning from the fort he came over to where I was standing alongside of Colonel Lee, and said: 'Colonel, those raiders in there are commanded by old Ossawatomie Brown, of Kansas, and he refuses to surrender.' Then it was that the real identity of 'Captain Smith' was learned, the order was given to charge on the fort and after the third attack Brown and his men were captured. Eleven of these were killed in the encounter and were buried—including Brown's oldest son, Oliver—along the Shenandoah River. Brown and the remainder of his men were taken on the first train to Charles Town, the county seat, were tried and executed without delay.

"I shall never forget that eventful 29th of December, 1859, when John Brown was hanged up at Charles Town," said Mr. Higgins. "His remains were brought here and met by his widow and a man by the name of Tindale, from Philadelphia, who afterwards came to the Ferry as a Major in the 28th Pennsylvania Infantry. Brown's remains were taken back to his old home in New England to their last resting place many miles from the banks of the peaceful Shenandoah and the dreamy little town he immortalized by the fanaticism in the cause of abolition."

By reason of the geographical situation and proximity of both the Federal Capitol at Washington and that of the Confederacy at Richmond, Harper's Ferry and the adjacent country figured prominently in the maneuvers of both armies. Union troops first entered the village on July 4, 1861, and both armies were constantly picketing their forces on the heights surrounding the town and pouring volley after volley across the valley below. On September 15, 1862, Generals "Stonewall" Jackson and A. P. Hill captured 13,000 Union soldiers under General Miles. General Jackson then left and crossed into Maryland, where he reinforced General Lee for the battle of Antietam, which was fought on the 17th of the same month. The Baltimore & Ohio Railroad suffered great damage at the hands of both armies through the war, and in numerous places the road was entirely destroyed for miles "You see," said Mr. Higgins, referring to this, "the B. &. O. was the most direct line to Washington and through its western connections the majority of the Union forces from Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin, etc., were transported to Washington. This the Confederat tried to prevent by destroying the roa and I saw them at different times heating the rails over fires made of ties and twisting them around telegraph poles."

Pat Higgins remained in the employ of the Baltimore & Ohio constantly from 1852 until his retirement April 1, 1897. He is now enjoying the comforts of a cozy home at Sandy Hook, but can be seen almost daily at Harper's Ferry walking the platform of the unpretentious little station, whistling a tune of ante-bellum days, shaking hands with passengers on the rear of an express train and reminiscing of the days when "all wasn't quiet along the Potomac," and John Brown, prospector, farmer and abolitionist was inciting the ignorant negroes of the vicinity into a demonstration which may be said to practically mark the opening of the Civil War.

The Lonaconing Savings Bank

Of Allegany Couuty.

Capital Stock . $20,000
Surplus and Undivided Profits . $60,000
Deposits . . $625,000

3 PER CENT. Interest Paid Upon all Savings Accounts.

GIVE THEM A START

The New Year is rapidly approaching. This would be a good time for you to start your young folks on the road to Success.

Early training in the practice of self-denial; instruction as to the use and value of money; opportunities for earning and saving money; all these tend to fix and fasten the children in the ways of thrift and prosperity.

We most gladly assist the young people in getting started.

One Dollar opens an account and entitles the depositor to one of our Savings Banks.

We shall be pleased to have our Garrett County friends call and receive a 1908 Calendar.

DAVID SLOAN, President. R. R. SLOAN, Treasurer.

The First National Bank

FRIENDSVILLE, MD.

Capital, $25,000. Surplus and Undivided Profits, $24,000.

OFFICERS:

L. E. Friend, President. J. W. McCullough, V. P.
R. C. McCandlish, Cashier.

DIRECTORS:

L. E. Friend, Merchant,
J. W. McCullough, Lumber and Coal.
W. W. Savage, Merchant.
D. S. Custer, Merchant.
H. M. Rumbaugh, Farmer.
W. H. H. Friend, Pension Agent and Surveyor.
Horace R. DeWitt, Treasurer of Garrett County, Md.
R. C. McCandlish.

We will issue time or demand certificates of deposit and pay you 4 per cent. interest if your money is left with us.

In all its dealings this Bank combines absolute safety with satisfactory service and never loses sight of either.

SAFETY DEPOSIT BOXES FOR RENT.

Notice to Creditors.

This is to give notice, That the subscriber of Garrett county hath obtained from the Orphans' Court of Garrett county, in Maryland, letters of Administration on the personal estate of

A. F. GEORGE,

late of Garrett county, deceased. All persons having claims against the deceased are hereby warned to exhibit the same, with the vouchers thereof legally authenticated to the subscriber, on or before the 26th day of May next; they may otherwise by law be excluded from all benefit of said estate. All persons knowing themselves indebted to said estate are requested to make immediate payment.

Given under my hand this 24th day of November, 1908.

MARY E. GEORGE,
Administratrix,
Swanton, Md.

Notice to Creditors.

This is to give notice, That the subscriber, of Garrett county hath obtained from the Orphan's Court of Garrett county, in Maryland, letters of Administration on the personal estate of

WILLIAM FRUSH,

late of Garrett county, deceased. All persons having claims against the deceased are hereby warned to exhibit the same, with the vouchers thereof legally authenticated to the subscriber, on or before the 14th day of April, next; they may otherwise by law be excluded from all benefit of said estate. All persons knowing themselves indebted to said estate are requested to make immediate payment.

Given under my hand this 14th day of October, 1908.

JOHN W. FRUSH,
Administrator,
R. F. D., Oakland, Md.

Notice to Creditors.

This is to give notice, That the subscriber of Garrett County, in Maryland, hath obtained from the Orphans' Court of Garrett county, in Maryland, letters Aministration on the personal estate of

J. RUSSELL BROWNING,

late of Garrett County, deceased. All persons having claims against the deceased are hereby warned to exhibit the same with the vouchers thereof legally authenticated to the subscriber, on or before the 29th day of April, next; they may otherwise by law be excluded from all benefit of said estate. All persons knowing themselves indebted to said estate are requested to make immediate payment.

Given under my hand this 29th day of October, 1908.

M. A. BROWNING,
Administrator,
Kitzmiller, Md.

A Meritorious Institution

Established as a State Bank in 1888 with a capital of $25,000.00; changed to a National Bank in 1903 and capital increased to $50,000.00; TODAY with a capital and surplus of $85,000.00 and total resources of over $500,000.00 we are

BETTER,

BIGGER

AND

STRONGER

than ever. During the 20 years of our existence, our aim has been to extend to our patrons the best possible service. Our steady growth is evidence that the banking institution, which throws the greatest safeguards around its business in order to protect its depositors merits the confidence of the public. If you are not a customer of this Bank let this be your invitation to become one; our relations will be mutually profitable.

Garrett National Bank

Of Oakland, Maryland.

State Senator W. McCulloh Brown, of Bayard, W. Va., was in the city Tuesday morning.

Mr. W. O. Davis, of the B. & O. clerical force, spent Sunday with his parents at Frostburg.

Ex-Assemblymen W. H. Jacobs and George L. Michaels were in the city a day or two this week on business.

Miss Gertrude Shirer, who visited relatives in Grafton last week, returned to her home in Oakland Sunday afternoon.

Mr. Lawson Loar and son, Leslie, of Grafton, spent a day or two in Oakland this week, leaving Tuesday for New York City.

Mr. William Smith, of Hoyes, was in the city last Friday when he attended a meeting of the directors of the First National Bank.

Mr. Benj. Moon, of Oakdale, Neb., a native Garrett countian who went west a number of years ago, is at present on a visit to relatives near Deer Park.

Mr. and Mrs. Julius Scherr, of Charleston, W. Va., who were the guests of relatives in Oakland and Eglon for a week or two, returned to their home in Charleston last Saturday.

Miss Mayme Miller spent several days last week in Frostburg with relatives, returning to her home Sunday afternoon accompanied by her niece, Miss Marguerite Davis.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles E. Hilleary and daughter and their guests, Mr. Arthur Whip Berly and Miss Elsie Jenks, of Delaware, Ohio, were registered at the Frantz Hotel in Oakland last Saturday.

Mr. Charles F. White, of Hutton, who was painfully injured last Thursday morning while riding on top of a freight car, an account of the accident appearing in these columns that morning, is well on the road toward recovery.

Miss Lynn Waddell, of Bruceton, W. Va., was the guest on Sunday and Monday of Dr. and Mrs. W. Ravenscroft at their home near Oakland, leaving here Monday afternoon for Shepherdstown, W. Va., where she is vice principal of the high school.

Mr. and Mrs. A. D. Naylor and children spent a portion of the holiday season with the former's parents at Hedgesville, W. Va., Mr. Naylor returning home Friday, and Mrs. Naylor and children extending their visit to Mr. and Mrs. Charles D. Smith at Parsons, W. Va.

Mr. George W. Loar, of Grafton, is at the home of his mother here suffering with an infection of his hand which had its origin in a slight abrasion of the skin. Mr. Loar was quite ill for a number of days.

On Monday the benches, railings, etc., ordered two months or more ago by the Court House Commission for the Court chamber, Commissioners' office and the Orphans' Court, arrived and will be placed in position as soon as the contractors send their men to do the work.

Mr. and Mrs. Samuel R. Savage, of Sang Run, were visitors to Oakland Tuesday when they called at this office. Both were greatly interested in the modus operandii of producing printed matter and in the machinery used for that purpose which they inspected.

Mrs. Fred. C. Schroeder was called to Lonaconing Tuesday morning by a message conveying the news of the death of her cousin, Andrew Schuyler, of Lonaconing, who was killed in one of the mines at that place by the fall of roof coal the day preceding her departure.

A newspaper has two things to sell—space for advertisers and subscriptions to the publication. These are two of the sources of revenue from which the editor derives a living. To ask him to give a dozen lines of space to boost a business firm "just to fill up," as a person was heard to remark the other day, is drawing the line rather fine. No other business gives as much for nothing as the newspapers. Suppose you go into a merchant's store and ask him to give you a dozen bananas "just to fill up with," and see how quickly you get "fired."

Card of Thanks.

Appreciating the services of all those who so kindly volunteered their aid and encouragement, by this means it is desired to convey the sincere thanks of the Garrett Lodge, K. of P., of Oakland, to the ladies and all who so ably assisted and to the Mountain City Band for their excellent music rendered each evening during the recent fair.

G. SEMMES HAMILL, JR., C. C.

CAPITAL 50,0 0,00

THE First National Bank

SURPLUS AND PROFITS $20,000.00

OAKLAND, MD.

GOVERNMENT DEPOSITORY.

One of the Largest and Best Equipped Banking Houses in Maryland.

Vaults absolutely Fire and Burglar proof.

Safety Deposit Boxes for Rent

Pays 3 Per Cent. on Time Deposits—Compounded Semi-Annually

Every courtesy extended consistent with sound banking.

Home Savings Banks Free. $1.00 will start an account.

The Depositor with a Dollar account receives the same consideration as the largest depositor.

COME IN AND GET ACQUAINTED

JANUARY MEETING OF COUNTY COMMISSIONERS

Routine Business Being Transacted—Appointments to Be Announced.

The regular January meeting of the Board of County Commissioners when general routine business is trantacted and the appointment of constables and road supervisors for the year are made, is now in session with the full membership of the Board present. Commissioner Friend, whose illness for a number of weeks was of grave concern having recovered sufficiently to be able to meet with his associates.

Up to this morning routine business has claimed the attention of the Board. The selection of constables and road supervisors have not yet been announced but will probably be this afternoon or tomorrow morning.

According to a preliminary estimate of the Director of the Mint the world's output of gold for 1908 was $427,000,000, against $410,000,000 in 1907. The gold produced in the United States was $96,313,256—a gain of nearly $6,000,000 over the production for 1907. The whole production of gold in the world was less by $150,000,000 than the value of coal produced in the United States and $100,000,000 less than the value of our iron production. Coal, iron, copper and petroleum each exceed in value the gold output in the United States. Africa at present carries off the palm for gold production, the aggregate for 1908 being estimated at $165,000,000.

Attendance Roll.

The following pupils of the Oakland Public schools were neither late nor absent during the month of December.

U. G. PALMER, Principal.

FIRST GRADE.

Leon Helbig, James Carney, Harry Glotfelty, Roy Dixon, James Hart, Robert Weimer, Reginald Weber, Carlton Hinebaugh, David Slabach, Edward Pollock, Dailey Feather, Robert Smouse, Margaret Sincell, Elizabeth Mitchell, Lucy Trickett, Dorothy Pritchard, Cora McRobie.

OLIVE DEWITT, Teacher.

SECOND GRADE.

Edwin Palmer, Willie Giessman, Alva Gortner, Perrin Davis, Robert Porter, Alva Johnson, Paul Ashby, Wyant McCrobie, Inez Workman, Rebecca Workman, Ethel Naylor, Ruth Robinson, Sara Maroney.

JENNIE L. MILLER, Teacher.

THIRD GRADE.

Helen Hart, Cecelia Hart, Katherine Porter, Iona Johnson, Louise Harned, Florence Carney, Lillian Helbig, Mary West, Elizabeth Townshend, Irene Shartzer, Winifred Weimer, Clarence Dixon, Fred Trickett, Wilmer Alger, Julius Littman.

ZADEE BROWNING, Teacher.

FOURTH GRADE.

Margaret Slabach, Kathleen Helbig, Gorden McRobie, Hopwood Kildow, Lester Giessman, Ada Murphy, Mabel White, Fred Cogley, Gilbert Drummond, Felix Robinson.

BEULAH LOUGHRIDGE, Teacher.

FIFTH GRADE.

Norine Taggart, James Taggart, Carroll Kelly, Della Arnold, Bessie Hendrickson, Rachel Johnson, Lena Ravenscroft. ORLEY V. DUNHAM, Teacher.

SIXTH GRADE.

Bernadette Hart, Morris Sincell, Joseph Tricket.

SEVENTH GRADE.

Pearl Shartzer, Evelyn Helbig, Josephine Shaffer, Madge Workman, Mary Stemple, Eleanor Hinebaugh, Frederick Thayer, Fred Peddicord, Grant Palmer.

ELIZABETH B. LEARY, Teacher.

FRESHMEN.

Dwight Townshend, Bertie Turney, Irma Workman.

SOPHOMORES.

Mary Harsh, Marguerite Hart June White.

JUNIORS.

Clarence Murphy, Bertie Lawton, Earl Smith, Paul Workman.

WM. E. BISHOFF, Vice Principal.

Church Services.

ST. PAUL'S M. E.

Services next Sunday as follows: Preaching 10.30 a. m.; Sunday school at 2.15 p. m.; preaching at 7.30 p. m.

Epworth League Monday 7.30 p. m.

Junior League Wednesday 4.15 p. m.

Prayer meeting Wednesday 7.30 p. m.

Everybody cordially invited to attend these services.

J. B. WORKMAN, Pastor.

ST. MARK'S LUTHERAN.

Services next Sabbath as follows:

Sunday school at 9.30 a. m.

Preaching at 7.30 p. m.

Luther League every Wednesday at 7.30 p. m.

Deer Park—Communion at 11 a. m.

Everybody welcome.

E. MANGES, Pastor.

PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL.

Children's service every Thursday afternoon at 4.15 o'clock. Sermon every Thursday evening at 7 o'clock.

Sunday, Jan. 10, morning prayer, sermon and communion at 11 o'clock.

H. W. STOWELL, Rector.

FOR SALE—A National Cash Register.—Offutt & Renninger.

HURT NEAR CRELLIN.

Conductor Albert Dawson Injured By Log Rolling Over Him.

Last Saturday Albert Dawson, who resides at Elgon, W. Va., and is employed by the Kendall Lumber Company as conductor on the log train over the Preston Railroad, sustained painful injuries by being crushed beneath a log which constituted a portion of the load being transported to the mill from the forests.

The train on which Mr. Dawson was conductor was approaching its destination at Crellin when the boom chains holding the logs in place on the trucks parted. At the time the injured man was standing on the top of the logs and when they rolled from under him he was pitched to the ground and before he could regain his feet and get to a place of safety one of the logs caught him and rolled over his legs, crushing them very painfully. Dr. Legge attended the injured man and reports that while he was rather badly hurt his injuries are not considered dangerous.

Local Teachers' Institute.

The following is the program for the local teachers' institute to be held at Deer Park on Saturday, January 16th:

Address of welcome, Rev. Clark; response, E. A. Browning; English, Prof. U. G. Palmer; orthography, H. A. Loraditch; arithmetic, Wm. E. Bishoff; factoring in algebra, A. W. DeWitt; primary number, Miss Mary O'Donnell. Music will be furnished by the school. Everybody welcome.

H. A. LORADITCH,
Chairman Teachers' Association.

Marriage Licenses.

Adam F. Ridenour and Nancy Mary McGinnis, both of Newburg, W. Va.

Frank McCray and Nora Reed, both of Buckhannon, W. Va.

George McKenzie and Martha Elizabeth Kinzer, both of Swanton.

Frank Smith Ward, of Volga, W, Va., and Mabel Clara Burner, of Philippi, W. Va.

Joseph E. Callis and Rosanna Welch, both of Mountain Lake Park.

James Teny Flint and Clara Wilcox, both of Cincinnati, O.

Harry Matthias Comp and Pryphosa Priscilla George, both of Swanton.

Otis Edmund Ramsey and Icy Adaline Hayes, both of Canaan, W. Va.

William J. Dison and Martha Sinclar Gusman, both of Clarksburg, W, Va.

George Samuel Brant and Catharine Weimer, both of McHenry.

Elmer Lee Vanguilder and Genevia Pride, both of Fairmont, W. Va.

Stork News.

To Mr. and Mrs. W. R. Offutt last Thursday morning a daughter was born. To Mr. and Mrs. John Flaherty, of Mountain Lake Park, the same day, the Stork also made a visit, leaving a daughter.

Site at Terra Alta.

Rt. Rev. P. J. Donahue, bishop of Wheeling, is very enthusiastic over the anti-tuberculosis crusade and will lend his aid and influence to the movement to suppress it. A tract of 70 acres at Terra Alta was purchased by the Bishop last year and since that time he has been much interested in the idea of starting a sanitarium there for the treatment of tuberculosis patients. If the legislature decides to act Bishop Donahue would be glad if the Terra Alta tract were found suitable for such a purpose.

Robbed Store; Then Beat Proprietor

The store of Hartley & Guskey at Independence, W. Va., a few miles west of Oakland, was burglarized early Saturday morning. Thirty-three pair of shoes, several overcoats and other things were taken to the value of several hundred dollars. C. E. Guskey, of the firm, in his search for the robbers found three men carrying large bundles of his goods toward the mountains. He was roughly handled by them and forced to flee toward his home. Bloodhounds are now on the trail. Several months ago the safe in the same store was blown open and considerable money and jewelry stolen.

Sales Advertised.

In this paper today will be found the mortgagee's sale notice of a valuable parcel of land located near Mountain Lake Park, known as the Crane Ice House property. Mr. E. H. Sincell, attorney.

Also the notice of trustees' sale of a very fine farm located near Crannsville, W. Va., containing 275 acres, well improved and under cultivation. Messrs. D. Lindley Sloan and Edward H. Sincell, trustees.

Released on Bond.

Van Grimm, of Dodson, this county, who spent almost a week in jail in Oakland, having been surrendered by his bondsmen, was released Saturday on bail in the sum of $700 for his appearance at the March term of the Circuit Court. Grimm had been indicted by the recent grand jury for a serious crime and was out on bond. About the time his case was to be called he disappeared from his home and was located by his bondsman at or near Winchester, Va., who brought him to Oakland and turned him over to the Sheriff.

GARRETT CO. COAL VEIN BROUGHT $360 PER ACRE

Original Price for Coal and Surface Was Only Forty Cents Per Acre.

A deed was recently admitted to record whereby the Hamill Coal and Coke Company of Garrett county transferred to the Blaine Mining Company one seam of coal underlying Military Lot No. 266 at Kitzmiller, the consideration being $360 per acre or $18,000 for the tract.

This land is a part of the old Hamill farm adjoining Kitzmiller and was sold on August 2, 1820, by Roger Perry to Richard Tasker for the sum of $20, or 40 cents per acre. At the time of the sale by Perry to Tasker the country roundabout was a howling wilderness and the existence of the coal underlying it was unknown. The deed conveyed the land in its entirety to Tasker who later sold it to Mr. Hamill.

Dividends Declared.

The two Oakland banks, The Garrett National and the First National, declared dividends on last Thursday for the past six months, the former paying five per cent and the latter three per cent.

List of Letters.

B. Boyman, Mrs. Hattie Davis, B. O. Johnson (2), Walter Lewis, John W. Nelson, Mark Thompson, Mrs. Everett Tillson.

Notice to Delinquent Renters of Garrett County Telephone Company.

At a meeting of the Board of Directors of the Garrett County Telephone Company, held at Hoyes, Md., Dec. 17, 1908, the following motion was made and adopted by the Board as a whole: That all parties who are in arrears with their rents to the amount of six months that if they are not paid by the 1st day of March, 1909, they will be placed in the proper officers' hands for collection.

C. V. GUARD, Sec'y.

ACCIDENT.

I am back again.

We are having fine weather for January and the farmers are plowing as though it were April. They are getting rerdy for oat sowing.

The Farmers' Institute held at this place was well attended, the house being too small to accommodate all, hence we all look forward to the time when we will be furnished with a larger and more convenient public school building at this place.

We sympathize with our Bittinger friends that they are wearing crape on account of the State road not coming their way. I will just give them a word of consolation: move over to Accident and enjoy the full outlet of a good road.

Mr. C. A. Guthrie and family were visiting his parents in West Virginia.

The festival held here on Christmas Eve was well attended.

Mr. Gus Garringer and daughter have been down on the Eastern Shore looking for a farm.

STOYER.

It has been a long time since a Stoyer letter has appeared in THE REPUBLICAN and as this is the season for resolutions, we resolved to send a few items of news from our vicinity.

Our mining population has been having a long rest, as the mines have been shut down more than a year.

For the last two weeks skating on the river has been fine.

Mrs. Mary Smith has changed her place of residence from the West end to the Sollars building on Second street.

Mr. Geo. Price and Mr. Tom Wilson have moved their families to Chaffee, W. Va.

Messrs. Clay McMalloney and Robert Harvey were seen on our streets a number of times during the holidays.

Mr. Geo. Farris had a very fine horse killed in the log woods.

Mr. W. L. Steyer, recently purchased a fine thoroughbred hound from Mr. Geo. Michael. Now it will be unhealthy for the foxes and wild-cats around here.

Mr. and Mrs. John McIntyre called upon Mr. and Mrs. John T. Steyer January third.

We are of the opinion that our esteemed friend, J. B. Shockey, is looking for a government appointment for we learn that he has named his new son Taft.

A merry party spent a pleasant evening skating on W. T. Steyer's lake Friday.

Miss Lucie Junkins, principal of our pubiic school, spent the holidays at home in Emoryville.

G. N. Steyer, who spent his vacation at home, has returned to the West Virginia Wesleyan College at Buckhannon, where he will receive his A. B. degree in June.

Mr. J. S. Ross spent an evening in town recently.

L. K. White called on W. T. Steyer Sunday.

Subscribe for The Republican.

SHORT RUN.

As I have not seen any items from this little village for quite a while I will try to tell you some of the latest happenings.

What has become of "? ? ?" that we never hear from him any more?

We are having fine winter weather now, but no snow. The ladies especially are getting very anxious for a good old sleigh ride.

Leap year is passed and we have not succeeded in getting rid of one "bachelor." But the prospects are much better than they were in 1907.

Mr. Milo Wilson has purchased a lot in Kitzmiller where he will build in the near future.

Miss Cassie Wilson spent last week visiting her sister near Kurtz Chapel.

Dr. Z. H. Moon and little son, Leslie, were visiting at J. H. Wilson's Sunday.

Miss Ida Wilson, who spent her vacation here, returned to her school at Kitzmiller Sunday.

Messrs. Jas. H. and Daniel Wilson were the guests of Mr. J. W. Harvey Sunday.

Mr. Geo. Harvey is digging the dusky diamonds at Three Fork now.

A number of our gay, dashing, bright young men attended church at Kitzmiller Sunday night.

Mr. E. F. Ringer was calling at Daniel Wilson's Sunday.

Messrs. Charles Harvey and Tommy Wilson attended a party at Upper Potomac last Thursday. They report a good time.

Mrs. C. H. Junkins and Miss Jane Wilson were visiting Miss Emma Harvey Friday last.

Best wishes to THE REPUBLICAN.

FINIS.

Farm for Sale

Located ½ mile east of Mt. Lake and 2 from Oakland. 100 acres, rich soil, 60 acres in grass, balance good timber; house, barn, plenty of water. Apply to JOS. FAY, Deer Park. 2t

AUDITOR'S NOTICE.

Hamill & Matthews, Trustees, vs. Lantz Brothers.

No. 1546 Equity. In the Circuit Court for Garrett County.

Notice is hereby given to the creditors of Lantz Brothers to file their claims in the above entitled cause, with the Clerk of this Court, properly authenticated, on or before the 15th day of January, 1909, as I will then proceed to state an account distributing the funds in the hands of the Trustees.

EDWARD H. SINCELL, Auditor.

Notice To Delinquent Tax-Payers.

Notice is hereby given to all delinquent tax-payers that if taxes now due and in arrears are not paid before

JANUARY 1ST, 1909,

I will proceed by law to collect. I refer to Section 50 of Chapter 66 of Acts of the General Assembly of Maryland, which provides as follows:

SECTION 50. The said Treasurer shall during the first week in December in each and every year, give notice to all delinquent tax-payers of said county, by advertisement inserted in two newspapers published in said county, and in hand-bills posted in five of the most public places in each election district of said county, and at the courthouse door, warning them that the payment of all taxes then due and in arrear will be enforced by advertisement and sale unless the same be paid before the 1st day of January next following.

Please pay promptly and save costs.

W. E. HOLLINGER,
Treasurer of Garrett County.

ARTHUR TOWNSHEND

Santa Claus is Here Again

Loaded down and you can get anything you want in

FANCY BASKETS,
MIRRORS,
TOILET SETTS,
GLOVE BOXES,
WRITING PORTFOLIOS,
COLLAR and CUFF BOXES,
NUT CRACKERS,
PAPER WEIGHTS,
SILK and LINEN HANDKERCHIEFS
LINK BUTTONS,
STICK PINS,
SCARFS,
TIES,
SUSPENDERS,
FANCY CHINA,
FANCY BOX PAPER,
SMOKERS' SETTS, Etc

Xmas For Everybody

Also a Fine Line of

NUTS, CURRANTS,
ORANGES, RAISINS,
CANDR, CITRON,
FIGS, DATES,
FRUITS, Etc.

BARGAINS IN MEN'S & BOYS' OVERCOATS

ARTHUR TOWNSHEND

MY FILIPINO WATCH

BY CARROLL CARRINGTON

(Copyright, by Shortstory Pub. Co.)

If a man have a big secret in his pocket he should sleep in a different town every night and put as many miles between his meals as he have the stomach for traveling; but mine, as secrets go, was not so very big at the beginning, and when I did stop by the wayside for longer than a night's lodging it was by compulsion of illness, which nobody in the world could recommend as companion to a man in the circumstances I have described.

During a very black week I lay in a room at the Santa Catalina hotel, where I had been overtaken by malaria while making a restless tour of the pleasure resorts of Southern California. At the week's end I pulled myself together, paid my bill and was on my way to the depot when I fell a victim to a coincidence.

It was during the first stages of the excitement attending that great run of tuna in Southern California waters two years ago, and young Walter Harvey of the Los Angeles branch of the hydrographic service was taking his first vacation in three years to put in a week of fishing for the big jew fish at Santa Catalina. That is how it came about that I met him coming from, while I was going toward, the depot. He seized my hand with the greatest appearance of delight.

"Talk about luck, my boy!" he cried. "Why, it's nothing short of providential. Where you going?—not away from here just as I arrive!—I should say not! Remember you promised to come fishing with me when I saw you in 'Frisco a month ago—just in from Manila the day before, weren't you? Haven't heard a word from you since—not a word! Where've you been?—and how's the Filipino watch? Was there really anything in that story you were giving me up there?"

"For heaven's sake, don't shout!" I retorted. He had turned me about and was walking me back to the hotel. "You can see that I still have the thing—and I may add that I am getting sufficiently tired of it."

Whereupon I took the secret out of my pocket and showed it to him.

It was nothing but a large silver watch, with Oriental designs on the back and some words in the native language of Luzon engraved in Roman lettering on the inside of the cover. Under these words was the name of "Emilio Aguinaldo."

I had picked it up on the outskirts of Manila the morning after our first battle with the Filipinos. The following night my room at the hotel had been broken into and ransacked while I was on a visit to friends elsewhere in the city; two days later I had been held up by four unknown assailants and robbed of everything I had on me, which happened not to include the mysterious watch, as I had thoughtfully hidden it; and a week later, after a narrow escape from being kidnaped, I had concluded Manila was no longer a place for a pleasure-seeker and embarked as speedily as I could for home, taking the watch with me. Nor had my flight altogether ended with the close of the voyage; for even after arrriving on American soil I was still oppressed, in a degree grotesquely out of proportion to the insignificance of the incident, by a constant impulse to run away with my absurd prize, as though it had been the key to some famous international conspiracy.

I told Harvey at dinner that evening that I had business in the city which would certainly take me north the following day.

"After we've caught a 300-pound tuna, you may go," he replied.

The next morning was inhospitably cold and dark when we stumbled into our clothes after a wakeful night and stole forth from the hotel, meeting our Italian boatman on the veranda. He had come to wake us up.

I think we must have been fishing full a half-hour when my companion gave a yawn and said it wasn't time for fishing yet and he couldn't for the life of him see why Andrea had called us so "beastly early."

"I not-a call-a you at all," said the Italian, shrugging his shoulders. "What-a time you teenk catch-a da feesh?"

"Not for an hour yet," Harvey replied, winding his line around a peg in the bow of the boat and pulling out his pipe. "I'll have to smoke to keep awake. My neighbor in the next room woke me up at all hours by opening and closing his windows, stamping round his room and otherwise creating an all-night disturbance. He's a queer piece, that chap. Calls himself Senor Analdos."

"Spanish?" I observed quietly.

"Mexican grandee, I'm told," puffed Harvey through his pipe. "Dead swell and very exclusive. Been here a week, they say, and knows nobody. Dresses with all the noisiness of royalty, but has one of those exquisite polishes you generally see on aristocrats from the Latin countries. As a matter of fact, though," concluded my friend lazily, "the beggar strikes me as having a sort of gypsy air. Looks like I imagine one of those Egyptian magicians would look if Americanized."

"Vare wonderful, vare wonderful!" broke in the voice of Andrea, the Italian. He rested on his oars in some excitement. "One-a day he coma da feeshman's warf an' talk-a da feeshman, an' say, 'I show-a to you da dollare deespeer. You got-a da dollare?' Feeshman pull-a da dollare out-a da pock' an' hand-a man one-a meenit. You see? Passa da han' dees-a way" and Andrea made a sweep upward with one hand—"an' da dollare deespeer. Wait-a da dollare coma back; no coma back. Da man he wait-a, too, an' look-a da aire, but dollare coma no down—nevare. Vare wonderful, all feeshmans teenk. Try-a da more dollare—all go-a up, no coma down. Vare wonderful. Feeshmans teenk he hava da devil een heem."

I felt for my watch. Harvey looked surprised.

"And didn't he give the dollars back?" he demanded.

"How giva back, when he no getta heemself?" asked the boatman.

Harvey was about to reply, but changed his mind and asked me what time it was.

"Half-past four," I replied, returning the watch to my pocket.

"And where are we, Andrea?"

"Closa da whistling buoy, sare. Half-a mile, I teenk."

I could see the tower of the buoy looming in the dark haze ahead of us. It seemed, as Andrea had said, about half a mile away.

"You want to get out of this," said Harvey, gazing around. "We're right in the line of the raft and the buoy, where there hasn't been a fish since the swimming season opened."

At that moment I felt a tap on the side of my coat. I turned questioningly.

"Well," I said. "What is it?"

Andrea raised his brows with answering inquiry.

"What was it you wanted?" I repeated.

"I? I not-a want-a anyteeng."

"I thought you touched me."

"No, sare, I no touch-a you."

"Shut up talking," said Harvey. "Let's get to work."

For the next half-hour we circled slowly around the buoy and fished in silence. Then Harvey wound his line on the peg in the bow again and refilled his pipe.

"What's the time now?" he asked.

The next moment I could have fallen out of the boat with consternation.

My watch was gone!

I had worn it in a small inside pocket of my coat, without any chain, thinking it safer that way. I had consulted it but a half-hour before and, replacing it carefully, had buttoned my coat over it. Under the coat I wore a sweater, so there was no chance that I had mistakenly placed it in a waistcoat pocket.

The watch had simply been removed in some miraculous way from the pocket in which I was accustomed to keeping it, and in which I remembered with terrible distinctness having placed it such a little while before.

And now miracle was to follow miracle—or else we hadn't done with the first one yet—for while I was still frenziedly fumbling about my clothes I became aware of Andrea leaning forward in strange excitement, with his finger pointed seaward.

"What the deuce is happening anyhow?" cried Harvey, getting to his feet.

I was doubly dumb. Straight ahead of us in the haze of the dawn, I could descry the outlines of a vessel some two or three miles farther seaward. Our own boat was fully three miles from shore; the whistling buoy we could see quite distinctly on a line perhaps a quarter of a mile to the south of us.

Andrea was hauling a glass out of a locker and fixing it to his eyes.

"Vare wonderful!" he muttered under his breath. "I noa see da boat-a look lak heem before, teenk so!"

Well, I had. Here, in a part of the Pacific at least six weeks' travel from where I had last seen one, was a Filipino junk!

It was bearing with good speed southward, but coming in also. It seemed in a fair way to pass quite close to the whistling buoy, at which we also were heading. If we should stop at the buoy the strange craft would come within speaking distance of us, unless she should change her course. Trembling under a three-fold mystery—the hotel stranger, the junk, the magical disappearance of my watch—I urged Andrea to give me the glass and row with all his might for the buoy. Harvey I silenced with a shake of the head.

In ten minutes we had run the boat alongside the buoy and were resting on the side hidden from the Filipino vessel. By poking the glass around the corner I could see the incongruous visitor still coming on, now within a mile of us.

From a dazed inspection of this marvel I was shaken abruptly by a hand on my arm. I whirled about to find Harvey staring at me, his face the color of a bone.

"Pratt," he gasped, dragging me around to where I could follow with my eyes the direction he was indicating with his other hand, "do you see that?"

He pointed to a box-like receptacle in the base of the buoy. It ran all the way through, from our side to the other, and was simply one of the inlets for the air that blew the whistle. Lying face up and ticking away as busily as ever, on the wet floor of the buoy was my Filipino watch!

It was enough to take the wits clean out of any man, this startling transition of the watch out here in the ocean, with the Filipino junk in sight, as an evident influence, a Filipino magician on shore, and the devil only knew what else in the wind. To attempt an explanation of how the watch had got out of my pocket and jumped across a half-mile of ocean to the whistling buoy was, of course, beyond me, and I could only crouch in the boat with my two shivering companions and stare.

And so, while we were all crouching and staring, a visible link in the phenomena came before us. A human hand appeared in the aperture in the buoy, from nowhere that we could see, and, laying hold of the watch, withdrew!

Not one of us moved.

We must have sat gazing into the buoy like men dreaming for as long as you would take to catch your breath after a hard fall; then—

"Santa Maria!"

The Italian's voice rose in almost a shriek. We stiffened in our seats and looked to where he was pointing.

Less than 200 yards away a man's head was bobbing upon the surface of the ocean.

I turned the glass upon it. At first I could see only the back of it, for it was moving away from us toward the Filipino vessel, which now stood half a mile out; but did not all of us know whose head it was? The foreign magician's, of course—the Filipino whom we had left three miles ashore in the Catalina hotel.

The next moment he turned and I saw his face. He was swimming rapidly toward the junk.

Andrea caught at his oars and tore them into the waves. The boat moved from the buoy. I gripped the sides and shouted to the Italian to row with all his might.

He was already doing so. But not in the direction I had meant. The boat had turned its nose shoreward and was splashing across the waves with a speed that bent me in the middle with every pull of the oars.

"You cursed fool!" I cried, springing for the Italian's wrists. "If you don't turn this boat around, I'll—"

But he did not hear me, nor feel my grasp upon him. He was rowing with the strength of a madman; terror had put a glare in his eyes, had deadened his senses of hearing and feeling. I called to Harvey for aid. My friend sat speechless in the bow, gripping both sides of the boat for support.

I hardly like to say what happened in the next instant, for at first it will not be credited, on top of the things already mentioned. But this is a narrative—not a story made to order while you wait—and must be kept to the facts.

While I still had hold of Andrea's hands, the Italian fell in a heap in the bottom of the boat, Harvey gave a hoarse cry of mingled prayer and curse, and I was left to clutch the nearest seat and gasp while the little craft tore over the white-caps with the speed of an express train.

What was moving it? I looked forward and saw the head again on the water. We should be upon it in a second—we should, at this rate, crash into the junk a second later. What was the invisible power or attraction that pulled us thitherward at so terrific a speed? Impressions of old witch stories flew before my mind—of tricks of sorcery and magic, at which I had always loved to scoff. Then the boat gave a jar, and the man swimming ahead of us was lifted clear out of the water.

He was hanging on to a thick line which stretched far ahead into the sea—Harvey's tuna line, with an immense tuna careening seaward at the other end of it!

"Hang on!" I yelled—for I could see the Filipino was more frightened now than anybody else. "Hang on for your life! Work your way toward the boat."

He had sense enough left to know that if he let go the boat would strike him. He was only ten feet out on the line. The distant tuna had evidently risen near the surface, thus raising the line clear of the water near the boat. The Filipino junk was now but a hundred yards ahead, although sailing away as hard as it could, plainly in a confusion of fright.

"Cut the line!" shrieked the Filipino. "Then I will let go and you can pick me up."

"Harvey!" I cried, for he was in my way—"cut the line, or we'll be dashed to pieces."

He found his wits barely in time to save us. One slash of his knife did the business. The moment after, we had bumped up to the junk, and the Filipino had let go the line and was swimming toward us. He was a superb swimmer, and apparently indefatigable. He called in Filipinese to the junk to stop. Before we could realize it we were hauled aboard of her by about a dozen Malays. Their captain saluted as we came over the side. Our Filipino stamped his foot.

"To sea!" he cried, shaking the water from his clothes. "To sea as fast as you can go. These gentlemen are very persistent—they do not like to part with what does not belong to them. They have decided to stay with us as far as Honolulu, and perhaps go all the way to Manila. See!" and he fished the watch out of a bag at his neck. "I had not only to take it out of the gentleman's pocket, but later to remove it from our appointed rendezvous and bring it aboard with my own hands. All my fine clothes are left at the hotel. It is too bad. But I have the chief's watch. Let the voyage home be a merry one for that."

Well, all our fine clothes were left at the hotel, too—or somewhere near it—and we had not the chief's watch. We decided that the voyage would be merry enough for us by stopping at Honolulu.

"Eet ees all like-a da dollare," mumbled Andrea, the Italian, as we followed a guide to our allotted quarters. "See-a go away; no see-a come back. Vare wonderful!"

TREAT YOU HORSES RIGHT.

The Best Time to Water Them Is Before Feeding.

A horse should be watered before feeding, and never given a large quantity of water after a meal, for the simple reason that the water will wash the food out of the stomach before stomach digestion has taken place and the food will not be well prepared for absorption; and besides it is sometimes the cause of colic.

There is a peculiar idea that a warm horse should not be allowed to drink and, unlike a great many other popular ideas, there is a little truth in it. If you water a warm horse in the ordinary way, letting him drink all that he will, you are likely to have a foundered horse on your hands. This is especially so if, at the time, the horse is fatigued. Nevertheless, it is always safe to allow him from six to ten swallows, no matter how warm he is. If this be given on going into the stable and he be allowed to stand and eat hay for an hour and is then offered water, he will not drink nearly so much as he would had none been given before.

The danger is not in the first swallow, as we often hear it asserted, but in the excessive quantities he will drink if not restrained. The most dangerous time to give a horse a full draft is when he has cooled down from fatiguing work and has partaken of a meal.

John Splan, the great trainer, writes: "As to water, I think that a horse should have all that he wants at all times. A man says: 'Why; will you give your horse water before a race?' Yes; before the race, in the race, and after the race, and any other time that he wants to drink." When I say give your horse all the water he wants before the race, I do not mean that you shall tie him in a warm stall where he cannot get a drink for five or six hours on a hot day, and then take him to the pump and give him all that he wants. What I mean is to give him water often and, in that way, he will take only a small quantity at a time.

After long, continuous exertion the system is greatly depleted of fluid. Nature calls for its replenishment, and this is the cause of a thirst which is so intense that, if the animal is not restrained at this time, he may drink much more than he needs.

The general custom, almost universally followed, of giving the morning meal before water, is not very objectionable, either theoretically or practically. At this time there is no depletion of fluid, consequently the horse is not very thirsty and, does not drink rapidly or excessively, and apparently very little evil results from this method. However, the writer much prefers that the horse should have an opportunity to drink before the morning meal.

Personally, I much prefer keeping horses, both summer and winter, in an open shed, with a large water tank in the yard, to tying them by the head in a barn. This brings us to the arrangement of farm buildings, which I hope to discuss in some subsequent paper.

FOR THE KICKING HORSE.

Method of Placing Pole Between the Stalls.

A plan for securely fastening a pole between two kicking horses in a stall is shown in the accompanying illustration. A is a horseshoe which is spiked to the center of the manger, through which the top end of the pole is slipped. B, a rod four inches long, is driven into the other end of the pole. Into the hook a long link of a chain, Attaching Pole Between Kicking Horses.

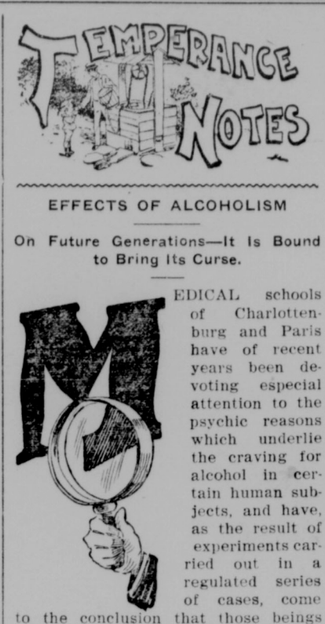
C, should be placed and the hook pounded close to prevent the link from slipping out. D is a small clevis and pin which is hooked through the link and placed over the end of the hard wood stake E. A hole is drilled in E an inch from the top through which the clevis pin is inserted. A pole of this description, says Prairie Farmer, can be easily removed when desired and is durable.

Internal Parasites of Sheep.

Internal parasites, such as the stomach, tape and other worms, according to George H. McKerrow of Wisconsin, are the greatest enemies the sheepmen have in raising mutton. He says the trouble is to be prevented rather than cured. Relating his experience Mr. McKerrow says: We use the hurdles, a system carried on almost exclusively in Great Britain, with excellent results. By using this method you have your lambs on fresh feed every day. They do not follow the ewes and become infested. If you do not use hurdles, keep your lambs on fresh pasture—clover, if possible—and be prepared for the dry season.



EFFECTS OF ALCOHOLISM

On Future Generations—It Is Bound to Bring Its Curse.

MEDICAL schools of Charlottenburg and Paris have of recent years been devoting especial attention to the psychic reasons which underlie the craving for alcohol in certain human subjects, and have, as the result of experiments carried out in a regulated series of cases, come to the conclusion that those beings who come of stock which was at any period in the ascending line given to the abuse of alcohol, are certainly not of the order of humanity which is to evolve the long-expected superman. In other words, two highly respectable schools of medical thought and science practically assure the world that there is but a small permillionage of mankind that holds the power of transmitting greatness to posterity, and that their being able to do so depends upon their abstention from alcohol in all forms while they live.

According to the argument, all the really great men who have appeared upon the earth, like Caesar, Aristotle, Shakespeare and Napoleon, came from a select series of ancestors to whom the use of alcohol was practically unknown. The fact, it is argued, that Napoleon's father may have been a tippler, will not alter the case for our superman, since the weakness of the father escaped the son by some unknown but none the less certain atavistic process, as in cases of epilepsy or insanity. It is held that by such a series of atavistic accidents, the taint of alcohol has "skipped" every particular hereditary phase that goes to impress itself upon the ultimate issue, namely, the superman, who thus comes into the world wholly free, in the matter of heredity, from the taint of alcohol.

The consequence of this is that he has a perfect will, and herein lies his power over all other men who by accident of evolution from their forefathers, are, by far the greater part, of very imperfect will power. It does not matter if the superman himself be a devotee of the bottle. He is provided with a perfect will, and only his progeny is likely to suffer from his abuse of strong drink.

According to the new schools the effects of alcoholism travel down to countless generations, producing, in more or less appreciable form, paralysis of the physical instrument, and consequently partial impotence of the psychical factor, of the will. Greatness, in its real sense, is therefore impossible in the offspring of alcoholic persons, unless by a series of accidents which can only occur in a long cycle of years—which is practically telling us, seeing the extent to which alcohol is used, that the world is degenerating.

CLOSED SALOONS—EMPTY JAILS.

A Big Reduction of Crime Follows Prohibition.

The total number of cases docketed at Athens, Ga., shows a decrease of 44 per cent. compared with the first six months of 1907 and in number of arrests for drunkenness the decrease is 66 per cent.

In this center was operated until six months ago the oldest liquor dispensary in America.

To the closing of this publicly-owned drink factory and the abolition of the general liquor business in the state can be largely attributed the notable improvement in the police records of the community.

Judge's Indictment of Drink Traffic.

In charging the grand jury at the Glamorgan assizes at Swansea, England, recently, Justice Coleridge said that in 39 out of 73 cases the depositions disclosed crimes which would in all reasonable probability never have happened except for either the prosecutor or prisoner having been under the baneful influence of drink. That afforded much matter for regret, and his lordship said he would make no comment, but would content himself by stating what was the naked fact.

Medical Men Further Temperance.

Boone county, Missouri, voted dry some time ago, and following this, the Boone County Medical society pledged its members not to give liquor prescriptions for any cause. This step places the society in practical co-operation with the temperance element and is entirely in accordance with the attitude of the highest scientific authorities as to the baneful effects of alcohol on the human system.

Schoolhouse Comes First.

"The saloon cannot be permitted to take precedence over the American schoolhouse," is what Gov. Hughes of New York wrote in a veto of a bill providing that if a church or a school house is built within 200 feet of a saloon the saloon need not be moved. It is a sentiment which will be approved by all good citizens.

FOR A STORK PARTY

PRETTY WAY TO ANNOUNCE EXPECTED VISIT.

Unique Affair Described by Mme. Merri—Appropriate Poem Read, "The Song of the Red-Legged Stork."

Some time ago I attended a charming luncheon at which the announcement of the stork's expected visit was made in this pretty way:

It was not embarrassing to the guest of honor and was altogether a unique affair. The place cards were sealed envelopes, bearing the guests' names. The hostess asked us not to open them until the dessert course, then to begin at her left, each one to read the verse her envelope contained; the last to read was the lady on the right of the hostess and her verse told the story.

I have the poem complete and give it, as I have had so many requests for something just like it. It is called "The Song of the Red-Legged Stork," by Pauline C. Bowie. If a luncheon is not given, the story may be read, and the guests asked to determine whom the stork has honored, or the hostess may say: "Mrs. So-and-So is the fortunate one."

Over the mists of the darkening wold,
Where the skies are pale and the winds blow cold,
Down where the gates of life, unfurled,
Let the souls pass through the throbbing world,
Flew the red-legged stork
And he flew and flew
For ten score days and seventy more,
Till he reached the house of the open door,
Where the angel of gifts stood waiting near,
With dimples and smiles and a glittering tear.

Over white wastes of gleaming snow,
Over fair meadows where buttercups grow,
And fields where the red poppies sleepily nod
To the songs of the robins, sung to God,
Flew the red-legged stork,
And he sang as he flew:
"Winds, do not hinder me—Time is fleet;
Sun, do not burn me; withhold your heat;
I carry a link love's chain to complete,
And my burden is precious—a baby sweet.

"Frost, do not blight me in my flight;
Rain, do not spoil my feathers white;
For the way is long and Time is fleet
And my burden is precious—a baby sweet."

Down under arches of shimmering blue,
Where the south wind lives and the sun sifts thro'—
Over still spaces, where moonbeams sleep,
And the stars climb over the cloud-stair steep,
Flew the red-legged stork,
And he sang as he flew:
"Blue of the heavens, color her eyes;
Kiss her soft feet, ye rose-flushed skies;
I carry God's message, men's love to meet,
And my burden is precious—a baby sweet."

MADAME MERRI.

CLOTH TO MATCH THE SUIT.

Advice for the Woman About to Select a Blouse.

If you are in doubt about what kind of a waist to get to go with a good-looking coat and skirt you cannot go wrong in choosing colored chiffon cloth to match the suit.

This fabric has stood the test of time and popularity for three years and has started in strongly on another season.

Put it in small plaits, line with china silk of the same color, trim it with embroidered net to match and add a two-inch strip of white or cream lace at the neck, with a high-button stock to match.

Fasten it straight down the back or front with covered silk buttons.

Daily exercise with light dumbbells eventually cures round shoulders.

The juice of a raw onion applied to the sting of an insect will remove the poison.

A good hair oil for children's hair which is thin or dry is made of equal parts of pure olive oil and cold pressed castor oil, cut with grain alcohol and perfumed.

A glass of hot water before breakfast is a cleanser and tonic for the entire system. For an oily skin, squeeze half a lemon into the water; drink without adding sugar.

For a soft, painful corn, try the old-fashioned remedy of binding it nightly in common baking soda, moistened with a little water. The most stubborn and painful corns will disappear after three weeks of this treatment.

Egyptian Robes.

One of the novelties offered for the brilliantly dressed woman this season is the Egyptian robe. It is to be worn over colored satin. It is of black filet tulle and covered with great zigzag designs embroidered in brilliant Egyptian colors.

Bows to Be Worn.

There is no end to the methods that will be employed this winter in the use of bows. They will be worn at the neck, back and front, also at the belt back or front, and always at the top edge.

WHY SHE PLEASES HIM.

You wonder what he sees in her,
  Her charms are really very few,
Her beauty's not beyond compare,
  And all her dresses look askew.
She is not an attractive sight,
  Of figure she has none, and yet
She waits on him both day and night
  And never has been known to fret.

He loves her, that is very plain,
  Although she lacks all social charms.
Her hair is like a tangled skein
  And thin and scrawny are her arms.
You wonder what he in her sees,
  She brought to him no store of pelf,
And yet, while hubby takes his ease,
  She buttons all her waists herself.

It is not necessary that
  A woman should be fair of face,
Or not too lean or not too fat,
  Or e'en possess a world of grace,
Our interest in a beauty-bright
  We find will very often lag,
Especially if late at night
  She waits our coming just to nag.

And so, although she be not fair,
  Leading a fashionable life,
They make a very happy pair,
  For she's a most devoted wife.
When going out, 'tis true that she Has never made her husband wait,
She never calls him in to see
  If she has put her hat on straight.

She never asks him where he's been,
  She never asks him why he stayed;
But when she hears him coming in,
  The supper's on the table laid.
And when he settles down to read,
  That little woman he adores,
Has never yet been known to need
  His help in finishing the chores.
—Detroit Free Press.

The Cynic.

A bachelor, who is known among his friends and their children as being always in the happiest spirits, singing gayly and whistling the newest songs, recently took unto himself a wife. Hearing the news the eight-year-old daughter of a house to which he goes frequently, asked her mother, doubtfully:

"Won't Mr. Smith sing or whistle any more, mother?"

"Why, of course," said the parent, wondering. "Why?"

"Because married people don't seem to sing much," quoth the cynic, sadly.

Following Example.

"Like father, like son," said the Knowing One.

"In what way were they alike?" asked the Curious One.

"First, the old man, when the boy was a child, tried to break his son's will. Now the son is trying to break the old man's will."—Baltimore American.

Discreet Prophecy.

"Why do you invariably predict the coldest winter we have had in years?"

"Well," answered Prof. Blatherton, "if it comes true people necessarily give me credit for great wisdom. And if it doesn't come true, they are too thankful to hold any grudge."—Washington Star.

Improvement.

"It is sad," said the man who uses slang, "to see politicians so busy knocking one another."

"Well," answered Senator Sorghum, "even that program represents an improvement. It's a little more humane to go after a man with a hammer than with an ax."—Washington Star.

STRIKING A BARGAIN.

The Big One—I'll give you a nice apple if you'll stop crying.

The Small One—H—how big is the a—apple, an' how l—long have I got to stop fer?—New York Herald.

Then and Now.

Her grandsire, many years ago
  Came over in the steerage;
And with the money he acquired
  She got into the peerage.
—Chicago Daily News.

His Business to Be.

"The insurance man with literary ambitions you took on the staff of the magazine is very much dissatisfied at being one of the subordinate authors."

"I don't see why he should be. Wasn't he always an underwriter?"—Baltimore American.

Rural Habits.

Smith—Hello, Jones, do you still live out at Oyster Bay?

Jones—No—I'm in Brooklyn now.

"How is it that you Long Island people are always moving from village to village?"—Life.

Mean Evasion.

The Poet—Poets are born and not made.

His Friend—Cut that out, now! Trying to blame that darned stuff of yours on your mother, are you?—Cleveland Leader.

The One Luxury.

"Why do you indulge in such extravagance of speech?"

"Because," answered the orator, who never gets an office, "it's the only extravagance I can afford."—Washington Star.

Justified.

"Why did you strike that man?"

"He called me 'Clarence.'"

"What is your name?"

"It's Clarence, but he didn't know it."—Cleveland Leader

Young Men With Clean Morals Needed In Politics.

By Vice President FAIRBANKS.

THE young man in politics is no longer an American EXPERIMENT. He is the hope and strength of national government.

It takes a certain class of men to run the government. Not all men can do it. That is why I urge young men to go into politics, not because of the rewards or the power or the celebrity of office, but because this government is what we make it, not what it makes of us.

Young men who are now looking out into the future will find this an opportune time to take part in the affairs of the government. This is essentially a young man's country.

There is something much greater than MATERIAL GAIN in politics. The start must be right, with a sense of the enormous responsibilities to the broad interpretation of patriotism.

* * *

As a higher and better civilization has been developed in this country the opportunity for the young man in politics has become clearer as an avenue to statesmanship, to the DUTIES OF A PATRIOT in the service of his country.

There is such a thing in political life now as CLEAN POLITICS with high ideals for the good of the commonwealth.

WE NEED THIS SORT OF YOUNG MAN IN THE AFFAIRS OF NATIONAL GOVERNMENT, YOUNG IN HIS ENTHUSIASM, IN HIS DESIRE TO ENTER UNSELFISHLY THE PUBLIC SERVICE OF THIS COUNTRY. THE OPPORTUNITY FOR YOUNG MEN WHO CAN ENTER THE FIELD OF POLITICS WITH THIS PURPOSE IN VIEW WAS NEVER BETTER THAN IT IS TODAY.

It is not true that there is no room for young men; that the opportunities today are not within reach as they were when the political history of our country was young.

* * *

There was never a time when the opportunity for young men in politics was GREATER than it is today, for the initiative in clean politics is the public requirement of the hour. The mistake that must be avoided is to be sure of the motive that stands behind the young man's political ambition.

LET HIM GO INTO POLITICS BY ALL MEANS, BUT LET IT BE CLEAN POLITICS.

POLITICS MUST NOT SERVE THE MAN, BUT EDUCATE THE MAN TO BETTER SERVE THE PUBLIC.

Success In Life Not Measured by Victories.

By Bishop THOMAS J. CONATY of Los Angeles.

SUCCESS in life is not measured altogether by victories. Failures, properly understood and appreciated, are frequently sources of life's ultimate success. No man can go through life without at times FAILING in the things he starts out to do, and sometimes failing most egregiously.

THE MAN WITH THE MARK OF SUCCESS UPON HIM IS THE ONE WHO HAS NOT ALLOWED FAILURE TO DISCOURAGE HIM, BUT WHO HAS RISEN FROM EACH FAILURE WITH THE DETERMINATION OF STUDYING THE CAUSE IN ORDER TO AVOID FUTURE FAILURE.

The history of successful men in every walk of life has many a chapter of failures. It is but another experience of the crown through the cross. DIFFICULTIES ARE OFTENTIMES OUR BEST MASTERS. They serve to discipline the character; they test the value in us; they make for the worth of life; they give the sterling ring to the character. The mere SIGHING after the ability to do the great things done by others never goes beyond the difficulty that arises at the very suggestion in the sigh. Success is in the wish when with it there are ENERGY AND DETERMINATION.

EVERY TEMPTATION TO DISCOURAGEMENT CONCEALS A VICTORY WHICH MAY BE WON BY FIDELITY TO THE AIM AND PURPOSE WHICH LIE BEFORE US. THE CONQUEST OF DIFFICULTY BRINGS THE PURE GOLD OF SUCCESS.

Little Education For Wage Earners.

By Dr. EDWARD J. GOODWIN, President of Packer Institute, Brooklyn, N. Y.

A SECONDARY system of education for the United States is yet to be worked out. In recent times the American school has not kept pace with national progress in production and methods of doing business.

WHILE THERE HAS BEEN SOME BROADENING OF THE SCOPE AND IMPROVEMENT OF THE QUALITY OF INSTRUCTION, EDUCATORS STILL LARGELY IGNORE THE INTERESTS OF THAT GREAT AND GROWING CLASS OF BOYS WHO ARE TO BE WAGE EARNERS, ARTISANS AND TRADESMEN.

The indictment against our present scheme of elementary instruction is that it overburdens the memory with uninteresting and useless material.

There are two great reasons for the establishment of trade and industrial schools and courses. The first is the GOOD OF THE YOUTH themselves; the second is the welfare of the nation in the UPBUILDING OF ITS INDUSTRIES. We are gradually coming to recognize the injustice of organizing our high schools in the interests of the FEW alone who are able to command a liberal or semi-liberal education.

What are our high schools doing today to meet the growing demand for skilled workers of all sorts? Practically nothing. They contribute in New York state, for example, less than 2 per cent of the men who yearly enter the so called "UNLEARNED" PROFESSIONS.

Grown-Up Children.

It is not only the frivolous whom the spirit of childishness is just now leading astray. Silliness is the fashion even among the wise. Women especially affect a kind of childish shrewdness in talking of serious subjects. Like children who have the habit of romancing, they lose the sense of reality, and because they never talk exactly as they think they begin to think exactly as they talk.—London Spectator.

Land of Commercial Industry.

The traveler through Saxony is rarely out of sight of a factory chimney. In probably no other land are industrial establishments so numerous in proportion to the area. The present number is 24,707, an increase of 1,755 over the preceding year. The number of operatives is 685,319, an increase of 41,235 in the course of a year.

Gnawing His Way.

Nature knew that the rat would want to spend half his time gnawing and she therefore provided him with the right kind of teeth to do it. A boy caught a rat and boxed it up, and in the course of a week the rodent gnawed a hole through oak planks nailed together until there was a thickness of 18 inches. The hole was almost as round and smooth as a carpenter could have made.

Arabian Proverb.

A day that is not thine own do not reckon it as of thy life.

Land for Sale.

We have for sale the following valuable tracts of land:

One Military Lot of 50 acres, a small portion of which is under cultivation. All good land, and every acre tillable. Watered by several good springs and a never failing small run. Contains some good timber. One-half mile from R. R. siding, and one and one-half miles from Oakland.

Also part of two Military Lots containing about 50 acres. This property is directly East of Oakland, on the South side of the B. & O. R. R. siding on the North side of tracks. Contains valuable grazing land, a portion of which is in cultivation. Valuable R. R. frontage.

Also 10 acres suitable for building sites, just East of Oakland on the North side of the Oakland and Mt. Lake Park road.

For further information, address

THE H. WEBER & SONS CO.,
6-tf Oakland, Md.

W. H. RAVENSCRAFT, M.D.,
PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON,
OAKLAND, MD.
Residence on North Third street.
Office in McComas Building.

DR. J. E. LEGGE,
PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON,
Offers his Services to the citizens of Oakland and vicinity.
Office in McComas Building, Second street

DR. R. F. BARTLETT,
DENTIST.
Office in McComas Building, Second street Oakland, Md.
Special attention given to bridge and crown work.

DR. J. G. ROBINSON, DENTIST,
OAKLAND MD.
Office at residence on Liberty street.
GAS ADMINISTERED.

NORMAN S. HEINDELL,
ATTORNEY-AT-LAW,
All business given prompt attention.
Office—First National Bank Building.
KLAND, MARYLAND.

GILMOR S. HAMILL,
ATTORNEY-AT-LAW
AND SOLICITOR IN CHANCERY.
Office in Garrett National Bank Building
Particular attention given to Conveyancing investigation of land titles and collection of claims. Loans negotiated.

EDWARD H. SINCELL,
ATTORNEY-AT-LAW,
OAKLAND, MARYLAND.
Will practice in the Courts of Garrett and Allegany counties, the Court of Appeals of Maryland, and the adjoining counties of West Virginia.

Baltimore & Ohio R. R.

Schedule effective June 2, 1907.

OAKLAND.

* Daily. † Daily except Sunday. § Sunday only.

For WASHINGTON, BALTIMORE, PHILADELPHIA & NEW YORK, Depart *12.27 a. m., *6.31 a. m., *4.17 p. m., *8.29 p. m., Arrive *7.12 a. m., *3.33 p. m., *10.26 p. m., *11.54 p. m.

For CUMBELAND and Way Points, Depart †10.00 a. m., †4.40 p. m. Arrive †9.26 a. m., *7.26 p. m.

For COLUMBUS & CHICAGO, Depart *11.54 p. m. Arrive *6.07 a. m., *4.17 p. m.

For GRAFTON (Accom.), Depart †9.26 a. m., †7.26 p. m. Arrive †10.00 a. m., †4.40 p. m.

For FAIRMONT and WHEELING, Depart †9.26 a. m. (local), *3.33 p. m., *11.54 p. m. Arrive *6.07 a. m., *4.17 p. m., *12.25 night.

For FAIRMONT (Accom.), Depart *7.26 p. m. Arrive †10.00 a. m.

For CINCINNATI, LOUISVILLE and ST. LOUIS, Depart *7.12 a. m., *3.33 p. m., *10.26 p. m. Arrive *12.27 a. m., *6.31 a. m., *8.29 p. m.

Oakland Pharmacy

JOS. E. HARNED, Proprietor.

Drugs, Chemicals, Stationery, Cigars

Cameras and Photo Supplies

FOR SALE.

We will sell at private sale at our farms between Mt. Lake Park and Oakland,

1 Gasoline Engine,

8 horse-power, made by the International Harvester Co. Almost new and in perfect running order. Will be sold for $275.

1 Hay Bailer,

operated by horse-power. Makes standard size bales.

For further information call on or write to

THE H. WEBER & SONS CO.,
Oakland, Md.

J. B. WILLIAMS CO.
FROSTBURG, MD.
Cheapest place to buy
MONUMENTS
HEADSTONES AND IRON FENCING
Send for prices

A Hint to the Wise Is Sufficient.

Special Sale on

2-qt Blue Enamel Saucepan.

2-qt Blue Fnamel Pudding Pans.

2-qt Blue Enamel Preserve Kettles.

We have just received over 1500 lbs. of our famous 10c Candy.

SUNDAY SCHOOL SUPPLIES

TAKE our advice—buy now, don't wait, but come and see

THE Little Man

and you will save money on all your Holiday Goods,

Toys, Candies, Novelties, Fancy Goods.

Baumgartner.

CAPITAL $25,000.00

The First National Bank
Of Grantsville, Md.

Safe deposit vault boxes for rent.

SURPLUS $12,500.00

The Savings Department takes care of your money when waiting other investment. The money earns interest from the day it is deposited. It can be withdrawn at any time.

Its Advantages

Any amount from One Dollar up can be deposited, and interest added to principal twice a year. Pass books are issued to every depositor.

We Pay 3 Per Cent. Interest.
Open Daily except Sundays and Holidays. 9 a. m. to 4 p. m.

OFFICERS.
C. H. JENNINGS, - - - President
U. M. STANTON, - Vice-President
J. O. GETTY, - - - Cashier

DIRECTORS.
C. H. Jennings, J. M. Stanton,
G. C. Keller, Eli Stanton,
W. A. Hitchins, Frank Watts,
J. O. Getty.

A. D. NAYLOR & COMP'Y

You can buy at Reduced Prices

Grain Drills, Harrows AND Plows

AT NAYLOR & CO.'S

Big Stock to select from.

Have the Farmer's Favorite Drills, the Thomas, the Superior Hoe and Disc Drills.

We have the Syracuse, the Imperial and the Wyard Plows.

Also the wood frame Harrows, the wheel and lever Harrows; also the Disc Harrow, all at reduced prices.

We also have a nice line of Spray Pumps.

Muco-Solvent

is an indispensible household remedy because it is a preventive as well as a cure, and because it arrests development of all contageous germs and bacterial diseases. It cures croup, colds, tonsilitis with its associated ills and all inflamed and catarrhal conditions of the mucous surface. It is a harmless vegetable preparation that may safely be administered to the tenderest babe. If not for sale in your neighborhood, write to

THE PIEDMONT SUPPLY CO.,
Sole Agents for Muco-Solvent. Piedmont, W. Va.

Real Estate Bargains

I offer for sale

FARM OF 147 ACRES, 3 miles from Oakland; good 6-room House; plenty of water; over 50 acres cleared; about 25 acres of grass; 2 Orchards, bearing; over 75 acres of White Oak Timber; R. F. D. mail service.

COTTAGE OF 6 ROOMS for sale at Mt. Lake Park.

HOUSE AND LOT on Oak Street, Oakland, for sale or rent. House of 6 rooms—Lot 50x150 feet, with Stable and all necessary Outbuildings.

FOUR VERY DESIRABLE BUILDING LOTS situated on Liberty Street, in Oakland. Also 3 DWELLING HOUSES on Liberty Street, with good water and all necessary outbuildings.

HOUSE AND LOT on Wilson Street. House of 10 rooms; good water. Lot 150 feet front. Best Outbuildings in Oakland.

A VERY GOOD FARM 1 mile from Oakland—all under fence; containing 32 acres; about 25 under cultivation; 2 fine Orchards, and about 2½ acres in small Fruit; 2 Houses, a very good Well and a never failing Spring. A very desirable place for Truck and Poultry Farming. Can be bought at a low price just now.

I have for sale 18 of the very best Building Lots in the town which I will sell for cash—or $5 down and $5 per month.

150 ACRES OF VALUABLE COAL LAND situated less than two miles of Oakland which can be bought at a great bargain. The surface would make fine farming land. This land is well watered with a stream and several good springs.

12 MORE CHOICE BUILDING LOTS at $5 down and $5 per month.

If you want cash for your Real Estate, or Real Estate for your cash, let me hear from you.

☞ For further particulars call on or address

James A. Sincell, Real Estate Agt and Surveyor
Sincell Building, OAKLAND MD

HON. RANSOM PEABODY

The Fable of the Hoosier Bill of Fare and How the Women Folks Cooked Up Things for the Well-Known Citizen.

By GEORGE ADE
Author of "Fables in Slang," etc.

(Copyright, by Bobbs-Merrill Co.)

Once upon a Time there was a Hired Hand who felt that he was cut out to be Somebody. Among the Agriculturists he was said to be too dosh-burned Toney because he wore gloves when he Toiled and on Sundays put on a slew of Agony, with sheet-iron Shoes pointed at the End and a neat Derby purchased in Terry Hut.

Now this Freckled Swain, whose name was Ransom, wanted to hop on the Inter-Reuben and go zipping away to see the Great World. He wanted to live in a big Town where he would not have to walk on the Plowed Ground and where he could get something Good to Eat. He was tired of the plain Vittles out on the Farm. They very seldom had anything on the Table except Chicken with Gravy, Salt-Rising Bread, Milk, seven or eight Vegetables, Crulls, Cookies, Apple Butter, Whortleberry Pie, Light Biscuit, Spare Ribs, Pigs' Feet, Hickory Nut Cake and such like. This thing of drawing up every A. M. to the same old Lay Out of home-made Sausage, Buckwheat Cakes, Recent Eggs, Fried Mush and Mother's Coffee was beginning to wear on him. Often he dreamt of being in the Metropolis, where he could get an Oyster Stew, Sardines, and Ice Cream in the Winter Time.

At last his Dream came out of the Box. He went up to the City to attend a Law School and found himself domiciled in a Refined Joint that was a cross between a Salon and a Beanery. It was one of those Regular Places kept by a thin Lady who had once ridden in her Own Carriage. Her Long Suit was Home Atmosphere. She had the Hall-Ways filled with it. What is more, she came from an Old Family. Lord Cornwallis once stopped at their House to get a Drink of Water and George Washington came very near sleeping in one of the Bed Rooms. So that made the Board about 50 cents more on the Week.

Like all high-class Boarding Houses, it was infested by some Lovely People. There was the girl who spelled it Edythe and was having her voice done over. She had a Mother to keep Cases on her and do the Press Work. Also there was the Grass Widow who remembered her Husband's name but had mislaid the Address. Also the Old Boarder who was always under the influence of Pepsin. He would come down to Breakfast wearing the Hoof-Marks of a Nightmare Seventeen Hands high and holler about the Food and tell the Young Lawyer how you can't believe anything you see in the Papers. Also there was a young man employed in a Furniture Store who knew that he could put Eddie Sothern on the Fritz if he ever got a Whack at the Drama. Unless some one got out an Injunction he would recite Poe's "Raven" while Edythe played Chills and Fever music on the Once-Piano. So the Astute Reader will understand that this was a sure enough Boarding House.

Ranse could have stood for the Intellectual Environment if there had been a little more doing in the Food Line. Instead of stacking it up on the Table and giving the word to Pitch In, the Refined Landlady had it brought on in stingy little Dabs by several Beautiful Heiresses who hated to hold Converse with Ordinary Boarders. About the time that Ranse, with the Farm Appetite, began to settle down to Business he would notice all the other People rolling up the Red Napkins and trying to get them into the Rings. If he kept on eating after that, they would give him the Eye.

Cereals were strongly featured at the polite Prunery. Ransom, while employed on the Farm, had often mixed up Chop Feed and Bran for the Shoats and Yearlings, but he never thought he would come down to eating it himself. Another Strong Card was a Soup that was quite Pale and had a couple of Vermicelli swimming around in it. And every Tuesday they served Dried Currants with Clinkers in them.

Before Ranse had been against the Health Food Proposition many moons he began to hanker for the yellow-legged Plymouth Rocks, the golden Butter and the kind of milk that comes from the Cow—take a Tin Cup and go right out to the Spring House and dip it up for yourself. Poor, eh?

Still, he figured that as soon as he got into Practice and began to connect with the Currency he could shake the Oatmeal Circuit and put up at an A1 Hotel.

Like all the other Country Boys of the Story Books, Ransom made a Ten-Strike in the City. He worked 18 hours per and in Due Time he was taken into the Firm and stopped shaving his Neck and wore Pajamas instead of a home-made Nightie.

Then he moved into a Hotel that had $40,000 worth of Paintings on the First Floor, so that no one had a right to kick even if the Push Button failed to work. All the Furniture was Louie Something. You take an ex-Farm-Hand and let him sit in a Gold Chair with Satin Monogram that is too Nice to lean against, and you can see at a Glance that he is sure enjoying himself. Ranse now began to go against the a la Carte Gag. The Menu was prepared by a Near-French Chef. For Fear that People might find Fault with the Food he always smothered it and covered it over with Goo.

Ranse began to find out that Goulasch meant Boiled Dinner with Perfumery in it, and also that there were seven different names for Hash. The only Thing that saved it from being Hash was the Piece of Lemon Peel tucked on the Side.

Ranse was not very strong for the French Cooking. Sometimes he would find himself Chicken-Hungry and he would order what he thought was Chicken and he would get a half section of cold storage Poulet covered with Armor Plate, a neat Ruffle around the Ankle and an Olive reposing on the Bosom. If he ordered Ice Cream he got something resembling a sample Paper Weight from the Quarries at Bedford, Indiana. And the Buckwheat Cakes! They looked like Doilies and tasted like Blotters. And the Demi-Tasse is an Awful Joke to spring on the Man who wants a Cup of Coffee.

Here was the Hon. Ransom, rich and prosperous and apparently happy, but in reality he was Dead Sore. Things appeared to be coming very Soft for him and yet that which he wanted most of all he could not get. He wanted the real old simon-pure Home Cooking. He recalled the Happy Days of Bean Soup and Punkin Pie and Cottage Cheese. Time and again he would see one of those old Friends on a Score-Card in a Restaurant and he would order it and get some Fake Imitation with Smilax all around the edges. So, after awhile, he became discouraged and ate all the Junk that was set before him—Dope, Lemon Peel, Floral Decoration and all.

Often he would go to Banquets that cost as much as Ten a Throw. He would dally with Fish that had Glue Dressing on top of it and Golf Balls lying alongside. He would tackle Siberian Clush that had Hair Tonic floating on top of it. Then the Petrified Quail and the Cheese that should have been served in 1884. Often, sitting at these Magnificent Spreads, he thought to himself that he would willingly trade all the Tiffany Water on the Table for one Goblet of real Buttermilk.

Some Lovely People.

After Ransom had insulted his Digestive Apparatus for many years with the horrible Concoctions of the Gents' Cafe he resolved to go back to his native Town and visit some of his Blood Relations so that he could get at least one more Crack at Real American Grub.

He wrote that he was coming and his Kin became greatly Agitated.

"Our celebrated Cousin, the Hon. Ransom Peabody, is coming to visit us," they said. "We must make unusual Preparations to receive the big Battleship. He is Rich and High-Toned and has been living at one of those $6-a-Day Palaces, and we must cut a big Melon when he shows up. He is accustomed to City Food and we must not insult him with ordinary Provender."

So they began framing up Dishes out of a Subscription Cook Book purchased the year before from a Lady with Gold Glasses and a grand flow of Language.

The Hon. Ransom arrived late one Evening and all Night he lay awake in the Spare Bed-Room, gloating over the prospect of a Home Breakfast.

"Me for the Sausage Cakes with the good old Sage rubbed into them," said Hanse. "I will certainly show the Buckwheats how to take a Joke and the way I'll dip into that Coffee will be a Caution. And talk about those Eggs direct from the Hen!"

He arose early, but had to wait two Hours. As he was from the City, the Family had postponed Breakfast until nine o'clock. When he faced up to the Table he was Wolfish. First they gave him Grape Fruit au Kirsch. Then the Finger Bowl with the cute Rose Leaves floating idly on the dimpled Surface. Then a dainty Lamb Chop with an ornamental Fence around it and a sweet little cup of Cocoa in the China that Uncle Henry bought at the World's Fair. Then French Toast and Eggs a la Gazaza, with Christmas Trees stuck into them.

The Hon. Ransom arose and howled like a Siberian Wolf, which was Impolite of him. Before he went Home he did manage to get a little real Eating, but every one said he was very Eccentric to prefer such a simple dish as Fried Chicken.

MORAL.

Hurry up and get it before the Chef and the Cook-Book have us entirely Civilized.

Couldn't Pass.

Lawrence had just cried: "Don't give up the ship."

"I've got to," answered his subordinate. "I failed in the test walk."

Herewith the hero expired.

Intelligence Will Be the Capital of the Future.

By JEAN JULES JUSSERAND, French Ambassador to the United States.

INTELLIGENCE is the source of power which more and more will set the big human factory in motion. The ROLE OF MONEY IS CHANGING, and, colossal as is the part it plays in modern enterprises, it has a more and more marked tendency to yield in importance to that other source of power, that old form of capital, INTELLIGENCE.

AS YEARS PASS AND INVENTIONS MULTIPLY AND OUR WANTS BECOME GREATER INTELLIGENCE WILL BECOME THE TRUEST CAPITAL, WHILE MONEY AND THE REST WILL BE BUT COUNTERS TO REPRESENT IT.

To this transformation in the form of capital can be attributed the splendid efforts tried of late to IMPROVE THE CONDITIONS OF THE WORKMAN AND MAKE HAPPINESS EASIER OF ACCESS TO HIM by placing at his disposal not mere pecuniary allowances, but the intelligence and experience of those possessed of the new capital, intelligence.

When considering these problems one is struck by the quantity of useful help which consists in more information, in ATTENTION BEING DRAWN TO FACTS UNOBSERVED BY THE WORKINGMAN HIMSELF, too busy in the day and too tired at night. Many of the PROBLEMS OF HIS LIFE SHOULD BE STUDIED by those who have more time and knowledge and the solutions submitted to him. Of this sort, for example, is the problem of food.

Intelligence can help the workingmen better than money and yet represent a considerable profit for those willing to learn—the work done by Dr. Landouzy in telling the workingmen of France what sort of food is best for them, according to their professions, and what it will cost.

Rainfall the Source Of Our Prosperity.

By Professor W. J. McGEE, Secretary of the Inland Waterways Commission.

TWO hundred trillion cubic feet of water on an average fall on the surface of the United States every year. This to the minds of most people is but a lot of figures—a two with a string of ciphers. To be more explicit, it equals about ten Mississippis, and that volume of water is the ENTIRE BASIS OF OUR PROSPERITY.

With the ten Mississippis falling upon the land of the United States every year two Mississippis run off. Thus one-fifth of the waterfall from the heavens flows into the sea. Of the eight Mississippis remaining about five are absorbed, passing off into the air to be precipitated again and again. A fraction, in part, passes into the earth and slowly reaches the oceans, while another fraction is consumed, passing into chemical combinations, such as plant growth, etc.

* * *

What we want to do is to MINIMIZE THE WASTE OF WATER AND MAXIMIZE THE BENEFITS which must accrue to the citizens and country by proper CONSERVATION of water supply.

IF WE SO CONTROL THE WATER THAT THE RIVERS SHALL FLOW IN UNIFORM STAGE WE WILL SOLVE THE PROBLEM OF INLAND NAVIGATION AND MAKE THE UNITED STATES RICHER BY A THOUSAND PER CENT THAN IT IS TODAY.

In order to do this we must equalize the run of the streams at the heads of the rivers, and this may be done by dams and reservoirs and scientific cultivation of the soil along the courses of both streams and rivers. The levees of the lower Mississippi have done a magnificent work, but the PREVENTION OF FLOODS is better far than all the levees in the world.

What we want to do is to GET BACK TO NATURE in dealing with water—first, to prevent floods, and, second, to compel the water to run clear and pure. It is a fact that each year the rivers of the mainland of the UNITED STATES POUR INTO THE SEA A THOUSAND MILLIONS OF TONS OF RICHEST SOIL MATTER in the form of suspended sediment, an impost greater than all our land taxes combined and a commensurate INJURY TO COMMERCE in the lower rivers, which are rendered capricious and difficult of control by this unstable load.

THE DIFFERENCE IN THE POWER VALUE ALONE BETWEEN CONTROLLED AND UNCONTROLLED STREAMS WOULD IN TEN YEARS PAY THE ENTIRE COST OF STREAM CONTROL IN THE UNITED STATES. AND THIS, COUPLED WITH THE BILLION DOLLAR LOSS EVERY YEAR THROUGH SOIL EROSION, DUE TO FLOODS, WOULD CONSTRUCT A COMPREHENSIVE SYSTEM OF WATER CONTROL IN THE UNITED STATES.

Enforce All Laws or None.

By Governor CHARLES E. HUGHES of New York.

WE have too much of a tendency today to RUSH a law for remedies for existing evils, the evils that are based upon questions of individual morality and individual narrow mindedness, of individual evil or of the individual lack of this or that virtue. We are too apt to pass laws and the moment a law is passed to say this or that evil has been exterminated and wiped out, while we know as a matter of fact that it is not the PASSING of a law—it is the ENFORCING of the law alone—that can remedy an evil, and the more laws you pass that are not enforced the more you are apt to LESSEN THE RESPECT WHICH THE PEOPLE PAY TO THEM and the less you are apt to improve their natural moral tone.

ALL LAWS SHOULD BE ENFORCED OR NO LAWS SHOULD BE ENFORCED. A LAW SHOULD EITHER BE ENFORCED OR REPEALED, BUT IT OFTEN TAKES A GREAT DEAL MORE MORAL COURAGE TO RECOMMEND THE REPEAL OF A LAW WHICH IS HAVING NO EFFECT AT ALL ON THE PEOPLE THAN TO RECOMMEND THE PASSAGE OF A LAW WHICH IS INTENDED TO AFFECT THE MORALS OF THE PEOPLE.

ORDER NISI.

In re Estate of Ellen Bradley, deceased.
In the Orphans' Court for Garrett County.

Ordered, this 7th day of January, in the year 1909, by the Orphans' Court for Garrett county, that the sale made and reported in the above cause by William E. Walsh, Executor, be ratified and confirmed, unless cause to the contrary thereof be shown on or before the 9th day of February, 1909; provided, a copy of this order be published in some newspaper published in Garrett county, once a week for three consecutive weeks before the 29th day of January, 1909.

The report states the amount of sales to be $550.

E. E. FRIEND,
Register of Wills.

True Copy, Test:
E. E. FRIEND, Register of Wills.

TRUSTEES' SALE

OF VALUABLE

Real Estate

Near Cranesville, Preston County, West Virginia.

Under and by virtue of a power of sale contained in a Deed of Trust from Bert C. Feather and Lillian B. Feather, his wife, to the undersigned Trustees, D. Lindley Sloan and Edward H. Sincell, bearing date the 27th day of December, 1905, and duly recorded in Liber E. Z. T. No. 51, folio 5 8, etc., one of the Mortgage Records of Garrett county, Md., and also recorded in Trust Deed Book No. 13, page 368, among the Records of Preston county, West Virginia, the said Trustees, default having occurred under the covenants contained under said Deed of Trust, hereby give notice, that they or either of them, as provided, will offer at public auction on the premises to the highest bidder, on

FRIDAY,

The 29th Day of January,

1909, at the hour of 1 o'clock P. M., for the hereinafter described real estate, situate in Garrett county, Maryland, and at the hour of 1:30 o'clock, P. M., for the hereinafter described real estate, situate in Preston county West Virginia, all of the following described real estate, lying and being partly in Garrett county, Maryland, and partly in Preston county, West Virginia, and constituting the

"HOME FARM"

of the Late Michael E. Feather.

1. Beginning for the first parcel at a stone in the 1st line of a tract of land called "The Diadem" 65 poles from the beginning corner of said tract, and also in the 11th line of a tract of land called "Recourse," patented by the State of Maryland on the 12th day of May, 1796, and running thence with the 1st line of "The Diadem," North 43¾ degrees East, 120 poles to a stone heap and a birch, corner to Edmund Albright's land, thence with said Albright's and John E. Otto's line, North 66½ degrees West, 169 poles to a stone and a small red oak, the beginning corner of said Otto's land, thence South 25 degrees West, 17 poles and ¾ links to a stone, West 20 poles to a stone, South 1½ degrees East, 231 poles to a stone to M. H. Frankhouser's corner, thence South 86½ degrees East 88½ poles to a stone, thence North 33½ degrees West, 36½ poles to a stone and pointers, thence North 3½ degrees East, 70 poles to the place of beginning, containing 125 acres, more or less, excepting, however, from the operation of this deed of trust the quantity of 23½ acres of said land which was conveyed by the said Feather and wife to Edgar F. Jenkins by deed dated the 22nd day of April, 1901, and recorded in Liber E. Z. T. No. 40, folio 3 5, one of the Land Records of Garrett county, Md.

2. All that other portion of the above described home farm of the late Michael E. Feather, beginning for the same at a stake in a tract of land owned by C. L. Falkenstein, in the center of a spring and West 100 poles to a stone, thence South 25 degrees West, 17 poles and 7 links, South 29 degrees West 11 poles, South 30 degrees West, 17 poles, South 12 degrees West, 37 poles, South 16½ degrees West, 46 poles, South 2 degrees West, 34 poles at the end of a lane (the above calls following from the end of the first line), thence with lane leading from Cranesville to Song Run North 80 degrees East, 35 poles to a stone above the barn, thence South 44 degrees East, 9 poles and 15 links, East, 2 poles and 8 links, South 47 degrees East, 5 poles and 19 links to a stone, South 2 degrees West, 92 poles to a stake in J. C. Feather's line, and with said line South 87½ degrees East, 73 poles to a stone in M. H. Frankhouser's line, thence with said line North 3½ degrees East, 41 poles to a stake, thence North 201 poles to the beginning, containing 150 acres, more or less, and being the same property which was conveyed by the said Bert C. Feather and wife to John G. Elsey and upon which the said Elsey now resides.

This property is one of the finest and best improved farms in the Cranesville section. On it is a fine DWELLING HOUSE and a large BANK BARN and other necessary outbuildings and a good ORCHARD and a large part of the land is in a high state of cultivation.

TERMS OF SALE—As prescribed by said deed of trust: Cash on the day of sale. Conveyancing at cost of purchaser.

D. LINDLEY SLOAN,
EDWARD H. SINCELL,
Trustees.

Mortgagee's Sale

OF VALUABLE

Real Estate

Near Loch Lynn Heights, Garrett County, Md.

Under and by virtue of the power of sale contained in a mortgage from George P. White and Rachael R. White, his wife, and Benjamin F. Crane and Civilla C. Crane, his wife, to J. Gilbert Selby, bearing date the 30th day of September, 1901, and duly recorded in Liber E. Z. T., No. 41, folio 10, etc., one of the Mortgage Records of Garrett county, Maryland, default having occurred under the covenants contained in said mortgage, the undersigned attorney named in said mortgage hereby gives notice that on

SATURDAY,

30th Day of January, 1909,

at the hour of eleven o'clock a. m., in front of the First National Bank Building, in the town of Oakland, Maryland, he will offer at public sale to the highest bidder all that part of

MILITARY LOT NO. 947,

situate, lying and being in Garrett County, Maryland, containing

SIX ACRES AND 75 PERCHES

of land, and fully described by courses and distances in a deed for the same to the said George P. White and Benjamin F. Crane, from Annie J. Phoebus, dated the 17th day of August, 1898, and duly recorded in Liber E. Z. T., No. 34, folio 526, etc., one of the Land Records of Garrett county, Maryland.

This Property is improved by an Ice Pond and Ice House and contains several eligible Building Sites.

TERMS OF SALE—As prescribed by said mortgage, cash on the day of sale.

EDWARD H. SINCELL,
Attorney for Mortgagee named in said Mortgage.

GIVING MEDICINE

When the illness first appears is the easiest and surest way to cure. A supply of simple remedies of recognized merit should be in every household. We carry a full assortment of such remedies. We shall be glad to assist you in selecting those most effective in the early stages of the most common ailments.

OAKLAND PHARMACY
JOS. E. HARNED, Proprietor,
OAKLAND, MD.

CHILDREN MAKE CONFECTIONERY

a serious matter for the honest candy maker. He must produce a flavor that will satisfy their natural appetites for sweets. He must be careful that his products must be harmless and wholesome.

THE PURITY OF OUR CANDY

is beyond question. None but the best materials are used in even the lowest priced confectionery we sell. As to the flavor, well, buy a box and let the children be the judges—we'll abide by their decision.

OAKLAND MODEL STEAM
HENRY LAUER BAKERY Proprietor

NOTICE OF STOCKHOLDERS' MEETING.

The regular annual meeting of the stockholders of the First National Bank of Kitzmillerville, Maryland, will be held at its banking house on

Tuesday, January 12, 1909,

from 1 to 2 o'clock P. M., for the purpose of electing a board of directors for the ensuing year and for the transaction of any other business that may be brought before them.

E. J HAMILL, Cashier.

NOTICE OF STOCKHOLDERS' MEETING.

The regular meeting of the stockholders of the Garrett National Bank of Oakland, Maryland, will be held at its banking house on

Tuesday, January 12, 1909,

at 2 o'clock P. M., for the purpose of electing a board of directors for the ensuing year, and for the transaction of any other business that may come before them.

S. T. JONES, Cashier.

NOTICE OF STOCKHOLDERS' MEETING.

The regular annual meeting of the stockholders of the First National Bank of Oakland, Maryland, will be held at its banking house on

Tuesday, January 12, 1909,

from 1 to 2 o'clock P. M., for the purpose of electing a board of directors for the ensuing year and for the transaction of any other business that may be brought before them.

R. E. SLIGER, Cashier.

NOTICE OF STOCKHOLDERS' MEETING.

The annual meeting of the Garrett County Telephone Company will be held at Hoyes, Maryland,

January 4th, 1909,

at the hour of 10 O'clock for the purpose of electing a board of directors for the coming year and any other business that may be brought before it.

C. V. GUARD, Sec'y.

NOTICE OF STOCKHOLDERS' MEETING.

Pursuant to the required legal notice a meeting of the stockholders of the First National Bank of Friendsville, Maryland, will be held at its banking house on

Tuesday, January 12, 1909,

at 10 o'clock A. M. for the purpose of electing a board of directors for the ensuing year and for the transaction of such other business that may lawfully be done.

R. C. McCANDLISH, Cashier.

Notice to Creditors.

This is to give notice, That the subscriber of Garrett county, hath obtained from the Orphans' Court of Garrett County, in Maryland, Letters of Administration on the personal estate of

JOHN W. BOWERS,

late of Garrett county, deceased. All persons having claims against the deceased are hereby warned to exhibit the same, with vouchers thereof legally authenticated to the subscriber, on or before the 29th day of April next; they may otherwise by law be excluded from all benefit of said estate. All persons knowing themselves indebted to said estate are requested to make immediate payment.

Given under my hand this 26th day of November, 1908.

FLORENCE M. BOWERS,
Administratrix,
Dodson, Md.

The Republican for Job Work.

THE REPUBLICAN.

VOLUME 32. OAKLAND, MARYLAND, THURSDAY, JANUARY 14, 1909. NUMBER 46

ALEX. C. MASON WAS APPOINTED ROAD ENGINEER

For The Term of Four Years by the County Commissioners—Other Appointments.

The new road law for Garrett county which became effective on September 1st last, and under which the appointment of road supervisors and the road engineer for the county was made last week by the Board of County Commissioners, will be given its initial test during the coming twelve months.

Under the provisions of the new law it was incumbent upon the voters of the various districts to submit to the Board the names of four taxpayers, two from each political party, said nominations to be made at the primaries of the respective districts, and from this list the Commissioners are compelled to select the name of one for district supervisor. All the districts with the exception of Nos. 9 and 11 complied with this section of the law, and from the names thus submitted the appointments of district supervisors were made last Friday morning just prior to the adjournment of the Commissioners' meeting.

Another important provision of the law is that creating the office of Road Engineer, who is to have direct supervision over the district supervisors and who is given power to direct the repairs to roads and bridges and see that the work of the supervisors is properly done. The office is a most important one and the power of appointment is vested in the Commissioners who made an excellent selection when they named Mr. Alexander C. Mason as engineer. His tenure of office is for the period of four years at a salary of $800 per year and he cannot be removed except for malfeasance in office.

The district supervisors named by the Commissioners are as follows:

District No. 1, Harry C. Hershman; No. 2, William W. Frazee; No. 3, David [illegible]pe; No. 4, George L. Michael; No. 5, Adam Hetrick; No. 6, Robert L. Friese; No. 7, Andrew Shartzer; No. 8, James Aronhalt; No. 9, James Carey; No. 10, James E. Lish; No. 11, Jonas E. Wampler; No. 12, Jacob Brenneman; No. 13, Wallace Junkins; No. 14, John Markley..

The Commissioners also appointed a number of constables to fill vacancies. In Grantsville District Nicholas Murphy was commissioned to fill a vacancy which has existed for nearly a year. John L. Wheeler was appointed in Deer Park district to fill the vacancy made by the resignation of Constable Miller. John Dishong was appointed in place of Lloyd S. Robeson, removed for cause by the Commissioners, in District No. 11, and F. M Bittinger was appointed in District No. 12.

Thursday morning a number of Bloomington residents appeared with a petition to the Commissioners to require the Piedmont Water Company, which furnishes water for the town of Bloomington, to give the plaintiffs a lower rate for water. Under the present rate the Bloomington people pay the Piedmont company 60 per cent. of the gross receipts, retaining 40 per cent. The Bloomington people contended that the Commissioners were empowered under the law to set the rate to be charged consumers in this county. The Commissioners held that they had no jurisdiction in the matter and dismissed the petition.

MOUNTAIN LAKE PARK.

It was expected that the ice harvest would have commenced Monday last, but the thaw and rain of Sunday and Monday have again caused a delay. Should the present cold snap continue work will be commenced next Monday.

The Hayden Bros.' stock of goods was sold Saturday last at receivers' sale to Dixon & Kelso of Oakland. The store will be opened in the early spring with an entirely new stock.

Interest is increasing at the Loch Lynn U. B. church. Eight were received into membership Sunday morning, several have been converted since and a number are at the altar.

The meeting at Deer Park is increasing in interest. At the close of this series of meetings Rev. Bolton will commence the meeting at Bond, and at the close of special services there will begin here.

Rev. Bolton's Sunday School class of young men now numbers thirty-four. Let us have a young ladies' class conducted on the same lines.

Mr. and Mrs. Roy Spiker, of Keyser, are in the Park visiting friends. Mr. Spiker is employed on the B. & O., but is off for a few days on sick leave.

Mr. Jonathan White of Loch Lynn, died Tuesday night, after an illness of more than three months, aged about seventy-five years. The interment was in the White cemetery this afternoon after funeral services in the United Brethren church, Loch Lynn, conducted by Rev. Chenowith, of the Baptist church.

Bar Association Library Moved.

Yesterday and today a number of men were engaged in removing the Bar Association library from the First National Bank building, where rooms had been occupied for several years, to the new court house where a very handsome room has been set apart for the Association by the Court House Commission. The new library is located on the second floor of the court house opposite the court chamber.

Subscribe for the Republican.

ROAD ENGINEERS ARE AT WORK SOUTH OF OAKLAND

Survey Is Being Made of Road Leading to Northwestern Turnpike.

For the time being the work of the engineering corps under direction of the State Highway Commission, in making the survey of the Hooppole road north of Oakland, has been discontinued, and the surveyors are now laying out the proposed route for the road leading from Oakland over the Oakland West Union road to the old Northwestern Turnpike, south of town. This branch of the work was started on Monday morning and is being prosecuted with vigor by the corps.

The survey over the Hooppole was carried on as far as Sand Flat, six miles north of town, at which point they abandoned it and will resume operations on that road as soon as the work south of Oakland is completed, which will be within two weeks.

THE PROPOSED STATE ROAD

"Citizen" Suggests Some Things That May Be of Benefit to the Public.

Oakland, Md., Jan'y 13, 1909.

To the Editor of The Republican:

As a citizen and tax payer of Garrett county, I am deeply interested in the welfare and development of our great county.

Practically, all the undeveloped coal wealth of the State is within the borders of our county, and when this source of material wealth is developed, the eyes of the whole State of Maryland will be turned in our direction. We occupy a unique position as a coal producing section for the reason that we are nearer to the seaboard than than any other coal field, and our minerals will be sought after within a short time to such an extent that great and material prosperity will come to our people. But while this is all so, the internal development of the county as a great farming section depends upon the means of communications afforded the people to market their products and the facilities in the way of good roads given them to get over the country and reach the points in our county where their business is transacted.

In this connection, I am reminded that the Good Roads Commission at their meeting in Baltimore last month adopted a route for the proposed State roads in Garrett county, and while no doubt the Commission, in its wisdom, thought it was doing an act that would result in the greatest good to the greatest number of people in the county, the work which has been done since that time under the direction of the Commission certainly does not prove that that body is entirely familliar with what would be the best route for the proposed road. For instance, the corps of engineers that has been engaged in the neighborhood of Oakland for the past two or three weeks in locating the proposed road north from Oakland has confined its attention to the Hooppole road, going up hill and down, following the present location, when a route with a far better grade could be easily obtained by leaving the present location at certain points and again utilizing the bed of the present road.

We assume that the engineers are simply working under instructions received from the Chief Engineer of the Commission, but we venture the assertion that while Mr. Crosby may have before him, in his Baltimore office, topographical maps showing the contours of the county through which the Hooppole road runs, if he were to come upon the ground and personally go over the same, he would find that he could get a far better route for the road than the present one, provided of course, he desires to avoid cuts and fills in the construction of the road.

Cut and fills, in the construction of a road, are costly propositions, and in view of the fact that the amount of money to be extended upon the proposed roads in the county is limited, it seems to me that there is no surplus to be consumed in making expensive cuts and fills, such as we are informed is proposed to be made in the construction of the Hooppole road. Would it not be well for the Chief Engineer of the Commission, before he finally acts upon the report of his engineers and undertakes the actual construction of the road, to personally investigate the different routes between Oakland and Deep Creek, and select the one having the best grade and the one upon which, between the points mentioned, the money to be expended will go the farthest?

There are other matters, in connection with these proposed roads and routes, from the Allegany county line to Oakland and beyond, that I shall speak of at another time. CITIZEN.

STANDARD OIL COMPANY HAS EYE ON MARYLAND

Stated Will Pipe Gas to Baltimore and Build Line Through Oakland.

Much interest was aroused in Oakland over the announcement of a project of the Standard Oil Company to supply Baltimore with natural gas. It is known that a survey has been made east for a natural gas pipe line from the Parkersburg field. Mr. Justin D. Northrop, general manager of the West Virginia and Maryland Gas Company, which supplies the George's Creek mining region and points in West Virginia along the Western Maryland railroad, stated that his company was not interested in the project, but he had knowledge of the survey made by another company. Capt. Robert H. Gordon, counsel for the West Virginia and Maryland Gas Company, when asked about the proposed line to Baltimore, said he did not care to say anything on the subject. At the time the West Virginia and Maryland Gas Company sought a franchise from the last Maryland Legislature it was charged that the Standard Oil Company was behind the local company, but this was denied then as it is now.

A representative of the Standard Oil Company says that the company is approaching Baltimore with a pipe line through which it proposes to supply the city with natural gas from the Parkersburg region of West Virginia.

Negotiations are under way with the Consolidated Company of Baltimore, to distribute the gas through its mains, he said, but should terms not be agreed upon the Standard proposes to deal direct with consumers.

The price, it was stated, would probably be not more than 50 cents per 1,000 feet.

The Standard Company, it was said, would be ready to begin the supply in 30 to 60 days.

Lateral lines to Washingtan, Cumberland Hagerstown, Frederick, Westminster and other places are said to be in contemplation.

GORTNER.

Daniel Lichty, who has been spending the past year in the far West, returned home on last Wednesday accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. John Stutzman, of Millersburg, Ohio.

Fred Gortner is visiting his son, J. C. Gortner, at Albright, W. Va., this week.

John Fulmer expects to move his large saw mill on the D. C. Slabach farm in the near future.

Jonas Lichty, of Boynton, Pa., who was visiting his parents, Mr. and Mrs. S. J. Lichty, at this place for a week or more, returned to his home on last Saturday evening.

Preaching next Sunday morning at 10.30 by the German Baptist Brethren. Everybody welcome. WILLIE

RYANS GLADE.

Leap year has come and gone and still a few old bachelors on hand to be disposed of. Terms, very reasonable.

Our school resumed Monday having been closed since before the holidays. Our teacher was engaged last week, so we are informed, in moving his wife and personal effects to Mt. Lake Park where they will make their home in the future.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Ashby, of Crellin, were visiting Messrs. N. B. and Elisha Harvey Saturday and Sunday.

Mr. Benj. Moon, of Nebraska, and Mr. and Mrs. Bell White, of California, were visiting among their many friends in this section last week.

Mrs. J. B. Shockey and two children are spending a few days with friends at Stoyer.

Mr. J. E. Lish was out fox hunting recently and we presume he was wearing his magnifying eye glasses for when his dog chased the fox within twenty paces of him he fired the contents of his shotgun into a tree six or eight feet over the fox's back.

Messrs. Albert Steyer and J. B. Shockey captured a very fine raccoon a few nights ago.

Mr. Wayman Beckman is busy hauling pulp wood to Stoyer.

List of Letters.

Chas. Browning, Zellia Cooper, Mrs. Louie DeWitt, Richard E. Garlitz, Mrs. Jessa Latman, Mrs. Bell Lechlete, Chas. McNemas, Mrs. Synthia Miller, Mrs. P. C. Nethkin, Lee E. Tawney, John C. Wilson.

NATIONAL BANK ELECTIONS.

Officers and Directors Chosen for the Following Year by Stockholders.

Under the provisions of the National banking laws elections were held on Tuesday of this week, the 12th inst., by the stockholders of every National bank in the country for the purpose of choosing directors for the ensuing year.

In Garrett county there are five such institutions and in these elections resulted as follows:

Garrett National of Oakland—Daniel E. Offutt, president; Gilmor S. Hamill, vice president; Scott T. Jones, cashier; G. A. Fraley, assistant cashier; directors, Daniel E. Offutt, George W. Legge, Gilmor S. Hamill, John M. Davis, John T. Mitchell, W. R. Stull, Scott T. Jones.

First National of Oakland—Fred. A. Thayer, president; M. N. Wilson, vice president; R. E. Sliger, cashier; M. R. Hamill, assistant cashier; directors, Fred. A. Thayer, M. N. Wilson, N. U. Bond, A. G. Sturgiss, E. E. Sollars, W. A. Smith, R. A. Ravenscroft, Owen Treacy, C. E. Ellithorp, C. E. Hilleary, E. H. Sincell, D. M. Dixon.

First National of Friendsville—L. E. Friend, president; John W. McCullough, vice president; R. C. McCandlish, cashier; directors, L. E. Friend, J. W. McCullough, W. W. Savage, D. S. Custer, H. M. Rumbaugh, W. H. H. Friend, H. R. DeWitt, John T. Geary, R. C. McCandlish.

First National of Kitzmillerville—R. A. Smith, president; C. E. Hilleary, vice president; E. J. Hamill, cashier; directors; R. A. Smith, C. E. Hilleary, R. A. Ravenscroft, F. A. Thayer, E. E. Clark, John M. Davis, A. C. Smith, C. M. Wilson, Dr. H. P. Copeland, Wade Sapp, L. C. Bray, L. C. Hamill, W. G. Drinkwater, S. F. Bender, J. F. Bishop.

First National of Grantsville—C. H. Jennings, president; U. M. Stanton, vice president; J. O. Getty cashier, directors, C. H. Jennings, G. C. Keller, W. A. Hitchens, U. M. Stanton, Eli Stanton, Frank Watts, J. O. Getty.

FIKE.

Mr. Lincoln and his partner are in this section having their coal leases extended.

A series of meetings will begin at Fearer in the Church of God on the 12th of January. These meetings will be conducted by Rev. Cunningham.

The people in this section are getting a great many new things. Even the telephone companies have new names. The Connecting Co. is now known as The Vinegar Valley Telephone Co.; The Farmers' Union line is now called The Aby Union line. CARTER.

FOR SALE—A National Cash Register. Offutt & Renninger.

50 TO 100 KILLED IN COAL MINE EXPLOSION

Second Accident At Lick Branch, W. Va., In Two Weeks.

BLUEFIELD, W. Va., Jan. 12—In a second explosion at the Lick Branch Mine, at Switchback, about 20 miles from here, at 8:30 o'clock this morning, between 50 and 100 miners were killed.

The number may be largely increased as from 280 to 300 miners were at work at the time and it had not been ascertained up to 12 o'clock this afternoon how many had survived.

On December 28 last an explosion occurred in this mine, which up to that time had been regarded as a model mine. On that occasion the cause was not ascertained and the death list reached fifty.

The last body in connection with that explosion was brought to the surface only last Fridry, after which the State mine inspectors declared that the mine was again safe and that work could be resumed.

The majority of the miners who were engaged to resume work at the mine were Americans, with a few foreigners and some colored workers as laborers.

It was stated that the mine was examined early today before the new shift went to work and it was reported to be perfectly safe. In spite of this, however, soon after work was begun the explosion occurred, with a death list that will probably far exceed that of the December explosion.

The mine is the property of the Pocahontas Consolidated Colleries Company and is situated in the Tug river district, a territory which until the December explosion had been unusually free from gas.

Orphans' Court Proceedings.

The semi-monthly sessions of the Orphans' Court for Garrett county was held on Tuesday with Judges Fitzwater, Kamp and Moon presiding and Register Friend present, when the following business was transacted:

Letters of Administration granted—To Urias McKenzie, on the personal estate of Ambrose McKenzie; to Mrs. Rose Mitchell, on the personal estate of Fred. R. Mitchell; to Benj. F. Crane, on the personal estate of Civilla C. Crane; to W. H. Augustine, on the personal estate of Mahala A. Duckworth.

Amos Bowser was appointed guardian of the minor children of B. F. Bowser.

Lot For Sale.

The best building lot in Oakland; opposite new courthouse, at reasonable price. Apply to owner.

HENRY LAUER,
Oakland, Md.

See The Republican for Job Printing.

DIXON & KELSO

Attend Our Sale

OF

Dry Goods

Beginning Next

Monday Morning

Yours to Please. DIXON & KELSO.

E. A. WEIMER.

SWEEPING REDUCTIONS

IN

CLOTHING

I find in going over my stock I have too much Clothing on hand—especially in the cheaper grades, and to move it out quickly I have decided to sell about

100 Suits for Men and Boys at Just One-Half the Regular Price;

about that many more at one-third off, and a lot more at one-fourth off regular prices. Also a lot of separate PANTS at reduced prices. Lot of OVERCOATS at half-price.

RAINCOATS one-fourth off.

It will pay you to buy now.

Yours Truly. E. A. WEIMER.

NEXT DOOR TO THE POSTOFFICE OAKLAND, MD

INTO THE PRIMITIVE

BY ROBERT AMES BENNET

ILLUSTRATIONS BY RAY WALTERS

COPYRIGHT 1908, BY A.C. McCLURG & CO.

CHAPTER I.—The story opens with the shipwreck of the steamer on which Miss Genevieve Leslie, an American heiress, Lord Winthrope, an Englishman, and Tom Blake, a brusque American, were passengers. The three were tossed upon an uninhabited island and were the only ones not drowned. Blake recovered from a drunken stupor.

CHAPTER II.—Blake, shunned on the boat, because of his roughness, became a hero as preserver of the helpless pair. The Englishman was suing for the hand of Miss Leslie. Blake started to swim back to the ship to recover what was left.

CHAPTER III.—Blake returned safely. Winthrope wasted his last match on a cigarette, for which he was scored by Blake. Their first meal was a dead fish.

CHAPTER IV.—The trio started a ten mile hike for higher land. Thirst attacked them. Blake was compelled to carry Miss Leslie on account of weariness. He taunted Winthrope.

CHAPTER V.—They entered the jungle. That night was passed roosting high in a tree.

CHAPTER VI.—The next morning they descended to the open again. All three constructed hats to shield themselves from the sun. They then feasted on cocoanuts, the only procurable food. Miss Leslie showed a liking for Blake, but detested his roughness.

CHAPTER VII.—Led by Blake they established a home in some cliffs. Blake found a fresh water spring.

CHAPTER VIII.—Miss Leslie faced an unpleasant situation. They planned their campaign.

CHAPTER IX.—Blake recovered his surveyor's magnifying glass, thus insuring fire. He started a jungle fire, killing a large leopard and smothering several cubs.

CHAPTER X.

Problems in Woodcraft.

IT WAS no pleasant sight that met Miss Leslie's gaze upon her return. The neatest of butchering can hardly be termed aesthetic; and Blake and Winthrope lacked both skill and tools. Between the penknife and an improvised blade of bamboo, they had flayed the two cubs and haggled off the flesh. The ragged strips, spitted on bamboo rods, were already searing in the fierce sun-rays.

Miss Leslie would have slipped into the hollow of the baobab with her armful of fagots and brush; but Blake waved a bloody knife above the body of the mother leopard, and beckoned the girl to come nearer.

"Hold on a minute, please," he said. "What did you find out?"

Miss Leslie drew a few steps nearer, and forced herself to look at the revolting sight. She found it still more difficult to withstand the odor of the fresh blood. Winthrope was pale and nauseated. The sight of his distress caused the girl to forget her own loathing. She drew a deep breath, and succeeded in countering Blake's expectant look with a half-smile.

"How well are you getting along!" she exclaimed.

"Didn't think you could stand it. But you've got grit all right, if you are a lady," Blake said admiringly. "Say, you'll make it yet! Now, how about the gully?"

"There is no place to climb up. It runs along like this, and then slopes down. But there is a cliff at the end, as high as these walls."

"Twenty feet," muttered Blake. "Confound the luck. It isn't that jump-off; but how in—how are we going to get up on the cliff? There's an everlasting lot of omelettes in those birds' nests. If only that bloomin'—how's that, Win, me b'y?—that bloomin', blawsted baobab was on t'other side. The wood's almost soft as punk. We could drive in pegs, and climb up the trunk."

"There are other trees beyond it," remarked Miss Leslie.

"Then maybe we can shin up—"

"I fear the branches that overhang the cliff are too slender to bear any weight."

"And it's too infernally high to climb up to this overhanging baobab limb"

"I say," ventured Winthrope, "if we had an ax, now, we might cut up one of the trees, and make a ladder."

"Oh, yes; and if we had a ladder, we might climb up the cliff!"

"But, Mr. Blake, is there not some way to cut down one of the trees? The tree itself would be a ladder if it fell in such a way as to lean against the cliff."

"There's only the penknife," answered Blake. "So I guess we'll have to scratch eggs off our menu card Spring leopard for ours! Now, if you really want to help, you might scrape the soup bones out of your boudoir, and fetch a lot more brush. It'll take a big fire to rid the hole of that cat smell."

"Will not the tree burn?"

"No; these hollow baobabs have green bark on the inside as well as out. Funny thing, that! We'd have to keep a fire going a long time to burn through."

"Yet it would burn in time?"

"Yes; but we're not going to—"

"Then why not burn through the trunk of one of those small trees, instead of chopping it down?"

"By—heck, Miss Jenny, you've got an American headpiece! Come on. Sooner we get the thing started, the better."

Neither Winthrope nor Miss Leslie was reluctant to leave the vicinity of the carcasses. They followed close after Blake, around the monstrous bole of the baobab. A little beyond it stood a group of slender trees, whose trunks averaged eight inches at the base. Blake stopped at the second one, which grew nearest to the seaward side of the cleft.

"Here's our ladder," he said. "Get some firewood. Pound the bushes, though, before you go poking into them. May be snakes here."

"Snakes?—oh!" cried Miss Leslie, and she stood shuddering at the danger she had already incurred.

The fire had burnt itself out on a bare ledge of rock between them and the baobab, and the clumps of dry brush left standing in this end of the cleft were very suggestive of snakes, now that Blake had called attention to the possibility of their presence.

He laughed at his hesitating companions. "Go on, go on! Don't squeal till you're bit. Most snakes hike out, if you give them half a chance. Take a stick each of you, and pound the bushes."

Thus urged, both started to work. But neither ventured into the thicker clumps. When they returned, with large armfuls of sticks and twigs, they found that Blake had used his glass to light a handful of dry bark out in the sun, and was nursing it into a small fire at the base of the tree, on the side next the cliff.

"Now, Miss Jenny," he directed, "you're to keep this going—not too big a fire—understand? Same time you can keep on fetching brush to fumigate your cat hole. It needs it, all right."

"Will not that be rather too much for Miss Leslie?" asked Winthrope.

"Well, if she'd rather come and rub brains on the skins,—Indian tan, you know,—or—"

"How can you mention such things before a lady?" protested Winthrope.

"Beg your pardon, Miss Leslie! you see, I'm not much used to ladies' company. Anyway, you've got to see and hear about these things. And now I'll have to get the strings for Win's bamboo bows. Come on, Win. We've got that old tabby to peel, and a lot more besides."

Miss Leslie's first impulse was to protest against being left alone, when at any moment some awful venomous serpent might come darting at her out of the brush or the crevices in the rocks. But her half-parted lips drew firmly together, and after a moment's hesitancy, she forced herself to the task which had been assigned her. The fire, once started, required little attention. She could give most of her time to gathering brush for the fumigation of the leopard den.

She had collected quite a heap of fuel at the entrance of the hollow, when she remembered that the place would first have to be cleared of its accumulation of bones. A glance at her companions showed that they were in the midst of tasks even more revolting. It was certainly disagreeable to do such things; yet, as Mr. Blake had said, others had to do them. It was now her time to learn. She could see him smile at her hesitation.

Stung by the thought of his half-contemptuous pity, she caught up a forked stick, and forced herself to enter the tree-cave. The stench met her like a blow. It nauseated and all but overpowered her. She stood for several moments in the center of the cavity, sick and faint. Had it been even the previous day, she would have run out into the open air.

Presently she grew a little more accustomed to the stench, and began to rake over the soft, dry mold of the den floor with her forked stick. Bones!—who had ever dreamed of such a mess of bones?— big bones and little bones and skulls; old bones, dry and almost buried; moldy bones; bones still half-covered with bits of flesh and gristle—the remnants of the leopard family's last meal.

At last all were scraped out and flung in a heap, three or four yards away from the entrance. Miss Leslie looked at the result of her labor with a satisfied glance, followed by a sigh of relief. Between the heat and her unwonted exercise, she was greatly fatigued. She stepped around to a shadier spot to rest.

With a start she remembered the fire.

When she reached it there were only a few dying embers left. She gathered dead leaves and shreds of fibrous inner bark, and knelt beside the dull coals to blow them into life. She could not bear the thought of having to confess her carelessness to Blake.

The hot ashes flew up in her face and powdered her hair with their gray dust; yet she persisted, blowing steadily until a shred of bark caught the sparks and flared up in a tiny flame. A little more, and she had a strong fire blazing against the tree trunk.

She rested a short time, relaxing both mentally and physically in the satisfying consciousness that Blake never should know how near she had come to failing in her trust.

Soon she became aware of a keen feeling of thirst and hunger. She rose, piled a fresh supply of sticks on the fire, and hastened back through the cleft toward the spring. Around the baobab she came upon Winthrope, working in the shade of the great tree. The three leopard skins had been stretched upon bamboo frames, and he was resignedly scraping at their inner surfaces with a smooth-edged stone. Miss Leslie did not look too closely at the operation.

"Where is—he?" she asked.

Winthrope motioned down the cleft.

"I hope he hasn't gone far. I'm half famished. Aren't you?"

"Really, Miss Genevieve, it is odd, you know. Not an hour since, the very thought of food—"

"And now you're as hungry as I am. Oh, I do wish he had not gone off just at the wrong time!"

"He went to take a dip in the sea. You know, he got so messed up over

By Evening She Had Her Tree-Cave in a Habitable Condition.

the nastiest part of the work, which I positively refused to do—"

"What's that beyond the bamboos? There's something alive!"

"Pray, don't be alarmed. It is—er—it's all right, Miss Genevieve, I assure you."

"But what is it? Such queer noises, and I see something alive!"

"Only the vlutures, if you must know. Nothing else, I assure you."

"Oh!"

"It is all out of sight from the spring. You are not to go around the bamboos until the—that is, not to-day."

"Did Mr. Blake say that?"

"Why, yes—to be sure. He also said to tell you that the cutlets were on the top shelf."

"You mean—?"

"His way of ordering you to cook our dinner. Really, Miss Genevieve, I should be pleased to take your place, but I have been told to keep to this. It is hard to take orders from a low fellow—very hard for a gentleman, you know."

Miss Leslie gazed at her shapely hands. Three days since she could not have conceived of their being so rough and scratched and dirty. Yet her disgust at their condition was not entirely unqualified.

"At least I have something to show for them," she murmured.

"I beg pardon," said Winthrope.

"Just look at my hands—like a servant's! And yet I am not nearly so ashamed of them as I would have fancied. It is very amusing, but do you know, I actually feel proud that I have done something—something useful, I mean."

"Useful?—I call it shocking, Miss Genevieve. It is simply vile that people of our breeding should be compelled to do such menial work. They write no end of romances about castways; but I fail to see the romance in scraping skins Indian fashion, as this fellow Blake calls it."

"I suppose, though, we should remember how much Mr. Blake is doing for us, and should try to make the best of the situation."

"It has no best. It is all a beastly muddle," complained Winthrope, and he resumed his nervous scraping at the big leopard skin.

The girl studied his face for a moment, and turned away. She had been trying so hard to forget.

He heard her leave, and called after, without looking up: "Please remember. He said to cook some meat."

She did not answer. Having satisfied her thirst at the spring, she took one of the bamboo rods, with its haggled blackening pieces of flesh, and returned to the fire. After some little experimenting, she contrived a way to support the rod beside the fire so that all the meat would roast without burning.

At first, keen as was her hunger, she turned with disgust from the flabby sun-seared flesh; but as it began to roast, the odor restored her appetite to full vigor. Her mouth fairly watered. It seemed as though Winthrope and Blake would never come. She heard their voices, and took the bamboo spit from the fire for the meat to cool. Still they failed to appear, and, unable to wait longer, she began to eat. The cub meat proved far more tender than that of the old leopard. She had helped herself to the second piece before the two men appeared.

"Hold on, Miss Jenny; fair play!" sang out Blake. "You've set to without tooting the dinner-horn. I don't blame you, though. That smells mighty good."

Both men caught at the hot meat with eagerness, and Winthrope promptly forgot all else in the animal pleasure of satisfying his hunger. Blake, though no less hungry, only waited to fill his mouth before investigating the condition of the protective tree ladder. The result of the attempt to burn the trunk did not seem encouraging to the others, and Miss Leslie looked away, that her face might not betray her, should he have an inkling of her neglect. She was relieved by the cheerfulness of his tone.

"Slow work, this fire business—eh? Guess, though, it'll go faster this afternoon. The green wood is killed and is getting dried out. Anyway, we've got to keep at it till the tree goes over. This spring leopard won't last long at the present rate of consumption, and we'll need the eggs to keep us going till we get the hang of our bows."

"What is that smoke back there?" interrupted Miss Leslie. "Can it be that the fire down the cleft has sprung up again?"

"No; it's your fumigation. You had plenty of brush on hand, so I heaved it into the hole and touched it off. While it's burning out you can put in time gathering ring grass and leaves for a bed."

"Would you and Mr. Winthrope mind breaking off some bamboos for me?"

"What for?"

Miss Leslie colored and hesitated. "I—I should like to divide off a corner of the place with a wall or screen."

Winthrope tried to catch Blake's eye; but the American was gazing at Miss Leslie's embarrassed face with a puzzled look. Her meaning dawned upon him, and he hastened to reply.

"All right, Miss Jenny. You can build your wall to suit yourself. But there'll be no hurry over it. Until the rains begin, Win and I'll sleep out in the open. We'll have to take turn about on watch at night, anyway, if we don't keep up a fire some other spotted kitty will be sure to come nosing up the gully."

"There must also be lions in the vicinity," added Winthrope.

Miss Leslie said nothing until after the last pieces of meat had been handed around and Blake sprang up to resume work.

"Mr. Blake," she called, in a low tone; "one moment, please. Would it save much bother if a door was made and you and Mr. Winthrope should sleep inside?"

"We'll see about that later," replied Blake, carelessly.

The girl bit her lip, and the tears started to her eyes. Even Winthrope had started off without expressing his appreciation. Yet he at least should have realized how much it had cost her to make such an offer.

By evening she had her tree-cave—house, she preferred to name it to herself—in a habitable condition. When the purifying fire had burnt itself out, leaving the place free from all odors other than the wholesome smell of wood smoke, she had asked Blake how she could rake out the ashes. His advice was to wet them down where they lay.

This was easier said than done. Fortunately the spring was only a few yards distant, and after many trips, with her palm-leaf hat for bowl, the girl carried enough water to sprinkle all the powdery ashes. Over them she strewed the leaves and grass which she had gathered while the fire was burning. The driest of the grass, arranged in a far corner, promised a more comfortable bed than had been her lot for the last three nights.

During this work she had been careful not to forget the fire at the tree. Yet when, near sundown, she called the third meal of leopard meat, Blake grumbled at the tree for being what he termed such a confounded tough proposition.

"Good thing there's lots of wood here, Win," he added. "We'll keep this fire going till the blamed thing topples over, if it takes a year."

"Oh, but you surely will not stay so far from the baobab to-night!" exclaimed Miss Leslie.

"Hold hard!" soothed Blake. "You've no license to get the jumps yet a while. We'll have another fire by the baobab. So you needn't worry."

A few minutes later they went back to the baobab, and Winthrop began helping Miss Leslie to construct a bamboo screen in the narrow entrance of the tree-cave, while Blake built the second fire.

As Winthrope was unable to tell time by the stars, Blake took the first watch. At sunset, following the engineer's advice, Winthrope lay down with his feet to the small watch-fire, and was asleep before twilight had deepened into night. Fagged out by the mental and bodly stress of the day, he slept so soundly that it seemed to him he hardly lost consciousness when he was roused by a rough hand on his forehead.

"What is it?" he mumbled.

"'Bout one o'clock," said Blake. "Wake up! I ran overtime, 'cause the morning watch is the toughest. But I can't keep 'wake any longer."

"I say, this is a beastly bore," remarked Winthrope, sitting up.

"Um-m," grunted Blake, who was already on his back.

Winthrope rubbed his eyes, rose wearily, and drew a blazing stick from the fire. With this upraised as a torch he peered around into the darkness and advanced towards the spring.

When, having satisfied his thirst, he returned somewhat hurriedly to the fire, he was startled by the sight of a pale face gazing at him from between the leaves of the bamboo screen.

"My dear Miss Genevieve, what is the matter?" he exclaimed.

"Hush! Is he asleep?"

"Like a top."

"Thank heaven! Good-night."

"Good-night—er—I say, Miss Genevieve—"

But the girl disappeared, and Winthrope, after a glance at Blake's placid face, hurried along the cleft to stack the other fire. When he returned he noticed two bamboo rods which Blake had begun to shape into bow staves. He looked them over, with a sneer at Blake's seemingly unskillful workmanship; but he made no attempt to finish the bows.

CHAPTER XI.

A Despoiled Wardrobe.

SOON after sunrise Miss Leslie was awakened by the snap and dull crash of a falling tree. She made a hasty toilet and ran out around the baobab. The burned tree, eaten half through by the fire, had been pushed over against the cliff by Blake and Winthrope. Both had already climbed up and now stood on the edge of the cliff.

"Hello, Miss Jenny!" shouted Blake. "We've got here at last. Want to come up?"

"Not now, thank you."

"It's easy enough. But you're right. Try your hand again at the cutlets, won't you? While they're frying we'll get some eggs for dessert. How does that strike you?"

"We have no way to cook them."

"Roast 'em in the ashes. So long!"

Miss Leslie cooked breakfast over the watchfire, for the other had been scattered and stamped out by the men when the tree fell. They came back in good time, walking carefully, that they might not break the eggs with which their pockets bulged. Between them, they had brought a round dozen and a half. Blake promptly began stowing all in the hot ashes, while Winthrope related their little adventure with unwonted enthusiasm.

"You should have come with us, Miss Genevieve," he began. "This time of day it is glorious on the cliff top. Though the rock is bare, there is a fine view—"

"Fine view of grub near the end," interpolated Blake.

"As, yes; the birds —you must take a look at them, Miss Genevieve! The sea end of the cliff is alive with them —hundreds and thousands, all huddled together and fighting for room. They are a sight, I assure you! They're plucky, too. It was well we took sticks with us. As it was, one of the gannets—boobies, Blake calls them—caught me a nasty nip when I went to lift her off the nest."

"Best way is to kick them off," explained Blake. "But the point is that we've hopped over the starvation stile. Understand? The whole blessed cliff end is an omelette waiting for our pan. Pass the leopardettes, Miss Jenny."

When the last bit of meat had disap-

TO BE CONTINUED.

Impatience Under Trials.

Horne: Adversity borrows its harrest sting from our impatience.

Growth of Great Cities.

In an interesting study of the growth of the world's great cities M. de Foville notes that in 1801 there were in Europe only twenty-two which had more than 100,000 inhabitants. These were London and Dublin, Paris, Marseilles and Lyons; Amsterdam; Berlin and Hamburg; Vienna, Naples, Rome, Milan, Venice and Palermo; Madrid and Barcelona; Lisbon; St. Petersburg, Moscow, Warsaw, Copenhagen; Constantinople. Two only of these cities had more than 500,000—London, 950,000; Paris, 500,000. Naples came third with 360 000, and Vienna, fourth, with 230,000.

Today there are in Europe 160 cities having more than 100,000 inhabitants, of which 55 have more than 250,000. There are 25 cities with more than half a million people and seven with more than a million. These are London, 4,750,000; Paris, 2,760,000; Berlin, 2,000,000; Vienna, 2,000,000; St. Petersburg, 1,430,000; Moscow, 1,340,000; Constantinople, 1,100,000.

In the same class with these he places the following cities of other parts of the world; New York, 4,110,000; Chicago, 2,049,000; Philadelphia, 1,440,000; Calcutta, 1,027,000; Singan, in China, 1,000,000. Strangely enough, he makes no mention of Tokyo, with its 1,818,655; Canton and Pekin, the population of which is estimated at 1,600,000 each; Buenos Ayres, with 1,000,000.

According to the World Almanac there are thirty-nine cities in the world having more than 500,000 population, of which fifteen have more than a million. These latter have already been named; the twenty-four that remain are, in order, Osaka, Rio Janeiro, Hamburg, Bombay, Warsaw, Glasgow, Budapest, Liverpool, Brussels, Bangkok, Manchester, Boston, St. Louis, Cairo, Naples, Amsterdam, Madrid, Munich, Barcelona, Birmingham, Dresden, Madras, Baltimore, Liepsig.

Beginnings of Christian Church

Sunday School Lesson for Jan. 17, 1909

Specially Arranged for This Paper

LESSON TEXT.—Acts 2:32-47. Memory verses, 42, 43.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"They continued steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine and fellowship, and in breaking of bread and in prayers."—Acts 2:42.

TIME.—Probably on Sunday, May 28, A. D. 30. The same day as our last lesson, and the days following.

PLACE.—Jerusalem. Peter preached in the vicinity of the upper room, or in the temple court. Then in the temple court, and in the homes of the people.

PLACE IN HISTORY.—The birth of the Christian church.

Comment and Suggestive Thought.

"With this sermon we must compare St. Peter's other sermons—to the Jewish people (Acts 3:12-26) and to the Gentiles (Acts 10:34-43)."—Rackam.

Peter's object was to prove that Jesus of Nazareth was their promised Messiah, whom they were expecting. The reasoning of Peter was conclusive and unanswerable. Stated in brief modern form it was as follows:

1. What has taken place in your presence is exactly what your prophets foretold would characterize the Messianic times for which you are hoping. Turn to the prophet Joel and you will see that both what has been done to the disciples and the things you are suffering under the Roman yoke are the fulfillment of Joel's picture of the times.

2. Jesus of Nazareth fulfilled the prophecies concerning the expected Messiah deliverer, as many of you have seen and experienced. God indorsed and approved him "by miracles and wonders and signs."

3. Moreover, God reversed your wicked work by raising him from the dead, according to your Scriptures. He is not dead, but living.

4. We are witnesses of the fact of his resurrection.

5. Another proof that he is living is the gift of the Holy Spirit. "He hath shed forth this which ye now see and hear."

Peter's hearers were convicted of sin and its danger. V. 37. "They were pricked in their hearts." The Greek for pricked means "pricked with a sharp point intensely, deeply." "For the word of God is living, and active, and sharper than any two-edged sword, and piercing even to the dividing of soul and spirit . . . and quick to discern the thoughts and intents of the heart," for "all things are naked and laid open before the eyes of him with whom we have to do."—Heb 4:12-13.

"The sense of sin is the plowshare that opens the soil of the heart for the reception of every true grace of character."

The Second Duty.—Believing in Jesus as Master, Messiah, King, Saviour, and Guide—a faith which trusts the whole life to his guidance and control. This is implied in the requirement to be baptized.

The third duty was to confess Christ publicly, openly, by baptism; that they henceforth are his disciples for life and death. It was like taking an oath of allegiance when one becomes a citizen of a country.

This picture of the early church is so attractive, so beautiful, so ideal, that some commentators have felt that it was idealized by late writers, and was not literally true. But as a matter of fact, it has been repeated over and over again for short spaces of time. Our own eyes have seen it. V. 44. "All that believed . . . had all things common." They were members of one family and held things in common, just as members of a family do. Everything was for the good of all. No one, "said that anything was his own," but all was for the use of friends and of whatever Christian had need.

Oriental Light.—R. Talbot Kelly, speaking of the Bedouin of the desert, says: "Conducting me to my tent, he added: 'This house is yours, and all it contains; do what you will with it, and with us, your servants.'"—Century, February, 1897, p. 556. All true Christian hospitality is filled with the same spirit.

This was necessary because so many were strangers and visitors. It was an emergency.

It was not an instance of what is now called communion. It was not a new business enterprise, nor a new sociological organization.

Individuals did not give up all their property to the church.

It was one expression of an eternal principle, "that all possessing goods and industries are to be consecrated to God in the service of humanity is a fundamental Christian principle (Matt. 25:14-30; Luke 13:6-9), but neither experience nor Scripture indicates that selling all and dividing to the poor is the best method calculated to serve humanity, or even the poor."

"The sacrament of holy communion has always been recognized as the central means and test of fellowship with the church."—Rackam.

"Prayer makes a person a magazine of power."

There is nothing magical in the communion service, but it is a real power, for which there is no substitute.

The greatest of all miracles was the conversion of 3,000 in a day, and the change made in these men.

God is still working his marvels through his faithful disciples. The influence of Christ's religion is healing more sick, helping more poor, saving more life, than he himself had time to do on earth; according to his own promise in John 14:12.

THE REPUBLICAN
Job Printing Department

WITHIN the past year the increased made upon the Job Printing Department of The Republican necessitated many improvements, and to meet the requirements of our rapidly increasing business an addition of considerable proportions to our present building is in contemplation; new type and improved machinery must be purchased—but in the meantime all orders will be executed in a most satisfactory manner.

The products of our Job Printery are all models in the class—our customers are numerous and well satisfied, and wnen ordering

Statements, Vouchers,
Envelopes, Cards,
Sale Bills, Posters,
Bank Forms, Billheads,
Letterheads, Tags,
Programs, Folders,

and

Letter Press Printing of all Kinds

They are confident that the work will be Satisfactory in every particular---in WORKMANSHIP, PRICE and PAPER.

WE MAKE A SPECIALTY OF PRINTING

Lumber AND Coal Companies' Forms
Bank Stationery, Hotel Prospectus,
Lodge and Society Laws,
Reports, Etc.

It will cost you nothing to submit your Printing to us. Estimates will be cheerfully furnished you free. It must be borne in mind, however, that we do not do "cheap" printing, but we do Good Printing which has a par value of one hundred cents for every dollar invested in the product of THE REPUBLICAN PRINTERY.

THE REPUBLICAN
Job Printing Departm't
OAKI AND, MARYLAND.

WATER WAGON FOR OFFICIAL WASHINGTON

Cider an Article of Food Gravely Decided by Washington Authorities.

By RALPH M. WHITESIDE.

The fact that the administration after March 4, next, will officially be on the water wagon, has as yet had no marked effect on the liquor business at the national capital. What may happen as a result of Mr. Taft's example in cutting out all alcoholic beverages during his term of office is another question, however. Temperance people are inclined to exult and predict that Mr. Taft's action will result in a marked decrease in the per capita consumption of "malt and spirituous liquors, wines, etc," in the District of Columbia within the next four years.

It may be said, without fear of successful contradiction, that the district can stand a reduction of this sort without serious harm resulting. Under existing conditions there is little need for any one with the necessary coin of the realm to go dry in Washington, and, as a matter of fact, a very small percentage do not permit the growth of abnormal thirst.

Germane to the subject of drink is rather a funny little tangle in the navy department, which it took the paymaster general of the navy and the comptroller of the treasury to straighten out.

The case may be thus summed up: Passed Assistant Paymaster Dobson, of the supply ship Glacier, bought twenty gallons of sweet cider for the forecastle mess, paying therefor $6. When his accounts were turned in, the auditor of the navy disallowed the item, on the ground that cider had no place in the navy rations. It looked as though Mr. Dobson would have to stand treat, so far as the cider was concerned. He did not object to this per se, but as a matter of principle and for the establishment of a precedent, he appealed the case to the paymaster general, on the ground that "sweet cider is clearly food, since it is a mixture of the juices of apples and sugar. Had the apples and sugar been purchased separately and made into cider and served to the general mess, it would have been perfect legitimate and would never have been questioned. The cider was composed of apples and sugar, both of which are components of the navy ration, and which have been combined before delivery to the ship."

The paymaster general, after gravely considering the question, decided he was for Dobson.

"The bureau," he said, "is of the opinion that Passed Assistant Paymaster Dobson was justified in making purchase of the cider (sweet) herein referred to."

The comptroller of the treasury then wrestled with the problem, and straddled the proposition by giving Dobson his $6, and saying that he wasn't so sure about the cider (sweet), after all.

As the matter stands, officially, cider might be sugar and apples, and it mightn't. If it isn't, there is no authority in the law for giving the man behind the gun the questionable compound. If it is, he may have (sweet) cider as part of his rations. Here is a chance for Dr. Wiley.

The old guard, whether in or out of congress, is standing solid behind Uncle Joe Cannon in his fight for the speakership. Here comes Grosvenor of Ohio, long one of the big figures in congress, now in retirement. He says:

"Mr. Cannon has served a third of a century in congress, and there has never been a charge that he is corrupt or has used his official position to make a dollar of money. In all the scandals and rumors of scandals that have permeated the atmosphere of American politics, there has never been a hint that 'Joe' Cannon was for sale or could be influenced by any consideration of personal gain or advantage.

"He has saved the country thousands of dollars by his farsightedness as the uncompromising foe of every species of extravagance."

To those who have never been in Colorado, it is a matter of wonder that every man who has breathed the mile-high atmosphere of Denver and has had a chance to see the wonders of the Rockies as exemplified in that golden commonwealth, is a confirmed Colorado boomer for the rest of his life. J. M. Woodward, formerly a staid New Yorker, now a Denverite, is an example. During a recent visit to Washington Mr. Woodward declared enthusiastically that there is no state in the union that can compare with Colorado, so far as its opportunities and its open hearted people are concerned.

"Everybody is prosperous in Colorado," said Mr. Woodward, "and the hard times about which so much was said in the papers about a year ago, did not touch us at all. The mining interests are making money, and the farmers are growing wealthy. New ore deposits are discovered almost every day, and silver, lead, and even copper are found in more than paying quantities.

"Farm land which five years ago could have been bought for $50 an acre, brings ten times as much today, and more than that."

Colorado certainly can and does put the "comether" on all those who enter the charmed circle of her influence.

Kansas does not intend to surrender her premiership in the matter of freak legislation even to Oklahoma without a struggle, according to Ralph G. Fletcher, of Kansas City, during his recent visit to the nation's capital.

"Having regulated freight and passenger rates,', declared Mr. Fletcher, "the reformers now propose to regulate the rates for meals in dining cars. State Auditor Nation has fixed 75 cents as the maximum price the state will pay for a meal for its officials while traveling. He says a farmer will set up a better meal than one can get on a dining car and only charge 25 cents for it. Then why should the state pay more than 75 cents for meals?

"Another bill to be brought in is for the establishment of a state dormitory for the benefit of members of the legislature. The institution is to be built at the state expense. Every member is to be given a separate sleeping room, but all must eat together in a mess hall. The salary of the legislator is only $150 a session, and Kansas only holds a session every two years. It costs more than that amount to be elected to the legislature. It is argued that the 'state hotel,' supplying board and rooms free, would partially recompense the members for their work.

"Frat societies, both in colleges and high schools, are to be driven out of existence, according to the bill of another new member. It is claimed that frat societies are building up an aristocracy in the state, which threatens trouble in the future."

Judge John Allison, of Nashville, Tenn., is of the opinion that unless some adequate system of forest preservation is devised, the south is in danger not only of a lumber famine, but of dire calamities as well. He declares:

"The lumber supply of the south, and especially in Tennessee, is steadily decreasing. The timber in my state is disappearing, and the water supply is also going to waste. For a century or more the water supply of the state has not been utilized to advantage. Springs and natural reservoirs on the mountain sides have been destroyed, or used as 'chute-the-chutes, for conveying logs down the mountains. Twenty years ago the mountains were dotted with such springs, and when I strolled over the hills some time ago, I was surprised to see how few remained.

"I appeared before a committee of congress when I was here attending the governors conference, and explained the water and lumber situation, and I am confident that, if action were taken, great results would be derived, not only by Tennessee, but by all southern states."

PUBLIC RIDICULE

The Time When it Served as a Punishment For Lawbreakers.

It is the problem of all ages to make the punishment fit the crime, but they seem to have come nearer its solution in Plantagenet times they ever were after the introduction of flogging.

When burglary meant the total ruin of the man who kept his whole fortune in his house the burglar was hanged. But in the same period public ridicule served as a punishment for most crimes, and the man who sold bad meat was placed in the pillory and his bad meat burned to windward of him; the vintner who sold bad wine was forced to drink some of it and the rest was poured over his head; for more serious offenses the criminal had to walk along Cheapside bareheaded, dressed only in a shirt and carrying a wax taper, escorted by the mayor's sergeants.

The result was that law and order were maintained far better than when men became brutalized by the horrible floggings of Georgian times.

Punishments became worse with religious persecutions, and after the reformation the pillory, with its terrible accompaniment of slit ears, whippings, etc., became popular, to say nothing of the torturing, burning at the stake, and so on. At St. Thomas' hospital one of the sisters, "for a grave offense, contrarie to ye lawe of God and according to the proffe of three wytnesses," was ordered to "be punished and have xii strypes well laid on."

But all this, bad as it was, was less demoralizing than the terrible criminal code of George II.'s reign when there were forty-eight crimes punished by death and forty punishable by whipping, transportation or pillory. Flogging for mere vagrancy began with Henry VIII., and as late as 1804 six women were publicly whipped at Gloucester for this unavoidable offense. And never did public morality sink so low.

In those good old days we flogged our sailormen "to encourage the others," and there were many trussed at the triangles who would now be simply admonished. A pleasant form of punishment was "flogging through the fleet." It was given to the ignorant sailorman who struck a superior officer. And when he had been carried from one ship to another and flogged in each if he survived—if he was unfortunate—for six months. The lucky man died accidentally. —London Chronicle.

Left Them Thinking.

Counsel (to the jury)—"The principal fault of the prisoner has been his unfortunate characteristic of putting faith in thieves and scoundrels of the basest description. I have done. The unhappy man in the dock puts implicit faith in you, gentlemen of the jury!"

Force of Example.

No life can be pure in its purpose or strong in its strife and all life not be purer and stronger thereby.—Owen Meredith.

Socialism in Sweden.

Socialism has found many new adherents and is making rapid growth in Sweden. The labor conditions generally have been such as to bring discontent to many who had previously been apparently satisfied.

Seamless Steel Barrels.

The recently perfected process of manufacturing seamless steel barrels is described in Popular Mechanics. The barrel is formed from a single piece of steel by a series of operations in hydraulic presses of special design, and with the exception of the upper head, which is hard-brazed to the inturned edge of the body, it is wholly seamless. The bungs and vent holes are reinforced with ring plugs of rivet steel upset in place under a 200-ton hydraulic riveter.

THE REPUBLICAN

BENJ. H. SINCELL, EDITOR.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 14, 1909.

THE SIMPLE LIFE.

Two members, at least, of the cabinet of President-elect Taft have been finally decided upon—Philander Knox, senator from Pennsylvania, as the head of the cabinet, and Mr. Hitchcock for postmaster general. Mr. Knox is a wealthy man and owns a fine house in Washington. He can sustain the inevitable expense of entertainment expected of the minister of foreign affairs, for this is the relation which the portfolio of the secretary of state involves. It is said that Representative Burton's reason for declining a cabinet position was because of the expensive social necessities attached to it. The salaries of cabinet officers have been recently raised to $12,000 a year and this to many would seem ample to support a person of American tastes in Washington, where living is not necessarily high. But it is well known that wealth is a necessary accessory to high official position. A regime of millionaire senators has set the pace and the Rooseveltian era has been one of brilliant hospitality.

It is given out that President-elect Taft is expected to introduce a simple life in his administration at home and abroad. He disapproves, for example, the lavish entertainment of the American ambassador to Great Britian. No successor to Mr. Reid that he can appoint will be able to keep the pace set by the ambassador; and it has been said that other governments are displeased, because none of them have been able even to approach Mr. Reid in the prodigality and brilliancy of his entertainments. Mr. Reid, as is well known, is something more than a mere money spender. He has been a candidate for vice president of the United States; he was for four years American minister to France; he has been a writer and an editor for forty years, and has made a special study of foreign affairs. Where would it be possible to find another man with such equipment and accomplishments in the multimillionaire class?

THE CRY OF THE CHILDREN.

Bishop David H. Greer, of New York, president of an association for the care of neglected children, has written an interesting letter to the New York Sun describing Hope Farm, which has been procured by his society as a refuge for these children. The Children's Court in New York, the Bishop writes, is crowded every day with children who are brought there for various reasons and for whom a home must be found. The greater number of these children are brought into court to be placed in some refuge because of immoral home surroundings, drunken parents, filth and neglect in the habitations of these unfortunates. Some are suffering from want and neglect because of illness of the mother or the drunkenness of the father. It is a pathetic cry of the children for rescue. Two years ago Bishop Greer's society procured a beautiful farm of 500 acres in Dutchess county, New York. On this farm about 125 children are now cared for and provision being made for more. The children are carefully trained by competent teachers in a good school education, in farming, carpentering, housework and sewing. The children on the farm are leading a free, happy and healthful home life, in marked contrast with the misery and squalor from which they have been rescued. They here have the chance to grow up as honest, useful, self-supporting citizens. If they had been left in the misery of the slums from which the Juvenile Court took them, the chances are that if they had survived, they would have grown up as paupers or criminals, in one case a charge upon society, in the other case preying upon society. Would not the State Government be justified, in view of the character and public benefit of the rescue work, in making liberal contribution to the support of Hope Farm and the enlargement of its accommodations? The cry of the children is an appealing and a pathetic cry, reaching the hearts of all human people. It is heard in its appealing tones in all the cities.

SENATOR TILLMAN.

Just how far Senator Tillman has succeeded in vindicating himself in the opinion of his fellow senators and members of the House is questionable. In the country at large his defense fell far short of removing the stain upon his heretofore reputed honesty. It was hoped that when the Senator made his reply to the charges of the President he would be able to show that he had been misunderstood. Falling short of even this, he has weakened his cause by a line of argument that bristled with vindictiveness towards the President, whose duty it is to expose questionable transactions by public servants, no matter who or what they are. "For when a man supposes," says the Pittsburg Dispatch, "that he can meet a charge of this sort by vituperation and railing, and avoid the vital point by admitting that perhaps he was 'disingenuous,' he exposes such an utter unconsciousness of the requirements of uprightness and veracity that the sentiment aroused partakes rather more of pity than disgust.

"The confession of 'disengenuousness' is a confession of the whole case. It is contended, singularly enough, by some very exacting newspapers, that Senator Tillman's course of seeking to acquire part of the lands which he had been active in getting released from a corporate clutch, was not distinctly discreditable. We may agree that it was not a distinct violation of law. But Tillman's first declaration, which he now confesses to be 'disingenuous,' is a complete answer to that contention in his behalf. When he voluntarily rose in the Senate and produced a ciruclar setting forth that he was interested in the lands in question there is no doubt that his language was intended to assure the Senate and Nation that the assertion of the circular was entirely false. Now when letters written four days before that speech show the contrary, he confesses, because he has to, that the denial was 'disingenuous' can there be any doubt of his own opinion that the matter was so little to his credit that he would resort to the 'disingenuousness' in the hope of covering it up?

"We are certainly sorry for this outcome. Mr. Roosevelt has had so many controversies that the showing of having accused one man more or less, on insufficient foundation, would not have made much difference. But the result is fatal for Tillman as a national exponent of rectitude. By his own showing, through the transaction was by no means as flagrant as some other, it was one which he himself perceived to be so doubtful that he first tried to get out of it by a denial which, when he can no longer help himself, he confesses to have been designed to produce a false impression."

DEMOCRAT RULE IN BALTIMORE.

In view of certain developments in Baltimore it may not be amiss to recall the excellent showing of the Republican administration under Mayor Timanus who assumed power following the death of Mayor McLean while the city was suffering from the great fire disaster. Great plans were formulated and executed for re-building the city along modern lines and immense sums were provided for sub-way, sewerage, paving, widening streets, building new docks and other public improvements. Under Mayor Timanus this great work work went forward with vigor and the public business was conducted with such a marked degree of fidelity that Baltimore earned the reputation of being a city without graft. Notwithstanding his admittedly excellent work Mayor Timanus was defeated at the election two years ago and Mayor Mahool placed at the head of the City Government. He is personally a man of high character but it is painfully evident that city affairs for some time past have not been going along smoothly nor has the new regime shown that sound judgment so necessary in the management of the large public improvement now going on. The Democratic leaders are not working in harmony, defalcations have occurred and poor business judgment is alleged in the Warren deal. Last week Police Justice Garland was removed by the Governor for receiving a bribe and in general the conditions there are distinctly on a lower plane than for some years. In view of the effort of the machine to make certain Democratic control by the adoption of the constitutional amendment, the bad management of city affairs should be a warning of the danger of giving the machine a firmer hold.

Death of Mrs. McClelland.

Rev. J. A. McClelland, pastor of the Presbyterian Church, this city, received a telegram Saturday evening announcing the death of his mother, Mrs. McClelland, which occurred at her home in Philadelphia Saturday evening. Mrs. McClelland had been in failing health for some time and several weeks ago underwent a surgical operation which was successful, and she seemed to be recovering nicely, when she suffered a relapse and passed away as stated above. The immediate cause of her death was heart failure. The deceased was aged about 65 years, and is survived by several children, her husband having preceded her to the grave several years ago. Mrs. McClelland was an estimable christian lady and was held in the highest esteem by all who knew her. The sympathy of the entire city will go out to Rev. McClelland in his bereavement. The funeral will occur from the family residence in Philadelphia tomorrow (Tuesday) afternoon, and interment will be made in a cemetery in that city. Rev. and Mrs. McClelland left last night on train No. 4 for Philadelphia, to be present at the funeral.—Grafton Republican.

Revival Services to Begin.

Special services will be held in St. Paul's M. E. church beginning next Sunday. Preaching each evening next week at 7.30. All the Christian people of Oakland and vicinity are asked to join in the effort for the quickening of the spiritual life of believers and the salvation of the unsaved.

J. B. WORKMAN, Pastor.

MARYLAND CASTS VOTE FOR PRESIDENT

Electors Give Six Ballots to Bryan and Other Two to Taft.

ANNAPOLIS, Jan. 11. — Maryland's electoral vote was cast at Annapolis today. Mr. Bryan got six and Mr. Taft two, according to the previously known results. However, if Mr. Bryan, of Nebraska, had needed only one electoral vote to make him President of the United States, Maryland could and very probably would have given it to him.

Albert A. Towers, of Caroline county, one of the two Republican members of the college, did not appear. In his stead came his brother, Lawrence Towers, who presented a letter and a physician's certificate saying that his brother was confined to his bed. The sick elector asked that his brother be made his proxy.

This was done. It was remarked, however, that the College was not bound and had that vote been needed could have named some one else who might have cast his ballot for Mr. Bryan.

With this matter settled there came another vexing one, Harry J. Hopkins, chief clerk in the Comptroller's office, conveying the startling information that there was no appropriation to pay the members of the College. The $500 usually appropriated was thoughtlessly overlooked by the last General Assembly.

The Comptroller finally fixed this up by procuring a check for the necessary amount from his contingent fund.

REDUCTION MADE IN FREE SEEDS.

Senator Sorghum and Congressman Corntassel Up in Arms.

Senator Sorghum and Congressman Corntassel, and other Solons from the bucolic districts, are up in arms because of the reduction that has been made in the amount of free seeds to be distributed among their constituents this year. Free seeds are among the most valuable arguments used by Congressmen for impressing the desirability of their re-election upon rural voters, and the loss of even a portion of this perquisite is viewed with alarm.

Owing to the high price of seeds, resulting from a crop shortage, each congressman will have only 10,000 packages of vegetable seeds to distribute among his constituents. In recent years the quota of each member has been 12,500 packages. The quota of flower seeds, 500 packages, remains the same.

An effort will undoubtedly be made to have the appropriation increased, so as to make up the deficiency. This will be opposed by Representative Weeks and other conservative members. Mr. Weeks invariably votes against free seeds. He says he would not object if he had no seeds to distribute, and he believes that the government might as well give pianos to the constituents of congressmen as garden seeds.

Church Services.

ST. MARK'S LUTHERAN.

Services next Sabbath as follows:
Sunday school at 9.30 a. m.
Preaching 10.30 a. m., and 7.30 p. m.
Luther League every Wednesday at 7.30 p. m.
Everybody welcome.

E. MANGES, Pastor.

BAPTIST.

Services next Sunday as follows:
Deer Park—Preaching at 11 a. m., by Rev. W. H. Clary.
Loch Lynn—Preaching at 3 p. m., by Rev. Nathan Hart.
Ferndale—Prayermeeting at 7.30 p.m.
Everybody invited to be present.

C. W. HUDSON, Pastor.

ST. PAUL'S M. E.

Services next Sunday as follows:
Preaching 10.30 a. m.; Sunday school at 2.15 p. m.; preaching at 7.30 p. m.
Preaching every night next week at 7.30 o'clock.
Junior League Wednesday 4.15 p. m.
Everybody cordially invited to attend these services.

J. B. WORKMAN, Pastor.

Seeking Work in West Virginia.

An Elk Garden correspondent writes the Keyser Echo:

"Quite a number of miners from the George's Creek region have obtained work in the mines at Blaine, Elk Garden, Kittanning, Wabash and other mines. Over a hundred have seeured work in this mining region in the last few months. The mines in places along the creek are mined out, and mine s have to seek employment elsewhere."

Prisoner Taken to the Cut.

Sheriff Brown left Oakland Monday morning with Benjamin Bittinger, of near Grantsville, who was convicted at the last term of the Circuit Court and sentenced to serve twelve months in the House of Correction for stealing turkeys from the farm of William T. Stanton, near Bittinger. His partner in crime, Mrs. Stine, was convicted at the same time of receiving stolen good and sentenced to serve six months in the Garrett county jail.

PROHIBITIONISTS TO TACKLE POLITICS

Planning To Get Directly Into The Whirlpool Of Campaigning.

First steps have been taken by Maryland Prohibitionists in organizing a big local club that will have for its aim the centralization of party power just as party power has been centralized in New York in Tammany Hall, and just as it was at one time centralized in Baltimore in the Calumet Club, and just as it is more or less centered in that city at the present time in the Union League and the Cresent Clubs.

It is the intention of those who have been most prominent in advocating the organization of the new club that it shall be scot free of the church and of those religious associations that have in the past been considered part and parcel of the party. The aid and encouragement of the church and religion are expected and desired, but the club's promoters think that the deliberations and the plans for campaigning shall be as far removed from prayer-meetings as politics can remove them.

Finley C. Hendrickson of Cumberland is at present agitating the new idea, and has sent his views broadcast throughout the State. In reply he has received encouragement from a large number of sources. Mr. Hendrickson tells of his plans in interesting letters. To win, he contends that the Prohibition party must fight the other parties with simon-pure politics.

In this connection he says:

"The plan to form a Maryland Prohibition Club, with the main organization in Baltimore, ought to meet with prompt co-operation. Auxiliary and local clubs should be formed in each of the counties, towns and villages. Of course, the basis of these organizations should be such as to support the regular State and county organization.

"Political discussion should have full right of way in the clubs. Gospel temperance, pledge-signing, religious discussions, etc., subjects and movements of the highest importance in their respective spheres, should have no place for discussion in these political clubs.

"The political club is the natural and proper place to work out political problems affecting State and national politics. The church is not organized on a political basis.

"With the highest regard for any and all who labor in any sphere for the betterment of mankind, I yet believe that any who teach or would imply that the Prohibition party is a church party, or seeks particularly the vote of the church, but hinders the cause of prohibition.

"Therefore the Prohibition Club will find a broad patriotic field in such questions as follows:

"In what respect does the drink traffic bear a different relation to a republican platform of government than to monarchy?

"In what special manner is the drink traffic detrimental to our dual form of government?

"What, if any, relation does "personal liberty" bear to constitutional liberty?

"Such questions as these may properly be discussed by the Club between campaigns. As the campaigns approach, more practical questions of enrollment of voters, getting out the vote, poll watchers, etc., should receive the undivided attention of the club, but in all such more practical matters the club should work in closest harmony with, and supplement, the regular State and county organizations.

"The personal habits of those who were willing to join in the movement or visit the clubrooms should have no influence to keep them out. Such questions as total abstinence, religious discussion and other matters not strictly political should not be dragged into the club for discussion.

"If the moderate drinker, or even the drunkard, believes the drink traffic should be prohibited and stands ready to support the prohibition party to that end on election day, the doors of prohibition clubs should be opened to them."

Lambert Property Sold.

Last Saturday Capt. J. M. Jarboe as agent for the owner, sold to Lieut. E. S. West, U. S. A., the Lambert property, consisting of thirteen acres of land, with a well appointed house and barn, located just north of Oakland. The consideration was $6200. Lieut. West was recently retired after a number of years of service in the Philippines, for disabilities received during his term of service and was advised by his physicians to come to the mountains. He has been residing in Iowa, where he was an instructor in military science, for the past two or three years

Coal! Coal!

The undersigned have leased the Tower Coal Mine and are now prepared to furnish the best quality of coal at the mines north of Oakland at $1.00 per ton at the mine. Money must accompany order.

UPTON CUPPPET.
ROY WINTERS.
46-3t

Subscribe for The Republican.

The Lonaconing Savings Bank

Of Allegany Couuty.

Capital Stock . $20,000
Surplus and Undivided Profits . $60,000
Deposits . . $625,000

3 PER CENT. Interest Paid Upon all Savings Accounts.

GIVE THEM A START

The New Year is rapidly approaching. This would be a good time for you to start your young folks on the road to Success.

Early training in the practice of self-denial; instruction as to the use and value of money; opportunities for earning and saving money; all these tend to fix and fasten the children in the ways of thrift and prosperity.

We most gladly assist the young people in getting started.

One Dollar opens an account and entitles the depositor to one of our Savings Banks.

We shall be pleased to have our Garrett County friends call and receive a 1908 Calendar.

DAVID SLOAN, President. R. R. SLOAN, Treasurer.

The First National Bank

FRIENDSVILLE, MD.

Capital, $25,000. Surplus and Undivided Profits, $24,000.

OFFICERS:

L. E. Friend, President. J. W. McCullough, V. P.
R. C. McCandlish, Cashier.

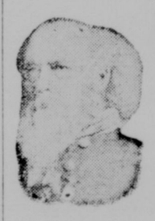
DIRECTORS:

L. E. Friend, Merchant.
J. W. McCullough, Lumber and Coal.
W. W. Savage, Merchant.
D. S. Custer, Merchant.
H. M. Rumbaugh, Farmer.
W. H. H. Friend, Pension Agent and Surveyor.
Horace R. DeWitt, Treasurer of Garrett County, Md.
R. C. McCandlish.

We will issue time or demand certificates of deposit and pay you 4 per cent. interest if your money is left with us.

In all its dealings this Bank combines absolute safety with satisfactory service and never loses sight of either.

SAFETY DEPOSIT BOXES FOR RENT.



Strategic Values of Inland Waterways Along the Coast Line.

By Rear Admiral GEORGE W. MELVILLE, Retired.

A SYSTEM of inland waterways from Long Island sound to the capes of Virginia offers us an element of naval strategy of GREAT VALUE. Along this route we have the New York and Philadelphia navy yards, the Delaware river shipbuilding plants, the manufactories of Baltimore, connection with the gun foundry at Washington, shipyards at Newport News and the Norfolk navy yard. To make the proposed water course of value for naval purposes the depth must be adequate to permit the passage of battleships.

SUPPOSE WE WERE ATTACKED BY A POWERFUL HOSTILE FLEET. SUPPOSE THE SHIPS OF OUR NAVY WERE SCATTERED AT VARIOUS STATIONS ALONG THE ATLANTIC COAST. WITHOUT THE INLAND WATERWAYS AN ATTEMPT TO CONCENTRATE WOULD BE DISASTROUS. WITH THE INLAND WATERWAYS OUR BATTLESHIPS COULD EASILY COME TOGETHER AT SOME CENTRAL POINT AND NOT BE EXPOSED TO THE ENEMY.

Notwithstanding the efforts of the peace congress the day for the peaceful settlement of international disputes has not yet arrived. There are still "WOLF" AND "SHEEP" NATIONS. For our own salvation we must rank in the former class. WE MUST BE READY TO FIGHT, although we never want to change from our traditional policy of striking only in our own defense or that of helpless neighbors.

We might reduce our naval building program to push the waterways if necessary.

WOE TO AMERICA SHOULD THE UNHAPPY DAY EVER COME WHEN OUR BATTLESHIPS ARE DRIVEN BEHIND FORTIFICATIONS AND THERE IS NO CHANNEL WHEREBY THEY CAN SEEK THE OPEN SEA.

Men of Today Do Not Look For Helpmeets In Wives.

By Professor E. A. ROSS of the Sociological Department of the University of Wisconsin.

AS we get further away from the primitive conditions of civilization man comes to have less and less desire for a helpmeet and insists more and more that woman shall present herself to him in the LIGHT OF A LUXURY. A large proportion of American men really prefer wives who DON'T KNOW TOO MUCH.

THEY DON'T WANT SELF CONTROL OR MENTALITY. THEY WANT AN OVERSEXED WOMAN—ONE WHO WILL SCREAM OUT WHEN SHE SEES A MOUSE AND HAS TO BE HELPED DOWN FROM A STREET CAR STEP. IT GIVES THEM A COMFORTABLE SENSE OF BEING SUPERIOR TO HAVE A WOMAN LEAN O THEM FOR PROTECTION.

Women, then, must shape their ideals and characters to please men and be economically dependent. THE ONLY CHANCE FOR WOMAN SEEMS TO LIE IN THE VICTORY OF ANOTHER TYPE OF MAN. But, since they want irrational, helpless, cowardly, emotional creatures, you can see that there is work cut out for those who work for woman's emancipation. It's a tug of war between you and the men who are trying to make woman more effeminate than she likes to be. You have a big job ahead.

A Meritorious Institution

Established as a State Bank in 1888 with a capital of $25,000.00; changed to a National Bank in 1903 and capital increased to $50,000.00; TODAY with a capital and surplus of $85,000.00 and total resources of over $500,000.00 we are

BETTER, BIGGER AND STRONGER

than ever. During the 20 years of our existence, our aim has been to extend to our patrons the best possible service. Our steady growth is evidence that the banking institution, which throws the greatest safeguards around its business in order to protect its depositors merits the confidence of the public. If you are not a customer of this Bank let this be your invitation to become one; our relations will be mutually profitable.

Garrett National Bank

Of Oakland, Maryland.

Miss Beatrice Heyward, of Bond, is in Oakland visiting the Misses Littman.

Mrs. D. M. Dixon, who was taken ill last Thursday, is very much improved.

Mr. James M. Litzinger, of Grafton, spent Tuesday evening in Oakland on business.

Mr. C. E. Ellithorpe, of Bittinger, was in the city a day or two this week on business.

Mrs. John A. Grant is on a visit to relatives near Winchester, Va., her former home.

Mr. King Delawder spent Sunday in Piedmont as the guest of Mr. and Mrs. W. T. Jamesson.

Mrs. Carscaden, of Cumberland, is in Oakland as the guest of her daughter, Mrs. James Willison.

Miss Ora Bush, who spent a week or two with friends and relatives at Eglon, has returned to her home in Oakland.

W. M. Trickett, and wife of Oakland, were guests of relatives and friends here last Friday and Saturday.—Terra Alta Republican.

State Senator W. McCulloh Brown left Bayard yesterday morning for Baltimore, where he will probably spend the rest of the winter.

Mr. W. E. Walsh, of Cumberland, has recently disposed of a small parcel of the Bradley farm near Oakland, the consideration being $550.

Mr. James Aronhalt, of near Bayard, W. Va., who was recently appointed supervisor for District No. 8, was in Oakland Tuesday of business.

Mr. W. C. Kidd, of Baltimore, who is now representing a Philadelphia wholesale house through this territory, spent a day or two in Oakland last week.

Mrs. Mary A. Lowenstein, of Oakland, spent Thursday last in the city as the guest of her sister, Mrs. J. M. Litzinger, on West Washington street. —Grafton Leader.

Mr. and Mrs. C. Ellwood Offutt, who spent several weeks in Chicago as the guests of Mrs. Offutt's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Nelson Thomasson, returned to their home near Oakland Tuesday morning.

FOR RENT.—The Rectory on Alder street; house contains 14 rooms; stable and other outbuildings on the property. Apply to BOWIE JOHNSON, Oakland. 3t

Mrs. D. E. Offutt went to Baltimore Sunday afternoon to visit her daughter, Miss Nell, who has been under treatment in that city for several weeks and whose condition at present is somewhat improved.

Ex-County Commissioner Jacob Stump, of Bloomington, was in Oakland last Thursday, in company with a number of other Bloomington citizens, on business before the Board of County Commissioners.

Mr. George W Loar, of Grafton, who spent last week at the home of his mother in Oakland where he was under treatment for a slight case of blood poisoning, has recovered and returned to Grafton Monday morning.

This office is in receipt of a well written and very newsy letter from Hoyes, but inasmuch as the name of the writer is not appended we cannot publish the letter. Always sign communications with your real name, not necessarily for publication, but as a guarantee of good faith.

SEED CORN FOR SALE—Pure bred Yellow Dent selected seed corn. First prize winner at Maryland State Corn Show at Fifth Regiment Armory, Baltimore, Md., Dec. 3, 1908. Also pure bred Boone Co., white corn, the variety that produced the first prize winner in white corn. Early maturing. A. B. Twining, Forest Hill, Md. 46-8t.pd.

Mr. Leonard Lochner, of Lonaconing, who has been an employe of this office for several months past, relinquished his position on Thursday last owing to a general decline of health, and left for Wheeling the same night where he will visit relatives for an indefinite time. We trust that he will soon recover.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred. A. Thayer on Tuesday night entertained quite a number of ladies and gentlemen at their home in Oakland, their guests being the teachers in St. Paul's M. E. Sunday school, of which Mr. Thayer was re-elected superintendent last Sunday afternoon. Delicious refreshments were served and a most enjoyable evening was spent. Those present were Rev. J. B. Workman, Messrs. J. N. Robinson, J. E. Harned, C. H. Loar, Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Sincell, Mrs. Lou Waters, Mrs. M. C. Hinebaugh, Mrs. Ella Miller, Mrs. Skinner, Misses Grace Loar, Gertrude Shirer, Nell Sturgiss, Teckla Johnson and Ella Beckwith.

CAPITAL 50,0 0.00 — THE — SURPLUS AND PROFITS $20,000.00

First National Bank

OAKLAND, MD.

GOVERNMENT DEPOSITORY.

One of the Largest and Best Equipped Banking Houses in Maryland.

Vaults absolutely Fire and Burglar proof.

Safety Deposit Boxes for Rent

Pays 3 Per Cent. on Time Deposits—Compounded Semi-Annually

Every courtesy extended consistent with sound banking.

Home Savings Banks Free. $1.00 will start an account.

The Depositor with a Dollar account receives the same consideration as the largest depositor. COME IN AND GET ACQUAINTED

FIRE AT EPISCOPAL CHURCH.

Flame Were Extinguished Before Much Damage Had Resulted.

Last Thursday afternoon a fire was kindled in the heater of St. Matthew's P. E. church in Oakland in order to properly heat the building for the afternoon and evening services, when the pipe leading from the heater to the chimney became red hot and communicated fire to the overhead woodwork.

A chance discovery of the flames was made by Mr. W. A. Maffett, who telephoned an alarm to the church authorities and a number of men responded who quickly put the fire out before it had done any damage, although when they arrived the flames were making considerable headway.

Local Teachers' Institute.

The following is the program for the local teachers' institute to be held at Deer Park on Saturday, January 16th:

Address of welcome, Rev. Clark; response, E. A. Browning; English, Prof. U. G. Palmer; orthography, H. A. Loraditch; arithmetic, Wm. E. Bishoff; factoring in algebra, A. W. DeWitt; primary number, Miss Mary O'Donnell. Music will be furnished by the school. Everybody welcome.

H. A. LORADITCH,
Chairman Teachers' Association.

Notice to Delinquent Renters of Garrett County Telephone Company.

At a meeting of the Board of Directors of the Garrett County Telephone Company, held at Hoyes, Md., Dec. 17, 1908, the following motion was made and adopted by the Board as a whole: That all parties who are in arrears with their rents to the amount of six months that if they are not paid by the 1st day of March, 1909, they will be placed in the proper officers' hands for collection.

C. V. GUARD, Sec'y.

MR. E. E. FRIEND INJURED

Fell in His Stable at the Park and Fractured a Rib.

Mr. E. E. Friend, Register of Wills for this county, met with an accident last night that will probably keep him at his home in Mt. Lake Park for several days.

Mr. Friend was engaged in feeding his stock in his stable at the Park when by a misstep he fell over the edge of a manger, striking his side and producing a bad fracture to one of his ribs and a severe injury to another. As a result of his injuries Mr. Friend suffered much pain last night but this morning he is feeling somewhat better. Dr. McComas rendered surgical aid to the injured man.

Allegany county's grand jury, which adjourned last Saturday, condemned the jail at Cumberland and recommended that the County Commissioners take immediate steps to erect a new one. Old Mother Allegany should come up to Garrett and inspect our public buildings before erecting new ones. We have the best in the State and we will gladly help Mother Allegany in her distress.

Mr. A. W. Morris, of Terra Alta, spent yesterday in Oakland on business. Mr. Morris is a newspaperman of wide and varied experience, having been employed on New York dailies and in other towns of less pretentions and is at Terra Alta for the benefit of his health, having been a resident there for a year or more.

Mr. Bernard I Gonder, who came to Oakland three weeks ago to attend the funeral of his father, the late Andrew B. Gonder, will leave tomorrow for Butte, Montana, where he is employed by the Santa Fe Railroad. He will be accompanied from Oakland by Mr. and Mrs. V. V. Washburne, of Brunswick, Md., the former having accepted a position with the Santa Fe at Butte.

Marriage Licenses.

Byron Reavy Fisher, of Morgantown, and Wavie DeBerry, of Fairmont.

James Luther Bernard and Naomi V. Bittinger, both of near Mt. Lake Park.

Edwin Bailey McDonnald and Cassa Green, both of Clarksburg, W. Va.

Guy Stanley Clutter, of Deer Lick, Pa., and Cora Blanche Shaw, of West Findley, Pa.

Byron Stonewall Jackson and Dora E Cunningham, both of Weston, W. Va.

Perry Franklin Sapp and Maude Helmick, both of Fairmont, W. Va.

SUDDEN DROP IN TEMPERATURE.

Thermometer Fell From 42 to 22 Degrees Tuesday Morning in Five Hours.

Tuesday morning at six o'clock the mercury stood at 42 degrees Fahenheit with clear skies and indications of a bright, warm day. Within less than half an hour these conditions changed to cooler and the thermometer steadily dropped until at eleven o'clock it registered only 22 degrees, a change of twenty degrees in five hours.

Accompanying the change a dense fog settled down all over this section of the country making it so dark that persons in stores, offices and even in schools were compelled to resort to lamps and other illuminating devices to afford sufficient light for the transaction of business and for the comfort of the students. This condition prevailed until after ten o'clock when the fog lifted.

VENERABLE LADY PASSES AWAY

Was a Native of Grantsville and Died in St. Louis.

The St. Louis Globe-Democrat of Jan. 7 contained the following mention of the death of a lady who belonged to one of the oldest and most prominent families of Allegany and Garrett counties.

"Mrs. Mary Shultz, wife of J. A. J. Shultz, president of the Shultz Belting Company, who died at her home, 4407 Washington boulevard, at the age of 68 years, will be buried this afternoon at 2 o'clock. The funeral will take place from the family residence where Rev. M. Rhodes, of St. Mark's English Lutheran Church, of which she was one of the founders, will conduct the services.

"Mrs. Shultz was a native of Grantsville, Md., and was a descendant of the Browns of the Eastern Shore of Maryland and the Laymans of Shenandoah Valley. She was married to Mr. Shultz February 24, 1859, and came with him to St. Louis forty-four years ago. Had she lived forty-nine days longer she would have celebrated her golden wedding anniversary, which would have been the sixth celebration of a golden wedding in the Shultz family

"Mrs, Shultz is survived by her husband, J. A. J. Shultz, and six children: Mrs. J. A. Ferguson, of Boston, Mass.; Mrs. A. O. Grimes, of St. Louis; John R. Shultz, of St. Louis, vice president of the Shultz Belting Company, Rev. Charles F. Shultz, of Shipman, Ill., and Misses Edith and Mabel Shultz and three grandchildren."

Mrs. Mary Euphrasia Shultz was the daughter of Elijah and Nancy Brown, two of the most respected citizens of Allegany county, and a niece of the venerable Jacob Brown, of Cumberland.

The Republican for Job Work.

Commissioners' Meeting.

OFFICE OF THE
COUNTY COMMISSIONERS FOR GARRETT CO.,
OAKLAND, MD., Jan. 14, 1909.

The County Commissioners for Garrett county will meet at their office in Oakland on

Tuesday, Feb. 2nd, 1909,

to hear appeals and make transfers.

By order of the Board,
A. G. ROSS, Clerk.

TIMBER LANDS.

HAVE option on 6,400 acres in Preston and Randolph counties and wish to meet parties who will join in purchase of same. Address Box 381, Oakland, Md. 46 tf

Notice to Creditors.

This is to give notice. That the subscriber of Garrett county hath obtained from the Orphans' Court of Garrett county, in Maryland, letters of Administration on the personal estate of

A. F. GEORGE,

late of Garrett county, deceased. All persons having claims against the deceased are hereby warned to exhibit the same, with the vouchers thereof legally authenticated to the subscriber, on or before the 26th day of May next: they may otherwise by law be excluded from all benefit of said estate. All persons knowing themselves indebted to said estate are requested to make immediate payment.

Given under my hand this 24th day of November, 1908.

MARY E. GEORGE,
Administratrix,
Swanton, Md.

Notice to Creditors.

This is to give notice, That the subscriber of Garrett County, in Maryland, hath obtained from the Orphans' Court of Garrett county, in Maryland, letters Administration on the personal estate of

J. RUSSELL BROWNING,

late of Garrett County, deceased. All persons having claims against the deceased are hereby warned to exhibit the same with the vouchers thereof legally authenticated to the subscriber, on or before the 29th day of April, next; they may otherwise by law be excluded from all benefit of said estate. All persons knowing themselves indebted to said estate are requested to make immediate payment.

Given under my hand this 29th day of October, 1908.

M. A. BROWNING,
Administrator,
Kitzmiller, Md.

Notice to Creditors.

This is to give notice, That the subscribers of Garrett county, hath obtained from the Orphans' Court of Garrett County, in Maryland, Letters of Administration on the personal estate of

MAHALA A. DUCKWORTH,

late of Garrett county, deceased. All persons having claims against the deceased are hereby warned to exhibit the same, with vouchers thereof legally authenticated to the subscriber, on or before the 14th day of July next; they may otherwise by law be excluded fromall benefit of said estate. All persons knowing themselves indebted to said estate are requested to make immediate payment.

Given under my hand this 12th day of January, 1909.

W. H. AUGUSTINE,
Administrator,
Grantsville, Md.

Notice to Creditors.

This is to give notice, That the subscriber, of Garrett county hath obtained from the Orphan's Court of Garrett county, in Maryland, letters of Administration on the personal estate of

CIVILLA C. CRANE,

late of Garrett county, deceased. All persons having claims against the deceased are hereby warned to exhibit the same, with the vouchers thereof legally authenticated to the subscriber, on or before the 11th day of July, next: they may otherwise by law be excluded from all benefit of said estate. All persons knowing themselves indebted to said estate are requested to make immediate payment.

Given under my hand this 12th day of January, 1909.

B. F. CRANE,
Administrator,
Mt Lake Park, Md.

AUDITOR'S NOTICE.

Hamill & Matthews, Trustees, vs. Lantz Brothers.

No. 1546 Equity. In the Circuit Court for Garrett County.

Notice is hereby given to the creditors of Lantz Brothers to file their claims in the above entitled cause, with the Clerk of this Court, properly authenticated, on or before the 15th day of January, 1909, as I will then proceed to state an account distributing the funds in the hands of the Trustees.

EDWARD H. SINCELL, Auditor.

ORDER NISI.

In re Estate of Ellen Bradley, deceased. In the Orphans' Court for Garrett County.

Ordered, this 7th day of January, in the year 1909, by the Orphans' Court for Garrett county, that the sale made and reported in the above cause by William E. Walsh, Executor, be ratified and confirmed, unless cause to the contrary thereof be shown on or before the 9th day of February, 1909; provided, a copy of this order be published in some newspaper published in Garrett county, once a week for three consecutive weeks before the 29th day of January, 1909.

The report states the amount of sales to be $550.

E. E. FRIEND,
Register of Wills.

True Copy, Test:
E. E. FRIEND, Register of Wills.

TRUSTEES' SALE

OF VALUABLE

Real Estate

Near Cranesville, Preston County, West Virginia.

Under and by virtue of a power of sale contained in a Deed of Trust from Bert C. Feather and Lillian B. Feather, his wife, to the undersigned Trustees, D. Lindley Sloan and Edward H. Sincell, bearing date the 27th day of December, 1905, and duly recorded in Liber E. Z. T. No. 51, folio 568, etc., one of the Mortgage Records of Garrett county, Md., and also recorded in Trust Deed Book No. B, page 368, among the Records of Preston county, West Virginia, the said Trustees, default having occurred under the covenants contained under said Deed of Trust, hereby give notice, that they or either of them, as provided, will offer at public auction on the premises to the highest bidder, on

FRIDAY,

The 29th Day of January,

1909, at the hour of 1 o'clock P. M., for the hereinafter described real estate, situate in Garrett county, Maryland, and at the hour of 2:30 o'clock, P. M., for the hereinafter described real estate, situate in Preston county West Virginia, all of the following described real estate, lying and being partly in Garrett county, Maryland, and partly in Preston county, West Virginia, and constituting the

"HOME FARM"

of the Late Michael E. Feather.

1. Beginning for the first parcel at a stone in the 1st line of a tract of land called "The Diadem" 65 poles from the beginning corner of said tract, and also in the 11th line of a tract of land called "Recourse," patented by the State of Maryland on the 12th day of May, 1786, and running thence with the 1st line of "The Diadem," North 63½ degrees East, 120 poles to a stone heap and a birch, corner to Edmund Albright's land, thence with said Albright's and John E. Otto's line, North 6½ degrees West, 169 poles to a stone and a small red oak, the beginning corner of said Otto's land, thence South 25 degrees West, 17 poles and 7 links to a stone, West 20 poles to a stone, South 1½ degrees East, 201 poles to a stone to M. H. Frankhouser's corner, thence South 86½ degrees East 38½ poles to a stone, thence North 53½ degrees West, 50½ poles to a stone and pointers, thence North 3½ degrees East, 50 poles to the place of beginning, containing 125 acres, more or less, excepting, however, from the operation of this deed of trust the quantity of 23¾ acres of said land which was conveyed by the said Feather and wife to Edgar E. Jenkins by deed dated the 22nd day of April, 1901, and recorded in Liber E. Z. T. No. 43, folio 308, one of the Land Records of Garrett county, Md.

2. All that other portion of the above described home farm of the late Michael E. Feather, beginning for the same at a stake in a tract of land owned by C. L. Falkenstein, in the center of a spring and West 100 poles to a stone, thence South 25 degrees West, 17 poles and 7 links, South 29 degrees West 11 poles, South 16 degrees West, 17 poles, South 12 degrees West, 37 poles, South 16½ degrees West, 46 poles, South 2 degrees West, 34 poles at the end of a lane (the above calls following from the end of the first line), thence with lane leading from Cranesville to Sang Run North 80 degrees East, 35 poles to a stone above the barn, thence South 4½ degrees East, 9 poles and 15 links, East, 2 poles and 8 links, South 47 degrees East, 5 poles and 19 links to a stone, South 2 degrees West, 92 poles to a stake in J. C. Feather's line, and with said line South 87½ degrees East, 73 poles to a stone in M. H. Frankhouser's line, thence with said line North 3½ degrees East, 44 poles to a stake, thence North 201 poles to the beginning, containing 150 acres, more or less, and being the same property which was conveyed by the said said Bert C. Feather and wife to John G. Elsey and upon which the said Elsey now resides.

This property is one of the finest and best improved farms in the Cranesville section. On it is a fine DWELLING HOUSE and a large BANK BARN and other necessary outbuildings and a good ORCHARD and a large part of the land is in a high state of cultivation.

TERMS OF SALE—As prescribed by said deed of trust: Cash on the day of sale, conveyancing at cost of purchaser.

D. LINDLEY SLOAN,
EDWARD H. SINCELL,
Trustees.

Mortgagee's Sale

OF VALUABLE

Real Estate

Near Loch Lynn Heights, Garrett County, Md.

Under and by virtue of the power of sale contained in a mortgage from George P. White and Rachael R. White, his wife, and Benjamin F. Crane and Civilla C. Crane, his wife, to J. Gilbert Selby, bearing date the 30th day of September, 1901, and duly recorded in Liber E. Z. T., No. 41, folio 10, etc., one of the Mortgage Records of Garrett county, Maryland, default having occurred under the covenants contained in said mortgage, the undersigned attorney named in said mortgage hereby gives notice that on

SATURDAY,

30th Day of January, 1909,

at the hour of eleven o'clock a. m., in front of the First National Bank Building, in the town of Oakland Maryland, he will offer at public sale to the highest bidder all that part of

MILITARY LOT NO. 947,

situate, lying and being in Garrett County, Maryland, containing

SIX ACRES AND 75 PERCHES

of land, and fully described by courses and distances in a deed for the same to the said George P. White and Benjamin F. Crane, from Annie J. Phoebus, dated the 17th day of August, 1898, and duly recorded in Liber E. Z. T., No. 34, folio 526, etc., one of the Land Records of Garrett county, Maryland.

This Property is improved by an Ice Pond and Ice House and contains several eligible Building Sites.

TERMS OF SALE—As prescribed by said mortgage, cash on the day of sale.

EDWARD H. SINCELL,
Attorney for Mortgagee named in said Mortgage.

STATEMENT

Of Receipts and Disbursements for Public School purposes for the year ending July 31, 1908.

RECEIPTS.

Balance on hand July 31, 1907	$12 128 05
State School Tax	19,198 87
State Free School Fund	1 2 7 27
State Donations	4,000 00
County Levy	19,000 00
Fines	1 00
Sale of Books	38 50
Licenses	285 00
Manual Training	1 5 0 00
Academic Fund	1,200 00
Old Buildings	31 97
Tuition at Summer School	147 00
Free Book Fund	3,624 43
Total	$62,392 09

DISBURSEMENTS.

Rent	$ 458 75
Fuel	1,704 15
Apparatus and Furniture	209 62
Teachers' Salaries	39 5 7 80
New Buildings and Repairs	4,744 80
Cost of Books Distributed to Schools	2,397 50
Incidentals	844 41
Kindergarten and Manual Training	1,320 57
Office Expenses	126 79
Salary of Secretary, Treasurer and Examiner	1,400 00
Salary of Assistant	399 97
Salary of Commissioners	3 0 0 00
Commencement Exercises	147 50
Discount and Interest	147 00
Printing	68 25
Freight	59 56
Insurance	16 60
Distribution of Books	287 83
Expense of state and County Asso'n	160 00
School Libraries	40 00
Summer School	402 55
Attorney's Fees	127 97
Balance cash on hand July 31, 1908	7,357 57
To al	$62,392 09

ED. A. BROWNING,
Secretary.

GIVING MEDICINE

When the illness first appears is the easiest and surest way to cure. A supply of simple remedies of recognized merit should be in every household. We carry a full assortment of such remedies. We shall be glad to assist you in selecting those most effective in the early stages of the most common ailments.

OAKLAND PHARMACY
JOS. E. HARNED, Proprietor,
OAKLAND, MD.

Notice To Delinquent Tax-Payers.

Notice is hereby given to all delinquent tax-payers that if taxes now due and in arrears are not paid before

JANUARY 1ST, 1909,

I will proceed by law to collect. I refer to Section 50 of Chapter 66 of Acts of the General Assembly of Maryland, which provides as follows:

SECTION 50. The said Treasurer shall during the first week in December in each and every year, give notice to all delinquent tax-payers of said county, by advertisement inserted in two newspapers published in said county, and in hand-bills posted in five of the most public places in each election district of said county, and at the courthouse door, warning them that the payment of all taxes then due and in arrear will be enforced by advertisement and sale unless the same be paid before the 1st day of January next following.

Please pay promptly and save costs.

W. E. HOLLINGER,
Treasurer of Garrett County.

ARTHUR TOWNSHEND

Santa Claus is Here Again

Loaded down and you can get anything you want in

FANCY BASKETS,
MIRRORS,
TOILET SETTS,
GLOVE BOXES,
WRITING PORTFOLIOS,
COLLAR and CUFF BOXES,
NUT CRACKERS,
PAPER WEIGHTS,
SILK and LINEN HANDKERCHIEFS
LINK BUTTONS,
STICK PINS,
SCARFS,
TIES,
SUSPENDERS,
FANCY CHINA,
FANCY BOX PAPER,
SMOKERS' SETTS, Etc

Xmas For Everybody

Also a Fine Line of

NUTS,	CURRANTS,
ORANGES,	RAISINS,
CANDR,	CITRON,
FIGS,	DATES,

FRUITS, Etc.

BARGAINS IN MEN'S & BOYS' OVERCOATS

ARTHUR TOWNSHEND

Old Man Hornbeck's Conversion

BY C. E. G. PEABODY

(Copyright, by Shortstory Pub. Co.)

It was in the spring of the year, and the wild flowers were running riot over the mesas as only the wild flowers of California can when once coaxed out by the warm spring rains. The wash, usually nothing but a sinuous streak of gleaming sand and rocky bowlders, was now raised, by the melting snows in the mountains, to the dignity of a turbulent river. Hobbling along the road like a gigantic grasshopper with the rheumatism came Seth Lane, a moving blot upon a peaceful landscape.

"Bin rollin' in the mud," said old Seth as, mud-encased, he paused before Welch and apologetically mopped his leathery face with a piece of flour sacking which, owing to the old man's rigid sense of economy, did duty for a handkerchief.

"So I see," said Welch, severely. "It would seem to me that an old man like—"

"Bin biddin' old man Hornbeck goodby," interrupted Lane, blandly. "He's bin livin' down there by the bend near the wash."

"On the claylands?" asked Welch, absently.

"Yes, on them claylands," chuckled the old man. "He kim up here about four months ago from the Downey country, where he had been raisin' hogs an' alfalfa, an' doin' well, too. But he thought he wasn't makin' money fast enough, so he kim up here in the citrus belt, where he could git rich in a hurry. I rather liked Hornbeck when he first kim here, 'cause he was so straightforward an' honest. Why, he is the only man I ever trusted in my life to buy my terbacker! There kim a time, however, when I had my faith somewhat shattered in him. But here I am tryin' to husk my pun'kins when I ain't even planted the seed yet; so I'll git back where the trail starts, an' commence right!

"You see, Hornbeck, he kim up here lookin' for an orange ranch an' Newby got hold of him. An' when Newby gits hold of a man you kin bet that somebody is gittin' experience an' that it ain't Newby. When that man Newby comes around me walkin' on his toes like a cat, an' smellin' of hair oil an' cussedness, I always feel like holdin' my nose an' yellin' 'polecat!' He was an undertaker before the boom struck the country, an' then he went into the real estate business, jes' like everybody else did. But like everybody else he didn't git ashamed of it an' quit when the boom busted, but hung on like the toothache when you are 40 miles from a jawsmith! An' when the little church, that you kin see down there by them blue gums, got so poor that they couldn't afford to hire a preacher, Newby volunteered to fill the pulpit for what he could find on the plate. That wasn't much, but it gave him a certain genteel standin', an' that was what he was after.

"Well, Newby nosed out Hornbeck just like a dog does a rat, an' the next thing I heard was that he had sold Hornbeck his ten-acre ranch down near the wash for $5,000, which was highway robbery. Hornbeck hadn't been here long before he commenced to look thoughtful, as if he was doin' a heap of thinkin', an' I saw right away that he had something on his mind. I had a pretty good idea what it was, too, for he wasn't the first man to see a great light in this settlement.

"'Seth,' said he one day to me, 'Is that man Newby honest?'

"'Well,' said I, 'I saw Newby's grandmother yesterday an' she still had her false teeth! But then she knew Newby before she had any use for false teeth, an' I suppose she knows enough now to keep her mouth shut when Newby is around. If it wasn't for that, I'm bettin' that Newby would have them teeth!'

"'I asked him,' said Hornbeck, with risin' indignation, 'if them orange trees was all navels! an' he said they was.'

"'So they be,' said I, with a chuckle, 'but did Newby say anything about them bein' Australians trimmed in to look like the Washington navel?'

"'An' I asked him if the water right was a good one!' shouted Hornbeck, 'an' he said that it was just as good a right as my neighbor had, and that he raised ducks!'

"'So he does,' said I, 'but did Newby say anything about them ducks bein' Pekins, what git along better without water?'

"'Seth,' said he, kinder solemn-like, 'all the money that I have is in this ranch, an' I can't afford to lose it.'

"'Hornbeck,' says I, 'you're stuck, an' there ain't no use denyin' it. Everybody around here knows it but you, an' it was time that you was graspin' the situation! Newby has bin tryin' to unload that claybank on some one for the last ten years! Now there ain't but one thing for you to do. You can't expect to stay on this ranch an' make a livin'. You'd have to put more in it than you could ever dream of takin' off. Now what you want to do is to slick this place up, put a gilt-edge polish on it an' sell out to the first tenderfoot sucker that comes along.'

"'But I can't do that,' said he. 'I never beat a man in my life, an' I'm too old to commence now.'

"Well, about two weeks later I saw Hornbeck again, an' he drew me aside an' said:

"'I've bin thinkin' the matter over, Seth, an' I've about come to the conclusion that I have been denyin' myself the consolation of religion in my old age.'

"Well, I laughed, an' laughed, an' laughed, an' then I commenced an' laughed all over again, for Hornbeck had a reputation for free thinkin' that had followed him and extended over three counties.

"'What's the joke?' said I, thinkin' that the real laugh was yet to come.

"'There ain't no joke,' said he, as solemn as an owl. 'I've seen the error of my ways, an' henceforth I walk the straight and narrow way.'

"'Well,' said I, 'if you hold on to that ranch you will need all the religion you can git!'

"Well, sir, in spite of what he said to prepare me for what he knew would be an awful shock, you could have knocked me down with a feather when I heard that he had been to church. You never saw such a change come over a man in your life as came over Hornbeck when he got religion. Before that he would laugh an' joke an' tell a funny story with the best of us. But now he went around with his mouth droopin' down like a rainy moon, an' he had a way of lookin' at you an' shakin' his head an' groanin', an' then walkin' on, that made you feel like askin' who was dead. Next to Newby he was the biggest walkin' tombstone around here, an' I saw that Newby was gittin' a little nervous for fear that Hornbeck was after his job.

"Well, one Sunday I was comin' along the road, havin' bin huntin', when I met Hornbeck an' Newby on their way home from church.

"'Seth,' said Hornbeck, 'we are about to feed the inner man after a feast of the soul down at the church under the beautiful guidance of Brother Newby. Will you jine us, an' while we eat chicken listen to the beautiful thoughts that flow so gently from the lips of our dear friend an' brother?'

"Well, that word chicken caught me, an' I went along. Mrs. Hornbeck has a reputation for cookin', an' I knew I would be taken care of; besides I saw that Newby didn't want me along, so I went just to spite him. Well, sir, Hornbeck was very quiet during the meal, and looked as if he had something on his mind that was worryin' him. When the meal was over he turned to Newby, and said:

"'Brother, I have had a terrible weight upon my soul ever since I jined the church an' saw the blessed light, an' I fear for the welfare of a dear friend of mine. I know he means all right now, no matter what his intentions may have been in the past; but he is in doubt how to make the proper retribution. Some time ago this man discovered gold on the land of another. Now, instead of makin' his discovery known to the owner, he concealed the fact an' bought the land for what it was worth for farmin' purposes.'

"I saw Newby set up with a sudden start an' turn kinder green an' white around his gills. But I didn't know at that time that Hornbeck had dropped a gold nugget on the plate that mornin' at church.

"'Was it wrong for him to secure this land with the secret knowledge that he possessed?' asked Hornbeck, leanin' forward an' lookin' at Newby anxiously.

"'Wrong?' gasped Newby, holdin' up his hands in horror, 'why he will be lost forever unless he allows the poor man he robbed at least a portion of his ill-gotten gains!'

"'I'm in doubt, in doubt!' said Hornbeck, with a groan.

"'He's lost if he doesn't!' exclaimed Newby.

"'He's a dern fool if he does,' said I.

"Well, sir, for more'n four weeks every time that Newby would send the plate around Hornbeck would groan an' drop a gold nugget on it. An' every time that he done it Newby would twist and squirm an' try to look pleasant, but he made a mighty poor job of it. I'm hanged if I didn't git in the habit of goin' to church every Sunday just to see Newby squirm.

"Well, I saw the whole thing then, just as plain as day. Hornbeck had discovered gold on the Newby ranch before he bought it. It didn't surprise me much, for it lays up agin the mountains, an' I've always said that they would find gold around there somewhere. But what tickled me was the fact that Hornbeck was cute enough to keep it still an' git Newby to let the place go under the impression that he was sellin' it to a sucker. Well, sir, when I really grasped the situation I laughed till I thought I would bust! An' every time I saw Newby I would hold my sides an' laugh agin. An' then Newby would shake his head an' groan, an' then pass on like a man goin' to his own funeral. But what worried me was Hornbeck gittin' religion, for when a man gits religion as bad as Hornbeck did there is no tellin' where he is goin' to break out at. I saw that Newby's game was to work upon Hornbeck until he made him think that it was his duty to give the ranch back, an' I couldn't see no way of headin' him off, for every time that I tried to speak to Hornbeck about it, and tell him not to make a fool of himself, he would commence groanin' an' keep it up till I left him in disgust.

"Well, sir, the way that Newby went at Hornbeck was beautiful to see. He preached a series of powerful sermons on 'The Curse of Wealth,' 'Legal Dishonesty' an' 'Moral Theft;' an' every one of them was aimed straight at Hornbeck, who would twist an' squirm around on his seat. An' never once did he miss droppin' a gold nugget on the plate, an' once when the sermon was extra powerful I saw him drop two.

"Well, yesterday Hornbeck looked me up an' asked me to come up an' take dinner with him. Newby would be there, he said.

"'All right,' said I, 'I'll come to oblige you; besides, it would be a shame if you had to throw away any of that chicken!'

"Well, sir, what I saw an' heard there nearly took away my appetite for chicken. We hadn't got more'n fairly started before Newby commenced to worry Hornbeck by insinuatin' that his mansion in the skies had a mortgage on it, an' that it would be just as well to lift it before he moved in. I set right across from Newby, an' I managed to git in one good kick on his shins, but he kept them out of the way after that, an' I had to set there an' eat chicken, powerless to help myself. Well, finally Hornbeck broke down an' commenced sobbin' like a child, while I felt like wringin' that miserable Newby's neck. I made up my mind that I would do it too, just as soon as the chicken was all gone!

"Oh, brother, brother,' sobbed Hornbeck, 'if I hadn't found it! If I hadn't found it! If I could only git down to the Downey country an' spend the rest of my life workin' among them poor lost souls down there, I might be almost happy an' forget the dark, dark page of my life! Oh, if I hadn't found it! If I hadn't found it!'

"'Well, now that you have found it,' said I, in disgust, 'you had better hang on to it.'

"'Why don't you go down to the Downey country an' carry the light to the poor lost souls?' asked Newby, watchin' Hornbeck as a dog does a rat.

"'I can't,' he groaned. 'This ranch hangs like a millstone around my neck! If I was only free I would gladly go.'

"'Brother,' said Newby, as if struck by a sudden thought, 'why not sell the ranch? I would buy it myself if I thought it would further the blessed cause of religion.'

"Brother,' sobbed Hornbeck, seizin' hold of Newby's hand an' wringin' it, 'if you would it would make me the happiest man on the face of the earth! I feel it in my heart that it should belong to you of all persons!'

"'About the price, brother?' asked Newby, with a purr of satisfaction.

"'Well,' said Hornbeck, with a deep sigh, 'I gave you $5,000 for it, you know, an' I have made some improvements. Say $5,500, an' I will be free to move to the Downey country an' save souls.'

"'See here, Hornbeck,' I began, when Newby cut me short.

"'You're a man of sin!' said he, piously.

"'I'll give you $6,000, Hornbeck!' I shouted.

"'Seth,' said he, earnestly, 'I would prefer to have this ranch pass into the hands of a godly man. If you would jine the church, an'—'

"'I'll give you—'

"'Draw up the papers, brother,' said he, turnin' sadly to Newby, 'the tempter is abroad an' I may fail.'

"Well, sir, I'm derned if that miserable Newby didn't have a deed all ready drawn with the exception of the price! I grabbed my hat an' was leavin' in disgust when Hornbeck asked me to remain an' take his acknowledgment. I'm a justice of the peace, you know. I refused at first, but he said he would give me a dollar if I would, an' as I knew that it would be my only chance to git any of the derned fool's money I consented.

"'For the last time, Hornbeck,' said I, as I took up the pen, 'I'll give you—'

"'You're a man of sin!' groaned Newby.

"'Turn from thy evil ways an' see the blessed light!' groaned Hornbeck, in turn.

"That settled it! I took the dern addle-pated idiot's acknowledgement, an' fled.

"Well, this mornin' I went up to bid him good-by an' collect the dollar that he owed me. I wasn't any too soon, for Hornbeck, with all his household goods loaded on a lumber wagon, was just turnin' on the main road on his way for Downey.

"'Seth,' said he, as we shook hands, 'jine the church! There's more in it than you have any idea of. Giddap!'

"'No, thankee,' said I; 'I've seen too many horrible examples to do like wise!'

"Just then Newby come runnin' up, all out of breath.

"'Brother Hornbeck! Brother Hornbeck!' he cried in his thin, squaky voice.

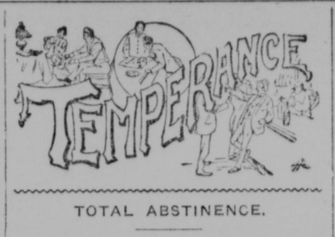
"'Whoa!' said Hornbeck, pullin' in his horses; and then seein' who it was, he said:

"'Good-by, brother, put thy faith in the Lord an' be happy! Giddap!'

"'But, Brother Hornbeck! Brother Hornbeck!' cried Newby, runnin' alongside of the wagon, 'what was it—that is—you know—what was it you found?'

"'Found that I had been beat, you miserable scoundrel!' roared Hornbeck. 'Giddap!'

"Well, sir, when it dawned upon me that Hornbeck had been simply workin' Newby to unload the ranch upon him, I fell right down in the middle of the road an' rolled an' laughed, an' laughed an' rolled. That's how I kim to be so muddy. An' while it ain't for me to criticise, not bein' a church member in regular standin', it did seem to me that Newby, when he stood there in the middle of the road shakin' his fist at the disappearin' Hornbeck, used language that was not becomin' for a man who is supposed to administer to the spiritual welfare of the people in this here settlement!"



TOTAL ABSTINENCE.

The Only Safe Rule for One to Follow for His Own Good.

IN THESE days of popular education and of widespread agitation for civic betterment and the uplift of the lower classes, it is not surprising that the temperance question should have assumed a prominence never before reached in the United States. It is now generally recognized that the liquor traffic is responsible for a very large percentage of the crimes, taxation, poverty and misery that afflict society. This being the case, it becomes the duty of all good citizens, says the Christian Herald, to promote temperance. Especially is it the duty of the Christian, by his own selfdenial, to give an example of temperance to others.

Anachonis, the philosopher, who lived in an age when intemperance afflicted Greece, was asked by what means a man might best guard against the vice of drunkenness. "By bearing constantly in his view the loathsome, vicious behavior of the intemperate," was the reply. And surely we of this later age do not lack for object-lessons when we look around us and see thousands of promising careers wrecked by drink, courts busied in the trial of crimes inspired by drink, and jails crowded with criminals chiefly the victims of drink.

John Wesley's inflexible attitude toward the drink habit was well known. A friend of his related that on one occason at dinner Mr. Wesley saw him take a small portion of brandy. The great divine in surprise asked the reason and was told that it was for digestion. "Ah," observed Wesley, "you take a tablespoonful now; that will soon lose its effect and then you will take two; from two you will go to a glass and then to two glasses and so on, till in the end you may become a drunkard." He pleaded with him to stop it altogether, and the friend wisely heeded the plea.

An old man died not long ago in New England who was esteemed as a good citizen. But he had early contracted a fondness for ardent spirits, and drank temperately and daily for the greater part of his life. He gave a little to his children as they grouped around him; and they thought what their father loved must be harmless. But with their growing years a fondness for the stimulus increased, and this aged man lived to mourn the death of half his sons and 40 descendants who went down to the grave drunkards.

It has been said tersely that "the cup kills more than the cannon." Drink's death-roll of victims in the United States is estimated at 100,000 a year! All the wars of all the ages could hardly equal the cumulative slaughter by this monstrous vice.

The late Dr. Talmage emphasized very strongly the duty of parents in preaching total abstinence in the home. "Let your children grow up with an utter aversion to drink," he wrote. "Make it utterly nauseous. Teach them, as faithfully as you do the truths of the Bible, that rum is a fiend. Take them to the almshouse, and show them the wreck and ruin it works. Walk with them into the homes that have been scourged by it. If a drunkard hath fallen into a ditch, take them right up where they can see his face, bruised, savage and swollen, and say, 'Look, my son. Rum did that!' Looking out of your window at some one who, intoxicated to madness, goes through the street, brandishing his fist, blaspheming God; a howling defying, shouting, reeling, raving, and foaming maniac, say to your son, 'Look; that man was once a child like you.' And as you go by the grog-shop let them know that is the place where men are slain and their wives made paupers and their children slaves. Hold out to your children all warnings, all rewards, all counsels, lest in after-days they break your heart."

Drink's Heavy Toll.

A subscriber has figured that 125,000 persons are yearly killed in the United States through drink; that the cost of maintaining the liquor-selling establishments is annually $1,500,000,000, and that public taxes are levied on to the extent of $1,500,000,000 to keep up the prisons, asylums, courts, jails and paupers, caused or made necessary mainly by the liquor traffic, the total yearly cost to the American people being $3,000,000,000.

Drinker Courts Failure.

Andrew Carnegie is reported as saying to the students of Pratt Institute in Brooklyn: "The curse of drink is the cause of more failures in life than anything else. You can surmount every other faulty habit, but the man who is a confirmed drinker has not one chance in a million for success in life."

Means Defeat.

Arguing with temptation is like debating with a rattlesnake.

TIME FOR THE KNIT SWEATER.

Hand-Made Article Decidedly in Season Just Now.

This is the season when the girl who knits as a pleasant pastime puts away silk neckties and turns her attention to sweaters. These popular outing wraps are something of a task, as they take time to finish, but the hand-made sweater is so attractive when finished that it well repays one for the hours spent upon it.

The latest ideas in them are most attractive. The new one is a modification of the coat sweater, is single-breasted and reaches almost to the knees. The collar and rever are similar to the those on a man's frock coat and there is a breast pocket and two hip pockets, finished with flaps that fasten with pearl buttons.

The sleeve is tight and finished with narrow ribbing instead of a cuff. The stitch used is the ordinary knitting one that forms a small ridge, or the body of the coat is made with a fancy stitch, and the revers, cuffs and pocket flaps in plain knitting.

For a younger girl there is a smart hand-made sweater that reaches to hips and fastens on shoulder and down one side, with large pearl buttons. The body of the sweater is knit in white or gray worsted in a fancy stitch, and the border, down the side where it fastens, the turnback cuffs and the pocket are in plain knitting in a contrasting color.

Directions for knitting these sweaters are sold with the wool; the stitches can be quite easly mastered by the woman who has had even a slight experience with knitting.

"TURBAN" TOQUE.

Of Mouse-Colored Corded Silk, with Soft Gray Aigrette.

MERITS OF THE BYRON COLLAR.

Deservedly Popular, and Will Be Worn All Winter.

The round, low collar known as the Dutch or Byron collar, which came into fashion last summer, has so gained in popularity that women will wear it indoors all winter. It is a much more comfortable piece of neckwear for everyday use than the high turnover collar, which catches one under the chin, or the high stock with its prodding whalebone.

This Byron collar is made of linen, without ornament, or of embroidery and lace with a ruffle at the edge. It is attached to the neckband of the blouse and finished in front with a wide loose bow.

This kind of cravat is very much in favor with all kinds of neckwear. Messaline ribbon is used in various colors and the ends and loops are almost the same length. It is called the Byron cravat, and goes very well with the collar of that name.

Sheer Hangings.

Point d'alencon lace is returning to favor for sheer hangings in boudoirs. It is very light and delicate and in good patterns and quality it is very charming indeed. The difficulty with lace curtains of every sort seems to be that they appeal so directly to the vulgar sense of the luxurious that they are very sure to be copied in exceedingly coarse material. This makes even the finer qualities very undesirable, and so the fine muslin curtains which seem not to appeal at all to coarser taste have an advantage over those of lace.

Keeping Ferns.

It is said that ferns may be kept fresh by giving them a steaming of three hours. Once every week or so they should be put into the bathroom, shutting all windows and doors of the room to keep in the steam. The bathtub should then be filled with hot water. It will give out a good steam. The room should not be cooled suddenly after this is done.

By treating the ferns to this bath it is not necessary to wash and spray the leaves, which does not give so satisfactory a result.

Flounces for Evening Gowns.

On evening gowns double flounces are often used, sometimes made of lace, of chiffon, or of the new filet tulle. When two of them are used one laps the other about four inches. Both are put on with three rows of gathers and a double head.

HER DOUBTS

HE young man with the violets in his buttonhole ran gayly up the steps of the house from whose front window shone a subdued light of shaded lamps. Eagerly he greeted the pretty young woman in the trailing white gown who rose at his entrance. Then he looked closely at her pensive countenance.

"Don't you feel well?" he asked anxiously.

"Oh, I feel all right," she said, and sighed.

"Something is bothering you," he insisted, as they sat down. "Tell me."

The pretty young woman sighed again. "Edgar," she said, impressively, "I got to thinking to-day and I couldn't help wondering whether you came to see me because you really wanted to or because you thought you had to, seeing that we are engaged. Is it—"

"Well!" exclaimed the young man, cheerfully. "That's simple enough to settle. It's because I want to, of course!"

"That's what you say," persisted the young woman, "but there's no way for me really to be sure. Besides, you may be deceiving yourself. You may think it's because you want to come when in reality it may be only your exaggerated sense of duty."

"Don't you suppose that I'd rather be with you than anywhere else?" exclaimed the young man. "So don't let that foolish idea worry you."

"You didn't think any idea of mine was foolish before we were engaged," objected the young woman. "Anything I did was right. You see how it is—I've grown to be an old story already and you begin to see my faults. Of course I know that I have faults, but it hurts to find that you are beginning to see them. You wouldn't if you weren't bored. That shows—"

"Nothing of the sort!" said the young man. "I don't see what on earth ails you! Don't I act glad enough to come?"

"Edgar," said the young woman, "that isn't the point. What I'm trying to get at is whether or not you are deceiving yourself! It makes all the difference in the world to me! You know perfectly well that you would not be content to come here seven evenings in a week forever and never go anywhere else! You'd m[iss] your friends and everything!"

"Oh, I don't know!" said the young man, heroically.

"Didn't you enjoy yourself awfully at the fraternity banquet last week?" she asked. "Now, be honest."

"Why, of course I did!" admitted the young man.

"There!" cried the young woman, tragically. "That proves what I said! It is a relief to you to get away from me! I've no doubt that lots of evenings you come here when you really are longing to go somewhere else! Don't people ask you sometimes to go with them?"

"Johnson wanted me to play billiards one night this week," admitted the young man. "But—"

"You love billiards," said the young woman, mournfully. "I know you wanted to go. Wasn't it to-night I asked you?"

"What's the difference?" asked the young man. "I'm here and I'd rather be here!"

"You sacrificed yourself because you thought I wouldn't understand," persisted the young woman. "I'd rather never see you than have it that way! Just as soon as a feeling of duty steps in love goes. Why, it won't be a month before you won't care two straws for me! It was just a pre-premonition this aft-afternoon but now I—I know! And if I had forced it from you you'd have gone on to the bit-bitter end!"

"Now, Annabel," said the distracted young man, trying to pull her handkerchief to her eyes, "this is foolish and I don't understand in the least what you are talking about. There isn't any bitter end or any other kind! Don't you think I love you as much as ever? Don't I act that way?"

"But what's the good of act-acting if it isn't real?" wept the young woman. "And how can I t-t-tell?"

"Didn't I give up billiards to-night to come here?" demanded the young man, sternly. "And I hadn't promised to come or anything either, and could have telephoned just as easily as not that I wouldn't be here. How about that?"

"That's so," admitted the young woman, dropping her handkerchief, "I hadn't thought of that. Tell me truly—it was really because you wanted to come, not because you thought I expect you anyhow!"

"Truly," vowed the young man.

"I'm a horrid, suspicious creature," said the young woman, contritely. "Only it upset me so when I got to thinking about it. You go and play billiards to-night, Edgar!"

"I'd rather—" began the young man nobly.

"No," said the young woman. "I insist!"

"Well, of course, if you insist. Of you know I'd rather be here!"

"Would you, really?" asked the pretty young woman, happily. "Of course I believe you, Edgar, but are you sure?"—Chicago Daily News.

FIRES AND INSURANCE.

What Being Burned Out May Mean to a Business.

"I suppose you heard that Blank & Co. were burned out from roof to the basement last night?" remarks the man in the car.

"No!" exclaims the friend who hasn't seen the morning paper. "I suppose they carried insurance?"

"Oh, yes—a hundred thousand of it!" returns the first speaker, at which his friend settles back with the comment that everything is all right then.

This is the layman's conclusion almost invariably. Some big concern burns out, but with insurance to an amount seeming to cover the loss the average man is disposed to feel that it is all right. He doesn't stop to think of the enormous risks of a business which cannot be covered by insurance and which for weeks, months, or years after a fire are crippling and and perhaps ruinous to the fire victim.

Take, for example, a highly organized factory plant in prosperous times which has been turning out a vast specialized product from the hands of thousands of expert workmen. This plant, fitted with costly machinery, is covered by insurance upon its visible material assets. Fire sweeps it and lays everything in hopeless ruin. If every piece of machinery, every building and all material adjuncts of the plant have been covered to full value will the reader dare make a rough guess as to what the limitations of loss may be?

Only the other day I stepped into a bookbindery, unostentatious in its street signs and occupying a fifth floor in an obscure street. In the elevator shaft was that peculiar odor which marks the track of fire and firemen days and weeks after such an accident.

"Most of the fire was next door," explained the proprietor, but I guess the smoke and the water were about as bad for us. Sometimes it is almost better to have the fire yourself than be next door to it."

Which seemed to be especially true of book material. Where smoke and soot had failed to blot and ruin the stock, water from the engines in the street had flooded it until ruin alone was descriptive. Everything had been closed down, workers in the plant were idle and the proprietor was awaiting the adjustment of the insurance which he had been carrying. But in the extent of this insurance itself was a knotty situation.

Ordinarily the house had carried policies which would have left it the minimum of risk on its machinery, stock and materials. Ordinarily a still further blanket was carried for the purpose of covering the normal amount of book material on hand owned by others and contracted for rebinding. But only a few days before the fire the house had received a consignment of $5,000 worth of law books to be bound. These volumns, aside from intrinsic value, represented so much of other value as to make the risk abnormal for almost any reason. And these books were ruined.

Before receiving them the binder had asked the owners to take out a policy for themselves protecting them against such fire loss. The firm had not done so, and when the fire damage came the disposition of the owners was to hold the binder for them under one of the binder's blanket policies.

On this one disputed point, taking it into court, will some one make a guess as to what this one feature of the fire may cost the binder, who to all purposes was "insured," if it should be settled in the supreme court after five or seven years, for example?

But in the case of the big manufactory, with season of rush work and its enormous and fluctuating stock of material—if on the morning after the fire the assuring companies settle in full for the visible losses, how much has the company been damaged?

Of first consideration, perhaps, is the enormous payroll of the concern. If most of the mechanical work of the plant has been done by pieceworkers, still the necessary force of directing employees on salary is a problem. The determination of the owners is to start up anew. Tried and proved employees must be retained while the work of rehabilitation goes on on. They must be paid even if they are to do no more than wait. Settlement of some kind must be made with contractors who have been supplying raw materials from the hands of other thousands of workers. No matter what the clauses in contracts providing immunity in the case of fires, strikes and acts of Providence, every line of business affecting the welfare of the manufactory has been affected. The plant is a total loss. Before it can be rebuilt the ruins of the old factory must be cleared away.

In the meantime all those customers of the manufactory who have been pressing for the filling of contract orders find themselves shut out of any chance for receiving them. They turn at once to other competing establishments for the work. Not only does the burned out firm lose all chances of profit from the work, but it is running a long chance of losing some of its oldest and best customers of years' standing.—Chicago Tribune.

What is The Sabbath!

Martin Luther is on most points orthodox enough for the average Protestant. Here is a saying of his:

"If anywhere the day is made holy for the mere day's sake; if anywhere any one sets up its observance on a Jewish foundation, then I order you to work on it, feast on it—to do anything to remove this encroachment on Christian liberty."

He has overstated his case in characteristic fashion. But how many people are there in this country (other than preachers and professional theologians) who are capable of discussing it? How many so much as knows what the reformer means? Could the first reader of these pages explain Luther's point of view so as to justify or condemn it? When the politic theologue was asked by the examiners to state his position with regard to "good works" he replied cautious that he thought a few would not do a Christian any harm. They would not. And a little common honesty would not injure the discussion of the "Sabbath." Are we under any obligation to "observe the Sabbath day to keep it holy?" If so, what obligation? What is the Sabbath day, how ought we to observe it and what would keep it holy? If somewhere, somehow, we do feel ourselves under such an "obligation," why do we practically repudiate it? If we are under no such "obligation," why not? Let us clear our minds of cant.

A frivolous person might entitle the common or garden notion of the obligations of the Sabbath "The Gospel of the Sofa Cushion,', for its outlines are admirably sketched in a cartoon which appeared in Punch, when Punch was wise and witty. A lady had called on the vicar's wife on Sunday afternoon and her righteous soul was stirred within her as she beheld the vicar's son and heir, in the full flush of his seven years of boyhood, engaged in a sharp tussle with the sofa pillow. And the clergyman's wife explained, "You see my dear, it is Sunday, and we can't leave him have his toys, so we give him the sofa cushion to play with!" It would have been a violation of the Sabbath if the child had thrown a ball about; the Sabbath was duly honored if he only kicked the sofa cushion!—Rev. Dr. Chas. F. Aked, in Appleton's.

Livery Removed.

Messrs. Maroney Bros., the Quality Hill liverymen, have removed from their old location to the Helbig barn which was recently vacated by Mr J. A. Kelly. The equipment of the Maroney Bros. stable compares very favorably with that of other liverymen and they aim to please their patrons.

VISITS WITH UNCLE BY

Love.

Love does not stop to argue why;
Love only dares to do or die!
When all the world has turned away,
Love dares to name the happy day.
Love does not sell itself for gold—
True love is never bought nor sold.
We scoff at blood and name and kin
When Love, the King, has entered in!

What lover fears to beard the foe?
What loved one hesitates at woe?
What woman fair or courtier true
Shall pause to contemplate the rue?
Does blushing maid or stalwart, pray,
Stand waiting what the people say?
Love reigns as Ruler of the World
When once his banner is unfurled!

Ah, who shall question Love, I say?
And who, ye seers, shall say him nay?
Go bark thy words unto the moon
When Love goes walking forth in June.
Go hide thy heads and spare thy words—
Love speaks the music of the birds!
Ah, Love, sweet Love, let kings bow down—
I yield to thee the monarch's crown!

Where e'er thou art, all else is weak—
I bid thee, Ruler, speak, oh speak!
Oh, give to me the gift I crave
And teach me, master, to be brave!
But touch me with thy magic grace
And put thy glory in my face—
Ah, give to me, so sore afraid,
The magic gift to win a maid!

On the Way.

Sometimes you wonder how some people can have brain fever.

☆ ☆ ☆

Of course, it may have been 96 in the shade last summer, but if it was I am sure I was one of the ones who did not kick.

☆ ☆ ☆

"Do women dress to please men?" asks a feminine writer. Not on your life. They dress to look as good as the next woman, darn her!

☆ ☆ ☆

The average business man who has kept the present business pace for 20 or 30 years, doesn't look upon death with any great amount of fear and trembling.

☆ ☆ ☆

A Texas poet says he is waiting in the garden for her. That may be all right in Texas, but if anybody waits in my garden right now they will get ashes thrown on them.

☆ ☆ ☆

An Iowa newspaper tells of a resident of that town finding fire caused by spontaneous combustion in his basement. That fellow should rent himself out as a gas stove.

☆ ☆ ☆

Speaking of "frenzied finance," did your wife ever make up her mind that she wanted a baby-grand piano for Christmas? I am trying to compromise by getting some one to leave a grand baby on the doorstep.

☆ ☆ ☆

Another poet is waiting for her where the crickets chirp and call. That's all right, my boy, but you want to be careful and pick out one that will wait for you when the cricks get into your back and the rheumatism is playing the Daughters of the Revolution all over your aching anatomy.

☆ ☆ ☆

What's the use of spending money going to the vaudeville when all you have to do is to spend five cents for a street-car ride and watch the girls with the big hats trying to get on and off the cars? A fellow who could hire a bunch of these ladies, buy a Southport avenue car, and take the whole business on a tour of the country districts could make his fortune by next seeding time.

No Hurry.

Walking one misty night through a street in a Scotland village a minister fell into a deep hole. There was no ladder by which he could make his escape, and he began to shout for help. A laborer passing by heard his cries, and, looking down, asked who he was. The minister told him, whereupon the laborer remarked: "Weel, weel, ye needna kick up sic a noise. You'll no be needed afore Sawbath, an' this is only Wednesday night."

Train Her, Darn 'Er.

Train up a girl in the way she should go, and when she grows up, she will not only jerk symphonies out of the kitchen stove, but she will lay aside the tail feathers of the turkey at Thanksgiving, save the wire from the baled hay, buy 19 cents' worth of ribbon and construct a bonnet that will make a forty-dollar monstrosity look like 30 cents.—Houston Post.

Byron Williams

Grown-Up Children.

It is not only the frivolous whom the spirit of childishness is just now leading astray. Silliness is the fashion even among the wise. Women especially affect a kind of childish shrewdness in talking of serious subjects. Like children who have the habit of romancing, they lose the sense of reality, and because they never talk exactly as they think they begin to think exactly as they talk.—London Spectator.

Land of Commercial Industry.

The traveler through Saxony is rarely out of sight of a factory chimney. In probably no other land are industrial establishments so numerous in proportion to the area. The present number is 24,707, an increase of 1,755 over the preceding year. The number of operatives is 685,319, an increase of 41,235 in the course of a year.

Gnawing His Way.

Nature knew that the rat would want to spend half his time gnawing and she therefore provided him with the right kind of teeth to do it. A boy caught a rat and boxed it up, and in the course of a week the rodent gnawed a hole through oak planks nailed together until there was a thickness of 18 inches. The hole was almost as round and smooth as a carpenter could have made.

Arabian Proverb.

A day that is not thine own do not reckon it as of thy life.

Land for Sale.

We have for sale the following valuable tracts of land:

One Military Lot of 50 acres, a small portion of which is under cultivation. All good land, and every acre tillable. Watered by several good springs and a never failing small run. Contains some good timber. One-half mile from R. R. siding, and one and one-half miles from Oakland.

Also part of two Military Lots containing about 50 acres. This property is directly East of Oakland, on the South side of the B. & O. R. R. siding on the North side of tracks. Contains valuable grazing land, a portion of which is in cultivation. Valuable R. R. frontage.

Also 10 acres suitable for building sites, just East of Oakland on the North side of the Oakland and Mt. Lake Park road.

For further information, address

THE H. WEBER & SONS CO.,
6-tf Oakland, Md.

W. H. RAVENSCRAFT, M.D.,
PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON,
OAKLAND, MD.
Residence on North Third street.
Office in McComas Building.

DR. J. E. LEGGE,
PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON,
Offers his Services to the citizens of Oakland and vicinity.
Office in McComas Building, Second street

DR. R. F. BARTLETT,
DENTIST.
Office in McComas Building, Second street Oakland, Md.
Special attention given to bridge and crown work.

DR. J. G. ROBINSON, DENTIST,
OAKLAND MD.
Office at residence on Liberty street.
GAS ADMINISTERED.

NORMAN S. HEINDELL,
ATTORNEY-AT-LAW,
All business given prompt attention.
Office—First National Bank Building.
KLAND, MARYLAND.

GILMOR S. HAMILL,
ATTORNEY-AT-LAW
AND SOLICITOR IN CHANCERY.
Office in Garrett National Bank Building
Particular attention given to Conveyancing Investigation of land titles and collection of claims. Loans negotiated.

EDWARD H. SINCELL,
ATTORNEY-AT-LAW,
OAKLAND, MARYLAND.
Will practice in the Courts of Garrett and Allegany counties, the Court of Appeals of Maryland, and the adjoining counties of West Virginia.

Baltimore & Ohio R. R.
Schedule effective June 2, 1907.
OAKLAND.

* Daily. † Daily except Sunday. § Sunday only.
For WASHINGTON, BALTIMORE, PHILADELPHIA & NEW YORK, Depart *12.27 a. m., *6.31 a. m., *4.17 p. m., *8.29 p. m. Arrive *7.12 a. m., *3.33 p. m., *10.26 p. m., *11.54 p. m.
For CUMBERLAND and Way Points, Depart †10.00 a. m., †4.40 p. m. Arrive †9.26 a. m., *7.26 p. m.
For COLUMBUS & CHICAGO, Depart *11.54 p. m. Arrive *6.07 a. m., *4.17 p. m.
For GRAFTON (Accom.), Depart †9.26 a. m., *7.26 p. m. Arrive *10.00 a. m., *4.40 p. m.
For FAIRMONT and WHEELING, Depart †9.26 a. m. (local), *3.33 p. m., *11.54 p. m. Arrive *6.07 a. m., *4.17 p. m., *12.25 night.
For FAIRMONT (Accom.), Depart 7.26 p. m. Arrive *10.00 a. m.
For CINCINNATI, LOUISVILLE and ST. LOUIS, Depart *7.12 a. m., *3.33 p. m., *10.26 p. m. Arrive *12.27 a. m., *6.31 a. m., *8.29 p. m.

Oakland Pharmacy
JOS. E. HARNED, Proprietor.
Drugs, Chemicals, Stationery, Cigars
Cameras and Photo Supplies

FOR SALE.

We will sell at private sale at our farms between Mt. Lake Park and Oakland.

1 Gasoline Engine,
8 horse-power, made by the International Harvester Co. Almost new and in perfect running order. Will be sold for $275.

1 Hay Bailer,
operated by horse-power. Makes standard size bales.

For further information call on or write to
THE H. WEBER & SONS CO.,
Oakland, Md.

J. B. WILLIAMS CO.
FROSTBURG, MD.
Cheapest place to buy
MONUMENTS
HEADSTONES AND IRON FENCING
Send for prices

A Hint to the Wise Is Sufficient.

Special Sale on
2-qt Blue Enamel Saucepan.
2-qt Blue Fnamel Pudding Pans.
2-qt Blue Enamel Preserve Kettles.

We have just received over 1500 lbs. of our famous 10c Candy.
SUNDAY SCHOOL SUPPLIES

TAKE our advice—buy now, don't wait, but come and see
THE
Little Man
and you will save money on all your Holiday Goods,
Toys, Candies, Novelties, Fancy Goods.
Baumgartner.

CAPITAL $25,000.00
The First National Bank
Of Grantsville, Md.
Safe deposit vault boxes for rent.
SURPLUS $12,500.00

The Savings Department takes care of your money when waiting other investment. The money earns interest from the day it is deposited. It can be withdrawn at any time.

Its Advantages
Any amount from One Dollar up can be deposited, and interest added to principal twice a year. Pass books are issued to every depositor.

We Pay 3 Per Cent. Interest.
Open Daily except Sundays and Holidays. 9 a. m. to 4 p. m.

OFFICERS.
C. H. JENNINGS, - - President
U. M. STANTON, - Vice-President
J. O. GETTY, - - - Cashier
DIRECTORS.
C. H. Jennings, J. M. Stanton,
C. C. Keller, Eli Stanton,
W. A. Hitchins, Frank Watts,
J. O. Getty.

A. D. NAYLOR & COMP'Y

You can buy at Reduced Prices
Grain Drills, Harrows AND Plows
AT NAYLOR & CO.'S

Big Stock to select from.

Have the Farmer's Favorite Drills, the Thomas, the Superior Hoe and Disc Drills.

We have the Syracuse, the Imperial and the Wyard Plows.

Also the wood frame Harrows, the wheel and lever Harrows; also the Disc Harrow, all at reduced prices.

We also have a nice line of Spray Pumps.

Muco-Solvent

is an indispensible household remedy because it is a preventive as well as a cure, and because it arrests development of all contageous germs and bacterial diseases. It cures croup, colds, tonsilitis with its associated ills and all inflamed and catarrhal conditions of the mucous surface. It is a harmless vegetable preparation that may safely be administered to the tenderest babe. If not for sale in your neighborhood, write to

THE PIEDMONT SUPPLY CO.,
Sole Agents for Muco-Solvent. Piedmont, W. Va.

Real Estate Bargains

I offer for sale

FARM OF 147 ACRES, 3 miles from Oakland; good 6-room House; plenty of water; over 50 acres cleared; about 25 acres of grass; 2 Orchards, bearing; over 75 acres of White Oak Timber; R. F. D. mail service.

COTTAGE OF 6 ROOMS for sale at Mt. Lake Park.

HOUSE AND LOT on Oak Street, Oakland, for sale or rent. House of 6 rooms—Lot 50x150 feet, with Stable and all necessary Outbuildings.

FOUR VERY DESIRABLE BUILDING LOTS situated on Liberty Street, in Oakland. Also 3 DWELLING HOUSES on Liberty Street, with good water and all necessary outbuildings.

HOUSE AND LOT on Wilson Street. House of 10 rooms; good water. Lot 150 feet front. Best Outbuildings in Oakland.

A VERY GOOD FARM 1 mile from Oakland—all under fence; containing 32 acres; about 25 under cultivation; 2 fine Orchards, and about 2½ acres in small Fruit; 2 Houses, a very good Well and a never failing Spring. A very desirable place for Truck and Poultry Farming. Can be bought at a low price just now.

I have for sale 18 of the very best Building Lots in the town which I will sell for cash—or $5 down and $5 per month.

150 ACRES OF VALUABLE COAL LAND situated less than two miles of Oakland which can be bought at a great bargain. The surface would make fine farming land. This land is well watered with a stream and several good springs.

12 MORE CHOICE BUILDING LOTS at $5 down and $5 per month.

If you want cash for your Real Estate, or Real Estate for your cash, let me hear from you.

☞For further particulars call on or address

James A. Sincell, Real Estate Agt and Surveyor
Sincell Building, OAKLAND MD

HIS EDITION DE LUXE

By WILLIAM MacLEOD RAINE

(Copyright, by Ford Pub. Co.)

It was getting along toward midnight and the car was crowded with people from the theaters. Larrimore was oblivious of the fact that there were women standing till he noticed Miss Wheeler in the aisle. Her sister had found a seat and Jimmie Toosure was hanging by a strap beside them.

The young man rose and beckoned to Miss Wheeler. Her face lit up at sight of him and she made her way through the press to the seat he was holding for her.

"I didn't know you were on the car. Where have you been? It seems to be bargain day here, doesn't it," panted the girl, as she took the proffered seat.

"I feel as if I belong to the remnant counter," agreed the young man, gently removing a stray elbow from the small of his back.

"I shouldn't think you'd dare say that, knowing that it is leap year," laughed the girl. "How much are you marked down to, Mr. Larrimore?"

"I'd come awfully cheap to the right buyer," he told her.

"Can you guarantee the goods, Mr. Larrimore? Not shopworn, I suppose?"

"The quality will wear well, I think."

"You think it would be a bargain, do you? Is it silk?"

"I guess it is nearsilk," he answered with an admiring glance at her.

"Thank you. What nice things you say."

"What nice things you inspire," corrected Larrimore. Then he asked, "How did you like the play?"

"Pretty well. I spent most of my time chaperoning Jinnie and Mr. Toosure."

"Or has Jinnie been chaperoning you?"

"Mr. Larrimore!"

"Well, don't be too sure."

"I shan't be toosure until he asks me anyway."

Larrimore glanced at the young man hanging to the strap. "Now I wonder whether Jimmie is blessing or condemning me for having stolen you. He ought not to grudge me my little hour of sunshine. He has had all the evening."

"It hasn't been my observation that men are more ready to retire to the shade because they have had all the evening, as you call it," she ventured.

"Perhaps not. But it is good for them to be retired occasionally under a temporary eclipse. It helps to give them a proper sense of proportion."

She looked at him sidelong under her lashes. "You have some of the most commendable views, Mr. Larrimore. Did you learn them by experience?"

"I have a charming friend who is always willing to exercise on me the benefit of hers. She may not believe that 'my only books are woman's looks,' but she certainly believes that one of the principal studies of man should be woman."

"She can't be very nice," said Miss Wheeler.

"On the contrary, she is very nice indeed, the nicest girl I know in fact. It is a liberal education to love her."

The girl settled herself in her seat so that she could observe Larrimore without seeming to.

"Tell me about her," she commanded.

"It would take all night."

"You might begin."

"I don't know where to begin."

"I guess you haven't studied the book so much as you pretend," she said scornfully.

He plunged into his subject. "It's the most fascinating book I know. The last time I saw it, this book had a beautiful silk cover that was a gem of the binder's art."

"I didn't know you could see enough of my dress beneath this cloak to tell," the girl said.

"Oh, am I talking about you?" he asked.

"You are unless you are very impolite. It is not considered good taste to expatiate about one girl to another," she said crushingly.

"The book itself is a thing of beauty and a joy forever. Its eyes—"

"I didn't know books had eyes."

"Why, yes! Books have whole vocabularies from a to z."

"Oh! Well, its eyes?"

"—Are a special feature. They are capital eyes," he punned. "I have made a careful study of them, and it would take a thesis to do them justice."

"I am sure she would be gratified to hear your enthusiasm," Miss Wheeler said demurely.

"You might tell her if you see her," he suggested.

"Yes, I'll hail the first girl I see down the street with upper case eyes. How do you think I am going to know her?"

"She'll be the handsomest girl you see in a long day's journey," Larrimore assured her.

"Shall I have to go a long day's journey into the country to see her?"

"You would see her if you go out into the country."

"Then I'll have to deny myself the pleasure since the roads are so heavy."

"I think you will be likely to see her in town, too."

"Dear me! It's quite a riddle, isn't it? What is it that is both in the country and in town—?"

"—And always in my heart," Larrimore finished for her.

Jinnie Toosure pressed the button and the car did the rest. Larrimore thought it a pity to let Jimmie's attention get distracted from Jinnie, so he alighted too and walked home with Miss Wheeler. He inspected the starry sky with approval.

"Finest nights that ever were invented. Makes me glad I'm a lover," he said airily.

"Do you have to have assistance of that sort to make you glad?" the girl wanted to know. "If you do I wouldn't like to be the girl you've been telling me about that makes a lasso of her eyes."

"She does rather rope them in, but I don't remember saying so," said Larrimore. "Hello! Here's your house already. I wish you would persuade your father to move farther from the car line. Doesn't the noise of the cars disturb his sleep?"

"He hasn't mentioned it. Good night!"

"Good night! I'll be up to-morrow evening, then."

"Hadn't you better call on the girl with the capital eyes?" she asked.

"I'm going to. Pity Jinnie and Toosure are here just at this moment. It makes a crowd, doesn't it?"

"Oh, I don't think so."

"Yes, you do," he assured her audaciously. "Good night! I'll be up to-morrow evening."

He was, and the book with the capital eyes was there in an attractive binding to welcome him. Larrimore sank luxuriously into a Morris chair and gazed into the red coals. Apparently Miss Wheeler gazed into the grate, too; nevertheless womanlike she saw him and appraised his mood without seeming to do so. A subtle excitement of expectation thrilled her,

"Tell Me About Her," She Commanded.

though she looked as cool as a frozen phosphate.

"There's nothing like it," he murmured. "An open fire, an interesting book well gowned—well bound, I mean," he hastily corrected himself, "and a clear conscience ought to make the worst cynic content."

"The fire is all that could be desired. If you are content you will have to lay it then to the book or to your conscience," she suggested.

He looked long at the capital eyes. "I shall lay it to the book," he said decisively.

"Thank you," she bowed. "Not everybody is so frank. What is its defect, and is it in the binding or the substance of it?"

He shook his head. "I find the binding all that can be desired, and the book itself is nothing less than fascinating. It is a rarest classic and of an edition de luxe. There isn't another copy in existence. The deeper one studies it the more one is captured, but—"

"But—," she smiled.

"Sometimes it makes me happy to the Nth power. I turn another page and it plunges me in deepest gloom."

"Really it must be a volume of moods—that is, if you read it aright," she managed to murmur.

The Morris chair was now vacant. Larrimore was caressing the book's cover with reverent hands. "The gloom grips me because this alluring volume arouses unsatisfied desires," he explained tensely.

"Oh!" Miss Wheeler was oppressed by a sudden desire to change the subject combined with a total inability to think of anything else.

"I want to possess that book. I want to have it for my own, to take it to my house and keep it there, so that I may study it always—always."

He paused. The silence was surcharged with emotion.

"Is the book for sale, Katherine?" he asked, gently.

"No." He had to stoop to hear the word.

"Ah!" He drew a long sibilant breath through set teeth.

"But its owner—would love to offer it as a gift—to the right person."

He caught for an instant her radiant eyes before they were buried in his coat. "If the right person is the most appreciative—" he began.

"I'm not sure of that," she broke in, "but he is the most appreciated."

"What luck! What golden luck!" cried Larrimore. "I'm the happiest bibliophile on earth."

Auto Swallows Its Own Dust.

An automobile that swallows its own dust is described in Popular Mechanics. Pipes suck up the dust from the rear wheels and draw it into a box, from which it is again deposited on the road in granulated form.

Photograph copyrighted by Waldon Fawcett.

Power of the Airship In War.

By Major GEORGE O. SQUIER of the United States Army Signal Corps.

THERE is no reason to doubt that airships of capacity from 500,000 to 1,000,000 cubic feet may be ultimately developed to obtain speeds of fifty to a hundred miles per hour.

With a capacity for such speed the aerial craft becomes a POWERFUL, PRACTICAL ENGINE OF WAR which may be used in all ordinary weather.

BY KEEPING HIGH IN THE AIR IN DAYTIME AND DESCENDING AT NIGHT IT MAY LAUNCH HIGH EXPLOSIVES, PRODUCING GREAT DAMAGE.

The realization of aerial navigation for military purposes brings forward NEW QUESTIONS regarding the limitations of frontiers. As long as military operations are confined to the surface of the earth it has been the custom to protect the geographical limits of a country by ample preparations in time of peace. Under the new conditions, however, these geographic boundaries no longer offer the same definite limit to military movements. With a third dimension added to the theater of operations, it will be possible to PASS OVER THIS BOUNDARY on rapid raids for obtaining information, accomplishing demolitions, etc., returning to safe harbors in a minimum time.

One of the military objectives in warfare is usually the enemy's capital city, his ministers and his chief executive. This objective has heretofore been protected by large armies of soldiers, who in themselves are not so important to the result, but in order to attain the objective it has been frequently necessary to subdue large numbers of men NEEDLESSLY.

WITH THE ADVENT OF EFFICIENT SHIPS OF THE AIR, HOWEVER, SMALL PARTIES MAY PASS OVER THESE PROTECTIVE ARMIES ON EXPEDITIONS AIMED AT THE SEAT OF GOVERNMENT ITSELF, WHERE RESIDE THE BODY OF PARTICULAR INDIVIDUALS MOST RESPONSIBLE.

The ultimate result will be to DETER A RASH ENTRANCE INTO WAR FOR PERSONAL ENDS, since now for the first time responsible individuals of state may be in immediate and personal danger after the declaration of war, which heretofore has not been usually the case.

Teach Farmers How to Farm.

By JAMES J. HILL, Railroad President.

THE value of farm products might just as well be twenty billions as the eight billions it is at present. We haven't begun to till our soil. We don't know how. We have merely scratched the surface. And WE ARE ROBBING OUR LAND. Every year the crops are smaller. It's all one way—everybody taking out and a few putting back. The land needs to be fertilized. Crops need to be rotated. We ought not to plant the same things every year.

What this country needs more than anything else is an adequate system of agricultural colleges. THE FARMERS OUGHT TO BE TAUGHT HOW TO FARM. The farmers of other countries know more than we do. The land of England has been tilled for a thousand years, but it is producing more wheat to the acre than most of ours is. It's the same in France, Germany, Belgium and Holland, while the little Japanese till their few acres with an intelligence equaled no other place in the world.

GENERAL DISSEMINATION OF INFORMATION PERTAINING TO SCIENTIFIC AGRICULTURE WOULD BRING A RETURN BESIDE WHICH ALL OTHER SOURCES OF NATIONAL REVENUE WOULD SEEM INSIGNIFICANT. THE PRODUCTS OF OUR MINES WOULD BE AS NOTHING IN COMPARISON.

Unrestricted Immigration Lowers Our Standard Of Citizenship.

By Professor CHARLES R. HENDERSON of the University of Chicago.

ANCIENT cities, WEARY of bearing with criminals and of supporting paupers and defectives, SEEK to relieve their troubles by shipping these undesirable persons to America.

ARE WE BOUND TO RECEIVE ALL THAT COME OR ARE SENT TO US?

Most intelligent citizens who have considered the matter seem to reach the conclusion that WE CANNOT MAINTAIN OUR TYPE OF LIFE if we adulterate our blood with that of degenerates imported from the prisons and asylums of Europe.

OUR BEST SERVICE TO MANKIND CANNOT BE RENDERED IF WE SUFFER OUR WORKING PEOPLE TO BE DRAGGED DOWN TO THE LEVEL OF THE HALF STARVED LABORERS OF OTHER COUNTRIES.

Nonvoting Citizen Has No Right to Criticise Faults In Government.

By Senator CHAUNCEY M. DEPEW of New York.

IT is unfortunately true that men of large wealth and great interests, who are most affected by bad or good government, never take any part in party management, RARELY VOTE, but abuse with great volubility and venom the men who represent them in the national, state or city government and who might be different and better if they would PERFORM THEIR DUTY. I have no sympathy with what such men suffer, or claim that they suffer, in taxation and public burdens.

THE FIRST DUTY OF THE CITIZEN IS TO VOTE; FAILING IN THAT, TO KEEP HIS MOUTH SHUT. HE HAS NO RIGHT TO CRTICISE THAT WHICH HE BY NEGLIGENCE OR INDIFFERENCE PERMITS.

FIRST CHARGE TO CUSTOMERS.

Somewhat Novel System in Vogue in Stores of Salem.

Evidence of that thrift which contributed its share in making Salem the prosperous little city it is to-day smote me unawares the first day I ventured into one of the numerous "antique" stores.

The shop's exterior was tempting and I entered, to find some indifferent mahogany littered about a severe maiden lady who stood framed in an extremely interesting interior. I noted the disposition of things and was preparing to leave, having just replaced something on the shelf where it belonged, when the lady said "That will be ten cents."

"Thank you; I really couldn't use it," I replied, edging away for the door.

"But the charge is ten cents," she added, coldly, moving nearer.

"So I understand," said I, skillfully maneuvering for a hurried but dignified exit.

"The admission to the store is ten cents," she put in here, with chilly distinctness, outflanking me.

For anything savoring of novelty in this fin de siecle business world let us be truly thankful! The shopkeeper who charges you a fee for the privilege of entering her store does not lose in dignity by the proceeding. She insists upon the disbursement with such an air of divine right that for the moment you feel strangely like the recipient of a favor, and wander down the street, a prey to vague fears that possibly you may owe her money.—Harper's Magazine.

ASTONISHED BY THE GIRAFFE.

Frenchmen Were Slow to Admit Existence of the Animal.

Dr. Johnson, as is well known, refused for many months to believe in the Lisbon earthquake, and Parisians formerly were just as skeptical as to the existence of the giraffe, a new specimen of which had just been added to the Jardin des Plantes. The earliest specimen of these gentle creatures was seen in Paris in the reign of Louis XVI. We learn from a French contemporary that the giraffe was first heard of in 1787, when it was described by a Frenchman named Levaillant, who had journeyed in the lands of the Hottentots and Kaffirs. When the explorer referred to the animals with the long necks he was looked upon as a Munchausen and told that he was such in not the politest language. It was only when some living specimens arrived in the French capital that Levaillant's reputation for veracity was re-established, and then the animals for a long time formed the sensation of Paris, not only among the multitude, but in all scientific circles.

Chinese Taxes.

The Chinese government, while it collects a part of its revenue from customs, relies largely upon the provinces to supply revenue, and arbitrarily names each year the sum which each province must supply, leaving to the officers of that province the methods by which this is obtained. The consequence is that each province is permitted to collect a tax on goods entering it from adjacent provinces and this custom has been extended to the subdivision of the provinces, so that goods in transit are frequently compelled to pay taxes every few miles. As a consequence, the interior taxes, known as "likin" become not only the terror of importers, but sometimes almost prohibitory.

Squabbling the Cause of It.

A magistrate who has taken upon himself the difficult task of adjusting domestic troubles says that petty squabbles break up more homes than affinities ever could do. He has no mercy for wife-beaters and is skeptical concerning the influence of so-called soulmates on the average middle class household, which he stoutly maintains is moral. In the strongest terms he condemns nagging and squabbling and sounds a warning against the effects of overwork. He is not the only person who believes that in ordinary cases of faithlessness the cause can be found in a cloudy home atmosphere. Bickering is shamefully common and the causes too trivial to give an excuse for wasting breath.

Bad Novels.

Novels have deteriorated lamentably, the paying book now being either the wildly sensational or the insidiously wicked; incidents that formerly were named with bated breath being openly written of and blazoned abroad, for gain of gold, and too often by women. It is difficult to find a plain intellectual meal served by the moderns, who furnish us with little but cayenne pepper, poisonously spiced oysters and Gorgonzola cheese—a literary dinner the memory of which, as has been well said, serves no end but to leave a dark-brown taste in the mouth.

Faith and Hope.

Mayme—If you don't love him why are you going to marry him?

Maybelle—Oh, I expect to love him after we are married. He has promised that on the morning of our wedding day he will shave off his dinky little French beard.

One Advantage.

Benevolent Old Gent—Don't you find a sailor's life a very dangerous one?

Old Salt—Oh, yus, sir, but fortunately it ain't often we gits into port.

POULTRY AND BEES

DRY FEEDING OF POULTRY.

How a Down-East Farmer Manages the System.

Poultry feeding has been much improved and simplified by the introduction of the hopper method. The old-fashioned way of preparing and mixing a wet mash each day is now well done away with, on account of its tediousness and needless expense of time and labor. The hopper is filled with a variety of ground grains and placed where it is accessible to the fowls at all times. With this arrangement the hens need never go to roost without sufficient food in their crops, and the timid and weak hens have an opportunity to feed at the hopper, whereas, at a trough mob they formerly had little or no show at all. The fowls do not like the dry hopper feed well enough to overeat and crowd out their weaker neighbors.

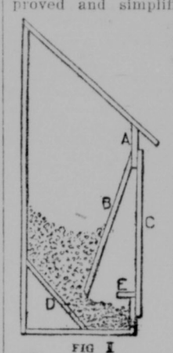

FIG I

Fig. 1.—Hopper Feeder.

The hoppers here shown, taken from the Orange Judd Farmer, are designed to prevent any waste of the mixture caused by the fowls scattering it on the ground. Fig. 1 shows a sectional view of a free-feeding, non-wasting hopper. Fowls feed through slats 2½ inches apart across the front; C; these in connection with the horizontal lip, E, to prevent all waste. D is a board so placed as to throw the grain forward within reach of the fowls. This hopper may be constructed from any convenient box by removing the top and one side, sawing off the upper corners of ends to give slant to cover. A strip ⅞x3 is set in the upper part of front (see A) to give a firm piece to nail slats, C, to. The front board, B, is nailed to cleats placed on inside of ends.

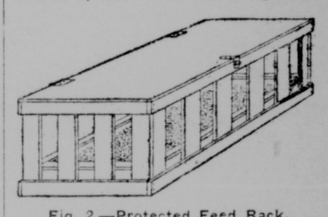

Fig. 2.—Protected Feed Rack.

A very satisfactory hopper may be made cheaply from a berry crate, as in Fig. 2, by lining the bottom and sides 3½ inches up with thin boards, and nailing a horizontal lip all around top of lining boards, inside of slats, to prevent waste.

HOW TO PRESERVE EGGS.

For Keeping Eggs in Small Quantities Water Glass Is Best.

Water glass is claimed to be the best egg preservative of all, aside from cold storage. For the person who desires to put up only a limited number of eggs cold storage is impractical. At various experiment stations water glass has been successfully used and it has been found to be cheap, simple and successful. Water glass (or sodium salicate) can be obtained from nearly any druggist. There are several kinds of water glass, but for egg preserving purposes only the best should be used and the cost should not exceed 50 cents a gallon. A large stone jar is the best vessel in which to put the preservative, and before using the jar it should be thoroughly cleaned with hot water. To ten quarts of water that has been boiled and cooled add one quart of water glass and set the jar in a cool, dark place, covering tightly to prevent evaporation.

Each day as the eggs are gathered drop them carefully into the solution. To keep well the eggs must be strictly fresh—not over three days old—and comparatively clean. An egg with a badly soiled shell should not be used, and under no circumstances should the eggs be washed before placing in the solution, as the washing process opens up the pores of the shells, which is detrimental to the keeping qualities of the eggs. Be sure that there are fully two inches of the solution covering the eggs at all times—that is, that as the jar is filled the eggs do not come to within two inches of the top of the solution. Eggs preserved by this method will keep nicely for from six months to a year, and will come out of the solution apparently as fresh as when they were put in.—H. D. Hainey.

POULTRY NOTES.

When feeding ground grains use a proportionate part of bran.

After hens are two years old they will not lay enough eggs in the winter to pay for their extra keep.

As geese live on pasture every farmer should raise them. Ducks can also be profitably grown on the average farm.

Every farmer could easily raise a good flock of turkeys. The prices paid during holiday seasons will be satisfactory and amply repay all trouble.

THE REPUBLICAN.

VOLUME 32. OAKLAND, MARYLAND, THURSDAY, JANUARY 21, 1909. NUMBER 47

MT. LAKE PARK GETS TEACHERS' ASSOCIATION

Meeting Which Will Convene There on June 29th for Three Days' Session.

At a meeting of the executive committee of the State Teachers' Associaciation of Maryland, held in Baltimore last Saturday, Mountain Lake Park was selected as the place for the meeting this year and June 29th was fixed as the date, when from four hundred to eight hundred teachers from various parts of the State will be present to participate in the discussion of questions brought before the Association. The meeting will last for a period of three days during which time many subjects of more or less importance to the welfare of the public school system of the State will be under discussion. The program is now being arranged and will be in the hands of the members of the Association shortly.

For some time past the claims of Mountain Lake Park as an ideal spot to hold the meeting of the Association has been put forth by the friends of the Park. Rev. W. W. Davis, the efficient superintendent, has been untiring in his efforts to have that place selected and much of the credit for the success of the undertaking is due him. Prof. E A. Browning, county superintendent of schools, was also a warm advocate of Mountain Lake Park.

In addition to the meeting of the State Teachers' Association on June 29th, two other educational associations will also convene at the Park, these being the County Superintendents' Association and the School Commissioners' Association, both of which will hold adjourned meetings

An effort is now under way to consolidate the Maryland and the West Virginia Associations in yearly conventions of the two bodies with Mountain Lake Park as the place of meeting. Should the plans of those having the matter in hand mature hundreds of teachers from the two states will annually gather at the Park.

HAS PURCHASED FICKEY MINE.

Mr. James A. Sincell Will Embark In the Coal Business.

Yesterday Messrs. John Felty and Truman West, owners of the Fickey mine, located a few miles north of Oakland, executed a deed for the property, embracing 158 acres of mineral land, to Mr. James A. Sincell, who will assume charge of the property in a few days.

The mine has been in active operation for several months past and it is said a splendid grade of coal is being produced, which finds a ready sale at a good price.

ROAD ENGINEERS HAVE GONE.

Completed the Survey from Oakland North and South.

Last Saturday afternoon the corps of road engineers who have been at work in this section, under the direction of the State Highway Commission, for the past several weeks, left Oakland on last Saturday for the east, presumably for Frostburg, where the work of surveying the old National Road will be resumed from a point west of Grantsville which point was reached by the engineers before they came to Oakland.

The engineers, under the direction of the commission, were instructed to survey Hooppole Road, on the north of Oakland, from the town limits to a point six miles distant, reaching Sand Flat, just north of the Patrick Rodeheaver farm. This survey was completed about ten days ago and the corps then changed its operations from Hoopole to the Oakland-West Union road, south of town, reaching a point two mile distant where operations ceased under orders from the Commission. The route south from Oakland left the West Union road at the foot of Monte Vista hill and passed out by the Edward E. Sollars' and John T. Bowers' farms, the change being made so as to secure a better grade for the road as the old location over Monte Vista is up a grade of high percentage whereas the Sollars route is practically free of grades.

SHORT RUN.

Here we come again from Short Run.

Snow is the order of the day.

The farmers have taken possession of their easy chairs for the winter.

Mr. E. A. Harvey has moved into his new residence at Kitzmiller.

Miss Nellie Harvey has been on the sick list for the past week.

Mr. J. H. Wilson and family were visiting his daughter, Mrs. Z. H. Moon Sunday.

Mrs. Susan Moon and Mary Wilson have been attending the protracted meeting at Kitzmiller for the past week.

Abe Wilson is hauling pulp wood for A. E. Harvey at present.

Messrs. Geo. Moon and J. T. Harvey were visiting Mr. Abraham Moon last week.

Mr. Benj. Moon, of Oakdale, Neb., was shaking hands with his many friends in this vicinity last week.

Mr. Daniel Wilson was a business caller in Blaine Saturday.

Mr. Allen Moon was a welcome guest at Daniel Wilson's Sunday.

Miss Cinda Wilson was the guest of Jas. A. Wilson Saturday.

Mr. Earl Hamill was the guest of Miss Emma Harvey Wednesday.

Much success to THE REPUBLICAN.

PUSSY

MILLIONAIRE HOLDS ON TO A GOOD ROADS JOB

Young Dr. Mitchell Gets $10 a Month and Keeps Himself.

Garrett county has recently been much in the public eye with her fruit exhibits, her new county buildings, her sales of sheep at fabulous prices, the transfer of coal holdings at more per acre than ever before realized in all this section of the county, and her general prosperity, but now comes from the metropolitan press of Philadelphia something about her county roads and the supervisor of the Deer Park District in the person of Dr. John K. Mitchell, well known all over the country and occupying a warm place in the hearts of the people of Garrett coenty, especially those he has served the best. The newspaper article referred to appeared in Philadelphia Press of Sunday and is as follows:

"Maryland can probably boast of the only millionaire road supervisor in the business, and the remote and mountainous Garrett county claims this overseer as its own. This far western county commissioned him, pays his meagre salary and profits by his interest in its highways.

"Dr. John K. Mitchell, of Philadelphia, the son of the eminent neuroligist, S. Weir Mitchell, and himself a specialist of note, is the supervisor of roads for the Deer Park district of Garrett county, and is proud of the job. He has just accepted the appointment for another term of a year.

"Dr. Mitchell is a resident of Maryland during a portion of the year. His father owns a beautiful summer home near Deer Park, and the younger man's interest in roads began with the desire for a highway from the park to his home. This he secured largely at his own expense. Then his neighbors, some of them residents, others summer householders, suggested that young Mitchell take charge of all their road repairs.

"At first the physician could not see it that way, but his friends insisted and he then concluded to accept the appointment of overseer from the County Commissioners just to see how it felt to be working for $10 a month, to be the "boss" of a road gang and to sit in judgment as to the application of his district's proportion of the annual road fund.

"Dr. Mitchell tried the new job and liked it. He began a systematic improvement of the roads. He wanted improvements that would last, so he studied highway journals and bulletins and then applied modern ideas to the ancient roadways. During his term of office he has given the Deer Park district the best highways in the county. When a few days ago he wanted to retire from his high estate, the clamor against it among the country people proved too persuasive and he has just entered upon his third term as an official of Garrett county."

A Coming Industry.

The sale of 147 sheep in Chicago by Col. George W. Truesdell, of Washington, D. C., for $7,000, ought to awaken the land-owners near Frostburg to a possibility of immense profit from proper development of their own possessions.

All except one of Col. Truesdell's sheep were bred and reared on his farm near Altamont, in Garrett county. Those sold went to different and distant sections of this country, and eighteen to South Africa.

The newspaper report states that the exhibition and remarkable sale in Chicago "will, it is thought, give a great boost to Garrett county as a sheep-raising section."

For a long time the Journal has thought the mountain-lands adjacent to Frostburg, both in this and Garrett counties, could never be more profitably utilized than in growing sheep. Almost practically these stretches of soil, prolific of grass, are now useless—because devoted meagrely to grazing of comparatively few cattle, hogs and horses. Given to sheep, they will maintain many, many more, yeilding two products instead of one—in fact a four-fold result.

For both mutton and wool there is and ever will be perennial demand, and as the supply of coal dwindles what industry can more effectively take the place of mining in our business life than sheep-raising?

This is a matter of so much importance that the business community of town and country should at once make some organized effort to get sheep-culture established here on soil particularly well adapted to that pursuit. Every step in this direction is one toward the best development of which this section is susceptible.—Frostburg Journal.

THREE MEN KILLED BY POWDER EXPLOSION

And Several Very Seriously Injured At Henry Last Friday Afternoon.

Disaster overtook a crowd of coal miners who were engaged in playing cards in a boarding shack at Henry, on the Potomac river, in this county, last Friday afternoon about three o'clock, when three of the men were fatally injured, dying shortly afterwards, four were seriously hurt and five more received minor injuries.

The men, who were all Slavs, were engaged in playing cards, using power kegs, all of which contained more or less of the explosive, for seats and table, when one of the players inadvertantly dropped some hot ashes from his pipe into the keg he was sitting upon. Instantly there was a terriffic explosion, and every man inside the shack was hurled skyward. What was left of the building after the explosion took fire and it was with the greatest difficulty that two of the men, who were lying unconscious on the floor and beneath the wrecked timbers of the house, were rescued by those attracted to the scene by the explosion.

Investigation showed that inside the building at the time of the explosion there were two full kegs of power and these, in addition to the power contained in the other receptacles, had let go with the result above stated. The seriously injured men were taken to the Hoffman Hospital at Keyser where they are being treated, while those who died were buried the following day at Henry.

The fire resulting from the explosion completely destroyed the building wherein it originated and badly scorched those on either side.

A GARRETT COUNTIAN IN TROUBLE

Held in the Allegany County Jail on a Serious Charge.

John McKenzie, of District No 9, this county, was arraigned before Justice Chambers in Frostburg, Allegany county, last Friday afternoon, charged with a serious crime on the person of Miss Iola Arnold, of Borden Shaft, Allegany county. The case against McKenzie was prosecuted before Justice Chambers by State's Attorney Robb, of Cumberland, and the evidence given before the Justice was so damaging that the man was held for the action of the Allegany county grand jury at the April term of the Circuit Court.

McKenzie was unable to furnish bond for his appearance at court and is now incarcerated in the Cumberland jail, where he will probably remain until court convenes.

THE APPLE EXHIBIT.

Senator Brown Visits Delaware Where Local Fruit Was Exhibited For the Fourth Time.

To the Editor of The Republican:

On Tuesday last I was in Wilmington, Del., where I attended the exhibit of the Peninsula Horticultural Society, which embraces the Eastern Shore, Delaware, Maryland and Virginia.

You will be interested to know that much of our Garrett county fruit was exhibited for the fourth time, and it was wonderful how well it had held up.

No prizes were offered at the exhibit, but the following of our varieties were shown: Gideon, Mother, Ewalt, Wolf River, Chenango, Yellow Transparent, Duchess, Red Astracan, Sweet Russet, Northern Spy, Pewaukee, Alexander and Roxbury Russet.

The money prizes won at Council Bluffs, Iowa, were returned by our secretary to the company getting up the National Apple Show, as the new building put for the occasion and other expenses were very heavy, and the amount retnrned by Maryland was appreciated. Our Society won over $150.

Yours truly,

W. McCULLOH BROWN.

Baltimore, Jan. 18, 1909.

May Purchase Additional Lot.

The Pythian Improved Association, a corporation, composed of members of the local lodge Knights of Pythias, has under consideration the purchase of the lot at the corner of Third and Alder streets, now owned by Mr. Henry Lauer, the site of the Lutheran church which was burned several years ago. Adjoining this property on the south the association already owns a very excellent building lot of considerable dimensions. With the purchase of the additional ground an area sufficient for a building of large proportions would be secured and upon which the Association will probably erect a handsome structure.

MORE ABOUT THE ROADS.

"Citizen" Urges Chief Engineer Crosby to Visit Garrett County and Inspect Route.

Oakland, Md., Jan'y 20th, 1909.

To the Editor of The Republican:

In my communication of last week, I called attention, to what, in my judgment, would be conducive to securing a more feasible and better grade for the proposed State road north from Oakland.

Upon reflection, I am more fully convinced than ever that it is encumbent upon the Chief Engineer, Mr. Crosby, to personally inspect and go over all the different routes for the proposed road between Oakland and Deep Creek, and then, after having made a thorough investigation of them all, direct his assistants to lay out the one having the best grade, and the one upon which the money at the disposal of the commission will go the farthest, and then adopt that one as the permanent location for the road. Starting north from Oakland on the present Hooppole road, if the grades are to be reduced, a considerable cut will be necessary between Clark DeBerry's and David Enlow's farms, but a cut will simply be the receptacle for immense drifts of snow in the winter season, putting the road out of commission, and rendering communication, by this road, between Oakland and points north, impossible.

Going still farther north, a cut this side of Patrick H. Rodeheaver's place would prove another inviting place for the deposit of blockading drifts, and so it goes all along the route, if the cuts are to be made. These cuts can be avoided by leaving the present location at the proper points, all of which could be readily ascertained by Mr. Crosby upon a personal inspection of all the feasible routes between the points named. As I understand it, what the people want is a good road and a passable road for all seasons of the year, and not a summer road, for those we have already, and can get along pretty well with such as we have during the summer months.

Taking up the question of rebuilding the old National road from the Allegany line west to Grantsville, which matter appears to have been settled upon by the Road Commission, there would seem to be no doubt that that work should be pushed vigorously, but as to expending any part of the appropriation upon the National Road west of Grantsville, it would seem that such a course could only result in one way—the expenditure of the whole amount allotted to Garrett county upon one road, with beneficial effects to a very small section of Garrett county and leaving out of consideration the primary object of the law, which was to connect, by a system of roads, all the county seats of the State.

It does not require any very extensive knowledge of mathematics to determine what portion of the money allotted to this county will be left, after the National Road is rebuilt from the Allegany line to the Pennsylvania line, for use in building a State road from the National road to Oakland. Some citizen of the county who might be personally and selfishly interested in having the National Road rebuilt to the Pennsylvania line may attempt to solve this question, but his solution will hardly receive the approval of the great body of the people of Garrett county who happen to live south of the National road.

Yours truly, CITIZEN.

A $100,000 CORPORATION FOR GARRETT COUNTY

Object Is to Utilize Water of Yough River and Its Tributaries.

Last Friday there was filed for record in the office of the Clerk of the Circuit Court for this county a certificate incorporating the Youghiogheny Power Company with Willard Brown, Clifford L. Pullin and Heber Crane, of New York City, Carleton M. Moody, of Philadelphia, and William A. Morgart, of Allegany county, Md., incorporators, who are also to compose the board of directors for the first year.

The papers incorporating the company were granted under the laws of the State of Maryland, and were signed by Chief Judge A. Hunter Boyd.

The object of the corporation is to develop the water power of the Youghiogheny river and its tributaries in Sang Run, Accident and Selbysport Districts in Garrett county, and to purchase, acquire, hold, lease, manage, control and operate, and to sell, lease and dispose of electrical and other power for the generation, distribution and supply of electricity for light, heat and motive power to persons, partnerships and corporations in this and adjoining states.

The formation of the company has been under advisemeut for several months, or since a visit was made to Friendsville during the past summer by the promoters and a party of civil engineers when the possibilities of the Yough river to furnish sufficient power for the purpose of the company were examined and passed upon, the contemplated erection of a series of dams along the river at various points within the lands of the Western Maryland Coal Company, being printed in full in these columns at the time.

Under the certificate of incorporation the principal office of the company shall be located in the town of Friendsville and shall be capitalized at $100,000 divided into one thousand shares of $100 each.

DIXON & KELSO

Attend Our Sale

OF

Dry Goods

Beginning Next

Monday Morning

Yours to Please. DIXON & KELSO.

E. A. WEIMER.

SWEEPING REDUCTIONS

IN

CLOTHING

I find in going over my stock I have too much Clothing on hand—especially in the cheaper grades, and to move it out quickly I have decided to sell about

100 Suits for Men and Boys at Just One-Half the Regular Price;

about that many more at one-third off, and a lot more at one-fourth off regular prices. Also a lot of separate PANTS at reduced prices. Lot of OVERCOATS at half-price.

RAINCOATS one-fourth off.

It will pay you to buy now.

Yours Truly. E. A. WEIMER.

NEXT DOOR TO THE POSTOFFICE OAKLAND, MD

INTO THE PRIMITIVE

BY ROBERT AMES BENNET

ILLUSTRATIONS BY RAY WALTERS.

COPYRIGHT 1908, BY A. C. McCLURG & CO.

SYNOPSIS.

CHAPTER I.—The story opens with the shipwreck of the steamer on which Miss Genevieve Leslie, an American heiress, Lord Winthrope, an Englishman, and Tom Blake, a brusque American, were passengers. The three were tossed upon an uninhabited island and were the only ones not drowned. Blake recovered from a drunken stupor.

CHAPTER II.—Blake, shunned on the boat, because of his roughness, became a hero as preservers of the helpless pair. The Englishman was suing for the hand of Miss Leslie. Blake started to swim back to the ship to recover what was left.

CHAPTER III.—Blake returned safely. Winthrope wasted his last match on a cigarette, for which he was scored by Blake. Their first meal was a dead fish.

CHAPTER IV.—The trio started a ten mile hike for higher land. Thirst attacked them. Blake was compelled to carry Miss Leslie on account of weariness. He taunted Winthrope.

CHAPTER V.—They entered the jungle. That night was passed roosting high in a tree.

CHAPTER VI.—The next morning they descended to the open again. All three constructed hats to shield themselves from the sun. They then feasted on cocoanuts, the only procurable food. Miss Leslie showed a liking for Blake, but detested his roughness.

CHAPTER VII.—Led by Blake they established a home in some cliffs. Blake found a fresh water spring.

CHAPTER VIII.—Miss Leslie faced an unpleasant situation. They planned their campaign.

CHAPTER IX.—Blake recovered his sunglasses magnifying glass, thus insuring fire. He started a jungle fire, killing a large leopard and smothering several cubs.

CHAPTER X.—In the leopard's cavern they built a small home. They gained the cliffs by burning the bottom of a tree until it fell against the heights.

peared, Blake raked the eggs from the ashes and began to crack them, solemnly sniffing at each before he laid it on its leaf platter. Some were a trifle "high." None, however, were thrown away.

When it was all over, Winthrope contemplated the scattered shells with a satisfied air.

"Do you know," he remarked, "this is the first time I've felt—er—replenished since we found those cocoanuts."

"How about one of 'em now to top off on?" questioned Blake.

Miss Leslie sighed. "Why did you speak of them? I am still hungry enough to eat more eggs—a dozen—that is, if we had a little salt and butter."

"And a silver cup and napkins!" added Blake. "About the salt, though, we'll have to get some before long, and some kind of vegetable food. It won't do to keep up this whole meat menu."

"If only those little bamboo sprouts were as good as they look—like a kind of asparagus!" murmured Miss Leslie.

"I've heard that the Chinese eat them," said Winthrope.

"They eat rats, too," commented Blake.

"We might at least try them," persisted Miss Leslie.

"How? Raw?"

"I have heard papa tell of roasting corn when he was a boy."

"That's so; and roasting-ears are better than boiled. Win, I guess we'll have a sample of bamboo asparagus a la Les-lee!"

Winthrope took the penknife and fetched a handful of young sprouts from the bamboo thicket. They were heated over the coals on a grill of green branches and devoured half raw.

"Say," mumbled Blake, as he ruminated on the last shoot, "we're getting on some for this smell hole of a coast house, and chicken ranch and vegetables in our front yard. We've got old Bobbie Crusoe beat, hands down, on the start-off, and he with his shipful of stuff for handicap!"

"Then you believe that the situation looks more hopeful, Mr. Blake?"

"Well, we've at least got an extension on our note for a week or two. But I'm not going to coddle you with a lot of lies, Miss Jenny. There's the fever coming, sure as fate. I may stave it off a while; you and Win, ten to one, will be down in a few days—and not a smell of quinine in our commissary. Then there'll be dysentery and snakes and wild beasts— No; we're not out of the woods yet, not by a—considerable."

"By Jove, Blake," muttered Winthrope, "I must say, you're not very encouraging."

"Didn't say I was trying to be."

"But, Mr. Blake, I am sure papa will offer a large reward when the steamer is reported as lost. There will be ships searching for us—"

"We're not in the British channel, and I'll bet what few boats do coast along there don't nose about much among these coral reefs."

"I fancy it would do no harm to erect a signal," said Winthrope.

"Only thing that would make a show is Miss Leslie's skirt," replied Blake.

"There is the big leopard skin," persisted Winthrope. To his surprise the engineer took the suggestion under serious consideration.

"Well, I don't know," he said. "If we had a water background, now. But against the rocks and trees—no; what we want is white. I'll tell you—when Miss Jenny sets to and makes herself a dress of that skin, I'll fly her skirt to the zephyrs."

"Mr. Blake! I really think that is cruel of you!"

"Oh, come now; that's not fair! I wouldn't have said a word, but you said you wanted to help."

"I beg your pardon, Mr. Blake. I—I did not quite understand you. I really do want to help—to do my share—"

"Now you're talking! You see, it's not only a question of the signal, but of clothes. We've got to figure anyway on needing new ones before long. Look at my pants and vest, and Win's too. Inside a month we'll all be in hide—or in hiding. That's a joke, Win, me b'y; see?"

"But in the meantime—" began Miss Leslie.

"In the meantime we're like to miss a chance or two of being picked up, just because we've failed to stick out a signal that'd catch the eye twice as far off as any other color than scarlet. Do you suppose I worked my way up from axman to engineer, and did not learn anything about flags?"

"But it is all really too absurd! I do not know the first thing about sewing, and I have neither thread nor needle."

"It's up to you, though, if you want to help. My sisters sewed mighty soon after they learned to toddle. 'Bout time you learned— There, now; I did not mean to hurt your feelings. You've made a fair stagger at cooking, and I bet you win out on the dressmaking. For needle you can use one of these long, slim thorns—poke a hole, and then slip the thread through, like a shoemaker."

"Ah, yes; but the thread?" put in Winthrope.

"The cocoanut fiber would hardly do," said Miss Leslie, forgetting to dry her eyes.

"No. We could get fairly good fibers out of the palm leaves; but catgut will be a whole lot better. I'll slit up a lot for you, fine enough to sew with. And now, let's get down to tacks. No offense—but did either of you ever learn to do anything useful in all your blessed little lives?"

"Why, Mr. Blake, of course I—"

"Of course what?" demanded Blake, as Miss Leslie hesitated. "We know all about your cooking and sewing. What else?"

"I—I see what you meant. I fear that nothing of what I learned would be of service now."

"Boarding-school rot, eh? And you, Winthrope?"

"If you would kindly name over what you have in mind."

"Um!" grunted Blake. "Well, it's first of all a question of a practical—practical, mind you,—knowledge of metallurgy, ceramics, and how to stick an arrow through a beef roast."

"I—ah—I believe I intimated that I have some knowledge of archery. But I doubt—"

"Cut it out! You'll have enough else to do. Get busy over those bows and arrows, and don't quit till you've got them in shape. Leave my bow good and stiff. I can pull like a mule can kick. Well, Miss Jenny; what is it?"

"Is not—has not ceramics something to do with burning china?"

"Sure!—china, pottery, and all that. Know anything about it?"

"Why, I have a friend who amuses herself by painting china, and I know it has to be burned."

"And that's all!" grunted Blake. "Well, let me tell you. When I was a little kid I used to work in a pottery. All I can remember is that they'd take clay, shape it into a pot, dry it, and bake the thing in a kiln. We've got to work the same game somehow. This kind of eating will mean dysentery in short order. So there's going to be a bean-pot for our stews, or Tom Blake'll know the reason why. Nurse up that ankle of yours, Win. We'll trek it to-morrow—cocoanuts, and maybe something else. There's clay on the far bank of the river, and across from it I saw a streak that looked like brown hematite."

He at Once Began Experiments in the Art of Pottery.

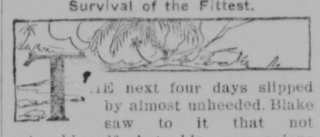
CHAPTER XII.

Survival of the Fittest.



THE next four days slipped by almost unheeded. Blake saw to it that not only himself but his companions had work to occupy every hour of daylight. When not engaged in cooking and fuel gathering, Miss Leslie was learning by painful experience the rudiments of dressmaking.

At the start she had all but ruined the beautiful skin of the mother leopard before Blake chanced to see her and took over the task of cutting it into shape for a skirt. But when it came to making a waist of the cub fur, he said that she would have to puzzle out the pattern from her other one. Between cooking three meals a day over an open fire, gathering several armfuls of wood, and making a dress with penknife, thorn, and catgut, the girl had little time to think of other matters than her work.

Winthrope had been gazetted as hunter in ordinary. His task was to keep Miss Leslie supplied with fresh eggs and each day to kill as many of the boobies and cormorants as he could skin and split for drying. Blake had changed his mind about taking him when he went for cocoanuts. Instead, he had gone alone on several trips, bringing three or four loads of nuts, then a little salt from the seashore, dirty but very welcome, and last of all a great lump of clay, wrapped in palm fronds.

With this clay he at once began experiments in the art of pottery. Having mixed and beaten a small quantity, he molded it into little cups and bowls, and tried burning them over night in the watch-fire. A few came out without crack or flaw. Vastly elated by this success, he fashioned larger vessels from his clay, and within the week could brag of two pots suitable for cooking stews, and four large nondescript pieces which he called plates. What was more, all had a fairly good sand glaze, for he had been quick to observe a glaze on the bottoms of the first pots, and had reasoned out that it was due to the sand which had adhered while they stood drying in the sun.

He next turned his attention to metallurgy. The first move was to search the river bank for the brown bog iron ore which he believed he had seen from the farther side. After a dangerous and exhausting day's work in the mire and jungle, he came back with nothing more to show for his pains than an armful of creepers. Late in the afternoon, he had located the haematite, only to find it lying in a streak so thin that he could not hope to collect enough for practical purposes.

"Lucky we've got something to fall back on," he added, after telling of his failure. "Pass over those keys of yours, Win. Good! Now untangle those creepers. To-night we'll take turns knotting them up into some sort of a rope-ladder. I'm getting mighty weary of hoofing it all around the point every time I trot to the river. After this I'll go down the cliff at that end of the gully."

Winthrope, who had become very irritable and depressed during the last two days, turned on his heel, with the look of a fretful child.

To cover this undiplomatic rudeness, Miss Leslie spoke somewhat hurriedly. "But why should you return again to the river, Mr. Blake? I'm sure you are risking the fever; and there must be savage beasts in the jungle."

"Thats my business," growled Blake. He paused a moment, and added, rather less ungraciously: "Well, if you care, it's this way—I'm going to keep on looking for ore. Give me a little iron ore, and we'll mighty soon have a lot of steel knives and arrow-heads that'll amount to something. How're we going to bag anything worth while with bamboo tips on our arrows? Those boar tusks are a fizzle."

"So you will continue to risk your life for us? I think that is very brave and generous, Mr. Blake!"

"How's that?" demanded Blake, not a little puzzled. He was fully conscious of the risk; but this was the first intimation he had received or conceived that his motives were other than selfish—"Um-m! So that's the ticket. Getting generous, eh?"

"Not getting—you are generous! When I think of all you have done for us! Had it not been for you, I am sure we should have died that first day ashore."

"Well, don't blame me. I couldn't have let a dog die that way; and then, a fellow needs a Man Friday for this sort of thing. As for you, I haven't always had the luck to be favored with ladies' company."

"Thank you, Mr. Blake. I quite appreciate the compliment. But now, I must put on supper."

Blake followed her graceful movements with an intentness which, in turn, drew Winthrope's attention to himself. The Englishman smiled in a disagreeable manner, and resumed his work on the bows, with the look of one mentally preoccupied. After supper he found occasion to spend some little time among the bamboos.

When at sunset Miss Leslie withdrew into the baobab, Winthrope somewhat officiously insisted upon helping her set up her screen in the entrance. As he did so, he took the opportunity to hand her a bamboo knife, and to draw her attention to several double-pointed bamboo stakes which he had hidden under the litter.

"What is it?" she asked, troubled by his furtive glance back at Blake.

"Merely precaution, you know," he whispered. "The ground in there is quite soft. It will be no trouble, I fancy, to put up the stakes, with their points inclined toward the entrance."

"But why—"

"Not so loud, Miss Genevieve! It struck me that if any one should seek to enter in the night, he would find these stakes deucedly unpleasant. Be careful how you handle them. As you see, the sharper points, which are to be set uppermost, run off into a razor edge. Put them up now, before it grows too dark. You know how ninepins are set—that shape. Good-night! You see, with these to guard the entrance, you need not be afraid to go to sleep at once."

"Thank you," she whispered, and began to thrust the stakes into the ground as he had directed.

He had not been mistaken. The vague doubts and fears which she already entertained would have kept her awake throughout the night, but thanks to the sense of security afforded by the sword-bayonets of her silent little sentries, the girl was soon able to calm herself, and was fast asleep long before Blake wakened Winthrope.

Immediately after breakfast, Blake—who had spent his watch in grinding the edges from a stone and experimenting with split and bent twigs—put Winthrope's keys in the fire, and began an attempt to shape them into a knife-blade. To heat the steel to the required temperature, he used a bamboo blowpipe, with his lungs for bellows.

Winthrope turned away with an indifferent bearing; but Miss Leslie found herself compelled to stop and admire his dexterous use of his rude tools.

One after another, the keys were welded together, end to end, in a narrow ribbon of steel. The thinnest one, however, was not fastened to the tip until it had been used to burn a groove in the edge of a rib, selected from among the bones which Miss Leslie had thrown out of the baobab. The last key was then fastened to the others; the blade ground sharp, tempered, and inserted in the groove. Finally, pieces of the keyring were fitted in bands around the bone, through notches cut in the ends of the steel blade. The result was a bone-handled, bone-backed knife, with a narrow cutting edge of fine steel.

Long before it was finished Miss Leslie had been forced away by the requirements of her own work. In fact, Blake did not complete his task until late in the afternoon. At the end, he spent more than an hour grinding the handle into shape. When he came to show the completed knife to Miss Leslie, he was fairly aglow with justifiable pride.

"How's that for an Eskimo job?" he demanded. "Bunch of keys and a bone, eh?"

"You are certainly very ingenious, Mr. Blake!"

"Nixy! There's little of the inventor in my top piece—only some hustle and a good memory. I was up in Alaska, you know. Saw a sight of Eskimo work."

"Still, it is very skilfully done."

"That may be— Look out for the edge! It'd do to shave. No more bamboo splinters for me—dull when you hit a piece of bone. I'm ready now to skin a rhinoceros."

"If you can catch one!"

"Guess we could find enough of them around here, all right. But we'll start in on some of Win's sheep and cattle."

"Oh, do! One grows tired of eggs, and all these sea-birds are so tough and fishy, no matter how I cook them."

"We'll sneak down to the pool, and make a try with the bows this evening. I'll give odds, though, that we draw a blank. Win's got the aim, but no drive; I've got the drive, but no aim. Even if I hit an antelope, I don't think a bamboo-pointed arrow would bother him much."

"Don't the savages kill game without iron weapons?"

"Sure; but a lot have flint points, and a lot of others use poison. I know that the Apaches and some of those other southern Indians used to fix their arrows with rattlesnake poison."

"How horrible!"

"Well, that depends on how you look at it. I guess they thought guns more horrible when they tackled the whites and got the daylight let through 'em. At any rate, they swapped arrows for rifles mighty quick, and anyone who knows Apaches will tell you it wasn't because they thought bullets would do less damage."

"Yet the thought of poison—"

"Yes; but the thought of self-preservation! Sooner than starve, I'd poison every animal in Africa—and so would you."

"I—I— You put it in such a horrible way. One must consider others, animals as well as people; and yet—"

"Survival of the fittest. I've read some things, and I'm no fool, if I do say it myself. For instance, I'm the boss here, because I'm the fittest of our crowd in this environment; but back in what's called civilized parts, where the law lets a few shrewd fellows monopolize the means of production, a man like your father—"

"Mr. Blake, it is not my fault if papa's position in the business world—"

"Nor his, either—it's the cussed system! No; that's all right, Miss Jenny. I was only illustrating. Now, I take it, both you and Win would like to get rid of a boss like me, if you could get rid of Africa at the same time. As it is, though, I guess you'd rather have me for boss, and live, than be left all by your lonesomes, to starve."

"I—I'm sure there is no question of your leadership, Mr. Blake. We have both tried our best to do what you have asked of us."

"You have, at least. But I know. If a ship should come to-morrow, it'd be Blake to the back seat. 'Papa, give this—er—person a check for his services, while I chase off with Winnie, to get my look-in on 'Is Ri-yal 'Ighness.'"

Miss Leslie flushed crimson— "I'm sure, Mr. Blake—"

"Oh, don't let that worry you, Miss Jenny. It don't me. I couldn't be sore with you if I tried. Just the same, I know what it'll be like. I've rubbed elbows enough with snobs and big bugs to know what kind of consideration they give one of the mahsses—unless one of the mahsses has the drop on them. Hello, Win! What's kept you so late?"

"None of your business!" snapped Winthrope.

Miss Leslie glanced at him, even more puzzled and startled by this outbreak than she had been by Blake's strange talk. But if Blake was angered, he did not show it.

"Say, Win," he remarked gravely, "I was going to take you down to the pool after supper, on a try with the bows. But I guess you'd better stay close by the fire."

"I'm Unprepared to Climb Precipices, Even Though My Costume Is That of a Savage."

"Yes; it is time you gave a little consideration to those who deserve it," rejoined Winthrope, with a peevishness of tone and manner which surprised Miss Leslie. "I tell you, I'm tired of being treated like a dog."

"All right, all right, old man. Just draw up your chair, and get all the hot broth aboard you can stow," answered Blake, soothingly.

Winthrope sat down; but throughout the meal, he continued to complain over trifles with the peevishness of a spoiled child, until Miss Leslie blushed for him. Greatly to her astonishment, Blake endured the nagging without a sign of irritation, and in the end took his bow and arrows and went off down the cleft, with no more than a quiet reminder to Winthrope that he should keep near the fire.

When, shortly after dark, the engineer came groping his way back up the gorge, he was by no means so calm. Out of six shots, he had hit one antelope in the neck and another in the haunch; yet both animals had made off all the swifter for their wounds.

The noise of his approach awakened Winthrope, who turned over, and began to complain in a whining falsetto. Miss Leslie, who was peering out through the bars of her screen, looked to see Blake kick the prostrate man. His frown showed only too clearly that he was in a savage temper. To her astonishment, he spoke in a soothing tone until Winthrope again fell asleep. Then he quietly set about erecting a canopy of bamboos over the sleeper.

Just why he should build this was a puzzle to the girl. But when she caught a glimpse of Blake's altered expression, she drew a deep breath of relief, and picked her way around the edge of her bamboo stakes, to lie down without a trace of the fear which had been haunting her.

TO BE CONTINUED.

Dishpan a Social Factor.

The humble dishpan has been assailed with anathemas, and many clever minds are bent on finding some means of ostracizing the horrid thing from the kitchen, but the fact remains that the more shining it is from use, the more it reflects the ennobling qualities of toil.—Denver Republican.

Rewards Constantly Paid.

The rewards of great living are not external things, withheld until the crowning hour of success arrives; they come by the way—in the consciousness of growing power and worth, of duties nobly met, and work thoroughly done. Joy and peace are by the way.—Mable.

Climatic Peculiarity.

Montreal, with its winters of great severity, is 350 miles nearer the equator than is London. Montreal, indeed, is on the same degree of latitude as Venice.

Happiness.

Happiness lies in the consciousness we have of it, and by no means in the way the future keeps its promises.—George Sand.

Before Fame Comes.

There is a dangerous stage in every man's career when his friends are afraid to tell him a compliment, for fear it will make him more conceited.—Boston Globe.

Franklin's Grand Utterance.

Franklin: Rebellion against tyrants is obedience to God.

THE LAME MAN HEALED

Sunday School Lesson for Jan. 24, 1909

Specially Arranged for This Paper

LESSON TEXT.—Acts 3:1-26. Memory verses, 9, 16.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"His name, through faith in his name, hath made this man strong, whom ye see and know."—Acts 3:16.

TIME.—The time is unknown within one or more years. Possibly the event of this lesson took place not long after Pentecost in the summer of A. D. 30. But since it was connected with persecutions it may have been a year or two later.

PLACE.—Jerusalem, in the outer court of the temple near the beautiful gate which led from the outer court, the Court of the Gentiles, to the Court of the Women, i. e., the court in which women were allowed but beyond which they could not go. Peter's sermon was preached in Solomon's porch on the east side of the Court of the Gentiles.

PLACE IN HISTORY.—An example of the work of Christianity, and the beginning of persecution.

Comment and Suggestive Thought.

The Old and New Forms of Worship. It was the custom of the early Christians to worship in their old accustomed way as well as in the new ways taught them by the Spirit. If they broke "the old bottles" before "the new bottles" were prepared, they would lose the very spirit and power of worship. As it was, they filled the old forms full of the spirit of worship, and thus were prepared to use the new alone.

V. 2. "And a certain man lame." All we know of him is (1) that he was born lame; (2) his lameness was caused by weakness of his feet and ankles (v. 7); (3) he was unable to walk; (4) he was poor; (5) he had been lame 40 years (Acts 4:22.) "Was carried." "Was being carried," possibly at the same time that Peter and John were entering. "Whom they laid." "Were accustomed to lay," as the tense shows. "At the gate" (one of the several gates) "of the temple." The word includes not only the house but the courts and their buildings. "Which is called Beautiful." Probably the gateway between the Court of the Gentiles and the Court of the Women, where the Jews went for worship. This gateway had magnificent doors of Corinthian brass 75 feet high, and adorned with plates of silver and gold.

The Gate Beautiful.—There are many beautiful gates in life to higher and better things. The Gate of Hope, the Gate of Love, the Gate of Character, the Gate of Faithfulness, the Gate of Prayer. Jesus Christ is the Beautiful Gate to eternal life.

Such As I Have Give I Thee.—Only such as a person has can he give to others, and only in so far as he really possesses it. Pictures of fire will not warm, nor will semblances of virtues impart virtues. If a man has money he can give money. If he has truth he can impart truth. If one has courage, hope, love, goodness, he can infuse them into other souls. If he himself is full of doubts, hate, ill-temper, bad passions, it is these he will impart to those around him, and by no means can such a one impart to others the good he has not himself. Hence it is that the most important element in teaching and in preaching is the man behind them. A cold church cannot warm the impenitent to life. We cannot kindle others unless we ourselves are on fire.

The test of true religion is its power to help men, to relieve suffering, to transform the lives of men. The gospel of Christ "is the power of God unto salvation to everyone that believes;" that is, to everyone who is willing to receive the salvation.

"Christianity is nothing, according to the writers of the New Testament, unless it moves in the realm of power."—C. E. Jefferson.

Does the church exert its whole power of healing disease and alleviating suffering? There has been a sad neglect of the power of prayer and faith, and of personal uplift for the sick and suffering. Christian Science is a reaction against this neglect. Professors of psychology are beginning to advocate the power of mind over body. Doctors are using this power more than hitherto. "Many diseases can be shaken off by simply lifting up the tone of the interior life. Elizabeth Barrett was a sick woman, confined to her bed, and Robert Browning called upon her. She fell in love with him, and her love for him lifted her out of bed and gave her health again. Anything that quickens the emotions, and fills the heart with thoughts of God, must have its influence on every organ of the body, and make it more difficult for disease to work its ravages there."—C. E. Jefferson.

Experience of the Emmanuel Episcopal Church in Boston.—Under Dr. Worcester, the rector, and his assistant, Rev. Samuel McComb, D. D., a remarkable work was done in 1906-7, for the cure of the ill in body and soul, especially for the victims of neurasthenia, or, as it is popularly called, "nervous prostration." Many have been greatly benefited.

One of the needs of the church today is more emphasis on the power God, on the uplifting, encouraging power of the gospel to triumph over the ills of man.

However, this is only a lesser one of the ways in which the gospel is relieving the sick and suffering.

Medicine is a gift of God as really as faith, it should be used as such wherever it can aid in recovering from sickness. Works are the twin of faith.

It creates the atmosphere in which flourish all the science, the self-devotion, the desire to aid others, hospitals and institutions, that help the poor.

THE REPUBLICAN
Job Printing Department

WITHIN the past year the increased made upon the Job Printing Department of The Republican necessitated many improvements, and to meet the requirements of our rapidly increasing business an addition of considerable proportions to our present building is in contemplation; new type and improved machinery must be purchased—but in the meantime all orders will be executed in a most satisfactory manner.

The products of our Job Printery are all models in the class—our customers are numerous and well satisfied, and wnen ordering

Statements, Vouchers,
Envelopes, Cards,
Sale Bills, Posters,
Bank Forms, Billheads,
Letterheads, Tags,
Programs, Folders,

and

Letter Press Printing of all Kinds

They are confident that the work will be Satisfactory in every particular---in WORKMANSHIP, PRICE and PAPER.

WE MAKE A SPECIALTY OF PRINTING

Lumber AND Coal Companies' Forms
Bank Stationery, Hotel Prospectus,
Lodge and Society Laws,
Reports, Etc.

It will cost you nothing to submit your Printing to us. Estimates will be cheerfully furnished you free. It must be borne in mind, however, that we do not do "cheap" printing, but we do Good Printing which has a par value of one hundred cents for every dollar invested in the product of THE REPUBLICAN PRINTERY.

THE REPUBLICAN
Job Printing Departm't
OAKI AND, MARYLAND.

The Goddess of the Miracle.

By FRANK H. MELOON.

Copyright, 1908, by Frank H. Meloon.

BEATRICE WESTWOOD I had first seen on the Lakeside links one early spring morning as I alighted from a muddy motor car, with the wind blowing sharp and cool from the northwest. The snow was gone, and a few devoted golfers were out. With cheeks aglow Miss Westwood was swinging a brassie that glinted in the sunlight, and even I, whose dull masculine eye takes little note of feminine attire, took in with startled admiration the dainty jacket that ended suddenly a few inches above the hips and the great four inch red and gold check of the longish golfing skirt she wore. It was far from my thoughts then that two months later would see her the wife of my closest friend.

So when Miss Beatrice Westwood became Mrs. Philip Sturgis we of the Lakeside club, friends of the aforementioned Philip, looked upon the ceremony as the end of one of the (to us) most heartrending romances it had ever been in our way to witness. The two had been so absolutely devoted to each other through those brief engagement days that it was positively painful to see them separated. Together they were in the seventh heaven; apart they were plunged into depths corresponding with the seventeenth substratum of despair, a sort of gloomy sorrow and foreboding that they might never meet again.

"IT WILL SERVE HER RIGHT FOR BEING SO JEALOUS."

During this period Philip Sturgis even laid aside that disagreeable habit of practical joking that had made him mildly disliked—or was it feared?—by more than one of the members of the Lakeside club. We all agreed that nothing but a miracle—and love of course is a miracle—could have brought him to this condition. That it might prove lasting was our fervent prayer, and we all looked upon Beatrice Westwood, that dainty little maiden with the red gold hair and the blue eyes which reminded one of the clear summer sky, as the goddess who had wrought the miraculous cure.

But, now that the words which made them one had been said at the altar, there were visible in Philip Sturgis symptoms of a return to his old malady. We had noticed it with inward apprehension that bordered on actual fear—not for ourselves, but for our friend and the wife of our friend. I, who was more his comrade than any, perhaps felt the shock most deeply.

At last it came, the very thing that I had looked forward to with such uneasiness and alarm. Philip Sturgis was planning what he was pleased to term a practical—joke on his wife. Now that they were married Philip had lost much of his former jealousy and had come to regard his wife's idolization of him as an accepted thing. Beatrice, on the other hand, had developed a sudden tinge of jealousy in her supreme regard for her husband.

"Tomorrow," he explained to me as we strolled along the clubhouse veranda, from which were visible the sea to the eastward and the mile long green links to the westward, intersected by a ribbon of brown roadway, "I am going away for a day. You know, I told you about having a horse in training in the Salem stables. Well, my wife doesn't know it yet. I'm keeping it quiet to surprise her when the right time comes. Now, when I go away tomorrow afternoon I'll telegraph my wife that I have gone to see my Felice, a perfect dear. That last is one of my wife's pet phrases. Of course Beatrice will put the worst possible construction on it, and it will serve her right for being so jealous of every move I make."

"I can remember the time, Philip Sturgis," I told him coldly, "when you yourself were mighty jealous if Beatrice so much as looked at another man. It is hardly fair of you to attempt to punish her for one of your own offenses."

For a minute my friend looked shamefaced and uncomfortable. Then, manlike, he attempted to justify himself by a process of sophistry.

"But I have got over it," he explained, "and I want Beatrice to get over it too. It will be for her good in the long run. Besides, it makes me feel uncomfortable to know that she is always watching me in that way."

"There was a time not so long ago," I reminded him, "when it would have pleased you."

"Yes," he agreed, still looking somewhat squeamish; "you are right, of course, to a limited extent. I'll not deny that. And it would affect me that way now only that I'm so absolutely certain about her loving me."

"It is rather selfish of you, this point of view," I reminded him caustically.

"But don't you see," he objected, "what a good joke it will be?"

"Philip Sturgis," I demanded savagely, "haven't your confounded practical jokes, as you call them, made you enough enemies already? The fellows at the club have all been hoping your marriage would cure you of that silly habit. Practical joking has never gained you one friend. It has made you many enemies and has cooled the feelings of more than one friend toward you."

"But," he insisted, with the air of a man who is unconvinced, "this is harmless."

"It is not harmless," I rejoined. "It is the most cruel attempt at a joke I have ever known of your perpetrating, and it makes me very angry with you to think that you should propose making your wife, whom you ought to love above all others in the world, the victim of it."

Philip Sturgis and I went our ways with no words on our lips. I knew that his proposed action was nothing short of shameful, though he obstinately refused to admit, even to himself, as I could see, what he must have known in the bottom of his heart all the time.

When a man is in a dilemma he will, as a rule, make a confidant of his wife and get her advice. This was my course of action. I have not lived with Edith for going on to four years without learning that her qualities of perception, as regards affairs in which the workings of the human heart are involved, are inestimably superior to mine. I was convinced of that when I was led to propose. There is as much difference between her and me on those things as there is between the sun and the moon.

I told her the simple story of Philip Sturgis' despicable plot and found her quite as indignant as I had been. If this had not been the case I should have been greatly surprised. And, once enlisted in the cause, Edith remains forever its faithful adherent. I was not a little elated, then, when I saw that her quick and active feminine brain was at work to devise a plan of fitting punishment for the man who could, in the name of practical joking, so basely treat his young and loving wife.

As the direct result of my conference with Edith she and I walked across the street to the modest residence of the Sturgises the next day immediately after Philip had boarded the in town trolley. Mrs. Sturgis answered our ring and pleasantly invited us to come in. We came, we talked, and we conquered.

After exposing the full sum of her husband's villainy we had a hard time of it to bring Beatrice to treat him as he deserved, and I do not think now that the punishment was at all commensurate with the magnitude of the offense.

Even before we had left the telegram came. It read:

Beatrice:
Have gone to Salem to see Felice, a perfect dear. Particulars later.
PHILIP.

Beatrice rose to the occasion. She looked at my wife, and there was indignation in her eyes.

"'A perfect dear!'" she sniffed, with the same poise of head that I had admired on the golf links. Her self assertiveness was again coming to the fore. "Yes, I will do as you suggest, Mrs. Blakely," she announced, with determination.

"Think," I urged her, "how much worse you would feel if you had not been warned in advance about this telegram and enlightened by us as to the meaning of its contents."

"I will cure him of practical joking now and forever," she answered vigorously, with much of my wife's manner about her.

We had all the next day to make our preparations, and very thoroughly we made them, the three of us chuckling meanwhile at the prospect of success our curative little plot promised. We had not expected Philip to return before 6 o'clock, but at 4:30 Beatrice, glancing from the window, uttered a little shriek of dismay to see his tall, tweed clad figure swing easily from the trolley at the corner.

A hasty run we had of it, screening Beatrice on the way to our house, where she was to stop and from which we could observe many of Philip Sturgis' subsequent movements and guess the rest. The curtains were drawn as he reached the front door, but he stopped to push the electric button, probably thinking that his wife was in the back of the house. We saw a surprised look come over his face when there was no response, and we watched him as he hastily extracted a bunch of keys from his trousers pocket and entered.

We gave him two minutes to find the note Beatrice had left on the dining room table, water sprinkled in two or three places to imitate tears, and written hastily on the back of his telegram. It read:

Philip:
How could you do it? But, monster, I have been suspecting you for some time past. I wish I could forgive you, but I cannot. This time you have ventured a step too far with your Felice. I am going where you will never find me.
BEATRICE.

Then we imagined him as he raved and did things generally to relieve his feelings. A momentary glance of his white, agonized face at the window as a curtain shot up to the very top of the roller justified our expectations that he was by this time deeply regretting his asinine stupidity. Then we saw him rush upstairs.

What he would find there we well knew, for we had his wife's room fittingly prepared for him. Beatrice had worked to no little effect, and its appearance was indeed startling. Professional burglars could not have produced in so short a time as she a scene of such consummate chaos and confusion, though the very Kohinoor had been the object of their efforts. The unique, square pillared brass bed, though littered with masses of lace and muslin, skirts, underskirts and shirt waists in every color of the rainbow, showed no signs of having been slept in. The dainty pillows were piled with heaps of hosiery, and in the center of all lay that identical red and gold check golfing skirt which I had been startled into admiring months before.

The dressing table was bared of its usual mysterious collection of toilet articles. The dress suit case, which was always kept when not in use in the room's solitary closet, was conspicuously absent, and a telltale strap was lying on the floor. Surely Philip Sturgis could find no grounds for disbelieving his wife's deceptive note. Who, indeed, would doubt the evidence of one's own eyes?

At the point when the thoroughly frightened man must have been sitting at the table with his face hidden in his hands, realizing that he who sows the wind must reap the whirlwind, Edith and I heard a half checked sob behind us. We both turned in time to see Beatrice Sturgis wiping away a tear that was trickling down her pretty cheek.

"I—I j-just can't help it," she gasped. "Poor Philip! I'm afraid h-he'll do s-something desperate if I d-don't stop him!"

"You needn't worry," I explained grimly. "I have his razor in my pocket, and I troubled to take all the cartridges out of his revolver before I left!"

"Well, I'm going to meet him when he comes out of the door," she announced. "Truly"—and she smiled through her tears—"I am afraid Philip might do something desperate if I let him go away after reading that note."

I would not have relented myself, but I thought that Edith looked on Beatrice's suggestion with favor. I am far from what you would call henpecked, but I seldom venture to oppose Edith, so I let her have her way

"PERHAPS THIS WILL BE AN INDUCEMENT!"

in this case. Twilight was far advanced when Philip Sturgis walked slowly from the house, the life all gone out of his step and looking quite down in the mouth and fully ten years older than when he had entered.

"Come over here a minute, Phil," I called.

"I can't stop now, old man," he answered in so doleful a tone that I could have laughed.

"Perhaps this will be an inducement," I remarked, exultantly seizing Beatrice by the shoulders and holding her at arm's length in front of me.

Philip Sturgis gave one glad cry and in another moment had folded his wife to his bosom.

That evening we had a heart to heart talk, the four of us.

"I'm done with practical joking forever," Philip Sturgis declared. "And I thank you two from the bottom of my heart for your intervention in my wife's favor. I can now realize what it was you saved her from. It was ten thousand times worse than I imagined it would be, I assure you."

"And Felice?" whispered his wife slyly.

"She can travel in 2:05 and more than comes up to my highest expectations," he responded. "She's a 'perfect dear,' all right, but I think, if you don't mind, I'd rather sell than keep her."

So Sturgis is cured of practical joking, and at the Lakeside club—for the events I have related are of recent happening—we still refer to Mrs. Sturgis, when Philip is not present, as "the goddess of the miracle."

THE REPUBLICAN

BENJ. H. SINCELL, EDITOR.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 21, 1909.

REPUBLICAN PRESS AND AMENDMENT.

The members of the Republican press of Maryland have been honored with an invitation to be the guests of Collector Stone, at dinner at the Union League Club, Baltimore, on January 26. Not long ago a number of leading Republicans were brought together in a similar manner to discuss ways and means to defeat the suffrage amendment. The Republican press of the State is a unit in its condemnation of the proposed amendment and it has the satisfaction of knowing that two leading independent dailies are also lined up against it. It is a labor of love to expose the vicious character of the proposition to fasten upon our State political ring under the guise of eliminating the negro. In a few short weeks the people of the United States will celebrate the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of Abraham Lincoln and he will be honored not alone for his achievements as a statesman nor his services in a great civil war, nor for those simple yet exalted qualities of mind and heart which so endeared him to the great common people; nor for the unutterable pathos of his death just as peace was dawning, but also because he struck the shackles from the slave, declaring that this nation could not exist half slave, half free. When the members of the Republican press meet to discuss a scheme to grant political rights to one class and deny them to another they will have the satisfaction of knowing that they are working in sympathy with the principles of Lincoln and in keeping with the very corner-stone of Republican institutions. The feat of the "four hundred" who gathered two weeks ago to plan to deprive their fellowmen of the right to a voice in government, reminded us of the feast of Belshazzar. The banqueters must have seen the hand-writing on the wall for they fell to quarreling among themselves over who should have the chief places and Senator Rayner was with difficulty persuaded to remain.

ROAD BUILDING.

The Governor's appointment of a Highway Commission, under the new highway law enacted by the last Legislature, is an incident of more importance than many persons, mindful chiefly of oldtime systems of road work, are likely to appreciate. The importance of a commission to supervise the railroads of the state or any other great public utilities or industries, would be instantly recognized, but a Highway Commission is suggestive of a sort of glorified "road master" of the old school, who once a year, when farm work was slackest, ordered men out with ploughs and scrapers to "work out their road taxes" by transferring the mud which in a year had been washed from the middle of the road into the gutters back into the middle of the road again. They called that "working the roads," and so it was, in more senses than one. Between that wretched system and the scheme of highway construction and maintenance upon which the state has now entered there is a great gulf fixed, and the only reminder of the "road master" the Highway Commission should afford is that of the traditional Milesian, "because they're so different!"

The fact is that of all the public utilities of the state the common roads are by far the most important. They effect the daily life and intimate welfare of all the people more than do the railroads and trolley lines put together. The importance of the railroads is doubtless enormous. But we must remember that in the greater part of the country every bit of the traffic of the railroads of necessity passes also over the common roads and in addition a far greater volume passes over the latter which never reaches the former. For every mile of railroad there are many miles of highway. The consideration of corporate profit incessantly impels the managers of railroads to keep their plant in good condition and all their facilities up to date. The consideration of advantage to the whole people calls for similar circumspection and enterprise in the management of the common roads.

It is not creditable to this country that in its era of splendid and surpassing progress in practically all other departments of travel and transportation and public utilities it has permitted itself to lag so far behind in respect to highways, so that today it is still inferior to the Roman Empire of nineteen centuries ago. It is well to have our great double track and four track rock-ballasted railroads but it is lamentable that at the same time we have not provided ourselves with rock-ballasted highways, free from either mud or dust at all times of the year. There is as yet a pitifully small proportion of so-called "good roads" among the highways of the country, of these too few were really well built, and to all entirely too little attention is paid for maintenance. Under the new law and with this new commission there is hope of better things in Maryland.

WILL IT MEAN BETTER STATE GOVERNMENT.

Comparing the disfranchising amendment proposed in this State with that in other States, the Outlook says:

This [the Maryland amendment] encourages the formation of an educated and thrifty black electorate and discourages an educated and thrifty white electorate. Whether it complies with the Federal Constitution or not, this amendment is dead against the interests of the white people of Maryland, and ought to be defeated. If Maryland wants to purify her electorate, let her raise education and property qualifications; but if she must, in order to secure higher standards, admit some of the thriftless and the propertyless, let her do it by provisions that are not permanent, but temporary. In this respect let her follow the example of her Southern neighbors.

The Outlook's reason for saying that the amendment discourages an educated and thrifty white electorate is because it permits the white man to vote without a property or educational qualification. It demands of the negro one or the other. Undoubtedly placing before the negro the suffrage as a premium on industry and thrift or on education will stimulate his ambition, but we see no objection to this feature. We want the negro to educate himself and we want to see him frugal and industrious. There are many other spurs to the ambition of the white man, so that there is no particular call to deny him the suffrage if he is illiterate or without property in order to make him desire education or to become a property owner. Foreigners who come into the State after the adoption of the amendment must comply with its requirements.

But, admitting the soundness of our contemporary's argument, it is not necessary for opposing negro disfranchisement in Maryland The plan became popular with the leaders of the Democratic party when a revolt of the independent voters of the State turned them out of power in 1895. Senator Gorman then called for the elimination of the negro, and the desire to get rid of him has been growing ever since. The inception of the movement was politics, and the majority of those who are now active in the propaganda are animated by political reasons.

The Democrats have been in power at Annapolis for more than forty years with the exception of the term of Governor Lowndes. During that time occasions have been rare when they could not put upon the statute books of the States any law they saw fit. Negro suffrage is not responsible for any bad laws from which the State has suffered. Negro suffrage is not responsible for refusal to enact any good law the state has been denied. What has negro suffrage got to do with such a fraudulent scheme for giving the Democratic bosses power to chose a United States Senator as is the law providing for a so-called direct Senatorial primary? The House of Delegates that enacted it had 71 Democratic and but 30 Republican members, while in the Senate there were 17 Democrats, 9 Republicans and 1 Fusion, giving the Democrats a majority of 48 on joint ballot. Is there any reason in the world to believe that the State would have had a fairer law if there were not a black man within its borders? At least here was one political fight in which the negro could not interfere. It was a contest between Democrats. Yet the leaders could not gain their consent to give the State anything better than a fraudulent perversion of a direct primary.

When we glance back at the Democratic majorities in the Legislature for the last 18 years we see that they have had the votes to enact what legislation they pleased to enact and to refuse to enact what legislation they did not wish to enact, except during the time of the Lowndes administration.

In 1890 the Legislature stood: Senate, 18 Democrats, 8 Republicans; House, 59 Democrats, 32 Republicans. Democratic majority on joint ballot, 47.

In 1892: Senate, 22 Democrats, 4 Republicans; House, 81 Democrats, 7 Republicans, 3 Fusions. Democratic majority on joint ballot, 99.

In 1894: Senate, 21 Democrats, 5 Republicans; House, 68 Democrats, 33 Republicans Democratic majority on joint ballot, 61.

In 1896 and 1898 the Republicans were in a majority in the Legislature as a result of the revolt against the Gorman-Rasin machine.

In 1900: Senate, 15 Democrats, 11 Republicans; House, 65 Democrats, 26 Republicans. Democratic majority on joint ballot, 43.

There was no change in relative strength of the parties in 1904.

In 1906: Senate, 18 Democrats, 8 Republicans, 1 Fusion; House, 51 Democrats, 46 Republicans, 2 Independents. Democratic majority on joint ballot, 11.

It will be seen, therefore, that, with the exception of the years 1896 and 1908, the Democrats have had absolute control for many years of all branches of the State goverement, and negro suffrage has had nothing to do with the sort of administration the State has had. It is the belief of many of the best men in the city and the State that the one thing which has given Maryland as good government as it has had has been a wholesome fear of a political revolt. The thing which has done more than all else put together to produce good results at Annapolis has been the belief that there was an independent sentiment in the State that could not be flaunted too often or too openly.

There was no particular desire for negro disfranchisement in this State until the independent vote showed it could kick over the traces. Since a demonstration of the strength of the independents was given there has been an uncontrollable yearning on the part of the bosses to render the independent vote innocuous by disfranchising the negro, to make Maryland once more a safe one-party State. That is the milk in the cocoanut of the disfranchisement issues so far as the machine is concerned.—Baltimore News.

WHILE Congress is fuming and whacking the President, the sawmills are steaming up and the lumbermen whacking down many noble old forest growths in the desired Appalachian reserves. Quit fooling, Congress, and get to work.

MR. TAFT is trying to pull down the fence that has separated North from South. Thereby he differs from the fence building politicians who don't care what bars of hostility they erect between sections if their own paddocks are tight.

SEVERAL of the new governors raise a popular issue by urging a higher tax for high power automobiles. Good idea. Make 'em pay for damage done the roads. But often it is not so much the high powered machine as the high-geared motorist.

DEATH RECORD.

MRS. ELLEN HUGHES.

At her home in Hutton yesterday morning, after an illness of seven weeks, Mrs. Ellen Hughes, aged nearly 78 years. The deceased lady was born near Tuam, County Galway, Ireland, in 1831, and came to America fifty years ago. Shortly after her arrival in this country she was married, her husband being Martin Hughes, who died more than 20 years ago at their home in Hutton, to which point the couple removed shortly after their marriage. To the couple were born seven children, as follows: John A., a prosperous farmer of near Oakland; Kate, wife of Michael Garrett, of Baltimore; Martin J., of Hutton; Mary E., wife of Martin Pendergast, of Hutton; Margaret, wife of Thomas Clark, of Pittsburg; Thomas J. and Delia, both of Hutton. Mrs. Hughes was a woman of noble character, charitable to a fault, highly respected and loved by all who knew her. She was a member of St. Peter's Catholic church of Oakland from which edifice her funeral will occur tomorrow morning immediately after the aarival of train No. 6, which will convey her remains to Oakland from her late home.

"The Maryland Fythian."

C. T. Clayton, a former newspaper man, has issued from his home town, Lonaconing, Vol. 1, No. 1, of "The Maryland Pythian," a sprightly and very interesting paper published in the interests of the order of the Knights of Pythias of this state. The first number is full of interesting matter and the paper is designed to give members of the order a monthly review of Pythian progress in Maryland.

SPRUCE HOLLOW.

We are having some snow at present.

We had a fine entertainment at our school last Friday night, and are going have a literary on the 6th of February. Everybody invited.

Mr. Jonas Knox caught a fine mink one day last week.

Mr. Ross Durst was a pleasant caller at Mr. Jesse Glotfelty's Wednesday evening.

Mr. Beeson Bowman was a visitor at Mr. Thad Glotfelty's Sunday.

Mr. Josiah Hostetler was visiting friends and relatives in this vicinity last week.

Mr. Peter Bowser is working for Jennings Lumber Co. at present.

Misses Rapha Carr and Sarah Glotfelty visited our school Thursday.

NORTH GLADE.

Lieut West, of Oakland, was a guest of his uncle, G. W. Moon, recently.

B. B. Savage, of Sang Run, was also here about a week ago.

Judge Fitzwater left here Monday evening for New York, where he will receive medical treatment in a hospital. He was accompanied to that city by Hon. C. M. Miller, of Swanton.

We are glad to have H. C. Hershman as road supervisor for District No. 1. We think he is a good man for the place.

The action of the County Commissioners in appointing Mr. Mason as engineer for the roads of Garrett county is a commendable one.

'Squire McRobie has set a good example by turning over a "new leaf" this new year of 1909.

A revival meeting has been in progress for two weeks. Quite a number of conversions and a large number of inquirers are the results so far. Rev. Brumbaugh, assisted by his wife and daughter, is conducting these services.

MARYLAND'S GOVERNOR LOOKING TO THE FUTURE

He Would Provide for Continuing Work on System of State's Good Roads

Governor Crothers, since the publication of the figures showing the increased revenue he hopes to bring into the State Treasury as well as the amount of the State's money he expects to save next year, has received a number of inquiries from county people as to whether he meant that with money enough saved to pay off the $5,000,000 road loan without imposing a cent in the way of direct taxation upon the masses of the people, another road loan of $6,000,000, $2,000,000 of which would be spent in Baltimore city, would be feasible at once.

In answering this question, the Governor said:

"I did mean exactly that. Of course, no one wants another loan before we have expended the one we now have. The law provides that we cannot spend more than a million a year of this loan so that it will take at least five years to get through with the present money available for road purposes. When this is done, however, I believe it will be seen that it has cost the people not a cent; that their taxes have not been increased a cent; and that the benefits will be so great that they will be ready and willing for another $6,000,000 loan to still further carry on the good work in the same way.

"I will have nothing to do with the next loan. That will come under the Governor who follows my administration, but I believe that it will come just the same, and that the people, when they realize that $5,000,000 has been spent without their feeling the burden, will be eager for another loan under the same conditions.

"The only people who will pay for this loan of ours are the men who drink whiskey, and who ride in automobiles, and who inherit fortunes which they do not earn themselves. I do not think you will hear any very strenuous objections from the masses of the people about letting these three classes pay for their roads. The revenue to pay interest on and redeem the bonds of the present loan will come from the increased liquor licenses, the automobile tax and the collateral inheritance tax, which has been doubled within the last year and will be put higher next year. I do not think these classes will kick about what burdens are placed upon them, realizing that they are only just, and I am certain that the people who do not drink whiskey, ride in automobiles or inherit fortunes they do not earn, will not protest."

Marriage Licenses.

During the past week but two licenses to marry were issued by Clerk of the Circuit Court E. Z. Tower, as follows:

Roy E. McCoy, of Weston, and Paulina Selma Stumpf, of Gassaway.

Charles Listie Whiteman, of Shinnston, and Jessie L. Klepfel, of Grafton.

BITTINGER.

There is much jingling of sleigh bells to be heard this week, as the young folks make good use of the snow.

Rev. and Mrs. Alvin Yugel made a business trip to Cumberland this week, and Mrs. Yugel will remain in that city as the guest of Rev. Braren and family.

J. T. Lohr made a business trip to Grantsville last Monday.

Harvey Bitner and wife, of Crellin, have been visiting in this settlement for the past two weeks

Prof. J. C. Beahm, of Grantsville, will give instructions in vocal music in this section during the remainder of the winter and has announced a public song service to be held in the Glades Mennonite church on next Saturday night.

Mr. DeWitt, of Sunnyside, was a guest at J. T. Lohr's last Sunday.

Messrs. Manassa and Lloyd Brenneman are getting their mill in operation to saw some lumber for Cornelius Bowser, who will erect a new barn in the spring to replace the one which was struck and burned by lightning last summer.

We hear many words of approval of the Commissioners choice of Road Supervisor for this district.

The general topic of the day in this, as well as most other sections of the county, is the proposed state road, and we regret that our Accident neighbor is prone to mistake the expression of our humble opinion on the subject for a sign of mourning, but knowing that we did not stretch our imagination in a vain effort to create sixty miles of modern road out of an appropriation sufficient for twenty, nor strained our faith to level the rugged hills of Garrett county, so shall sit comfortably upon the fence of satisfaction and see others grow fat upon the vapor of vague anticipation, and if finally they are found sitting in their back yards on the cold hard rock of disappointment, we promise to send over our well worn crepe for their season of lamentations.

The Lonaconing Savings Bank

Of Allegany Couuty.

Capital Stock . $20,000
Surplus and Undivided Profits . $60,000
Deposits . . $625,000

3 PER CENT. Interest Paid Upon all Savings Accounts.

GIVE THEM A START

Tne New Year is rapidly approaching. This would be a good time for you to start your young folks on the road to Success.

Early training in the practice of self-denial; instruction as to the use and value of money; opportunities for earning and saving money; all these tend to fix and fasten the children in the ways of thrift and prosperity.

We most gladly assist the young people in getting started.

One Dollar opens an account and entitles the depositor to one of our Savings Banks.

We shall be pleased to have our Garrett County friends call and receive a 1908 Calendar.

DAVID SLOAN, President. R. R. SLOAN, Treasurer.

The First National Bank

FRIENDSVILLE, MD.

Capital, $25,000. Surplus and Undivided Profits, $24,000.

OFFICERS:

L. E. Friend, President. J. W. McCullough, V. P.
R. C. McCandlish, Cashier.

DIRECTORS:

L. E. Friend, Merchant,
J. W. McCullough, Lumber and Coal.
W. W. Savage, Merchant.
D. S. Custer, Merchant.
H. M. Rumbaugh, Farmer.
W. H. H. Friend, Pension Agent and Surveyor.
Horace R. DeWitt, Treasurer of Garrett County, Md.
R. C. McCandlish.

We will issue time or demand certificates of deposit and pay you 4 per cent. interest if your money is left with us.

In all its dealings this Bank combines absolute safety with satisfactory service and never loses sight of either.

SAFETY DEPOSIT BOXES FOR RENT.

HOYES.

Weather cold and frosty.

The lastest is a surprise for Miss Artie Friend.

Misses Sudie and Sadie Friend and and Mr. J. Arthur DeWitt were pleasant callers on Miss Ethel DeWitt last Sunday.

The Epworth League is contemplating a social for the benefit of the sufferers in Italy. Hope every one will respond freely. They that knoweth their duty and doeth it not shall be beaten with many stripes.

Peter Opel has a saw mill on J. M. Lowdermilk's farm and people are hauling shingle bolts and logs. He has a shingle saw attached to his mill. It is quite a convenience for the people in this neighborhood.

Mr. Ralph R. Friend, wife and little daughter, who left here just before Thanksgiving, have landed in Blanchard, Idaho, where he has bought an interest in a store and gone in to the mercantile business. Ralph is a hustler. We wish him success. They report zero weather there.

[DELAYED]

It has been a long time since any items have appeared in THE REPUBLICAN from this place so we will dot a few for this week. Perhaps the regular correspondent has gone skating.

Rev. Ferguson is very low. He has had three strokes of paralysis.

Truman Frantz, of Tamora, Neb., was visiting friends and relatives near Hoyes and Oakland. He has gone to Baltimore to visit his sister, Mrs. Sarah Arnold.

Freeman DeWitt has returned from a visit to Connellsville where he has friends and relatives living.

Misses Freda and Ethel DeWitt, and Hallie Friend, accompanied by their gentlemen friends, Messrs. Harry Lowdermilk, Arthur Custer and Charles R. Callis, were highly entertained at the home of Mrs. Bud Friend, near Elder Hill, Sunday last.

Mr. Guy McKeen, who has been traveling over different parts of the west, has returned to his home near Elder Hill to spend a short time.

Miss Della Savage, of this place, is teaching school at Kendall. We wish her much success.

The young ladies of this place, gave the gentleman a leap year party the last night of the old year. Those present were Misses Sadie and Sudie Friend, Olia and Bernadette Mattingly, Della Savage, Auburn Smith, Ethel DeWitt, Jessie Lowdermilk, Hallie Friend and Pearl Bishoff; Messrs. Burns and Harry Lowdermilk, William Bishoff, Arthur DeWitt, Charles Friend, C. B. Callis, Earl Smith, Stanley DeWitt, Arthur Custer and Bruce Savage. We all met on Mr. Arthur Custer's lake and there spent a couple of hours skating. From there the ladies escorted the gentlemen (remember this was leap year) to W. A. Smith's and were served with refreshments and had a jolly good time watching the old year out and the new one in.

The young people of this place are wishing for more ice.

Miss Olia Mattingly, who has been suffernig from a sprained ankle, is much improved at this writing.

We are still holding Epworth League services every Sunday evening. You are all cordially invited to attend.

STOYER.

Mr. F. O. Glotfelty is having a mill unloaded at this place, which will soon be removed to W. G. Riley's farm.

W. W. Steyer has been hauling pulp wood for W. H. Shrout.

Mr. A. Wilson is opening a coal mine on J. W. White's farm, which will soon be in operation.

Rev. E. P. Idleman preached a very interesting sermon to the young people at this place Sunday afternoon.

Mr. V. H. Foley, of Gleason, W. Va., was calling at J. T. Steyer's last Sunday.

Messrs. J. B. Shocky, J. W. Steyer, Charles Thompson and Misses Sarah White, Lucie Junkins and Elizabeth Meloin were visiting in town Sunday.

Tom Meloin was in Cumberland several days last week on business.

W. L. and Isaac Stoyer, while out hunting Friday night, captured a fine raccoon.

Our school is progressing very nicely under the management of Miss Lucie Junkins.

Dr. J. E. Legge was called to Stoyer Friday to see Miss Emma Steyer, who has been ill for some time time.

J. W. White has recently had his new house plastered.

Mr. P. J. Meloin, assistant postmaster, has recently purchased a fine assortment of souvenir post cards.

MOUNTAIN LAKE PARK.

Mr. Eugene Wilson's brother and family of Pittsburg, visited him last week, remaining here until Monday.

Mr. Chas. W. Hopkins returned to the Park Tuesday, after a visit of several weeks with relatives and friends in Cincinnati.

The special services which have been conducted in the Loch Lynn United Brethren church came to a close Sunday night. As a result of the meeting about fifteen members were added to the U. B. church and one to the Mountain Lake Park M. E. church.

Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Rathbun and Mrs. B. F. Crane, visited the parents of Mrs. Rathbun and Mrs. Crane, Mr. and Mrs. Jas. H. Jarboe, at Clarksburg, W. Va., returning Monday after spending several days with the old people. They report Mr. Jarboe in feeble health but better than he was some days ago.

Magistrate John R. Kerfoot has been so ill as to be confined to his home for the past week. He is now some better.

Mr. E E. Friend, who was painfully injured by a fall in his barn last week, will be able to attend to the duties of his office in a few days.

Supt. Davis passed through the Park this morning on his way to Fairmont, W. Va., on Park business.

A Meritorious Institution

Established as a State Bank in 1888 with a capital of $25,000.00; changed to a National Bank in 1903 and capital increased to $50,000.00; TODAY with a capital and surplus of $85,000.00 and total resources of over $500,000.00 we are

BETTER, BIGGER AND STRONGER

than ever. During the 20 years of our existence, our aim has been to extend to our patrons the best possible service. Our steady growth is evidence that the banking institution, which throws the greatest safeguards around its business in order to protect its depositors merits the confidence of the public. If you are not a customer of this Bank let this be your invitation to become one; our relations will be mutually profitable.

Garrett National Bank

Of Oakland, Maryland.

Mr. and Mrs. H. H. Calderwood, of Deer Park, were in the city Monday morning.

Mrs. Arnold A. Scherr, of Eglon, spent yesterday in Oakland as the guest of Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Renninger.

Capt. James Brock, the tailor, has been confined to his home several days recently with a severe bronchial affection.

Mr. E. H. Sincell went to Pittsburg this morning on legal business, expecting to return to Oakland Saturday afternoon.

Mr. and Mrs. Horace R. DeWitt, of Hoyes, spent Tuesday and a portion of yesterday in Oakland with their many friends.

Miss Heyward, of Bond, who was the guest of the Misses Littman in Oakland for the past week, returned to her home yesterday afternoon.

Attorney Julius C. Renninger spent several days last week in Philadelphia on legal business, returning to Oakland Saturday morning.

Mr. Thomas A. Gonder, of the Hamill Lumber Company, Etam, W. Va., spent Sunday in Oakland with his mother and other relatives.

As an indication that winter is over, or at least delayed, a local dealer in sleds and sleighs is advertising a special low price on these lines.

Sheriff Austin Brown is slowly recovering from a severe attack of the grip which had him in its clutches for several days last and this week.

Messrs. G. S. Hamill and D. E. Offutt left Oakland Monday afternoon for a point in Ohio where they went on business connected with some real estate holdings.

Mrs. Grace Weber returned to her home at Oakland on Thursday, after a visit to the home of her mother, Mrs. William Jackson, of Washington street. —Lonaconing Star.

Mr. J. Wilson Humbird and Mrs. Annie Devries, of Cumberland, spent Sunday afternoon in Oakland as the guests of Mr. and Mrs. W. R. Offutt at their home on Second street.

Mr. W. C. Dunnington, of Mountain Lake Park, spent several days last week at Grafton at the bedside of his brother, who was injured in a railway accident near Grafton recently.

January is nearly gone, Groundhog Day is nearly due, and soon we shall again be watching for the robins. So let us take it calmly when a man in the observatory predicts much colder weather.

Mr. Joseph White left Oakland yesterday morning for New York City in response to a telegram announcing the illness of his wife, who has been in New York on a visit to her sister for several weeks.

Many fine automobiles were exhibited at the New York show at prices cut 33 to 50 per cent. If it is to become so much cheaper, motoring will soon become as unpopular with the Smart Set as bicycling.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles A. Shaffer, of Baltimore, and Messrs. Herbert Shaffer and Marshall Martin, of Aurora, W. Va., were the guests on Sunday of Mr. and Mrs. Louis Bush at their home in Oakland.

Rev. Henry E. Friend, of Hoyes, was in Oakland Tuesday of this week having come to this section to visit his son, Mr. E. E. Friend, who was injured, as stated in these columns last week, at his home in the Park.

Mr. George Flack Sansbury, one of Cumberland's leading architects, was a business visitor to Oakland yesterday where he interested several parties in plans for contemplated buildings during the coming summer.

Mr. G. A. Bolden, formerly of Oakland, but now of Grafton, W. Va., where for several years he has been engaged in the newspaper business, has been made one of the printing clerks in the West Virginia Legislature.

Mr. and Mrs. Notley B. Browning and Mr. and Mrs. W. M. Trickett were at Terra Alta, W. Va., last Saturday where they attended the funeral of the late Dr. M. L. Feichtner, his death having occurred on Thursday after an extended illness.

Are our merchants prepared to meet the competition, constantly growing stiffer, of those alluring spring catalogs from the metropolitan department stores? Of course the bargains at home are better, when you consider that in our own shops you get more personal attention and a better chance to return unsatisfactory goods. But the public forgets this. Trade has to be drummed, and the only efficient drummer is a live newspaper.

CAPITAL 50,0 0.00 — SURPLUS AND PROFITS $20,000.00

THE First National Bank

OAKLAND, MD.

GOVERNMENT DEPOSITORY.

One of the Largest and Best Equipped Banking Houses in Maryland.

Vaults absolutely Fire and Burglar proof.

Safety Deposit Boxes for Rent

Pays 3 Per Cent. on Time Deposits—Compounded Semi-Annually

Every courtesy extended consistent with sound banking.

Home Savings Banks Free. $1.00 will start an account.

The Depositor with a Dollar account receives the same consideration as the largest depositor.

COME IN AND GET ACQUAINTED

ARRESTED FOR ILLEGAL SELLING

William Barclay, of Lonaconing, Placed Under Bond for His Appearance.

Last Wednesday afternoon Sheriff Brown, of Garrett county, placed William Barclay, of Lonaconing, under arrest for selling liquor without a license, Barclay's alleged offenses having extended over several months and his points of operations being along the Garrett-Allegany line, where he disposed of quantities of liquors in the lumber camps and coal mines in that section.

Barclay was indicted three times for these offenses at the last session of the grand jury and his arrest as above stated followed.

Barclay furnished the requisite bond for his appearance at the next term of the Circuit Court when he will be placed on trial, his bondsmen being Robert Cook, John J. Winn and Daniel Sweeney, all of Lonaconing.

In connection with the weekly meeting of the Luther League to be held next Wednesday evening, the members of the organization will conduct a social at which refreshments will be served and a cordial invitation is extended all to attend.

Mr. Stuart F. Hamill, who has been spending the past two weeks at Etam, West Va., the scene of his saw mill operations, returned to Oakland Saturday night and on Tuesday evening left for New York City where he will remain for a few days' visit.

Mr. Scott T. Jones and Mrs. G. A. Fraleywent to Terra Alta yesterday to attend the funeral of Mrs. Thornton White, mother of Mr. William T. White, of Terra Alta, at whose residence in Terra Alta she died on Monday after a long illness due to extreme age.

Mr. Charles A. Tower, who recently resumed a position with Mr. G. S. Hamill, has moved his household effects into rooms of Mr. H. R. DeWitt's house on Second street. Mr. Tower's family is expected to arrive in Oakland from Cumberland this week.

Mr. John J. Garrett, of near Oakland, an old soldier and well known resident of the county, suffered a slight stroke of appoplexy yesterday morning. His condition for a time was thought to be very serious but latter in the day he rallied and last night was very much better.

A town is judged by its newspapers, much as a man is sized up by his clothes. The whole community is thus a partner in its journalistic enterprises. If you want your city to put its best foot forward, give the home paper the support it needs to keep on expanding and growing more attractive.

The series of revival meetings, which were begun in St. Paul's M. E. church last Sunday night under the direction of the pastor, Rev. J. B. Workman, are being well attended by the members of that congregation as well as by those of other denominations and much interest is being manifested.

A copy of the West Milton (O.) Record which was received at this office a few days ago, states that Miss Ada M. Gnagey, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John E. Gnagey, formerly of Accident, had been elected assistant cashier and bookkeeper of the Citizens' State Bank located at West Milton.

Mr. A. W. Clary, formerly of Oakland, has been made assistant secretary of the Young Men's Christian Association (Terminal Railroad Department), Washington, D. C., the rooms of the Association being located in the new Union Station in Washington, where Mr. Clary will welcome all his Garrett county friends.

Mr. Charles S. Friend, formerly of Swanton, but now located at Piedmont, W. Va., where he is engaged as a traveling salesman for a wholesale meat packing firm, was in Oakland last Friday. Mr. Friend desires to purchase a small tract of land located near Oakland which he intends to set in apple and other fruit bearing trees, believing that this section of the country as a fruit producing locality is the best in the world.

The editor of THE REPUBLICAN has received and accepted an invitation to attend a meeting of the representatives of the Republican press of Maryland to be held in Baltimore on Tuesday next at which time Mr. William F. Stone, sergeant-at-arms of the Republican National Committee will be the host. The object of the meeting is to discuss the proposed disfranchising amendment and other subjects of importance to the people of Maryland.

Mr. and Mrs. V. V. Washburne, formerly of Oakland, but more recently of Brunswick Md., and Mr. Bernard Gonder, of Oakland, left here last Friday night for Butte, Montana, where the latter already has a position with the Santa Fe Railway and was home on a leave of absense to attend the funeral of his father, the late Andrew B. Gonder, while Mr. Washburne has a prospective position with the same company as agent at one of the stations along the line. Prior to leaving here for the northwest Mr. and Mrs. Washburne spent several days in Oaklnnd with friends.

List of Letters.

Mrs. A. A. Allen, Miss Martha Bosley, Aufrey Brenneman, Mary Mayle (2), Mrs. Maggie E. Wilson.

LOCAL TEACHERS' INSTITUTE.

Proceedings of the Teachers' Meeting Conducted at Deer Park.

A local teachers' institute was held at Deer Park Saturday, Jan. 16th, 1909, under the direction of the Garrett County Teachers' Association, with Prof. H. A. Loraditch, of Oakland, president of the association, presiding.

The institute convened at 11 a. m. and opened with the song "Maryland, My Maryland," followed by a prayer by Rev. W. H. Clary, of Deer Park. Rev. Clary delivered the address of welcome in which he emphasized the importance of the teaching profession, showing that it is the main-spring of progress, locally and nationally, educationally, morally and industrially. He referred to the Great Teacher as our perfect example.

These pleasant words of welcome were happily responded to by Supt. E. A. Browning, giving a brief review of the teachings of Pythagoras and others, showing that the teachers have always fought the vices of ignorance and superstition, trying to improve and make the world better along all lines.

Prof. Browning also announced that we are to have the State Teachers' Association with us at Mt. Lake Park this year and made an eloquent appeal to the teachers to give the association a warm welcome and to profit by this meeting. Prof. Browning, speaking further, invited the opinions of all the teachers of the county regarding the summer Normal Schools. This subject will be further discussed at the Oakland local institute to be held soon.

The discussion of English was introduced by W. E. Bishoff, in which he took as the aim in teaching this subject in grammar grades to be "automatic correctness in the mechanics of composition," as expressed by Roark; meaning by mechanics of composition expression of thought or feeling clearly, correctly, with correct heading, proper margin, exactness in spelling, punctuation, paragraphing, etc. Paragraphing was discussed at length, showing the method of teaching this by requiring outlines to be made of every composition before it is written. By having as many paragraphs as there are general topics in the outline this part of the work is not difficult.

Prof. Loraditch opened the discussion on spelling with a comparison of old and new methods of teaching, and spoke of the strong points in both. He then presented in a very logical manner the successive steps in teaching spelling, beginning with its introduction by the phonic method and speaking of the study, meaning and use of words, use of dictionary, derivation of words, synonyms, syllabication, etc. He suggested making a list of the new words in every lesson and directing especial attention to these. Prof. A. W. Dewitt offered the valuable suggestion here that the teacher keep a list of all words missed during the week and review them on Friday afternoon. Prof. U. G. Palmer made some remarks that were right to the point when he stated that we must get down to more thorough work on this subject, more thorough drills, better training of the perceptive powers, etc. Prof. Browning urged that books be thoroughly finished before laying them aside; teach uses of words, syllabication, etc.

Miss Mary O'Donnel presented a well written paper on number work. She showed that this work should begin with the development of the idea of relation of number to objects. She emphasized constant drill in making figures, forming combinations of numbers, use of signs, etc., and recommended applications to concrete experiences through the actual handling of many objects.

In introducing the subject of arithmetic, Prof. Palmer stated that education depends on thought power and appealed to the teachers to get their pupils down to reasoning as much as possible in order to train the logical faculties. Prof. Palmer then gave us a model lesson in the teaching of measurements, dealing with plane figures. His work was very practical and it is to regretted that lack of space will not permit us to give his outline here for the benefit of those not present. Prof. Loraditch suggested that Manual Training is an important factor in this work, as students are asked to make triangles, rectangles, etc, and thus have a more careful study of them.

Prof. Browning announced that the teachers' library, which is owned by the teachers of the county owing to their purchase some years ago, has been removed to the new court house and is open to the use of teachers at all times.

A vote of thanks was given the students of the Deer Park school for the excellent music interspersed throughout the program, after which the institute adjourned in happy mood, all agreeing that a pleasant and profitable day had been spent.

Prof. Dewitt is to be complimented on having the Deer Park patrons and pupils of his school interested in the institute work, as shown by their presence, and the people of that place are to be commended for their educational enthusiasm.

W. E. BISHOFF, Secretary.

Subscribe for the Republican.

Broke His Arm.

"Smiles" Frantz, the youngest son of Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Frantz, while sled riding on the Oakland Hotel hill Saturday afternoon, in some manner which he cannot explain, broke his right arm just above the wrist. The boy was in company with other youths of his age and they say he was coming down the hill at a pretty good clip when his sled broke through the crust and he put out his hand to steady himself which he thinks threw his weight upon it, with the result as above stated.

Appointed Justice of the Peace.

On Monday Governor Crothers appointed Nathan C. Browning, of Sang Run, Justice of the Peace in and for Election District No. 6, in place William Bowman, appointed some time ago and who failed to qualify.

Local Teachers' Institute.

A local teachers' institute will be held in the High School building in Oakland on Saturday, January 30th, when the following program will be rendered: Address of welcome, W. E. Bishoff; response, A. W. DeWitt; A Lesson in Primary Reading, Miss Jennie Miller; A Lesson in Primary Numbers, Miss Olive DeWitt; The Uses of the Globe, Prof. U. G. Palmer; Orthography, Miss Jessie Conneway; Mental Arithmetic, Miss Anna DeBerry; tardiness, Miss Cora Weimer; Factoring in Algebra, A. W. DeWitt; Question Box, conducted by Misses Zaidee Browning and Lizzie Leary; A Lesson in Geography, Miss Dunham; Examinations and Reviews, Miss Marion Leary.

The program will be interspersed with music, etc., rendered by the pupils of the Oakland school.

H. A. LORADITCH, Pres't.

Married.

BERNARD—BITTINGER—At the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Amos Bittinger, near Mountain Lake Park, by Rev. E. Manges, of the Lutheran church, on Sunday afternoon, January 10, Miss Naomi V. Bittinger and Mr. James Luther Bernard.

GIVING MEDICINE

When the illness first appears is the easiest and surest way to cure. A supply of simple remedies of recognized merit should be in every household. We carry a full assortment of such remedies. We shall be glad to assist you in selecting those most effective in the early stages of the most common ailments.

OAKLAND PHARMACY

JOS. E. HARNED, Proprietor.

OAKLAND, MD.

ARTHUR TOWNSHEND

Happy New Year.

BARGAINS

TO BEGIN WITH.

FOR THE NEXT

Thirty Days

we will in order to

CLOSE OUT

GIVE YOU BARGAINS IN

Ladies Outing AND Flannel Skirts,

Flannels & Winter Goods

MEN'S AND BOYS'

OVERCOATS, CAPS and Heavy Coats.

ARTHUR TOWNSHEND

ORDER NISI.

In re Estate of Ellen Bradley, deceased.
In the Orphans' Court for Garrett County.

Ordered, this 7th day of January, in the year 1909, by the Orphans' Court for Garrett county, that the sale made and reported in the above cause by William E. Walsh, Executor, be ratified and confirmed, unless cause to the contrary thereof be shown on or before the 9th day of February, 1909; provided, a copy of this order be published in some newspaper published in Garrett county, once a week for three consecutive weeks before the 29th day of January, 1909.

The report states the amount of sales to be $550.

E. E. FRIEND,
Register of Wills.

True Copy, Test:
E. E. FRIEND, Register of Wills.

TRUSTEES' SALE

OF VALUABLE

Real Estate

Near Cranesville, Preston County, West Virginia.

Under and by virtue of a power of sale contained in a Deed of Trust from Bert C. Feather and Lillian B. Feather, his wife, to the undersigned Trustees, D. Lindley Sloan and Edward H. Sincell, bearing date the 27th day of December, 1905 and duly recorded in Liber E. Z. T. No. 41, folio 508, etc., one of the Mortgage Records of Garrett county, Md., and also recorded in Trust Deed Book No. 13, page 368, among the Records of Preston county, West Virginia, the said Trustees, default having occurred under the covenants contained under said Deed of Trust, hereby give notice, that they or either of them, as provided, will offer at public auction on the premises to the highest bidder, on

FRIDAY,

The 29th Day of January,

1909, at the hour of 1 o'clock P. M., for the hereinafter described real estate, situate in Garrett county, Maryland, and at the hour of 1:30 o'clock, P. M., for the hereinafter described real estate, situate in Preston county West Virginia, all of the following described real estate, lying and being partly in Garrett county, Maryland, and partly in Preston county, West Virginia, and constituting the

"HOME FARM"

of the Late Michael E. Feather.

1. Beginning for the first parcel at a stone in the 1st line of a tract of land called "The Diadem" 15 poles from the beginning corner of said tract, and also in the 11th line of a tract of land called "Recourse," granted by the State of Maryland on the 12th day of May, 1796, and running thence with the 1st line of "The Diadem," North 63½ degrees East, 120 poles to a stone heap and a birch, corner to Edmund Albright's land, thence with said Albright's and John E. Otto's line, North 6½ degrees West, 169 poles to a stone and a small red oak, the beginning corner of said Otto's land, thence South 25 degrees West, 17 poles and 7 links to a stone, West 20 poles to a stone, South 1½ degrees East, 201 poles to a stone to M. H. Frankhouser's corner, thence South 86½ degrees East 88⅝ poles to a stone, thence North 33½ degrees West, 36½ poles to a stone and pointers, thence North 3½ degrees East, 70 poles to the place of beginning, containing 125 acres, more or less, excepting, however, from the operation of this deed of trust the quantity of 23¾ acres of said land which was conveyed by the said Feather and wife to Edgar F. Jenkins by deed dated the 22nd day of April, 1901, and recorded in Liber E. Z. T. No. 40, folio 388, one of the Land Records of Garrett county, Md.

2. All that other portion of the above described home farm of the late Michael E. Feather, beginning for the same at a stake in a tract of land owned by C. L. Falkenstein, in the center of a spring and West 100 poles to a stone, thence South 25 degrees West, 17 poles and 7 links, South 29 degrees West 11 poles, South 10 degrees West 17 poles, South 12 degrees West 37 poles, South 16½ degrees West, 10 poles, South 2 degrees West, 34 poles at the end of a lane (the above calls following from the end of the first line), thence with lane leading from Cranesville to Sang Run North 80 degrees East, 35 poles to a stone above the barn, thence South 4½ degrees East, 9 poles and 15 links, East, 2 poles and 8 links, South 47 degrees East, 5 poles and 19 links to a stone, South 2 degrees West, 92 poles to a stake in J. C. Feather's line, and with said line South 74 degrees East, 73 poles to a stone in M. H. Frankhouser's line, thence with said line North 3½ degrees East, 41 poles to a stake, thence North 201 poles to the beginning, containing 150 acres, more or less, and being the same property which was conveyed by the said Bert C. Feather and wife to John G. Elsey and upon which the said Elsey now resides.

This property is one of the finest and best improved farms in the Cranesville section. On it is a fine DWELLING HOUSE and a large BANK BARN and other necessary outbuildings and a good ORCHARD and a large part of the land is in a high state of cultivation.

TERMS OF SALE—As prescribed by said deed of trust. Cash on the day of sale. Conveyancing at cost of purchaser.

D. LINDLEY SLOAN,
EDWARD H. SINCELL,
Trustees.

Mortgagee's Sale

OF VALUABLE

Real Estate

Near Loch Lynn Heights, Garrett County, Md.

Under and by virtue of the power of sale contained in a mortgage from George P. White and Rachael R. White, his wife, and Benjamin F. Crane and Civilla C. Crane, his wife, to J. Gilbert Selby, bearing date the 30th day of September, 1901, and duly recorded in Liber E. Z. T., No. 41, folio 10, etc., one of the Mortgage Records of Garrett county, Maryland, default having occurred under the covenants contained in said mortgage, the undersigned attorney named in said mortgage hereby gives notice that on

SATURDAY,

30th Day of January, 1909,

at the hour of eleven o'clock a. m., in front of the First National Bank Building, in the town of Oakland, Maryland, he will offer at public sale to the highest bidder all that part of

MILITARY LOT NO. 947,

situate, lying and being in Garrett County, Maryland, containing

SIX ACRES AND 75 PERCHES

of land, and fully described by courses and distances in a deed for the same to the said George P. White and Benjamin F. Crane, from Annie J. Phoebus, dated the 15th day of August, 1898, and duly recorded in Liber E. Z. T., No. 34, folio 523, etc., one of the Land Records of Garrett county, Maryland.

This Property is improved by an Ice Pond and Ice House and contains several eligible Building Sites.

TERMS OF SALE—As prescribed by said mortgage, cash on the day of sale.

EDWARD H. SINCELL,
Attorney for Mortgagee named in said Mortgage.

THE REPUBLICAN
Job Printing Department

WITHIN the past year the increased made upon the Job Printing Department of The Republican necessitated many improvements, and to meet the requirements of our rapidly increasing business an addition of considerable proportions to our present building is in contemplation; new type and improved machinery must be purchased—but in the meantime all orders will be executed in a most satisfactory manner.

The products of our Job Printery are all models in the class—our customers are numerous and well satisfied, and wnen ordering

Statements, Vouchers,
Envelopes, Cards,
Sale Bills, Posters,
Bank Forms, Billheads,
Letterheads, Tags,
Programs, Folders,

and

Letter Press Printing of all Kinds

They are confident that the work will be Satisfactory in every particular---in WORKMANSHIP, PRICE and PAPER.

WE MAKE A SPECIALTY OF PRINTING

Lumber AND Coal Companies' Forms
Bank Stationery, Hotel Prospectus,
Lodge and Society Laws,
Reports, Etc.

It will cost you nothing to submit your Printing to us. Estimates will be cheerfully furnished you free. It must be borne in mind, however, that we do not do "cheap" printing, but we do Good Printing which has a par value of one hundred cents for every dollar invested in the product of THE REPUBLICAN PRINTERY.

THE REPUBLICAN
Job Printing Departm't
OAKLAND, MARYLAND.

The Goddess of the Miracle.

By FRANK H. MELOON.

Copyright, 1908, by Frank H. Meloon.

BEATRICE WESTWOOD I had first seen on the Lakeside links one early spring morning as I alighted from a muddy motor car, with the wind blowing sharp and cool from the northwest. The snow was gone, and a few devoted golfers were out. With cheeks aglow Miss Westwood was swinging a brassie that glinted in the sunlight, and even I, whose dull masculine eye takes little note of feminine attire, took in with startled admiration the dainty jacket that ended suddenly a few inches above the hips and the great four inch red and gold check of the longish golfing skirt she wore. It was far from my thoughts then that two months later would see her the wife of my closest friend.

So when Miss Beatrice Westwood became Mrs. Philip Sturgis we of the Lakeside club, friends of the aforementioned Philip, looked upon the ceremony as the end of one of the (to us) most heartrending romances it had ever been in our way to witness. The two had been so absolutely devoted to each other through those brief engagement days that it was positively painful to see them separated. Together they were in the seventh heaven; apart they were plunged into depths corresponding with the seventeenth substratum of despair, a sort of gloomy sorrow and foreboding that they might never meet again.

"IT WILL SERVE HER RIGHT FOR BEING SO JEALOUS."

During this period Philip Sturgis even laid aside that disagreeable habit of practical joking that had made him mildly disliked—or was it feared?—by more than one of the members of the Lakeside club. We all agreed that nothing but a miracle—and love of course is a miracle—could have brought him to this condition. That it might prove lasting was our fervent prayer, and we all looked upon Beatrice Westwood, that dainty little maiden with the red gold hair and the blue eyes which reminded one of the clear summer sky, as the goddess who had wrought the miraculous cure.

But, now that the words which made them one had been said at the altar, there were visible in Philip Sturgis symptoms of a return to his old malady. We had noticed it with inward apprehension that bordered on actual fear—not for ourselves, but for our friend and the wife of our friend. I, who was more his comrade than any, perhaps felt the shock most deeply.

At last it came, the very thing that I had looked forward to with such uneasiness and alarm. Philip Sturgis was planning what he was pleased to term a practical joke on his wife. Now that they were married Philip had lost much of his former jealousy and had come to regard his wife's idolization of him as an accepted thing. Beatrice, on the other hand, had developed a sudden tinge of jealousy in her supreme regard for her husband.

"Tomorrow," he explained to me as we strolled along the clubhouse veranda, from which were visible the sea to the eastward and the mile long green links to the westward, intersected by a ribbon of brown roadway, "I am going away for a day. You know, I told you about having a horse in training in the Salem stables. Well, my wife doesn't know it yet. I'm keeping it quiet to surprise her when the right time comes. Now, when I go away tomorrow afternoon I'll telegraph my wife that I have gone to see my Felice, a perfect dear. That last is one of my wife's pet phrases. Of course Beatrice will put the worst possible construction on it, and it will serve her right for being so jealous of every move I make."

"I can remember the time, Philip Sturgis," I told him coldly, "when you yourself were mighty jealous if Beatrice so much as looked at another man. It is hardly fair of you to attempt to punish her for one of your own offenses."

For a minute my friend looked shamefaced and uncomfortable. Then, manlike, he attempted to justify himself by a process of sophistry.

"But I have got over it," he explained, "and I want Beatrice to get over it too. It will be for her good in the long run. Besides, it makes me feel uncomfortable to know that she is always watching me in that way."

"There was a time not so long ago," I reminded him, "when it would have pleased you."

"Yes," he agreed, still looking somewhat squeamish; "you are right, of course, to a limited extent. I'll not deny that. And it would affect me that way now only that I'm so absolutely certain about her loving me."

"It is rather selfish of you, this point of view," I reminded him caustically.

"But don't you see," he objected, "what a good joke it will be?"

"Philip Sturgis," I demanded savagely, "haven't your confounded practical jokes, as you call them, made you enough enemies already? The fellows at the club have all been hoping your marriage would cure you of that silly habit. Practical joking has never gained you one friend. It has made you many enemies and has cooled the feelings of more than one friend toward you."

"But," he insisted, with the air of a man who is unconvinced, "this is harmless."

"It is not harmless," I rejoined. "It is the most cruel attempt at a joke I have ever known of your perpetrating, and it makes me very angry with you to think that you should propose making your wife, whom you ought to love above all others in the world, the victim of it."

Philip Sturgis and I went our ways with no words on our lips. I knew that his proposed action was nothing short of shameful, though he obstinately refused to admit, even to himself, as I could see, what he must have known in the bottom of his heart all the time.

When a man is in a dilemma he will, as a rule, make a confidant of his wife and get her advice. This was my course of action. I have not lived with Edith for going on to four years without learning that her qualities of perception, as regards affairs in which the workings of the human heart are involved, are inestimably superior to mine. I was convinced of that when I was led to propose. There is as much difference between her and me on those things as there is between the sun and the moon.

I told her the simple story of Philip Sturgis' despicable plot and found her quite as indignant as I had been. If this had not been the case I should have been greatly surprised. And, once enlisted in the cause, Edith remains forever its faithful adherent. I was not a little elated, then, when I saw that her quick and active feminine brain was at work to devise a plan of fitting punishment for the man who could, in the name of practical joking, so basely treat his young and loving wife.

As the direct result of my conference with Edith she and I walked across the street to the modest residence of the Sturgises the next day immediately after Philip had boarded the in town trolley. Mrs. Sturgis answered our ring and pleasantly invited us to come in. We came, we talked, and we conquered.

After exposing the full sum of her husband's villainy we had a hard time of it to bring Beatrice to treat him as he deserved, and I do not think now that the punishment was at all commensurate with the magnitude of the offense.

Even before we had left the telegram came. It read:

Beatrice:
Have gone to Salem to see Felice, a perfect dear. Particulars later.
PHILIP.

Beatrice rose to the occasion. She looked at my wife, and there was indignation in her eyes.

"'A perfect dear!'" she sniffed, with the same poise of head that I had admired on the golf links. Her self assertiveness was again coming to the fore. "Yes, I will do as you suggest, Mrs. Blakely," she announced, with determination.

"Think," I urged her, "how much worse you would feel if you had not been warned in advance about this telegram and enlightened by us as to the meaning of its contents."

"I will cure him of practical joking now and forever," she answered vigorously, with much of my wife's manner about her.

We had all the next day to make our preparations, and very thoroughly we made them, the three of us chuckling meanwhile at the prospect of success our curative little plot promised. We had not expected Philip to return before 6 o'clock, but at 4:30 Beatrice, glancing from the window, uttered a little shriek of dismay to see his tall, tweed clad figure swing easily from the trolley at the corner.

A hasty run we had of it, screening Beatrice on the way to our house, where she was to stop and from which we could observe many of Philip Sturgis' subsequent movements and guess the rest. The curtains were drawn as he reached the front door, but he stopped to push the electric button, probably thinking that his wife was in the back of the house. We saw a surprised look come over his face when there was no response, and we watched him as he hastily extracted a bunch of keys from his trousers pocket and entered.

We gave him two minutes to find the note Beatrice had left on the dining room table, water sprinkled in two or three places to imitate tears, and written hastily on the back of his telegram. It read:

Philip:
How could you do it? But, monster, I have been suspecting you for some time past. I wish I could forgive you, but I cannot. This time you have ventured a step too far with your Felice. I am going where you will never find me.
BEATRICE.

Then we imagined him as he raved and did things generally to relieve his feelings. A momentary glance of his white, agonized face at the window as a curtain shot up to the very top of the roller justified our expectations that he was by this time deeply regretting his asinine stupidity. Then we saw him rush upstairs.

What he would find there we well knew, for we had his wife's room fittingly prepared for him. Beatrice had worked to no little effect, and its appearance was indeed startling. Professional burglars could not have produced in so short a time as she a scene of such consummate chaos and confusion, though the very Kohinoor had been the object of their efforts. The unique, square pillared brass bed, though littered with masses of lace and muslin, skirts, underskirts and shirt waists in every color of the rainbow, showed no signs of having been slept in. The dainty pillows were piled with heaps of hosiery, and in the center of all lay that identical red and gold check golfing skirt which I had been startled into admiring months before.

The dressing table was bared of its usual mysterious collection of toilet articles. The dress suit case, which was always kept when not in use in the room's solitary closet, was conspicuously absent, and a telltale strap was lying on the floor. Surely Philip Sturgis could find no grounds for disbelieving his wife's deceptive note. Who, indeed, would doubt the evidence of one's own eyes?

At the point when the thoroughly frightened man must have been sitting at the table with his face hidden in his hands, realizing that he who sows the wind must reap the whirlwind, Edith and I heard a half checked sob behind us. We both turned in time to see Beatrice Sturgis wiping away a tear that was trickling down her pretty cheek.

"I—I j-just can't help it," she gasped. "Poor Philip! I'm afraid h-he'll do s-something desperate if I d-don't stop him!"

"You needn't worry," I explained grimly. "I have his razor in my pocket, and I troubled to take all the cartridges out of his revolver before I left!"

"Well, I'm going to meet him when he comes out of the door," she announced. "Truly"—and she smiled through her tears—"I am afraid Philip might do something desperate if I let him go away after reading that note."

I would not have relented myself, but I thought that Edith looked on Beatrice's suggestion with favor. I am far from what you would call henpecked, but I seldom venture to oppose Edith, so I let her have her way

"PERHAPS THIS WILL BE AN INDUCEMENT!"

in this case. Twilight was far advanced when Philip Sturgis walked slowly from the house, the life all gone out of his step and looking quite down in the mouth and fully ten years older than when he had entered.

"Come over here a minute, Phil," I called.

"I can't stop now, old man," he answered in so doleful a tone that I could have laughed.

"Perhaps this will be an inducement," I remarked, exultantly seizing Beatrice by the shoulders and holding her at arm's length in front of me.

Philip Sturgis gave one glad cry and in another moment had folded his wife to his bosom.

That evening we had a heart to heart talk, the four of us.

"I'm done with practical joking forever," Philip Sturgis declared. "And I thank you two from the bottom of my heart for your intervention in my wife's favor. I can now realize what it was you saved her from. It was ten thousand times worse than I imagined it would be, I assure you."

"And Felice?" whispered his wife slyly.

"She can travel in 2:05 and more than comes up to my highest expectations," he responded. "She's a 'perfect dear,' all right, but I think, if you don't mind, I'd rather sell than keep her."

So Sturgis is cured of practical joking, and at the Lakeside club—for the events I have related are of recent happening—we still refer to Mrs. Sturgis, when Philip is not present, as "the goddess of the miracle."

THE REPUBLICAN

BENJ. H. SINCELL, EDITOR.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 21, 1909.

REPUBLICAN PRESS AND AMENDMENT.

The members of the Republican press of Maryland have been honored with an invitation to be the guests of Collector Stone, at dinner at the Union League Club, Baltimore, on January 26. Not long ago a number of leading Republicans were brought together in a similar manner to discuss ways and means to defeat the suffrage amendment. The Republican press of the State is a unit in its condemnation of the proposed amendment and it has the satisfaction of knowing that two leading independent dailies are also lined up against it. It is a labor of love to expose the vicious character of the proposition to fasten upon our State political ring under the guise of eliminating the negro. In a few short weeks the people of the United States will celebrate the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of Abraham Lincoln and he will be honored not alone for his achievements as a statesman nor his services in a great civil war, nor for those simple yet exalted qualities of mind and heart which so endeared him to the great common people; nor for the unutterable pathos of his death just as peace was dawning, but also because he struck the shackles from the slave, declaring that this nation could not exist half slave, half free. When the members of the Republican press meet to discuss a scheme to grant political rights to one class and deny them to another they will have the satisfaction of knowing that they are working in sympathy with the principles of Lincoln and in keeping with the very corner-stone of Republican institutions. The feat of the "four hundred" who gathered two weeks ago to plan to deprive their fellowmen of the right to a voice in government, reminded us of the feast of Belshazzar. The banqueters must have seen the hand-writing on the wall for they fell to quarreling among themselves over who should have the chief places and Senator Rayner was with difficulty persuaded to remain.

ROAD BUILDING.

The Governor's appointment of a Highway Commission, under the new highway law enacted by the last Legislature, is an incident of more importance than many persons, mindful chiefly of oldtime systems of road work, are likely to appreciate. The importance of a commission to supervise the railroads of the state or any other great public utilities or industries, would be instantly recognized, but a Highway Commission is suggestive of a sort of glorified "road master" of the old school, who once a year, when farm work was slackest, ordered men out with ploughs and scrapers to "work out their road taxes" by transferring the mud which in a year had been washed from the middle of the road into the gutters back into the middle of the road again. They called that "working the roads," and so it was, in more senses than one. Between that wretched system and the scheme of highway construction and maintenance upon which the state has now entered there is a great gulf fixed, and the only reminder of the "road master" the Highway Commission should afford is that of the traditional Milesian, "because they're so different!"

The fact is that of all the public utilities of the state the common roads are by far the most important. They effect the daily life and intimate welfare of all the people more than do the railroads and trolley lines put together. The importance of the railroads is doubtless enormous. But we must remember that in the greater part of the country every bit of the traffic of the railroads of necessity passes also over the common roads and in addition a far greater volume passes over the latter which never reaches the former. For every mile of railroad there are many miles of highway. The consideration of corporate profit incessantly impels the managers of railroads to keep their plant in good condition and all their facilities up to date. The consideration of advantage to the whole people cal's for similar circumspection and enterprise in the management of the common roads.

It is not creditable to this country that in its era of splendid and surpassing progress in practically all other departments of travel and transportation and public utilities it has permitted itself to lag so far behind in respect to highways, so that today it is still inferior to the Roman Empire of nineteen centuries ago. It is well to have our great double track and four track rock-ballasted railroads but it is lamentable that at the same time we have not provided ourselves with rock-ballasted highways, free from either mud or dust at all times of the year. There is as yet a pitifully small proportion of so-called "good roads" among the highways of the country, of these too few were really well built, and to all entirely too little attention is paid for maintenance. Under the new law and with this new commission there is hope of better things in Maryland.

WILL IT MEAN BETTER STATE GOVERNMENT.

Comparing the disfranchising amendment proposed in this State with that in other States, the Outlook says:

This [the Maryland amendment] encourages the formation of an educated and thrifty black electorate and discourages an educated and thrifty white electorate. Whether it complies with the Federal Constitution or not, this amendment is dead against the interests of the white people of Maryland, and ought to be defeated. If Maryland wants to purify her electorate, let her raise education and property qualifications; but if she must, in order to secure higher standards, admit some of the thriftless and the propertyless, let her do it by provisions that are not permanent, but temporary. In this respect let her follow the example of her Southern neighbors.

The Outlook's reason for saying that the amendment discourages an educated and thrifty white electorate is because it permits the white man to vote without a property or educational qualification. It demands of the negro one or the other. Undoubtedly placing before the negro the suffrage as a premium on industry and thrift or on education will stimulate his ambition, but we see no objection to this feature. We want the negro to educate himself and we want to see him frugal and industrious. There are many other spurs to the ambition of the white man, so that there is no particular call to deny him the suffrage if he is illiterate or without property in order to make him desire education or to become a property owner. Foreigners who come into the State after the adoption of the amendment must comply with its requirements.

But, admitting the soundness of our contemporary's argument, it is not necessary for opposing negro disfranchisement in Maryland The plan became popular with the leaders of the Democratic party when a revolt of the independent voters of the State turned them out of power in 1895. Senator Gorman then called for the elimination of the negro, and the desire to get rid of him has been growing ever since. The conception of the movement was politics, and the majority of those who are now active in the propaganda are animated by political reasons.

The Democrats have been in power at Annapolis for more than forty years with the exception of the term of Governor Lowndes. During that time occasions have been rare when they could not put upon the statute books of the States any law they saw fit. Negro suffrage is not responsible for any bad laws from which the State has suffered. Negro suffrage is not responsible for refusal to enact any good law the state has been denied. What has negro suffrage got to do with such a fraudulent scheme for giving the Democratic bosses power to chose a United States Senator as is the law providing for a so-called direct Senatorial primary? The House of Delegates that enacted it had 71 Democratic and but 30 Republican members, while in the Senate there were 17 Democrats, 9 Republicans and 1 Fusion, giving the Democrats a majority of 48 on joint ballot. Is there any reason in the world to believe that the State would have had a fairer law if there were not a black man within its borders? At least here was one political fight in which the negro could not interfere. It was a contest between Democrats. Yet the leaders could not gain their consent to give the State anything better than a fraudulent perversion of a direct primary.

When we glance back at the Democratic majorities in the Legislature for the last 18 years we see that they have had the votes to enact what legislation they pleased to enact and to refuse to enact what legislation they did not wish to enact, except during the time of the Lowndes administration.

In 1890 the Legislature stood: Senate, 18 Democrats, 8 Republicans; House, 59 Democrats, 32 Republicans. Democratic majority on joint ballot, 47.

In 1892: Senate, 22 Democrats, 4 Republicans; House, 81 Democrats, 7 Republicans, 3 Fusions. Democratic majority on joint ballot, 99.

In 1894: Senate, 21 Democrats, 5 Republicans; House, 68 Democrats, 33 Republicans Democratic majority on joint ballot, 61.

In 1896 and 1898 the Republicans were in a majority in the Legislature as a result of the revolt against the Gorman-Rasin machine.

In 1900: Senate, 15 Democrats, 11 Republicans; House, 65 Democrats, 26 Republicans. Democratic majority on joint ballot, 43.

There was no change in relative strength of the parties in 1904.

In 1906: Senate, 18 Democrats, 8 Republicans, 1 Fusion; House, 51 Democrats, 46 Republicans, 2 Independents. Democratic majority on joint ballot, 11.

It will be seen, therefore, that, with the exception of the years 1896 and 1908, the Democrats have had absolute control for many years of all branches of the State goverement, and negro suffrage has had nothing to do with the sort of administration the State has had. It is the belief of many of the best men in the city and the State that the one thing which has given Maryland as good government as it has had has been a wholesome fear of a political revolt. The thing which has done more than all else put together to produce good results at Annapolis has been the belief that there was an independent sentiment in the State that could not be flaunted too often or too openly.

There was no particular desire for negro disfranchisement in this State until the independent vote showed it could kick over the traces. Since a demonstration of the strength of the independents was given there has been an uncontrollable yearning on the part of the bosses to render the independent vote innocuous by disfranchising the negro, to make Maryland once more a safe one-party State. That is the milk in the cocoanut of the disfranchisement issues so far as the machine is concerned.—Baltimore News.

WHILE Congress is fuming and whacking the President, the sawmills are steaming up and the lumbermen whacking down many noble old forest growths in the desired Appalachian reserves. Quit fooling, Congress, and get to work.

MR. TAFT is trying to pull down the fence that has separated North from South. Thereby he differs from the fence building politicians who don't care what bars of hostility they erect between sections if their own paddocks are tight.

SEVERAL of the new governors raise a popular issue by urging a higher tax for high power automobiles. Good idea. Make 'em pay for damage done the roads. But often it is not so much the high powered machine as the high-geared motorist.

DEATH RECORD.

MRS. ELLEN HUGHES.

At her home in Hutton yesterday morning, after an illness of seven weeks, Mrs. Ellen Hughes, aged nearly 78 years. The deceased lady was born near Tuam, County Galway, Ireland, in 1831, and came to America fifty years ago. Shortly after her arrival in this country she was married, her husband being Martin Hughes, who died more than 20 years ago at their home in Hutton, to which point the couple removed shortly after their marriage. To the couple were born seven children, as follows: John A., a prosperous farmer of near Oakland; Kate, wife of Michael Garrett, of Baltimore; Martin J., of Hutton; Mary E., wife of Martin Pendergast, of Hutton; Margaret, wife of Thomas Clark, of Pittsburg; Thomas J. and Delia, both of Hutton. Mrs. Hughes was a woman of noble character, charitable to a fault, highly respected and loved by all who knew her. She was a member of St. Peter's Catholic church of Oakland from which edifice her funeral will occur tomorrow morning immediately after the aarival of train No. 6, which will convey her remains to Oakland from her late home.

"The Maryland Pythian."

C. T. Clayton, a former newspaper man, has issued from his home town, Lonaconing, Vol. 1, No. 1, of "The Maryland Pythian," a sprightly and very interesting paper published in the interests of the order of the Knights of Pythias of this state. The first number is full of interesting matter and the paper is designed to give members of the order a monthly review of Pythian progress in Maryland.

SPRUCE HOLLOW.

We are having some snow at present.

We had a fine entertainment at our school last Friday night, and are going have a literary on the 6th of February. Everybody invited.

Mr. Jonas Knox caught a fine mink one day last week.

Mr. Ross Durst was a pleasant caller at Mr. Jesse Glotfelty's Wednesday evening.

Mr. Beeson Bowman was a visitor at Mr. Thad Glotfelty's Sunday.

Mr. Josiah Hostetler was visiting friends and relatives in this vicinity last week.

Mr. Peter Bowser is working for Jennings Lumber Co. at present.

Misses Rapha Carr and Sarah Glotfelty visited our school Thursday.

NORTH GLADE.

Lieut West, of Oakland, was a guest of his uncle, G. W. Moon, recently.

B. B. Savage, of Sang Run, was also here about a week ago.

Judge Fitzwater left here Monday evening for New York, where he will receive medical treatment in a hospital. He was accompanied to that city by Hon. C. M. Miller, of Swanton.

We are glad to have H. C. Hershman as road supervisor for District No. 1. We think he is a good man for the place.

The action of the County Commissioners in appointing Mr. Mason as engineer for the roads of Garrett county is a commendable one.

'Squire McRobie has set a good example by turning over a "new leaf" this new year of 1909.

A revival meeting has been in progress for two weeks. Quite a number of conversions and a large number of inquirers are the results so far. Rev. Brumbaugh, assisted by his wife and daughter, is conducting these services.

MARYLAND'S GOVERNOR LOOKING TO THE FUTURE

He Would Provide for Continuing Work on System of State's Good Roads

Governor Crothers, since the publication of the figures showing the increased revenue he hopes to bring into the State Treasury as well as the amount of the State's money he expects to save next year, has received a number of inquiries from county people as to whether he meant that with money enough saved to pay off the $5,000,000 road loan without imposing a cent in the way of direct taxation upon the masses of the people, another road loan of $6,000,000, $2,000,000 of which would be spent in Baltimore city, would be feasible at once.

In answering this question, the Governor said:

"I did mean exactly that. Of course, no one wants another loan before we have expended the one we now have. The law provides that we cannot spend more than a million a year of this loan so that it will take at least five years to get through with the present money available for road purposes. When this is done, however, I believe it will be seen that it has cost the people not a cent; that their taxes have not been increased a cent; and that the benefits will be so great that they will be ready and willing for another $6,000,000 loan to still further carry on the good work in the same way.

"I will have nothing to do with the next loan. That will come under the Governor who follows my administration, but I believe that it will come just the same, and that the people, when they realize that $5,000,000 has been spent without their feeling the burden, will be eager for another loan under the same conditions.

"The only people who will pay for this loan of ours are the men who drink whiskey, and who ride in automobiles, and who inherit fortunes which they do not earn themselves. I do not think you will hear any very strenuous objections from the masses of the people about letting these three classes pay for their roads. The revenue to pay interest on and redeem the bonds of the present loan will come from the increased liquor licenses, the automobile tax and the collateral inheritance tax, which has been doubled within the last year and will be put higher next year. I do not think these classes will kick about what burdens are placed upon them, realizing that they are only just, and I am certain that the people who do not drink whiskey, ride in automobiles or inherit fortunes they do not earn, will not protest."

Marriage Licenses.

During the past week but two licenses to marry were issued by Clerk of the Circuit Court E. Z. Tower, as follows:

Roy E. McCoy, of Weston, and Paulina Selma Stumpf, of Gassaway.

Charles Listie Whiteman, of Shinnston, and Jessie L. Klepfel, of Grafton.

BITTINGER.

There is much jingling of sleigh bells to be heard this week, as the young folks make good use of the snow.

Rev. and Mrs. Alvin Yugel made a business trip to Cumberland this week, and Mrs. Yugel will remain in that city as the guest of Rev. Braren and family.

J. T. Lohr made a business trip to Grantsville last Monday.

Harvey Bitner and wife, of Crellin, have been visiting in this settlement for the past two weeks

Prof. J. C. Beahm, of Grantsville, will give instructions in vocal music in this section during the remainder of the winter and has announced a public song service to be held in the Glades Mennonite church on next Saturday night.

Mr. DeWitt, of Sunnyside, was a guest at J. T. Lohr's last Sunday.

Messrs. Manassa and Lloyd Brenneman are getting their mill in operation to saw some lumber for Cornelius Bowser, who will erect a new barn in the spring to replace the one which was struck and burned by lightning last summer.

We hear many words of approval of the Commissioners choice of Road Supervisor for this district.

The general topic of the day in this, as well as most other sections of the county, is the proposed state road, and we regret that our Accident neighbor is prone to mistake the expression of our humble opinion on the subject for a sign of mourning, but knowing that we did not stretch our imagination in a vain effort to create sixty miles of modern road out of an appropriation sufficient for twenty, nor strained our faith to level the rugged hills of Garrett county, so shall sit comfortably upon the fence of satisfaction and see others grow fat upon the vapor of vague anticipation, and if finally they are found sitting in their back yards on the cold hard rock of disappointment, we promise to send over our well worn crepe for their season of lamentations.

The Lonaconing Savings Bank

Of Allegany Couuty.

Capital Stock . $20,000
Surplus and Undivided Profits . $60,000
Deposits . . $625,000

3 PER CENT. Interest Paid Upon all Savings Accounts.

GIVE THEM A START

The New Year is rapidly approaching. This would be a good time for you to start your young folks on the road to Success.

Early training in the practice of self-denial; instruction as to the use and value of money; opportunities for earning and saving money; all these tend to fix and fasten the children in the ways of thrift and prosperity.

We most gladly assist the young people in getting started.

One Dollar opens an account and entitles the depositor to one of our Savings Banks.

We shall be pleased to have our Garrett County friends call and receive a 1908 Calendar.

DAVID SLOAN, President. R. R. SLOAN, Treasurer.

The First National Bank

FRIENDSVILLE, MD.

Capital, $25,000. Surplus and Undivided Profits, $24,000.

OFFICERS:

L. E. Friend, President. J. W. McCullough, V. P.
R. C. McCandlish, Cashier.

DIRECTORS:

L. E. Friend, Merchant,
J. W. McCullough, Lumber and Coal.
W. W. Savage, Merchant.
D. S. Custer, Merchant.
H. M. Rumbaugh, Farmer.
W. H. H. Friend, Pension Agent and Surveyor.
Horace R. DeWitt, Treasurer of Garrett County, Md.
R. C. McCandlish.

We will issue time or demand certificates of deposit and pay you 4 per cent. interest if your money is left with us.

In all its dealings this Bank combines absolute safety with satisfactory service and never loses sight of either.

SAFETY DEPOSIT BOXES FOR RENT.

HOYES.

Weather cold and frosty.

The lastest is a surprise for Miss Artie Friend.

Misses Sudie and Sadie Friend and and Mr. J. Arthur DeWitt were pleasant callers on Miss Ethel DeWitt last Sunday.

The Epworth League is contemplating a social for the benefit of the sufferers in Italy. Hope every one will respond freely. They that knoweth their duty and doeth it not shall be beaten with many stripes.

Peter Opel has a saw mill on J. M. Lowdermilk's farm and people are hauling shingle bolts and logs. He has a shingle saw attached to his mill. It is quite a convenience for the people in this neighborhood.

Mr. Ralph R. Friend, wife and little daughter, who left here just before Thanksgiving, have landed in Blanchard, Idaho, where he has bought an interest in a store and gone in to the mercantile business. Ralph is a hustler. We wish him success. They report zero weather there.

[DELAYED]

It has been a long time since any items have appeared in THE REPUBLICAN from this place so we will dot a few for this week. Perhaps the regular correspondent has gone skating.

Rev. Ferguson is very low. He has had three strokes of paralysis.

Truman Frantz, of Tamora, Neb., was visiting friends and relatives near Hoyes and Oakland. He has gone to Baltimore to visit his sister, Mrs. Sarah Arnold.

Freeman DeWitt has returned from a visit to Connellsville where he has friends and relatives living.

Misses Freda and Ethel DeWitt, and Hallie Friend, accompanied by their gentlemen friends, Messrs. Harry Lowdermilk, Arthur Custer and Charles R. Callis, were highly entertained at the home of Mrs. Bud Friend, near Elder Hill, Sunday last.

Mr. Guy McKeen, who has been traveling over different parts of the west, has returned to his home near Elder Hill to spend a short time.

Miss Della Savage, of this place, is teaching school at Kendall. We wish her much success.

The young ladies of this place, gave the gentleman a leap year party the last night of the old year. Those present were Misses Sadie and Sudie Friend, Olia and Bernadette Mattingly, Della Savage, Auburn Smith, Ethel DeWitt, Jessie Lowdermilk, Hallie Friend and Pearl Bishoff; Messrs. Burns and Harry Lowdermilk, William Bishoff, Arthur DeWitt, Charles Friend, C. B. Callis, Earl Smith, Stanley DeWitt, Arthur Custer and Bruce Savage. We all met on Mr. Arthur Custer's lake and there spent a couple of hours skating. From there the ladies escorted the gentlemen (remember this was leap year) to W. A. Smith's and were served with refreshments and had a jolly good time watching the old year out and the new one in.

The young people of this place are wishing for more ice.

Miss Olia Mattingly, who has been suffernig from a sprained ankle, is much improved at this writing.

We are still holding Epworth League services every Sunday evening. You are all cordially invited to attend.

STOYER.

Mr. F. O. Glotfelty is having a mill unloaded at this place, which will soon be removed to W. G. Riley's farm.

W. W. Steyer has been hauling pulp wood for W. H. Shrout.

Mr. A. Wilson is opening a coal mine on J. W. White's farm, which will soon be in operation.

Rev. E. P. Idleman preached a very interesting sermon to the young people at this place Sunday afternoon.

Mr. V. H. Foley, of Gleason, W. Va., was calling at J. T. Steyer's last Sunday.

Messrs. J. B. Shocky, J. W. Steyer, Charles Thompson and Misses Sarah White, Lucie Junkins and Elizabeth Meloin were visiting in town Sunday.

Tom Meloin was in Cumberland several days last week on business.

W. L. and Isaac Stoyer, while out hunting Friday night, captured a fine raccoon.

Our school is progressing very nicely under the management of Miss Lucie Junkins.

Dr. J. E. Legge was called to Stoyer Friday to see Miss Emma Steyer, who has been ill for some time time.

J. W. White has recently had his new house plastered.

Mr. P. J. Meloin, assistant postmaster, has recently purchased a fine assortment of souvenir post cards.

MOUNTAIN LAKE PARK.

Mr. Eugene Wilson's brother and family of Pittsburg, visited him last week, remaining here until Monday.

Mr. Chas. W. Hopkins returned to the Park Tuesday, after a visit of several weeks with relatives and friends in Cincinnati.

The special services which have been conducted in the Loch Lynn United Brethren church came to a close Sunday night. As a result of the meeting about fifteen members were added to the U. B. church and one to the Mountain Lake Park M. E. church.

Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Rathbun and Mrs. B. F. Crane, visited the parents of Mrs. Rathbun and Mrs. Crane, Mr. and Mrs. Jas. H. Jarboe, at Clarksburg, W. Va., returning Monday after spending several days with the old people. They report Mr. Jarboe in feeble health but better than he was some days ago.

Magistrate John R. Kerfoot has been so ill as to be confined to his home for the past week. He is now some better.

Mr. E E. Friend, who was painfully injured by a fall in his barn last week, will be able to attend to the duties of his office in a few days.

Supt. Davis passed through the Park this morning on his way to Fairmont, W. Va., on Park business.

A Meritorious Institution

Established as a State Bank in 1888 with a capital of $25,000.00; changed to a National Bank in 1903 and capital increased to $50,000.00; TODAY with a capital and surplus of $85,000.00 and total resources of over $500,000.00 we are

BETTER, BIGGER AND STRONGER

than ever. During the 20 years of our existence, our aim has been to extend to our patrons the best possible service. Our steady growth is evidence that the banking institution, which throws the greatest safeguards around its business in order to protect its depositors merits the confidence of the public. If you are not a customer of this Bank let this be your invitation to become one; our relations will be mutually profitable.

Garrett National Bank

Of Oakland, Maryland.

Mr. and Mrs. H. H. Calderwood, of Deer Park, were in the city Monday morning.

Mrs. Arnold A. Scherr, of Eglon, spent yesterday in Oakland as the guest of Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Renninger.

Capt. James Brock, the tailor, has been confined to his home several days recently with a severe bronchial affection.

Mr. E. H. Sincell went to Pittsburg this morning on legal business, expecting to return to Oakland Saturday afternoon.

Mr. and Mrs. Horace R. DeWitt, of Hoyes, spent Tuesday and a portion of yesterday in Oakland with their many friends.

Miss Heyward, of Bond, who was the guest of the Misses Littman in Oakland for the past week, returned to her home yesterday afternoon.

Attorney Julius C. Renninger spent several days last week in Philadelphia on legal business, returning to Oakland Saturday morning.

Mr. Thomas A. Gonder, of the Hamill Lumber Company, Etam, W. Va., spent Sunday in Oakland with his mother and other relatives.

As an indication that winter is over, or at least delayed, a local dealer in sleds and sleighs is advertising a special low price on these lines.

Sheriff Austin Brown is slowly recovering from a severe attack of the grip which had him in its clutches for several days last and this week.

Messrs. G. S. Hamill and D. E. Offutt left Oakland Monday afternoon for a point in Ohio where they went on business connected with some real estate holdings.

Mrs. Grace Weber returned to her home at Oakland on Thursday, after a visit to the home of her mother, Mrs. William Jackson, of Washington street. —Lonaconing Star.

Mr. J. Wilson Humbird and Mrs. Annie Devries, of Cumberland, spent Sunday afternoon in Oakland as the guests of Mr. and Mrs. W. R. Offutt at their home on Second street.

Mr. W. C. Dunnington, of Mountain Lake Park, spent several days last week at Grafton at the bedside of his brother, who was injured in a railway accident near Grafton recently.

January is nearly gone, Groundhog Day is nearly due, and soon we shall again be watching for the robins. So let us take it calmly when a man in the observatory predicts much colder weather.

Mr. Joseph White left Oakland yesterday morning for New York City in response to a telegram announcing the illness of his wife, who has been in New York on a visit to her sister for several weeks.

Many fine automobiles were exhibited at the New York show at prices cut 33 to 50 per cent. If it is to become so much cheaper, motoring will soon become as unpopular with the Smart Set as bicycling.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles A. Shaffer, of Baltimore, and Messrs. Herbert Shaffer and Marshall Martin, of Aurora, W. Va., were the guests on Sunday of Mr. and Mrs. Louis Bush at their home in Oakland.

Rev. Henry E. Friend, of Hoyes, was in Oakland Tuesday of this week having come to this section to visit his son, Mr. E. E. Friend, who was injured, as stated in these columns last week, at his home in the Park.

Mr. George Flack Sansbury, one of Cumberland's leading architects, was a business visitor to Oakland yesterday where he interested several parties in plans for contemplated buildings during the coming summer.

Mr. G. A. Bolden, formerly of Oakland, but now of Grafton, W. Va., where for several years he has been engaged in the newspaper business, has been made one of the printing clerks in the West Virginia Legislature.

Mr. and Mrs. Notley B. Browning and Mr. and Mrs. W. M. Trickett were at Terra Alta, W. Va., last Saturday where they attended the funeral of the late Dr. M. L. Feichtner, his death having occurred on Thursday after an extended illness.

Are our merchants prepared to meet the competition, constantly growing stiffer, of those alluring spring catalogs from the metropolitan department stores? Of course the bargains at home are better, when you consider that in our own shops you get more personal attention and a better chance to return unsatisfactory goods. But the public forgets this. Trade has to be drummed, and the only efficient drummer is a live newspaper.

CAPITAL $50,000.00 — SURPLUS AND PROFITS $29,000.00

THE First National Bank

OAKLAND, MD.

GOVERNMENT DEPOSITORY.

One of the Largest and Best Equipped Banking Houses in Maryland.

Vaults absolutely Fire and Burglar proof.

Safety Deposit Boxes for Rent

Pays 3 Per Cent. on Time Deposits—Compounded Semi-Annually

Every courtesy extended consistent with sound banking.

Home Savings Banks Free. $1.00 will start an account.

The Depositor with a Dollar account receives the same consideration as the largest depositor. COME IN AND GET ACQUAINTED

ARRESTED FOR ILLEGAL SELLING

William Barclay, of Lonaconing, Placed Under Bond for His Appearance.

Last Wednesday afternoon Sheriff Brown, of Garrett county, placed William Barclay, of Lonaconing, under arrest for selling liquor without a license, Barclay's alleged offenses having extended over several months and his points of operations being along the Garrett-Allegany line, where he disposed of quantities of liquors in the lumber camps and coal mines in that section.

Barclay was indicted three times for these offenses at the last session of the grand jury and his arrest as above stated followed.

Barclay furnished the requisite bond for his appearance at the next term of the Circuit Court when he will be placed on trial, his bondsmen being Robert Cook, John J. Winn and Daniel Sweeney, all of Lonaconing.

In connection with the weekly meeting of the Luther League to be held next Wednesday evening, the members of the organization will conduct a social at which refreshments will be served and a cordial invitation is extended all to attend.

Mr. Stuart F. Hamill, who has been spending the past two weeks at Etam, West Va., the scene of his saw mill operations, returned to Oakland Saturday night and on Tuesday evening left for New York City where he will remain for a few days' visit.

Mr. Scott T. Jones and Mrs. G. A. Fraley went to Terra Alta yesterday to attend the funeral of Mrs. Thornton White, mother of Mr. William T. White, of Terra Alta, at whose residence in Terra Alta she died on Monday after a long illness due to extreme age.

Mr. Charles A. Tower, who recently resumed a position with Mr. G. S. Hamill, has moved his household effects into rooms of Mr. H. R. DeWitt's house on Second street. Mr. Tower's family is expected to arrive in Oakland from Cumberland this week.

Mr. John J. Garrett, of near Oakland, an old soldier and well known resident of the county, suffered a slight stroke of appoplexy yesterday morning. His condition for a time was thought to be very serious but latter in the day he rallied and last night was very much better.

A town is judged by its newspapers, much as a man is sized up by his clothes. The whole community is thus a partner in its journalistic enterprises. If you want your city to put its best foot forward, give the home paper the support it needs to keep on expanding and growing more attractive.

The series of revival meetings, which were begun in St. Paul's M. E. church last Sunday night under the direction of the pastor, Rev. J. B. Workman, are being well attended by the members of that congregation as well as by those of other denominations and much interest is being manifested.

A copy of the West Milton (O.) Record which was received at this office a few days ago, states that Miss Ada M. Gnagey, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John E. Gnagey, formerly of Accident, had been elected assistant cashier and bookkeeper of the Citizens' State Bank located at West Milton.

Mr. A. W. Clary, formerly of Oakland, has been made assistant secretary of the Young Men's Christian Association (Terminal Railroad Department), Washington, D. C., the rooms of the Association being located in the new Union Station in Washington, where Mr. Clary will welcome all his Garrett county friends.

Mr. Charles S. Friend, formerly of Swanton, but now located at Piedmont, W. Va., where he is engaged as a traveling salesman for a wholesale meat packing firm, was in Oakland last Friday. Mr. Friend desires to purchase a small tract of land located near Oakland which he intends to set in apple and other fruit bearing trees, believing that this section of the country as a fruit producing locality is the best in the world.

The editor of THE REPUBLICAN has received and accepted an invitation to attend a meeting of the representatives of the Republican press of Maryland to be held in Baltimore on Tuesday next at which time Mr. William F. Stone, sergeant-at-arms of the Republican National Committee will be the host. The object of the meeting is to discuss the proposed disfranchising amendment and other subjects of importance to the people of Maryland.

Mr. and Mrs. V. V. Washburne, formerly of Oakland, but more recently of Brunswick Md., and Mr. Bernard Gonder, of Oakland, left here last Friday night for Butte, Montana, where the latter already has a position with the Santa Fe Railway and was home on a leave of absense to attend the funeral of his father, the late Andrew B. Gonder, while Mr. Washburne has a prospective position with the same company as agent at one of the stations along the line. Prior to leaving here for the northwest Mr. and Mrs. Washburne spent several days in Oaklnnd with friends.

List of Letters.

Mrs. A. A. Allen, Miss Martha Bosley, Aufrey Brenneman, Mary Mayle (2), Mrs. Maggie E. Wilson.

LOCAL TEACHERS' INSTITUTE.

Proceedings of the Teachers' Meeting Conducted at Deer Park.

A local teachers' institute was held at Deer Park Saturday, Jan. 16th, 1909, under the direction of the Garrett County Teachers' Association, with Prof. H. A. Loraditch, of Oakland, president of the association, presiding.

The institute convened at 11 a. m. and opened with the song "Maryland, My Maryland," followed by a prayer by Rev. W. H. Clary, of Deer Park. Rev. Clary delivered the address of welcome in which he emphasized the importance of the teaching profession, showing that it is the main-spring of progress, locally and nationally, educationally, morally and industrially. He referred to the Great Teacher as our perfect example.

These pleasant words of welcome were happily responded to by Supt. E. A. Browning, giving a brief review of the teachings of Pythagoras and others, showing that the teachers have always fought the vices of ignorance and superstition, trying to improve and make the world better along all lines.

Prof. Browning also announced that we are to have the State Teachers' Association with us at Mt. Lake Park this year and made an eloquent appeal to the teachers to give the association a warm welcome and to profit by this meeting. Prof. Browning, speaking further, invited the opinions of all the teachers of the county regarding the summer Normal Schools. This subject will be further discussed at the Oakland local institute to be held soon.

The discussion of English was introduced by W. E. Bishoff, in which he took as the aim in teaching this subject in grammar grades to be "automatic correctness in the mechanics of composition," as expressed by Roark; meaning by mechanics of composition expression of thought or feeling clearly, correctly, with correct heading, proper margin, exactness in spelling, punctuation, paragraphing, etc. Paragraphing was discussed at length, showing the method of teaching this by requiring outlines to be made of every composition before it is written. By having as many paragraphs as there are general topics in the outline this part of the work is not difficult.

Prof. Loraditch opened the discussion on spelling with a comparison of old and new methods of teaching, and spoke of the strong points in both. He then presented in a very logical manner the successive steps in teaching spelling, beginning with its introduction by the phonic method and speaking of the study, meaning and use of words, use of dictionary, derivation of words, synonyms, syllabication, etc. He suggested making a list of the new words in every lesson and directing especial attention to these. Prof. A. W. Dewitt offered the valuable suggestion here that the teacher keep a list of all words missed during the week and review them on Friday afternoon. Prof. U. G. Palmer made some remarks that were right to the point when he stated that we must get down to more thorough work on this subject, more thorough drills, better training of the perceptive powers, etc. Prof. Browning urged that books be thoroughly finished before laying them aside; teach uses of words, syllabication, etc.

Miss Mary O'Donnel presented a well written paper on number work. She showed that this work should begin with the development of the idea of relation of number to objects. She emphasized constant drill in making figures, forming combinations of numbers, use of signs, etc., and recommended applications to concrete experiences through the actual handling of many objects.

In introducing the subject of arithmetic, Prof. Palmer stated that education depends on thought power and appealed to the teachers to get their pupils down to reasoning as much as possible in order to train the logical faculties. Prof. Palmer then gave us a model lesson in the teaching of measurements, dealing with plane figures. His work was very practical and it is to regretted that lack of space will not permit us to give his outline here for the benefit of those not present. Prof. Loraditch suggested that Manual Training is an important factor in this work, as students are asked to make triangles, rectangles, etc, and thus have a more careful study of them.

Prof. Browning announced that the teachers' library, which is owned by the teachers of the county owing to their purchase some years ago, has been removed to the new court house and is open to the use of teachers at all times.

A vote of thanks was given the students of the Deer Park school for the excellent music interspersed throughout the program, after which the institute adjourned in happy mood, all agreeing that a pleasant and profitable day had been spent.

Prof. Dewitt is to be complimented on having the Deer Park patrons and pupils of his school interested in the institute work, as shown by their presence, and the people of that place are to be commended for their educational enthusiasm.

W. E. BISHOFF, Secretary.

Subscribe for the Republican.

Broke His Arm.

"Smiles" Frantz, the youngest son of Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Frantz, while sled riding on the Oakland Hotel hill Saturday afternoon, in some manner which he cannot explain, broke his right arm just above the wrist. The boy was in company with other youths of his age and they say he was coming down the hill at a pretty good clip when his sled broke through the crust and he put out his hand to steady himself which he thinks threw his weight upon it, with the result as above stated.

Appointed Justice of the Peace.

On Monday Governor Crothers appointed Nathan C. Browning, of Sang Run, Justice of the Peace in and for Election District No. 6, in place William Bowman, appointed some time ago and who failed to qualify.

Local Teachers' Institute.

A local teachers' institute will be held in the High School building in Oakland on Saturday, January 30th, when the following program will be rendered: Address of welcome, W. E. Bishoff; response, A. W. DeWitt; A Lesson in Primary Reading, Miss Jennie Miller; A Lesson in Primary Numbers, Miss Olive DeWitt; The Uses of the Globe, Prof. U. G. Palmer; Orthography, Miss Jessie Conneway; Mental Arithmetic, Miss Anna DeBerry; tardiness, Miss Cora Weimer; Factoring in Algebra, A. W. DeWitt; Question Box, conducted by Misses Zaidee Browning and Lizzie Leary; A Lesson in Geography, Miss Dunham; Examinations and Reviews, Miss Marion Leary.

The program will be interspersed with music, etc., rendered by the pupils of the Oakland school.

H. A. LORADITCH, Pres't.

Married.

BERNARD—BITTINGER—At the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Amos Bittinger, near Mountain Lake Park, by Rev. E. Manges, of the Lutheran church, on Sunday afternoon, January 10, Miss Naomi V. Bittinger and Mr. James Luther Bernard.

GIVING MEDICINE

When the illness first appears is the easiest and surest way to cure. A supply of simple remedies of recognized merit should be in every household. We carry a full assortment of such remedies. We shall be glad to assist you in selecting those most effective in the early stages of the most common ailments.

OAKLAND PHARMACY

JOS. E. HARNED, Proprietor, OAKLAND, MD.

ARTHUR TOWNSHEND

Happy New Year.

BARGAINS

TO BEGIN WITH.

FOR THE NEXT

Thirty Days

we will in order to

CLOSE OUT

GIVE YOU BARGAINS IN

Ladies Outing AND Flannel Skirts,

Flannels & Winter Goods

MEN'S AND BOYS'

OVERCOATS, CAPS and Heavy Coats.

ARTHUR TOWNSHEND

ORDER NISI.

In re Estate of Ellen Bradley, deceased.
In the Orphans' Court for Garrett County.

Ordered, this 7th day of January, in the year 1909, by the Orphans' Court for Garrett county, that the sale made and reported in the above cause by William E. Walsh, Executor, be ratified and confirmed, unless cause to the contrary thereof be shown on or before the 9th day of February, 1909; provided, a copy of this order be published in some newspaper published in Garrett county, once a week for three consecutive weeks before the 29th day of January, 1909.

The report states the amount of sales to be $550.

E. E. FRIEND, Register of Wills.

True Copy, Test:
E. E. FRIEND, Register of Wills.

TRUSTEES' SALE

OF VALUABLE

Real Estate

Near Cranesville, Preston County, West Virginia.

Under and by virtue of a power of sale contained in a Deed of Trust from Bert C. Feather and Lillian B. Feather, his wife, to the undersigned Trustees, D. Lindley Sloan and Edward H. Sincell, bearing date the 27th day of December, 1905 and duly recorded in Liber E. Z. T. No. 51, folio 508, etc., one of the Mortgage Records of Garrett county, Md., and also recorded in Trust Deed Book No. 13, page 308, among the Records of Preston county, West Virginia, the said Trustees, default having occurred under the covenants contained under said Deed of Trust, hereby give notice, that they or either of them, as provided, will offer at public auction on the premises to the highest bidder, on

FRIDAY,

The 29th Day of January,

1909, at the hour of 1 o'clock P. M., for the hereinafter described real estate, situate in Garrett county, Maryland, and at the hour of 1:30 o'clock, P. M., for the hereinafter described real estate, situate in Preston county, West Virginia, all of the following described real estate, lying and being partly in Garrett county, Maryland, and partly in Preston county, West Virginia, and constituting the

"HOME FARM"

of the Late Michael E. Feather.

1. Beginning for the first parcel at a stone in the 1st line of a tract of land called "The Diadem" 45 poles from the beginning corner of said tract, and also in the 11th line of a tract of land called "Recourse," patented by the State of Maryland on the 12th day of May, 1796, and running thence with the 1st line of "The Diadem," North 63½ degrees East, 120 poles to a stone heap and a birch, corner to Edmund Albright's land, thence with said Albright's and John E. Otto's line, North 66½ degrees West, 169 poles to a stone and a small red oak, the beginning corner of said Otto's land, thence South 25 degrees West, 17 poles and 7 links to a stone, West 20 poles to a stone, South 1¼ degrees East, 201 poles to a stone to M. H. Frankhouser's corner, thence South 86½ degrees East 88⅝ poles to a stone, thence North 33½ degrees West, 36½ poles to a stone and pointers, thence North 3⅝ degrees East, 50 poles to the place of beginning, containing 125 acres, more or less, excepting, however, from the operation of this deed of trust the quantity of 23¾ acres of said land which was conveyed by the said Feather and wife to Edgar F. Jenkins by deed dated the 22nd day of April, 1901, and recorded in Liber E. Z. T., No. 40, folio 388, one of the Land Records of Garrett county, Md.

2. All that other portion of the above described home farm of the late Michael E. Feather, beginning for the same at a stake in a tract of land owned by C. L. Falkenstein, in the center of a spring and West 100 poles to a stone, thence South 25 degrees West, 17 poles and 7 links, South 29 degrees West, 11 poles, South 10 degrees West, 17 poles, South 13 degrees West, 37 poles, South 16½ degrees West, 16 poles, South 2 degrees West, 34 poles at the end of a lane (the above calls following from the end of the first line), thence with lane leading from Cranesville to Sang Run North 80 degrees East, 25 poles to a stone above the barn, thence South 43 degrees East, 9 poles and 15 links, East, 2 poles and 8 links, South 47 degrees East, 5 poles and 19 links to a stone, South 2 degrees West, 92 poles to a stake in J. F. Feather's line, and with said line South 87½ degrees East, 73 poles to a stone in M. H. Frankhouser's line, thence with said line North 3½ degrees East, 41 poles to a stake, thence North 201 poles to the beginning, containing 150 acres, more or less, and being the same property which was conveyed by the said said Bert C. Feather and wife to John G. Elsey and upon which the said Elsey now resides.

This property is one of the finest and best improved farms in the Cranesville section. On it is a fine DWELLING HOUSE and a large BANK BARN and other necessary outbuildings and a good ORCHARD and a large part of the land is in a high state of cultivation.

TERMS OF SALE—As prescribed by said deed of trust: Cash on the day of sale. Conveyancing at cost of purchaser.

D. LINDLEY SLOAN,
EDWARD H. SINCELL,
Trustees.

Mortgagee's Sale

OF VALUABLE

Real Estate

Near Loch Lynn Heights, Garrett County, Md.

Under and by virtue of the power of sale contained in a mortgage from George P. White and Rachael E. White, his wife, and Benjamin F. Crane and Civilla C. Crane, his wife, to J. Gilbert Selby, bearing date the 30th day of September, 1901, and duly recorded in Liber E. Z. T., No. 41, folio 10, etc., one of the Mortgage Records of Garrett county, Maryland, default having occurred under the covenants contained in said mortgage, the undersigned attorney named in said mortgage hereby gives notice that on

SATURDAY,

30th Day of January, 1909,

at the hour of eleven o'clock a. m., in front of the First National Bank Building, in the town of Oakland, Maryland, he will offer at public sale to the highest bidder all that part of

MILITARY LOT NO. 947,

situate, lying and being in Garrett County, Maryland, containing

SIX ACRES AND 75 PERCHES

of land, and fully described by courses and distances in a deed for the same to the said George P. White and Benjamin F. Crane, from Annie J. Phoebus, dated the 17th day of August, 1898, and duly recorded in Liber E. Z. T., No. 34, folio 536, etc., one of the Land Records of Garrett county, Maryland.

This Property is improved by an Ice Pond and Ice House and contains several eligible Building Sites.

TERMS OF SALE—As prescribed by said mortgage, cash on the day of sale.

EDWARD H. SINCELL,
Attorney for Mortgagee named in said Mortgage.

The Old Familiar Faces

By WILL LEVINGTON COMFORT

(Copyright, by Bobbs-Merrill Co.)

Peele was a wandering Englishman with certain virtues and a great deal to say. Keeler, who sat beside him on the balcony of a fonda overlooking the plaza of Bogota, was a Chicago special writer, just now engaged in covering the features of a Colombian revolution for the Express Syndicate. The two were talking about Graver, a free lance, who sat in his room back of the balcony, goading unto desperation an unoiled and tropical-rusted typewriter. The hopes and memories of Graver also moved in a Chicago setting, though it appears that he bunked and rode and shared labor with Keeler for other and unknowable reasons.

"It isn't in human fiber to endure any such amount of work," Keeler whispered. "Gravey's been at it for 16 hours a day for 16 times 16 days."

"It's a desecrytion," said Peele. "It shauws money-greed an' is baund t' be shoddy, y' knauw."

"That's where you're wrong, Peele," Keeler remarked. "I know Gravey's stuff. It's good and clean and gritty. You can turn it in without editing. He was liked back in Chicago; so was his stuff. I don't pretend to understand his energy since we came here, because he liked to lounge back in Chicago as well as any of us—"

"Myby 'e married a girl just before 'e came."

"No, he's been married for three or four years. That didn't make the difference. He was always square at home, you know."

"'E's a freelawnce, I'm tauld," Peele said languidly, "un-limited spyce 'n' all that. Tell me nauw, 'ow much does 'e myke?"

"Altogether too much—an amount, wholly unnewspaperlike. Fifty or sixty dollars a day, likely. And he don't write easily—labors, groans, sweats blood before he gets it coming—"

A fit of coughing in Graver's room silenced the typewriter. Afterward there was the squeak of a drawn cork, the suggestion of a gurgle, followed by a harsh expulsion of breath, as from one nauseated.

"And that's all new, too," Keeler resumed, half-angrily. "Stimulant! It's so easy, so devilish easy, to get used to working that way. I believe I'll go and rope him down, strangle him and make him see the right way!"

"I wouldn't, y' knauw," Peele said thoughtfully. "Myby 'e's got his reasons. . . . What I have seen! What I have seen! Wyte till y've been back 'n forth 'ere for five years as I 'ave. . . . 'I 'ave 'ad playmates; I 'ave 'ad companions . . .; all, all are gone, the old familiar fyces!'"

And thereupon Peele went down deep into his inner consciousness and brought forth a tale, a repellant, barbaric tale of Colombia, that would have been bad enough in a metropolitan clubroom, but had no place whatsoever in the midst of a land that swarmed with sinister menaces and swift and dreadful modes of death.

The bells had rung midnight, but Bogota was still awake. For hours Luapo's column of 18,000 men had lain partly in, but mostly out, of the town, like a snake with its head in a foul jug. White-coated, bare-footed figures slid to and fro across the plaza, complicating the shadows and corrupting the patches of light. On the following dawn, Gen. Luapo was to move his column of government defenders out into the Cordilleras to meet and stop the rebel, Torron, who was marching his army in to take the capital.

"I haven't been here quite a year yet, much less five," said Keeler, breaking the silence which followed the tale, "but I have seen enough, God knows! I have been shot at and apologized to because I was missed. I have seen children cowhided into soldiers; I have seen fifteen hundred dead on one field; I have seen the teeth of the dead knocked out with musket-butts for the gold they contained! I do not know about the rest of South America, but I do know that compared to Colombia, darkest Africa is as bright as the Southern Cross and Siberia as chaste as the Milky Way! . . . And I was told when I left the office in Chicago to bring out the opera bouffe. I thought I would lie in a hammock and watch pea-shooter revolutions—hell!"

Graver's pale face was thrust out of the doorway.

"Say, fellows," he said bashfully, "what is that smell that comes up over the balcony—jasmine or magnolia? I want to use it, and I never could tell the difference between a tulip and a turnip."

"Jasmine or magnolia!" Keeler repeated. "They'll be bloomin' over your long-geared grave if you don't quit pushing this work-matter into fanaticism. You smell garlic and dobie cigarettes and have worked yourself into a maudlin state of flowers."

Graver drew back with a smile. He was exceedingly tall, apparently about thirty years old. Pallor overpowered the tan upon his face and his brown eyes were misty, half-desperate with illness and fatigue. Peele sought his mosquito netting soon afterward, and Keeler remained upon the balcony to finish a cigar. . . . The coughing began again, and the spell was prolonged. Keeler hurried to the other's room. He found Graver doubled over in a chair, nervously endeavoring to hide the evidences of a hemorrhage. Keeler helped his friend to the cot in the corner.

"And may I ask one more favor?" came in a whisper from beneath the mosquito curtains.

"Of course. What is it, Gravy?"

"Put the typewriter—case and all—under my pillow. It props me up, you know. You see my chest tickles if I lie flat. I hope to get even with you sometime. . . . Ah, that's so much better! Thank you. And say, Keeler, don't let the column get away without us in the morning."

It may have been that Gen. Luapo's mustachios resisted their regular lance-pointing from wax that morning; at all events the army waited until the heat of full day steamed up from the gutters and pranced upon the highways. What was left of the populace when the great column moved out at last, vented neither tears nor cheers, since war had become a mere stale and costly fad of the men-folks. The two from Chicago waved an adios toward Peele on the balcony, and set about the day's work with many thoughts and no emotion. As the hours passed, Graver saw much to smile and chat about, although his gray-white face was drawn and shadowed by pain.

The battle was over. The plateau felt silent after the guns, although it murmured with moanings and was dreadful with heat.

"One thing I have learned," Graver gasped, looking back upon the terrible garment of fallen which the land wore, "the Colombian can fight best against the government."

Keeler was counting, and made r reply. The soldiers of Luapo du graves ineffectually, but looted the bodies with skill; while the general and his officers drank wine and sang

There Was the Crash of a Pistol and Garver Tumbled Forward.

the songs of victory. Keeler counted the fallen until his brain roared with reflected agony and the shadows grew long and deep upon the weltering field. The two were returning to the general's camp as the moon was rising; and often they looked back, though the sight tortured the brain and nerves that moved them.

"I counted and I counted!" Keeler muttered hoarsely. (His face seemed chalky in the moonlight, and his eyes darted and started here and there.) "Then I would lose it all bending over some crying, dying lump; then I would try again, until the numbers flew from me like a scared swarm of bees! I couldn't clutch 'em. I don't understand, quite. I couldn't write the story now. Why, Gravey, there are thousands—thousands of dead and dying back there! And I don't know even the name of the battle!"

"Nor I," whispered Graver, "but I've got pictures! Maybe I've got two or three views on one film, I don't know; but some are right, and they'll cover! My head was gone, too, at times. Once I had to shut one eye to see things—as if I were drunk. But I've got some, and they're good! Luapo, crazy with fear, is there; the charge of Torron is there; the dead and dying and the ghouls are there—$1,000 worth of things in this little black box! Hark, somebody's calling!"

Then the two heard plainly a thin, whining voice from a blotch in the moonlight to the right, crying in mongrel Spanish: "Ah, gentlemen, gentlemen—come here a moment! For the love of the Holy Mother, straighten out my limbs!"

They hurried toward the voice. Graver was the first to kneel over a white-coated body, the face of which was partly covered. . . . There was a streak of white fire and the crash of a pistol. Graver tumbled forward. The figure wriggled from beneath and zig-zagged away, dodging six shots from Keeler's weapon.

And the message follows which Graver found time to whisper:

"It was all on account—of those pictures. Luapo sent one of his bodyguard to get them—but don't let 'em know you know, Keeler! Please don't. . . . I'm sorry, but I was gone, anyway. They wouldn't give me any life insurance when I left—that's how I knew—that's why I worked so! . . . Had to make insurance, you know—ten dollars a column—and, God, I've written 500—all checks sent home, too! . . . They'll get along! You'll know best what to tell 'em—bless 'em! . . . And say, Keeler, when you write the story—say—thousands of dead in the moonlight—don't look like toadstools! Dick Heldar said they did . . . and put—put the typewriter—case and all—under my pillow—"

MODERN SCIENCE ON ALCOHOL.

Scientific Men Declare It Is Poison to Human Race.

MAY I tell your readers what modern medical authority teaches concerning the pernicious effect of the various preparations of alcohol and other inebriating drugs on the human race? The Twentieth Century Practice of Medicine says under "Alcoholism and Drug Habits:"

"There is no form of poisoning which is so widespread and so rapidly increasing at the present time, as the series of toxic phenomena exhibited in the persons of those addicted to the excessive use of the various preparations of alcohol, opium, morphine, chloral, chloroform, ether, cocaine, and allied inebriating substances.

"There is no other kind of poisoning which so degrades brain structure and disturbs mental function, while physically degenerating bodily texture and undermining vital organs, or which is so far-reaching in its operation, transmitting as it does through two generations a great variety of brain abnormalities, mental defects and moral obliquities originally induced in the ancestral stock by the toxicating action of the poison on brain and nerve tissue.

"The more generally employed among such articles, narcotics and anaesthetics, by their characteristic influence, have the property of setting up and thus practically originating a desire for a fresh dose (drink), and at the same time of so disturbing brain-function as to induce moral perversion.

"Such substances are alcohol (in the form of beer, wine, brandy and whisky), opium, morphine, cocoaine, chloroform and the like, the first-named, alcohol, being a prolific inciter to breaches of human and divine law, ranging from minor offenses to the gravest misdemeanors and crimes."

Till about a century ago, there was a general belief that drunkenness was a purely voluntary condition; that men and women could get drunk or refrain from getting drunk as they chose, and that intoxication was a pastime willingly and willfully indulged in; nor is this erroneous belief even now wholly dead. The many who formerly held and the comparatively few who still cherish this opinion looked upon the whole matter of drunkenness as a mere immorality, vice, or crime; punishment in a jail, confinement in the "stocks," pulpit denunciation, ecclesiastical excommunication, or the administration of a good whipping being in their view the proper mode of dealing with such wanton and depraved outcasts. Medical science has, therefore, set itself to investigate thoroughly the nature and properties of intoxication on body and brain, and the various morbid conditions which operate to render a substantial proportion of human beings an easy prey to some form of that enslavement, by excessive indulgence in intoxicants, which is the most complete possession and tyranny endured by man.

This extract from the writings of a world-renowned specialist in the treatment of beer, wine and whisky inebriates, concludes the writer in Christian Herald, is surely enough to arouse every man, who desires the elevation of society, to war an everlasting warfare against the soul-and-body-destroying rum business.

NEW TEMPERANCE ORGAN.

Prohibition Journal Begins Publication at Winnipeg, Manitoba.

An indication of the increasing progress of the temperance movement throughout the dominion is the recent establishment of a Canadian prohibition journal at Winnipeg. The new temperance organ is called "The Better Day," and stands for dominion prohibition with a party behind it. The temperance press everywhere constitutes one of the most important instruments in furthering the interests of the cause, and the new factor will undoubtedly prove an efficient as well as a welcome co-operator in the work of progressive temperance reform, not only in the western provinces, but throughout the whole dominion.

Will Close Opium Dens in Hong Kong.

The British government has ordered the suppression of opium dens in Hong Kong and Ceylon, and is therefore no longer open to the charge that she overlooks the viciousness of the opium traffic because of the revenue accruing from the sale of the drug. Until this step was taken, 40 per cent. of the government revenues collected in those localities were opium born.

Vote Money to Publish Report.

The Swedish riksdag has passed an additional allowance of nearly $2,000 for the publication of the report of the last anti-alcohol congress at Stockholm. This makes a total allowance of the state for the congress of about $6,000.

LIABLE TO BECOME IRKSOME.

Some Drawbacks in Having Disease as an Occupation.

A New York man was brought before a magistrate the other day for speeding. The magistrate asked his occupation. "Rheumatism," replied the prisoner. It was so recorded.

When you think of it, he was probably not far wrong. If anything will keep a man occupied it is a pet trouble like rheumatism or indigestion. Give it a chance and it will make other mundane matters relatively unimportant. It will prove the most exacting of occupations.

It has one advantage over the ordinary ones; hard times can't interfere with it. Every factory in the world may close, but the man who makes his disease his occupation need not work. His occupation will not be touched. It will always be open, beyond all "chance and change of the unsteady planets." But it has the disadvantage that it tends to grow more and more onerous. A man begins, say, with a little light and easy employment at indigestion. His hours at first are reasonable. Soon he discovers that he must pay more attention to it if he would do the thing right. He gives it several hours a day additional. He begins to think about it at odd times. Before he knows it he is occupied with it for practically all his waking hours.

IN EUROPE WITH MOTOR CAR.

Much There That Is Perpetual Delight to Traveler.

Belgium and Holland, though not blessed with good roads as a rule, have much to charm visitors in their quaint views and old-world cities. One has, of course, to travel slowly over the brick Dutch roads and the Belgian pave, but the towns are so close together that the journey need never be monotonous. And the lace-like architecture of Brussels, the mystery that enfolds antique Bruges, or the historic associations of Dordrecht and the dead cities of Zuyder Zee, are sufficient recompense for the slight discomforts of the route. But once east of Namur the pave ceases, and one can travel in the delights of speed along the valleys of the wandering Meuse, Lesse or Moselle. The latter river is charming, and a trip should be made down it from Luxembourg if possible, the grand ravines and immense woods giving a never ceasing variety of view.—Vogue.

English and American Contrasts.

"The English business man's hours are shorter than ours, and, besides, when his work is done, he turns to some avocation, culture, theology, art or literature. The American business man is inclined to be too materialistic. His work is too intense, too engrossing, and when he is through—and we work long hours—he wants something with a tang to it, something he can 'taste all the way down.' He must have an automobile that he can drive through the country at 70 miles an hour; he must have at least his golf or poker, even on Sunday. Balfour had as his avocation theology—did you ever hear of an American politician seeking relaxation in theology?"—Bishop Williams of Michigan.

Better Odds.

A farm laborer was taken ill on a visit to London, and a friend gave him the address of a doctor to whom to go. The fellow soon came back and reported progress.

"I've taken some medicine," said he; "but I'm hanged if I went to that doctor of yours."

"Why?" asked his friend.

"Well," he replied, "I was just about to go in, when I saw on his doorplate his name, 'Dr. X.' and below it '10 to 1.' When I saw that I said to myself: 'I'll be hanged if I take such a risk as that.' So I went a few doors farther up the street and saw another plate with 'Dr. Y.' and below it '1 to 5.' The odds were better, so I went in."—Exchange.

Identifying Chris.

In the afternoon in all the schools a part of the time was devoted to the study of the life and deeds of Columbus.

An amusing reply was given by one of the pupils. A teacher had told the class of the wonderful voyage of Columbus and how he insisted on continuing the voyage after the other men were clamoring to return. Then she asked: "Who was Columbus?" with the view of hearing how well they had followed her talk.

One little hand went up.

"Well, Johnny, who was he?" asked the teacher.

"Columbus was the gem of the ocean," was the answer.

The Kitchen God.

The kitchen god of China is perhaps not rightly so called. He has place over the cooking range, but he is the "recording angel" of the Chinese house, and it is his duty to note the actions of each member of the family and report them to the gods at the end of every month. Once a year, too, he goes to heaven in person and makes his annual report. So once a year the family prostrate themselves before him, carry him in procession, and finally burn him, while crackers are fired.

Refuted.

Long-Faced Individual—Young man, you can't attend to your business if you don't keep straight.

Young Man—That's all you know about it. I'm a contortionist.

MUST BE PERFECT

ONE-PIECE GUIMPE AND SLEEVE HARD TO FASHION.

Delightfully Becoming When Well Made, But Easily Spoiled If Artistry Is Not Bestowed on It.

Although there is nothing more difficult of attainment by an unskilled modiste than the arrangement of a one-piece guimpe and sleeve, fashion continues to advocate this style of dress, probably for the very reason it has proved more or less impossible for the great majority. No fashion is more delightfully becoming when it is correctly carried out, and none more to be avoided when there is doubt of the perfection of the artistry to be expended upon it. As shown in our illustration the fabric to be used is also of paramount importance in determining whether the guimpe is to be made with seamless shoulders or not. A delicate lace, figured net chiffon and similar fabrics are suitable for the seamless fabrics and sleeve, but a stiff fabric, even a heavy lace which does not drape well, is disappointing for this purpose, no matter how beautiful in quality or design. A tight, hard effect over the shoulders is entirely out of place with this shape bodice. When properly carried out the high-waisted empire frock is more graceful in effect when completed with this sort of draped bodice than with any other. The drooping effect which it gives to the shoulders is particularly harmonious with the empire lines.

One-Piece Guimpe and Sleeves.

THAT BROWN LINE AGAIN.

Try Powdered Pumice Stone to Remove Marks of Sun.

The girl who has been struggling vainly during the fall with the dingy brown line on the neck, the result of too much sun or too tight collars, should not despair until she has tried pumice stone.

If rubbing the stone and soapy water on the neck each time it is washed is too hard for the skin, try mixing powdered pumice with grease.

Put cold cream on a piece of fine chamois, cover it with powdered pumice and rub it lightly but firmly on the neck. Finish the process by washing with a lather of fine white soap.

Should even the powdered pumice irritate the skin, rub the neck, after the washing, with a little cold cream.

Emollient for the Hands.

One of the best emollients for the hands, which should be used during the cold days of winter, is that of honey and oatmeal. Curious as the combination appears, it is an old-fashioned remedy, which was once strongly believed in, the meal acting as an efficient cleanser in addition to its softening qualities. To make a ball of the two ingredients, which can be rubbed over the back of the hands, it is usually necessary to add a little olive oil, while a few drops of rose-water, or, if a still more distinct perfume is desired, oil of geranium or attar of roses, give it a delicate fragrance.

Use for Old Gown.

Many an old-fashioned satin evening gown is lying by considered hopeless, yet such a frock has wondrous possibilities. It will probably have a perfectly plain skirt, with or without a train. Anyway, it will be only the right length in the front, so as to bring it up to date. Cut the skirt off a foot above the hem and insert a deep band of filet lace.

This will make it possible to bring the skirt above the waist line. The old-fashioned waist will provide sufficient material for draping a blouse or filet net or lace.

Trimmings for the Neck.

There are many good neck trimmings, chief among which will be found the tiny thick ruches of tulle, followed by narrow plaited ones of silk, heading silk stocks worn under fragile lace collars. Smart dressers are wearing quilted ones like the Watteau ruche, and on evening dress will be found a cleverly arranged ruche of small flowers mounted on tulle.

Revival of Spanish Flounce.

A good many of the new models show the return of the simple and attractive Spanish flounce or skirts. This has come about from the demand for easy fullness.

This flounce, from its depth and its close gathers, gives a great chance to put the material around the feet in swirling folds.

TO MAKE CREAM WHIP.

Addition of Granulated Sugar Is Highly Recommended.

Many housekeepers who like whipped cream as an accompaniment for broths, chocolate or desserts think they must order cream of a special richness. This generally must be done the day before and always costs double the price of ordinary cream.

One young woman discovered last winter a way of easily making her daily supply of cream whip. She merely added a teaspoonful of granulated sugar to every pint, had it ice cold and quickly whipped it to a thick froth in the churn.

A special whipped cream churn is, by the way, an investment that pays for every housekeeper. The old methods of using a fork and skimming off froth as it comes to the surface is a waste of time that the modern woman cannot afford.

COOKED IN CHAFING DISH.

Panned Oysters a Delicious and Most Popular Dish.

For an easy and delicious way to cook oysters in the chafing dish, brown two tablespoonfuls of butter until a clear, dark color.

Drain and carefully free from shells a pint of fat, fresh oysters, and add to the browned butter; cook until the edges of the oysters curl and serve at once on pieces of toast, which have been prepared in the kitchen.

Butter the toast and season the oysters with cayenne pepper and salt, if necessary.

A pleasant variety is given to these oysters by sometimes adding a wineglass of sherry just as they are served. Again, Parmesan cheese may be sprinkled over the toast.

The Home.

Holes in plaster walls may be stopped with a mixture of sand and plaster of paris mixed into a paste with water. When dry cover with a piece of paper to match the walls.

Carpets should be beaten on the wrong side first and then, more gently, on the right. Never put a carpet down on a damp floor, for this often results in the carpet becoming mildewed.

A square of house flannel of the stoutest and coarsest description made into a bag and put over the broom is the best means of sweeping boards or linoleum. When slightly dampened it takes up instead of scattering the dust.

To make beeswax place comb in a coarse muslin bag and put a small stone to weight the contents; put in kettle, cover with water and boil. The wax comes to the top of the water and the sediment remains in the bottom of kettle. Remove wax when cold.

To remove grease spots from wall paper, sprinkle baking soda over blotting paper, place over the spot, and press a moderately warm iron against it for a few minutes. The blotting paper will absorb the grease, and the paper on the wall be free from spots.

Whole Wheat Bread.

Dissolve a cake of yeast in a gill of lukewarm water. Scald a pint of milk by pouring into it a pint of boiling water, add a teaspoonful each of salt and sugar and when the mixture is blood-warm add the dissolved yeast. Beat in with a wooden spoon about a quart of whole-wheat flour gradually until you have a dough that can be handled readily. Turn out upon a floured bread board and knead for at least ten minutes, then set to rise with a light towel thrown over it. When light enough at the end of three hours knead again quickly for five minutes, make into loaves and when these are light bake; if the loaves are small three-quarters of an hour; if large for an hour.

Grated Apple Pudding.

Grate seven large tart apples; beat the yolks of eight eggs with two cups of pulverized sugar until thick like a batter; add the grated apples, one dozen lady fingers grated, the grated peel of one lemon, and the stiff beaten whites of the eggs. Strew blanched almonds on top. Bake in a well greased spring form. Eat with whipped cream.

Flaxseed Lemonade.

Four tablespoonfuls of flaxseed (whole), one quart of boiling water poured on the flaxseed, juice of two lemons, leaving out the peel; sweeten to taste. Stew three hours in a covered pitcher. If too thick put in cold water with the lemon juice and sugar. Ice for drinking. It is splendid for colds.

An Egg Hint.

To prevent hard-boiled eggs (for salads, sandwiches, etc.) from turning a dark color, place them when taken out of the boiling water in a basin of cold water for a few minutes. This will not only preserve their natural color, but will render them much more easy to shell.

Keep Silverware from Tarnishing.

If pieces of gum camphor are placed in a box with silverware that is not in daily use it will prevent the articles from tarnishing. It may also be used in the canton flannel cases now so much in vogue.

Clean Springs with Mop.

Take an ordinary dish mop such as you can buy for ten cents, moisten with kerosene, and you will find it much easier to remove dust from coils than by using a rag or brush.

STORY OF ESCAPE FROM LIBBY PRISON

Told by Only Survivor of Seven Who Dug Tunnel and Let Out 165 Men.

SPOKANE, Wash., Jan. 16.—John Mitchell of Pomeroy, Wash., last survivor of the seven men who dug the tunnel from Libby Prison, thus providing for the escape of 165 men, told for the first time the story of the desperate struggle during the Civil War, also casting new light on the manner in which the plot was conceived and carried out.

Before beginning the work, he said on a recent visit in Spokane, they took an oath of secrecy, fixing death to be the penalty of violation. It was decided that if any of the seven men revealed the plot while they were digging the tunnel, the others were to take him to the top of the warehouse at night and throw him from the highest window to the rocks below. This would have meant certain death.

The rest of Mr. Mitchell's remarkable narrative of the escape is best told in his own words:

"I was in Libby for nine months—the longest, dreariest, most hopeless nine months of my life. Hope was some thing that none of us knew. There were in the prison at that time many of my comrades of the Seventy-seventh Pennsylvania, true patriots, every one of them. They knew what suffering was, if ever men did in this world. There is not one of them who is alive today who cannot recall as distinctly as if but a month ago the awful suffering and misery we endured. But let me tell you, there is not one of them who would not go through it all again if necessity demanded it, that the greatest government in the world might be perpetuated and the Union preserved for the greatest people in the world. I would myself, and I know the feelings of loyalty and patriotism that live in their breasts.

"After we had spent months that seemed years—decades—and to some of us, centuries, in that horrid pen, the plan of escape suggested itself to seven of us, six comrades and myself. We conceived the idea of digging the tunnel under the warehouse, under the walls of the prison pen, and far enough outside to give a start to those who were willing to take the risk in the hope of gaining liberty.

"It was a desperate undertaking, as we fully realized, and even believing as we did in the loyalty of every prisoner there, we could not dare to take them into our confidence for fear the secret would become known to the guards. It that event we knew it meant nothing but a wholesale slaughter of prisoners, many of whom would not be connected in the plot to escape. There was one obstacle, the guard inside the warehouse, whom we could not expect to escape while we worked, and therefore there was but one way to overcome this obstacle, and that was to bribe him. After numerous attempts we succeeded in doing this, agreeing each to pay him $1000 after we had gained our liberty and our homes. An agreement on this basis was finally concluded, and we set to work.

"I need not say it was slow progress, handicapped as we were by the fear and danger of being discovered, and having to work at the disadvantage of no tools but our hands and the pocketknives a few had been able to retain when imprisoned. The disposal of the debris, as we lossened it, was a hard matter. Not one of us was able, physically, to do much work. But hope sprang up in our hearts and the prospect of freedom buoyed us up in a manner that now seems miraculous to me.

"The days and nights grew into years, it seemed, as we toiled. But not once did any of us become discouraged. We grew weaker as as the task neared its end, and when it was all but completed, darkness came over me, and I yielded to the demands of an over wrought constitution, and for weeks knew nothing. That I lived is due to the fact that I was cared for by a prisoner-nurse whom I shall hold in grateful remembrance as long as I live. He had charge of my case half the time, and frequently on coming on duty found me lying on the floor, unnoticed and uncared for, where I had fallen in my delirium.

"When consciousness returned he made every effort to find out my name and where my home had been, but my mind was a blank, and it was days before I could tell him anything. I remember the joy with which I learned that the plans for escape through the tunnel had been successful and that my six faithful comrades had got away accompanied by 160 other prisoners.

"The days after I recovered seemed more unendurable than ever. The hunger and the privation, the awful scenes of daily occurrences, the exhibition of brutality and the heartlessness on the part of the guards, all go to make up a chapter in my life I would like to forget but can never expect to. I saw men shot for the slightest disobedience to unreasonable rules—for trying to reach a little stream of blackish, foul-smelling water to quench their thirst; for inability to perform some task when called upon for things which they were as powerless to prevent as little babes. Some of those who fell were my own comrades. That I ever left the place alive is a great wonder to me, and I know there were times when I wished death would relieve my sufferings.

"The darkest hour is just before the dawn, they say, and it seems so now. Dragging myself wearily around the stockade one day I heard the heavy firing of guns and I knew in an instant they were the guns of the Union army. Nothing ever sounded half so sweet to me before, for in their thunder I read the glad news that we were to be set free. I can remember clearly of throwing my cap against the old warehouse and feebly cheering.

"Nothing mattered then, and we no longer feared the guards. Relief and release soon came, and those of us who were able to over come the deplorable physical condition into which we had fallen, were soon on the road to recovery. By our comrades we were treated with every consideration.

"Of the seven men who dug that tunnel and provided the way for escape of themselves and their comrade, I am the only one living. The other six have been dead several years."

Cats of the Egyptians.

It is satisfactory to know that science concedes that the cat to which the ancient Egyptian "paid an absurd reverence" really was a cat of sorts. Experts have held that the so-called "cat" of the ancient Romans and Greeks ("ailures" the wavy-tailed one) was not a cat at all, but a kind of weasel. The mummified Egyptian animal, however, was a genuine cat, even if certain peculiarities about its teeth make it difficult to regard it as a near relative of our own domestic puss. The exact origin of the latter remains a puzzle. It appears first, mysterously, in the middle ages, when it was decidedly rare and highly prized throughout Europe, though the wild cat still abounded everywhere. And experts have not been able to satisfy themselves that the domestic cat and the wild one are really the same.—London Chronicle.

Notice to Delinquent Renters of Garrett County Telephone Company.

At a meeting of the Board of Directors of the Garrett County Telephone Company, held at Hoyes, Md., Dec. 17, 1908, the following motion was made and adopted by the Board as a whole: That all parties who are in arrears with their rents to the amount of six months that if they are not paid by the 1st day of March, 1909, they will be placed in the proper officers' hands for collection.

C. V. GUARD, Sec'y.

Subscribe for The Republican.

VISITS WITH UNCLE BY

How Lucy Fed the Hungry.

"Oh, such a headache!" cried Mrs. Ramsey, holding her throbbing temples between her firmly pressed finge tips. "Such a headache—and in threshing time!"

"Go right to your room, dear," commanded Lucy, her sister and guest of honor on the great Iowa farm. "Go straight to bed and leave it all to me. I will prepare dinner for the men."

Mrs. Ramsey dropped her hands and looked aghast at the neat, pretty figure from the metropolis.

"Oh, you needn't stare at me in that fashion, dear. I know what you are imagining. You think just because I am from the city and a stenographer that I don't know how to cook! Now, you do as I tell you. Go to bed, put a hot-water cloth on your head and try sleeping off that headache. And whatever you do, don't worry!"

With some misgivings, deadened somewhat by the terrible throbbing in her brain, Mrs. Ramsey pulled herself up the long stairs of the great farm house. Creeping into her room, she threw herself upon the bed.

For a time she listened anxiously. Down below she heard encouraging noises in the kitchen. Little by little the pain ceased and she was soon fast asleep. At dusk when the threshers came scurrying into the yard, some in wagons, others astride harnessed horses, Mrs. Ramsey slept on unmindful.

The threshers, dirty and hungry, washed at the pump, some of them who had broken bread at the Ramsey table, mentally picturing the spread which they were to enjoy. At last they were ready. Filing into the dining-room a ravenous bevy of men stood transfixed. Lucy's meal consisted of salted wafers stacked criss-cross, an individual dab of cottage cheese, a lettuce sandwich for each man, a cup of cocoa and a buttonhole boquet tied daintily with a bunch of baby blue ribbon!

o o o

Two Views of Marriage.

"Two Views of Marriage" was published early in the last century. Married persons are directed to read the lines as they are printed; single ones are to read the first and third lines, then the second, and finally the fourth in each verse.

That man must lead a happy life
Who's freed from matrimonial chains;
Who is directed by his wife
Is sure to suffer for his pains.

Adam could find no solid peace
When Eve was given for a mate;
Until he saw a woman's face
Adam was in a happy state.

In all the female face appear
Hypocrisy, deceit and pride;
Truth, darling of a heart sincere,
Ne'er known in woman to reside.

What tongue is able to unfold
The falsehood that in woman dwells?
The worth in women we behold
Is almost imperceptible.

Cursed be the foolish man, I say,
Who changes from his singleness;
Who will not yield to woman's sway
Is sure of perfect blessedness.

—Author Unknown.

o o o

Slivers of Thought.

The melancholy days seem to have given way for the coal scuttle days. Some time I am going to make my fortune by inventing a furnace that will eat its own ashes.

☆ ☆ ☆

A well-known lecturer is fooling away his time giving a lecture on Turkey. Why should married men attend a lecture like that? Don't their wives talk Turkey to 'em every night?

☆ ☆ ☆

If you want to go to Joyville take the Smiling high road past Gladsome creek. Keep to the right all the way. If you meet a poor woman with a basket, carry it for her. When you meet a man, say "Howdy!" If you stub your toe, whistle. If it rains, croon a song. If you are cold, run a little and think about something that will make your heart glow. If the way is long, recall how you trudged every Sunday night up to your best girl's house and never got tired. If a dog barks at you, don't throw a stone at him. Snap your fingers and say, "Good doggie!" If you feel like crying, laugh instead. If you can do all this, you'll get to Joyville, all right—and it's about the only way you ever will get there.

Byron Williams

Sea-Going Variety.

Shade of Diogenes—"I suppose I can claim the distinction of having been the only human being that ever lived in a tub." Shade of Noah—"Oh, I don't know; you should have been on the ark one or two breezy nights I recall."—Illustrated Sunday Magazine.

Don't Know How to Live.

There are people who go about the world looking for slights, and they are necessarily miserable, for they find them at every turn, especially imaginary ones. They are morally illiterate for they have never learned how to live.—Henry Drummond.

Taking No Chances.

A woman in New Jersey who says she is Eve has been put in jail. Which speaks well for the cautiousness of the New Jersey men.

Sundown Is Sure.

"A man kin allus fix up arguments to quiet his conscience," said Uncle Eben, "but 'taint no use. No matter how much you turns de clock back sundown gwinter come jes' de same."

Self-Respect.

It is good to foster anything that breeds self-respect. It is not conceit, which is vanity, but rather a respect for the divinity of man.

Woman's Natural Sense.

One woman's natural sense is worth 50 men's trained reason in a predicament.—New York Press.

Land for Sale.

We have for sale the following valuable tracts of land:

One Military Lot of 50 acres, a small portion of which is under cultivation. All good land, and every acre tillable. Watered by several good springs and a never failing small run. Contains some good timber. One-half mile from R. R. siding, and one and one-half miles from Oakland.

Also part of two Military Lots containing about 50 acres. This property is directly East of Oakland, on the South side of the B. & O. R. R. siding on the North side of tracks. Contains valuable grazing land, a portion of which is in cultivation. Valuable R. R. frontage.

Also 10 acres suitable for building sites, just East of Oakland on the North side of the Oakland and Mt. Lake Park road.

For further information, address

THE H. WEBER & SONS CO.,
6-tf Oakland, Md.

W. H. RAVENSCRAFT, M.D.,
PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON,
OAKLAND, MD.
Residence on North Third street.
Office in McComas Building.

DR. J. E. LEGGE,
PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON,
Offers his Services to the citizens of Oakland and vicinity.
Office in McComas Building, Second street

DR. R. F. BARTLETT,
DENTIST.
Office in McComas Building, Second street Oakland, Md.
Special attention given to bridge and crown work.

DR. J. G. ROBINSON, DENTIST,
OAKLAND MD
Office at residence on Liberty street.
GAS ADMINISTERED.

NORMAN S. HEINDELL,
ATTORNEY-AT-LAW,
All business given prompt attention.
Office—First National Bank Building.
KLAND, MARYLAND.

GILMOR S. HAMILL,
ATTORNEY-AT-LAW
AND SOLICITOR IN CHANCERY.
Office in Garrett National Bank Building
Particular attention given to Conveyancing investigation of land titles and collection of claims. Loans negotiated.

EDWARD H. SINCELL,
ATTORNEY-AT-LAW,
OAKLAND, MARYLAND.
Will practice in the Courts of Garrett and Allegany counties, the Court of Appeals of Maryland, and the adjoining counties of West Virginia.

Baltimore & Ohio R. R.

Schedule effective June 2, 1907.

OAKLAND.

*Daily. †Daily except Sunday. §Sunday only.

For WASHINGTON, BALTIMORE, PHILADELPHIA & NEW YORK. Depart *12.27 a. m., *6.31 a. m., *4.17 p. m., *8.29 p. m. Arrive *7.12 a. m., *3.35 p. m., *10.20 p. m., *11.54 p. m.

For CUMBERLAND and Way Points, Depart *10.00 a. m., †4.40 p. m. Arrive *9.26 a. m., *7.26 p. m.

For COLUMBUS & CHICAGO. Depart *11.54 p. m. Arrive *6.07 a. m., *4.17 p. m.

For GRAFTON (Accom.), Depart *9.26 a. m., *7.26 p. m. Arrive *10.00 a. m., †4.40 p. m.

For FAIRMONT and WHEELING. Depart *9.26 a. m. (local), *3.35 p. m., *11.54 p. m. Arrive *6.07 a. m., *4.17 p. m., *12.25 night.

For FAIRMONT (Accom.). Depart *7.26 p. m. Arrive *10.00 a. m.

For CINCINNATI, LOUISVILLE and ST. LOUIS, Depart *7.12 a. m., *3.35 p. m., *10.20 p. m. Arrive *12.27 a. m., *6.31 a. m., *8.29 p. m.

Oakland Pharmacy

JOS. E. HARNED, Proprietor.

Drugs, Chemicals, Stationery, Cigars

Cameras and Photo Supplies

FOR SALE.

We will sell at private sale at our farms between Mt. Lake Park and Oakland,

1 Gasoline Engine,

8 horse-power, made by the International Harvester Co. Almost new and in perfect running order. Will be sold for $275.

1 Hay Bailer,

operated by horse-power. Makes standard size bales.

For further information call on or write to

THE H. WEBER & SONS CO.,
Oakland, Md.

J. B. WILLIAMS CO.

FROSTBURG, MD.

Cheapest place to buy

MONUMENTS
HEADSTONES AND IRON FENCING

Send for prices

A Hint to the Wise Is Sufficient.

Special Sale on

2-qt Blue Enamel Saucepan.

2-qt Blue Fnamel Pudding Pans.

2-qt Blue Enamel Preserve Kettles.

We have just received over 1500 lbs. of our famous 10c Candy.

SUNDAY SCHOOL SUPPLIES.

TAKE our advice—buy now, don't wait, but come and see

THE Little Man

and you will save money on all your Holiday Goods,

Toys, Candies, Novelties, Fancy Goods.

Baumgartner.

CAPITAL $25,000.00

The First National Bank
Of Grantsville, Md.

Safe deposit vault boxes for rent.

SURPLUS $12,500.00

The Savings Department takes care of your money when waiting other investment. The money earns interest from the day it is deposited. It can be withdrawn at any time.

Its Advantages

Any amount from One Dollar up can be deposited, and interest added to principal twice a year. Pass books are issued to every depositor.

We Pay 3 Per Cent. Interest.
Open Daily except Sundays and Holidays, 9 a. m. to 4 p. m.

OFFICERS.
C. H. JENNINGS, - - President
U. M. STANTON, - Vice-President
J. O. GETTY, - - - Cashier

DIRECTORS.
C. H. Jennings, U. M. Stanton,
G. C. Keller, Eli Stanton,
W. A. Hitchins, Frank Watts,
J. O. Getty.

A. D. NAYLOR & COMP'Y

You can buy at Reduced Prices

Grain Drills, Harrows and Plows

AT NAYLOR & CO.'S

Big Stock to select from.

Have the Farmer's Favorite Drills, the Thomas, the Superior Hoe and Disc Drills.

We have the Syracuse, the Imperial and the Wyard Plows.

Also the wood frame Harrows, the wheel and lever Harrows; also the Disc Harrow, all at reduced prices.

We also have a nice line of Spray Pumps.

Muco-Solvent

is an indispensible household remedy because it is a preventive as well as a cure, and because it arrests development of all contageous germs and bacterial diseases. It cures croup, colds, tonsilitis with its associated ills and all inflamed and catarrhal conditions of the mucous surface. It is a harmless vegetable preparation that may safely be administered to the tenderest babe. If not for sale in your neighborhood, write to

THE PIEDMONT SUPPLY CO.,
Sole Agents for Muco-Solvent. Piedmont, W. Va.

Real Estate Bargains

I offer for sale

FARM OF 147 ACRES, 3 miles from Oakland; good 6-room House; plenty of water; over 50 acres cleared; about 25 acres of grass; 2 Orchards, bearing; over 75 acres of White Oak Timber; R. F. D. mail service.

COTTAGE OF 6 ROOMS for sale at Mt. Lake Park.

HOUSE AND LOT on Oak Street, Oakland, for sale or rent. House of 6 rooms—Lot 50x150 feet, with Stable and all necessary Outbuildings.

FOUR VERY DESIRABLE BUILDING LOTS situated on Liberty Street, in Oakland. Also 3 DWELLING HOUSES on Liberty Street, with good water and all necessary outbuildings.

HOUSE AND LOT on Wilson Street. House of 10 rooms; good water. Lot 150 feet front. Best Outbuildings in Oakland.

A VERY GOOD FARM 1 mile from Oakland—all under fence; containing 32 acres; about 25 under cultivation; 2 fine Orchards, and about 2½ acres in small Fruit; 2 Houses, a very good Well and a never failing Spring. A very desirable place for Truck and Poultry Farming. Can be bought at a low price just now.

I have for sale 18 of the very best Building Lots in the town which I will sell for cash—or $5 down and $5 per month.

150 ACRES OF VALUABLE COAL LAND situated less than two miles of Oakland which can be bought at a great bargain. The surface would make fine farming land. This land is well watered with a stream and several good springs.

12 MORE CHOICE BUILDING LOTS at $5 down and $5 per month.

If you want cash for your Real Estate, or Real Estate for your cash, let me hear from you.

For further particulars call on or address

James A. Sincell, Real Estate Agt and Surveyor
Sincell Building, OAKLAND MD

Horticultural Opportunities in Garrett County

Prof. E. P. Sandsten, professor of horticulture in the University of Wisconsin, is the author of the following paper on "Horticultural Opportunities in Western Maryland:"

Through the Agricultural Journals we hear a great deal of discussion about the abandoned New England farms and homesteads and of their possibilities along certain lines of Agriculture and Horticulture. This agitation is beginning to bear its fruitage. Scores of Western farmers have sold their high priced land in the central West and have returned to the neglected farms of their forefathers. The best lands in the West have been settled and are held at prices beyond the reach of the average young farmer who wishes to make a home for himself and his family. New York and most of the New England states offer opportunities which are worthy of consideration to prospective home builders. Land is cheap and farm products bring good prices in the large markets near by, but the land is rough and in most cases exhausted of its native fertility and needs careful handling and management. For diversified farming or dairying the land is admirably adapted. There is another section in the East, little known of and appreciated by prospective settlers to which the writer wishes to call special attention. When the early settlers from Virginia and Southern Maryland and Delaware moved westward to settle on the rich prairies and river lands of Ohio, Indiana and westward they passed over portions of Western Maryland and West Virginia without stopping to investigate its resources. It was but natural then to procure lands which were easy to cultivate and would produce abundantly of the staple farm crops. Fruit growing was then in its infancy and no one was prophetic enough to foresee the great demand and present wonderful development along all horticultural lines. From being a mere hand maid to agriculture, fruit growing has developed into a distinct profession which requires special training and aptitude. It also requires soil suited to the various fruits, favorable climatic conditinos and ready markets. These conditions are essential to successful fruit growing and must be carefully considered by the prospective fruit grower.

It has been the writer's good fortune to make an extended horticultural survey of Washington, Allegany and Garrett counties of Maryland during his connection with Maryland Agricultural Experiment Station. The results of that survey are embodied in this paper.

The first requisite for successful fruit growing is a good market. This particular region is especially favored. It is located within a few hours by rail of Pittsburg, Washingron, Baltimore, Philadelphia and New York, which are recognized as the largest and best markets on the continent. Second, transportation facilities—no section could be better favored since it is traversed through its entire length by the main line of the Baltimore and Ohio railroad system and from which side lines of feeders radiate. The daily passenger and freight accommodations are all that could be desired. Third, the soil, without suitable land, fruit growing can never be made profitable. The soil in this part of Maryland is adapted to all kinds of the staple fruits grown in the temperate zone. Lime stone soil if found over a large portion and is admirably adapted to the production of apples. Shale and free stone soil is also found in large areas and is considered to be the finest peach and plum land in the East. The land is somewhat hilly and traversed by low ridges. The slopes are not precipitous or stony and can be cultivated to the very summits. It is on these hillsides where the best fruit land is found. In Allegany and Garrett counties are large tracts of table land admirably suited for apples only waiting to be developed to yield an abundant return to the careful fruit growers. All the standard summer, fall and winter varieties of apples are here grown to perfection. It is the natural home of the York Imperial, Wine Sap, Ben Davis and Grime's Golden Apples, but all varieties can be grown successfully, including the Pippin, Bellflower, Rome Beauty and Wagner. Due to the high altitude and clear atmosphere the apples grown are singularly free from insect pest and fungus diseases. The colors and flavor are of the very highest order. There are several small orchards scattered over this section and their thrifty and healthy appearance bespeaks of a congenial soil and climate. Nowhere except in certain parts of New York state has the writer seen as large and well developed apple trees. The trees are long-lived and produce large crops for forty or fifty years. In this as well as others respects Western Maryland is far ahead of Missouri and Kansas. The general topography of the land makes it almost impossible for damaging frosts to occur and hence failures of crops are unknown. The climate is an ideal one for the perfect development of the fruit and the trees. Winters are now long and cold enough to give the trees a long rest and a chance to harden up their wood. The summers cool and invigorating, yet warm enough to mature peaches and other more tender fruits to perfection.

Western Maryland is justly famous as a peach growing region, especially Washington county. Nowhere in the East or South do peaches gain such a perfection as here. The clear and pure mountain air gives the fruit a flavor and color which cannot be rivalled. The peaches are firm and stand shipment better than those grown in the water sections or lower latitudes. The facilities for shipping peaches to the large markets are unexcelled. They are packed in refrigerator cars at the various stations in the afternoon and reach New York in time to be sold the following morning thus eliminating losses from delay and long transportation. While peaches may be profitably grown in many parts of Allegany and Garrett counties, apples will in the future claim the greatest consideration. The soil and climatic conditions favor this fruit and the writer predicts that this section of Western Maryland will in the near future become justly famous. Actual tests have demonstrated that the keeping qualities of winter apples grown in Western Maryland are above par. This is largely due to climatic conditions and soil. This is a very important consideration to packers and exporters.

Pears are also successfully grown in every part of Western Maryland and several commercial orchards have been planned in recent years. All the standard varieties can be grown. Cherries both sour and sweet, flourish and crops are certain. Commercial cherry growing will be one of the most attractive forms of fruit growing in this section. As yet they are not extensively grown but with the natural advantages which the section possesses the opportunities offered will ere long be utilized.

Grape growing is another branch of fruit growing which is waiting to be developed. The high altitude and perfect air drainage of the land, precludes excessive damage from rot and mildew, the two worse enemies to profitable grape growing sections. The clear dry atmosphere renders the setting of the fruit perfect.

When one considers the splendid results at the present obtained in the few scattered orchards under indifferent treatment of the trees, one is led to speculate about what the result and profit would be under a rational system of cultivation, pruning and spraying. None of these operations are practiced, yet the trees are strong, healthy and productive. At the present low price for land this part of Western Maryland offers the best possible inducements to those who wish to engage in fruit growing on an extended scale. This fact has already been recognized, and several hundred acres are now being planted in winter apples.

Naturally the prospective settler is anxious to learn something about insect pest and fungus diseases common to this section. Unlike most fruit growing sections of the east the San Jose scale is not found and under the present strict inspection laws there is very little danger from it being introduced. Only those who have had experience with the troublesome and destructive insect realize the advantages offered by a fruit section free from it. The colling moth is less numerous and destructive here than in New York state and Wisconsin. Experience has amply demonstrated the fact that this insect can be held in check and controlled by timely applications of Paris Green or other arsenites. Fungus diseases are almost unknown and heretofore no spraying has been necesasry. The absence of fungus diseases is due to the high altitude and the excellent air drainage. Blights so destructive to apples and pears in the tide water section of the east are almost unknown there. The wood growth is strong and hard and matures perfectly, hence the blight is not able to gain a foothold. Taking all these factors into consideration the conclnsion is irresistible that Western Maryland will in the near future become one of the greatest fruit producing sections in America.

STONE BRIDGES OF THE PAST.

A Brief Account of Those Along An Old Road.

Recently a paper was published in the Cumberland Daily Times giving a concise history of the old time stone and brick dwellings in Cumberland and our county. The paper appears to have been read by many persons with interest.

I propose now to prepare and furnish a paper on the subject of the old stone bridges along the Cumberland or National Road from Cumberland to the Pennsylvania line at Winding Ridge, a distance of about 35 miles. The paper will, to some extent at least, be from observation and acquired information.

The road mentioned, as is known to some, is the successor of the old Braddock road, hurriedly made as a military way for his army. It remained the highway to the west till it was worn out. Our National government in 1806 commenced building the Cumberland road along the way of Braddock's road, some times on one side, then on the other, but always close to each other. The bridges along Braddock's road were of wood, and very primitive in their structure. The government was not satisfied with wooden structures, and ordered them to be built of stone in a very durable manner.

I will commence with the double arch stone bridge across Will's creek, at the head of Mechanic street, in Cumberland. It is a very suitable structure, in good preservation, built in 1833 under the supervision of an army engineer. The State of Maryland had by an act of the Legislature, 1832, chapter 55, authorized the general government to change the route of the road along the river to the Will's creek route, by far more preferable than the old river Sandy Gap way.

The next structure of the kind is at the old Samuel Eckles place, across Braddock's run, a small stream. This bridge is as safe and sound as when built in the eighteen thirties, and is in constant use.

The next in due course is the Clarysville bridge across a small stream of water in the same condition. Clarysville takes its name from Jerrard Clary, who for many years kept the brick hotel or inn at that place; quite a noted one in its time. The landlord, such was the style in those days, was a real type of the innkeepers in olden times.

There are no more bridges till the foot of the Great Savage mountain is reached. Just beyond Frostburg, a small structure exists and is in use. The next is a bridge over Savage river or creek, quite a noted stream of pure mountain water, heading on the Pennsylvania side of Mason and Dixon's line. It ought to have been made the division line between the two kindred counties.

The Shade Mills, a small stream, the first to send its waters to the West. At this place was the historic "Shades of death" in old times, but the shades and their horrors are no more there, although there are natural deaths, of course.

At the east base of Meadow Mountain, is still another over a small stream called Red run, famous for its speckled trout in past times. This stream heads in the famous Wolf Swamp, which send one stream (this one) west, another to the east through the Savage river. Then comes the small bridge over the Meadow run, at the Western base of the beautiful Meadow mountain, named by Washington himself. The little mountain glade there he named the Little Meadows. This place has a historic record, and is still known as the Little Meadows, and the valuable estate is now owned by Mr. D. F. Kuykendall and wife. It once had the air of a village in the star days of the old National road.

We now approach the famous—I might say historic—bridge across the Little Crossing (erroneously called Castelman river) about one mile east of Grantsville. It is a wonderful structure, of stone work, built about the year 1815, under the supervision of a government engineer, with a single span or arch of great height, just about a semi-circle, thus creating an unnecessary rise in the approaches to the bridge at each end. It is a wonder in itself, an object for sightseeings. Much has been written and published about it. It has even been criticised and photographed. The main work is still perfectly sound and safe for traffic. The guard walls have at different times been despoiled by evil-doing persons. But these damages have been repaired by the county authorities. Similar damages have been done to other bridges.

About one mile west of Grantsville, a bridge across a small stream called Shade run is reached. The structure is like the rest in form and structure, but of small dimensions. Next will be the one over Pursley run, flowing westward between the historic Negro mountain and Keyser's Ridge, the very highest range of the Alleghany mountains. This structure and the stream were never of much note, but the bridge is still intact and in use. The next and last will be one across a small stream at the Winding Ridge which forms the division line between Garrett county and Somerset county, Pa. This closes the subject so far as our two counties are concerned, but precisely the same style of bridges are to be found in Pennsylvania along the Cumberland road.

January 7, 1909. J. B.

Church Services.

ST. MARK'S LUTHERAN.

Services next Sabbath as follows:
Sunday school at 9.30 a. m.
Preaching 10.30 a. m.
Luther League every Wednesday at 7.30 p. m.
Deer Park—Preaching at 7.30 p. m.
Everybody welcome.

E. MANGES, Pastor.

ST. PAUL'S M. E.

Services next Sunday as follows: Preaching 10.30 a. m.; Sunday school at 2.15 p. m.; preaching at 7.30 p. m.
Junior League Wednesday 4.15 p. m.
Everybody cordially invited to attend these services.

J. B. WORKMAN, Pastor.

Supervisors' Office Moved.

Yesterday Mr. D. M. Mason, president of the Board of Supervisors of Elections, superintended the removal of the fixtures from the old office of the supervisors on Alder street to the new office of the Board in the court house, the room set aside for the Board being located on the south side of the building immediately adjoining the main entrance. The room is well adapted for the purposes of the board and is supplied with a vault of sufficient proportions for the uses of the election officials.

See The Republican for Job Printing.

Special Prices on Sleighs and Sleds.

A. D. Naylor has a few sleds and sleighs left over upon which he will give a special low price to close out. Easy terms.

SEED CORN FOR SALE—Pure bred Yellow Dent selected seed corn. First prize winner at Maryland State Corn Show at Fifth Regiment Armory, Baltimore, Md., Dec. 3, 1908. Also pure bred Boone Co., white corn, the variety that produced the first prize winner in white corn Early maturing. A. B. Twining, Forest Hill, Md. 46-8t.pd.

Livery Removed.

Messrs. Maroney Bros., the Quality Hill liverymen, have removed from their old location to the Helbig barn which was recentiy vacated by Mr J. A. Kelly. The equipment of the Maroney Bros. stable compares very favorably with that of other liverymen and they aim to please their patrons.

Coal! Coal!

The undersigned have leased the Diehl Coal Mine and are now prepared to furnish the best quality of coal at the mines north of Oakland at $1.00 per ton at the mine. Money must accompany order.

UPTON CUPPPET.
ROY WINTERS.
46-3t

THE BALTIMORE NEWS
Daily and Sunday

¶ A live, independent newspaper, published every afternoon in the year.

¶ Covers thoroughly the news events of the city, State and country.

¶ A newspaper for the home—for the family circle.

¶ Enjoys the confidence and respect of its readers.

¶ One cent everywhere.

Subscriptions by Mail:

DAILY.

One month	$ .25
Three months	.75
Six months	1.50
One year	3.00

SUNDAY.

Six months	.25
12 months	.50

The Baltimore News
BALTIMORE, MD.

SHERIFF'S SALE
OF VALUABLE
Real Estate
Lying in 9th District of Garrett County.

Under and by virtue of a writ of fieri facias issued out of the Circuit Court for Garrett County, at the suit of Carrie G. Coulehan vs. Peter Donius, No. 53 trials, September Term, 1908, I have seized and taken into execution all the right, title interest and estate of the said Peter Donius in and to all that real estate lying in Garrett County and State of Maryland, and described as follows: All that piece or parcel of land lying and being in Garrett County and State of Maryland, and designated as Military Lot No. Five Hundred and Eleven (511), westward of Fort Cumberland, and containing fifty acres, more or less, it being the same property which was conveyed by Samuel Johnson et al., to Peter Donius, by deed dated the 14th day of April, 1886, and recorded among the Land Records of Garrett County in Liber W. H. T. No. 10, folio 239.

And I hereby give notice that I will sell in front of the Court House at Oakland, on Saturday February 13, 1909, at two o'clock P. M., all the right, title, interest and estate of the said Peter Donius in and to the above described property.

TERMS—CASH.

AUSTIN BROWN, Sheriff

Notice to Tax Payers

Notice is hereby given to all delinquent tax-payers that if taxes now due and in arrears are not paid before

JANUARY 1ST, 1909,

I will proceed by law to collect. I refer to Section 50 of Chapter 96 of Acts of the General assembly of Maryland, which provides as follows:

SECTION 50. The said Treasurer shall during the first week in December in each and every year, give notice to all delinquent tax-payers of said county, by advertisement inserted in two newspapers published in said county, and in hand-bills posted in five of the most public places in each election district of said county, and at the courthouse door, warning them that the payment of all taxes then due and in arrear will be enforced by advertisement and sale unless the same be paid before ths 1st day of January next following.

Please pay promptly and save costs.

W. E. HOLLINGER,
Treasurer of Garrett County.

Plant Wood's Seeds For The Garden & Farm.

Thirty years in business, with a steadily increasing trade every year—until we have to-day one of the largest businesses in seeds in this country—is the best of evidence as to

The* Superior Quality of Wood's Seeds.

We are headquarters for Grass and Clover Seeds, Seed Potatoes, Seed Oats, Cow Peas, Soja Beans and all Farm Seeds.

Wood's Descriptive Catalog the most useful and valuable of Garden and Farm seed Catalogs mailed free on request.

T. W. WOOD & SONS,
Seedsmen, - Richmond, Va.

Notice to Creditors.

This is to give notice, That the subscriber of Garrett county hath obtained from the Orphans' Court of Garrett county, in Maryland, letters of Administration on the personal estate of

A. F. GEORGE,

late of Garrett county, deceased. All persons having claims against the deceased are hereby warned to exhibit the same, with the vouchers thereof legally authenticated to the subscriber, on or before the 26th day of May next; they may otherwise by law be excluded from all benefit of said estate. All persons knowing themselves in debted to said estate are requested to make immediate payment.

Given under my hand this 24th day of November, 1908.

MARY E. GEORGE,
Administratrix,
Swanton Md.

Notice to Creditors.

This is to give notice, That the subscriber of Garrett County, in Maryland, hath obtained from the Orphans' Court of Garrett county, in Maryland, letters Administration on the personal estate of

J. RUSSELL BROWNING,

late of Garrett County, deceased. All persons having claims against the deceased are hereby warned to exhibit the same with the vouchers thereof legally authenticated to the subscriber, on or before the 29th day of April, next; they may otherwise by law be excluded from all benefit of said estate. All persons knowing themselves indebted to said estate are requested to make immediate payment.

Given under my hand this 29th day of October, 1908.

M. A. BROWNING,
Administrator,
Kitzmiller, Md.

Notice to Creditors.

This is to give notice, That the subscribers of Garrett county, hath obtained from the Orphans' Court of Garrett County, in Maryland, Letters of Administration on the personal estate of

MAHALA A. DUCKWORTH,

late of Garrett county, deceased. All persons having claims against the deceased are hereby warned to exhibit the same, with vouchers thereof legally authenticated to the subscriber, on or before the 14th day of July next; they may otherwise by law be excluded from all benefit of said estate. All persons knowing themselves indebted to said estate are requested to make immediate payment.

Given under my hand this 12th day of January, 1909.

W. H. AUGUSTINE,
Administrator,
Grantsville, Md.

Notice to Creditors.

This is to give notice, That the subscriber, of Garrett county hath obtained from the Orphan's Court of Garrett county, in Maryland, letters of Administration on the personal estate of

CIVILLA C. CRANE,

late of Garrett county, deceased. All persons having claims against the deceased are hereby warned to exhibit the same, with the vouchers thereof legally authenticated to the subscriber, on or before the 14th day of July, next; they may otherwise by law be excluded from all benefit of said estate. All persons knowing themselves indebted to said estate are requested to make immediate payment.

Given under my hand this 12th day of January, 1909.

B. F. CRANE,
Administrator,
Mt. Lake Park, Md.

Commissioners' Meeting.

OFFICE OF THE
COUNTY COMMISSIONERS FOR GARRETT CO.,
OAKLAND, MD., Jan. 14, 1909.

The County Commissioners for Garrett county will meet at their office in Oakland on

Tuesday, Feb. 2nd, 1909,

to hear appeals and make transfers.

By order of the Board,
A. G. ROSS, Clerk.

TIMBER LANDS.

Have option on 6,400 acres in Preston and Randolph counties and wish to meet parties who will join in purchase of same. Address Box 381, Oakland, Md. 46-tf

THE REPUBLICAN.

VOLUME 32. OAKLAND, MARYLAND, THURSDAY, JANUARY 28, 1909. NUMBER 48

ALLEGED HORSE THIEF WITH PLENTY OF NERVE

Or Probably It Was Lack of Common Sense, Anyway He's In Jail.

For several weeks past Frank P. Wilkinson, who gave his home as being in New York, and a painter by trade, has made his home with Mr. Ralph Browning, near Thayerville, where he worked at odd jobs about the place and made himself generally useful until one day last week when he was mounted on a horse belonging to Mr. Browning's son, Gorman, and directed to go to Deer Park and make some purchases for the household.

Wilkinson started from the Browning farm for Deer Park, but before reaching that place turned off and came to Oakland, putting the horse up at one of the livery barns here for the night and early next morning rode out to the south of town where he offered the animal for sale. At the Mansfield farm he found a buyer in the person of John Wilson, a tenant on the farm, and in order to consummate the deal Wilson had to come to Oakland. Wilkinson accompanied him and that is where he showed his lack of common sense, as the officers here had been notified by telephone of the disappearance of the man and horse and were asked to keep a lookout for them. Wilson and Wilkinson had been in town less than half an hour before the officers located the horse and the rest was easy. Wilkinson being being picked up in the street very shortly thereafter and was placed in jail until Saturday morning when he was given a preliminary hearing before Justice West.

Mr. Browning and his son as well as Wilson appeared at the hearing and gave very damaging testimony against the prisoner. Mr. Wilson stated that he had agreed to pay Wilkinson $75 for the horse and had come to Oakland to get the money. Mr. Browning told of the sudden disappearance of the man and horse from his farm and was backed up in his statement by his son. The Justice remanded Wilkinson to jail to await the action of the grand jury at the June term.

Wilkinson has a good appearance and is well educated. He came to this section early in the spring with a party of horse traders but had a disagreement with them and parted company

A Large Hay Barn.

Messrs. Dixon & Kelso, of Oakland, are having erected on their yard west of the B. & O. station here a large hay barn with a capacity of fifteen cars. Mr. John Ault is the contractor for the building.

See The Republican for Job Printing.

THE STATE ROAD.

"Tax Payer" Advocates the Visiting of Our County by the Chief Engineer.

To the Editor of The Republican:

I have been reading with much interest the writings in THE REPUBLICAN regarding the proposed State Road and must say I most heartily agree with the writers.

I cannot fully understand the situation, as at the meeting in Oakland last June, when the Road Commission was there and all sections of the county represented, a resolution was adopted unanimously that the road should be built from Oakland to the National Pike by the most practical route.

At the meeting in Baltimore in December some of the very parties who helped to frame the resolution which was passed in June advocated before the Commission a certain route and a route which (any man who is willing to lay aside self interest and be fair) is not the most practical route from Oakland to the National Pike. This kind of child's play and conflicting talk has a tendency to confuse the Commission, which is composed of the brains of the state and who are honest and fair gentlemen and who wish to spend the people's money to the best advantage and where it will benefit the greatest number of people, so I say I most heartily agree with the other writers that Chief Engineer Crosby should visit Garrett county and inspect the roads personally. While Grantsville was largely represented at the Baltimore meeting in December their chief object was the National Pike east of Grantsville, so as a tax-payer and one who is interested in good roads, I hope Engineer Crosby will visit our county.

If this don't find the waste basket, you may hear from me later.

TAX PAYER.

Selfishness and the Prosposed State Road.

To the Editor of THE REPUBLICAN:

The growing enthusiasm manifested in the proposed state road for Garrett county, were it less selfish in its origin, would mark the dwellers upon the God-favored hills of Western Maryland as an active and wide awake people; but self-centered enthusiasm has hindered the progress of man in all the periods of his existence, and will prove a mighty factor in preventing the accomplishing of the best results from the expenditure of the county's apportionment of the state funds for the road work in our county

It is not our purpose to criticise the action of the State Highway Commission in their choice of routes, but we believe that the best interests of all the people were not fully and impartially represented before that Commission at their meeting in Baltimore early in December last, and as a result many are dissatisfied and even those who advocated the chosen route stand a fair chance to be disappointed in the result.

To be convinced of this, let us consider the outlook fairly: In the first place the State Highway Commission did not promise to build sixty, or forty, or even twenty miles of road in Garrett county, but that they would expend $238,000 on a road, and any well informed person knows that that amount will not build a modern road half as long as the proposed sixty-mile route, hence to rebuild the Pike from the Allegany county line to the Pennsylvania line, west of Grantsville, would require nearly all the money and we would have a road at one end of the county running parallel with the Pennsylvania state line and within a mile or two of that line and of real benefit to only a few of our citizens, and if such should be the result the advocates of the plan would have themselves to blame and not the Commission. We have never heard a word of opposition to the work on the Pike from the Allegany county line to Grantsville, but as to what course to take from there is the question at issue. One route means to cross Negro Mountain at the highest point in the county and for several miles traverse one of the most rugged and sparsely settled portions of the county; the other means to traverse an open and comparatively level section where beautiful and productive farms lie all along the way and where the vast mineral wealth of our good old county lies hidden beneath the surface and penetrating the centre of the county where within a few years the main industrial centre is destined to spring up, and where Grantsville, Jennings, New Germany, Bittinger, Accident, Hoyes, McHenry and virtually all the towns and villages that have no rail road outlet will reap the benefit.

This is but our humble opinion and however it may be we are in favor of a road through the county over any route where it will benefit the greatest number of our citizens even if that route leaves us entirely out of consideration, and we suggest that all citizens become interested and join in a harmonious and united request to the Commission that the general engineer make a personal inspection of the routes and general topography of the territory to be traversed and let his unquestioned judgment settle the controversy.

Try as much as we may, we are prone to be too selfish in these matters, for if I were a laywer residing outside of the county, I might use my influence and eloquence to have the road placed anywhere because some one flourished a "green back" temptingly near my nose and that would be selfish. If I were a loaner of money, I might exert myself mightily to have a good road located through a certain section where I held mortgages on land that the value of real estate might increase and my risk lessen, and that would be selfish. If I were a banker, I might plead for a certain route that certain of my patrons might have a smooth road over which to haul their heavy deposits and that would be selfish. If I were a farmer I would want the road by my farm and that would be selfish too, but I am none of these; I am only a plain

COUNTRYMAN.

A New Movement.

The young men of Mountain Lake Park and Loch Lynn Heights have organized a new movement Bible class which meets in connection with the Mt. Lake Park M. E. Sunday school every Sunday at 2:30 p. m. They held their regular social and business meeting at the home of H. V. Leighton Friday evening, Jan. 22. Among other business matters considered was the selection of name for the class, the name selected being "The Invincibles," and their motto is "I can do all things thro Christ which strengthens me." The class also has under consideration the establishing of a reading room, which we hope to have in operation in the near future, and equipped with good clean literature which we are sure will be of great benefit to the class. After the business of the evening had been disposed of, we were entertained with some excellent music, after which refreshments were served by Mrs. Leighton and were enjoyed by all. There were present 30 members of the class and several of their wives and friends.

The Invincibles were organized about eight weeks ago with six members and now has grown to a membership of forty four, which is far beyond expectations. We hope that the membership and interest will still grow and increase and much good grow out of this movement. We would advocate the organization of such a class in every Sunday school. A MEMBER.

Will Probated.

The last will and testament of the late Mrs. Ellen Hughes, of Hutton, was admitted to probate in the Orphans' Court for Garrett county yesterday. The will names the son of the testatrix, Mr. Thomas J. Hughes, executor.

SECT'Y BONAPARTE HITS THE DEMOCRATS HARD.

He Accuses Them of Attempted Theft of the People's Rights.

Republican City Leader William F. Stone had the editors of the Republican papers of Maryland as his guests Tuesday at a dinner given at the Union League Club, on West Fayette street. Several of Mr. Stone's personal friends who are prominent in the politics of the State, and especially in Baltimore city, were invited to meet them.

Several weeks ago Mr. Stone gave a dinner to the leading politicians of Maryland inaugurating the campaign against the proposed disfranchising amendment. Tuesday's dinner was a continuation of the same movement.

Mr. Stone welcomed his guests, and introduced James P. Curley, president of the Republican Editorial Association, as the toastmaster. He spoke and then introduced Attorney General Bonaparte.

In his speech Mr. Bonaparte said, in part:

"Since reducing to writing what I expect to inflict on you today, I have seen and seen with great pleasure, the unequivocal condemnation of the disfranchising amendment by Cardinal Gibbons. Like Mr. Taft, he condemns it mainly because it disobeys the Constitution of the United States and despoils of their rights our negro citizens. I should be sorry indeed if anyone had any doubt of my own sentiments on these aspects of the amendment. Its adoption will be a triumph of sectionalism over loyalty, of prejudice and crooked dealing over charity and good faith; in short, of iniquity over righteousness.

"I wish and expect to say, and say plainly, what I think of it and its authors in this light long before it is submitted to the people's verdict. But today I propose to consider its practical consequences, to point out what its adoption will mean, not particularly for black men or for Republicans, but for all Marylanders, and more especially for those Marylanders who belong to the Democratic party, without also belonging (body and soul) to the Democratic ring.

"Next November the voters of Maryland will be called upon to say whether for an indefinite time, if not forever, the State shall belong to its people or shall belong to its ring. This will be the real question involved in the adoption or rejection of the disfranchising amendment; and it is your business and my business; it is the business of every patriotic citizen who knows enough about Maryland politics, past and present to know that such is the real question; to make sure, so far as each one of us may, that the voters answer this question with their eyes open.

"The authors and avowed supporters of the amendment do not deny that it will make Maryland a one-party State; that, with it in force, a Democratic nomination will mean a certain election in the State at large, in Baltimore city and in three-fourths of our counties, but they would have the voters, or at least the Democratic voters, believe that this concerns Republicans only; that no Democrat—some would say that no white man—need be troubled at the outlook. Is this true?

"With the amendment in force we could not have elected the new judges in 1882, we could not have rejected the call for the constitutional convention in 1887 and again in 1907, we could not have elected Lloyd Lowndes in 1895, we could not have defeated Bryan in 1896 and again in 1900, we could not have rejected the Poe amendment in 1905. All of these great deliverances were brought with the aid of many thousands of Democrats who turned against their ring-ridded party for the good of their city or State; but, in fighting the ring they would have been as mice under a cat's claws had there been no Republican party or negro vote.

"I know, of course, that just now the ring and its apologists are talking about primaries, 'fair' primaries, 'legal' primaries and dangling that old weather-worn, moth-eaten pigeon 'reform within the party' before independent eyes. My former comrades, the Democratic reformers, are nowadays pretty old birds, for they are, for the most part, of the same hatching as myself, and I am 'nae chicken,' either politically or otherwise; but they remain truly senile, in their very dotage, if they are caught by any such chaff as that. After all the experiences of the last 40 years, can one of them believe that, under political conditions in Maryland, with no civil service law and a corrupt practices act administered by the ring itself, they would have the thinnest ghost of a chance against the ring's candidates at any sort of primaries, 'fair' or unfair,' 'legal or illegal?'

"Before the last Senatorial primaries a well-know gentlemen assured us very confidentially that white men and Democrats would not 'stand for' cheating other white men and Democrats; he had his lesson, and I hope that he and all like-minded with him have taken it to heart. A man may be buncoed once and become an object of sympathy; but if he be buncoed twice (and by the same old sharps with the same old flim-flam), he becomes an object of contempt. If men, white in the color of their skins and Democratic because, in Maryland, it pays to be so called, will 'stand for' stealing a white man's purse, if they 'stand for' stealing a black man's vote, they will 'stand for' stealing a white man's vote, and whether the sufferer from their thefts be a Republican at the polls or a Democrat in the primaries is the very least of their cares.

"I say those who devised the amendment intend and hope to rob constitutional voters of their legal rights, not only because they admit this as to black men, but because the test tendered all applicants for registration, outside of certain privileged classes, is, in very truth 'a mockery and delusion and a snare.

A State which at this day shall thus amend its Constitution will be discredited in the Union and condemned by enlightened public opinions throughout the world. The generous, broad-minded, kind-hearted statesman whom the people of the United States elected to the Presidency last November, voiced this general sentiment when he denounced our amendment as unconstitutional and unjust. He has shown, while a temporary resident of a Southern State, ample sympathy with Southern needs and interests and an earnest desire to see the South regain her political independence, and, with it, her normal influence in the counsels of the nation. Shall Maryland seize at this moment to revive decaying prejudices, to disturb national harmony, to reopen controversies which all good men would see forever closed? Shall she do all this merely to perpetuate the political dominion of a group of unscrupulous and self-seeking men, who gain power through fraud and use it to foster misgovernment?"

Mr. Philip Willett, one of the year-round residents of the Park, and a Chautauqua lecturer of rare ability, was in the city last Thursday afternoon when he made this office a brief visit on business. Mr. Willett, besides being a public speaker, is an attorney at law and an old newspaper man, having been engaged in the latter profession at Meadville, Pa, prior to coming to this section of the country.

Subscribe for the Republican.

MORE CONVENTIONS FOR MOUNTAIN LAKE PARK

That Resort Becoming Famous as a Convention Centre.

In recent years, through judicious advertising, and, to borrow an expression, "keeping everlastingly at it," the great natural advantages, coupled with the "at home" feeling pervading all who visit this mountain top, Mountain Lake Park promises to occupy an enviable position as a convention centre for the gathering of persons interested in the welfare of their fellow beings.

In addition to the convention of the State Teachers' Association to be held there next June, as published in this paper last Thursday, two other important gathering will occur, the dates for which have not yet been definitely fixed, but they will probably be held some time early in the season.

The most important meeting of the two above referred to affecting, as it does the good roads movement to two great states, will be the convention of delegates from Maryland and West Virginia called together jointly by the Governors of the respective states to meet, outline, and consider plans for the betterment of the public highways. At this meeting the Good Road Commission of Maryland will be present and a like Commission, to be appointed by the Governor of West Virginia before the adjournment of the Legislature of that State, will attend the convention. These two bodies will be augmented by the appointment of delegates from the different counties of the States, bringing the total number of people present well up into the hundreds.

The second convention will be the Epworth League Institute composed of delegates from the West Virginia, Pittsburg, Baltimore, Central Pennsylvania, Wilmington, New Jersey and Philadelphia Conferences of the Methodist Epsicopal church. From the time these annual meetings of delegates was instituted until the present year the entire delegation always meet at one point, but this year two Institutes will be held, one meeting at Ocean City, N. J., and one at Mountain Lake Park, the delegates-elect choosing the point where they are to attend. Indications are that the majority of these delegates will assemble at the Park. The number that will be present is a but a matter of speculation but will probably reach several hundred. The date for the institute, as above stated, has not been definitely determined.

Agreeable Friends.

Animals are such agreeable friends—they ask no questions, they pass no criticisms.—George Eliot.

DIXON & KELSO

DIXON & KELSO have purchased a large lot of

Timothy & Clover Seed

OF THE Very Best Grade.

We offer Clover at - $6.75 bu.
Timothy, - $1.75 to 2.15 "

Farmers who contemplate sending to Western dealers for their supply will do well to look our stock over before sending their money out of the county, as we are willing to take for our profits the freight charges from western points here, and by leaving your money in your home community you stand a good chance to get it returned to you for produce, hay, etc., which we are preparing to buy on a large scale. . . . . .

Yours to Please. DIXON & KELSO.

E. A. WEIMER.

SWEEPING REDUCTIONS

IN

CLOTHING

I find in going over my stock I have too much Clothing on hand—especially in the cheaper grades, and to move it out quickly I have decided to sell about

100 Suits for Men and Boys at Just One-Half the Regular Price;

about that many more at one-third off, and a lot more at one-fourth off regular prices. Also a lot of separate PANTS at reduced prices. Lot of OVERCOATS at half-price.

RAINCOATS one-fourth off.

It will pay you to buy now.

Yours Truly. E. A. WEIMER.

NEXT DOOR TO THE POSTOFFICE OAKLAND, MD

INTO THE PRIMITIVE

BY ROBERT AMES BENNET

ILLUSTRATIONS BY RAY WALTERS

COPYRIGHT 1908, BY A. C. McCLURG & CO.

CHAPTER I.—The story opens with the shipwreck of the steamer on which Miss Genevieve Leslie, an American heiress, Lord Winthrope, an Englishman, and Tom Blake, a brusque American, were passengers. The three were tossed upon an uninhabited island and were the only ones not drowned. Blake recovered from a drunken stupor.

CHAPTER II.—Blake, shunned on the boat, because of his roughness, became a hero as preservers of the helpless pair. The Englishman was suing for the hand of Miss Leslie. Blake started to swim back to the ship to recover what was left.

CHAPTER III.—Blake returned safely. Winthrope wasted his last match on a cigarette, for which he was scored by Blake. Their first meal was a dead fish.

CHAPTER IV.—The trio started a ten mile hike for higher land. Thirst attacked them. Blake was compelled to carry Miss Leslie on account of weariness. He taunted Winthrope.

CHAPTER V.—They entered the jungle. That night was passed roosting high in a tree.

CHAPTER VI.—The next morning they descended to the open again. All three constructed hats to shield themselves from the sun. They then feasted on cocoanuts, the only procurable food. Miss Leslie showed a liking for Blake, but detested his roughness.

CHAPTER VII.—Led by Blake they established a home in some cliffs. Blake found a fresh water spring.

CHAPTER VIII.—Miss Leslie faced an unpleasant situation. They planned their campaign.

CHAPTER IX.—Blake recovered his surveyor's magnifying glass, thus insuring fire. He started a jungle fire, killing a large leopard and smothering several cubs.

CHAPTER X.—In the leopard's cavern they built a small home. They gained the cliffs by burning the bottom of a tree until it fell against the heights.

CHAPTER XI.—The trio secured eggs from the cliffs. Miss Leslie's white skirt was decided upon as a signal.

CHAPTER XII.—Miss Leslie made a dress from the leopard skin. Blake's efforts to kill antelopes failed.

CHAPTER XIII.

The Mark of the Beast.

MORNING found Winthrope more irritable and peevish than ever. Though he had not been called on watch by Blake until long after midnight, he had soon fallen asleep at his post and permitted the fire to die out. Shortly before dawn, Blake was roused by a pack of jackals, snarling and quarreling over the half-dried seafowl. To charge upon the thieves and put them to flight with a few blows of his club took but a moment. Yet daylight showed more than half the drying frames empty.

Blake was staring glumly at them with his broad back to Winthrope, when Miss Leslie appeared. The sudden cessation of Winthrope's complaints brought his companion around on the instant. The girl stood before him, clad from neck to foot in her leopard-skin dress.

"Well, I'll be—dashed!" he exclaimed, and he stood staring at her open-mouthed.

"I fear it will be warm. Do you think it becoming?" she asked, flushing, and turning as though to show the fit of the costume.

"Do I?" he echoed. "Miss Jenny, you're a peach!"

"Thank you," she said. "And here is the skirt. I have ripped it open. You see, it will make a fine flag."

"If it's put up. Seems a pity, though, to do that, when we're getting on so fine. What do you say to leaving it down, and starting a little colony of our own?"

Miss Leslie raised the skirt in her outstretched hands. Behind it her face became white as the cloth.

"Well?" demanded Blake soberly, though his eyes were twinkling.

"You forget the fever," she retorted mockingly, and Blake failed to catch the quaver beneath the light remark.

"Say, you've got me there!" he admitted. "Just pass over your flag, and scrape up some grub. I'll be breaking out a big bamboo. There are plenty of holes and loose stones on the cliff. We'll have the signal up before noon."

Miss Leslie murmured her thanks, and immediately set about the preparation of breakfast.

When Blake had the bamboo ready, with one edge of the broad piece of white duck lashed to it with catgut as high up as the tapering staff would bear, he called upon Winthrope to accompany him.

"You can go, too, Miss Jenny," he added. "You haven't been on the cliff yet, and you ought to celebrate the occasion."

"No, thank you," replied the girl. "I'm still unprepared to climb precipices, even though my costume is that of a savage."

"Savage? Great Scott! that leopard dress would win out against any set of Russian furs a-going, and I've heard they're considered all kinds of dog. Come on. I can swing you into the branches, and it's easy from there up."

"You will excuse me, please."

"Yes, you can go alone," interposed Winthrope. "I am indisposed this morning, and, what is more, I have had enough of your dictation."

"You have, have you?" growled Blake, his patience suddenly come to an end. "Well, let me tell you, Miss Leslie is a lady, and if she don't want to go, that settles it. But as for you, you'll go, if I have to kick you every step."

Winthrope cringed back, and broke into a childish whine. "Don't—don't do it, Blake— Oh, I say, Miss Genevieve, how can you stand by and see him abuse me like this?"

Blake was grinning as he turned to Miss Leslie. Her face was flushed and downcast with humiliation for her friend. It seemed incredible that a man of his breeding should betray such weakness. A quick change came over Blake's face.

"Look here," he muttered, "I guess I'm enough of a sport to know something about fair play. Win's coming down with the fever, and's no more to blame for doing the baby act than he'll be when he gets the delirium, and gabbles."

"I will thank you to attend to your own affairs," said Winthrope.

"You're entirely welcome. It's what I'm doing— Do you understand, Miss Jenny?"

"Indeed, yes; and I wish to thank you. I have noticed how patient you have been—"

"Pardon me, Miss Leslie," rasped Winthrope. "Can you not see that for a fellow of this class to talk of fair play and patience is the height of impertinence? In England, now, such insufferable impudence—"

"That'll do," broke in Blake. "It's time for us to trot along."

"But, Mr. Blake, if he is ill—"

"Just the reason why he should keep moving. No more of your gab, Win! Give your jaw a lay-off, and try wiggling your legs instead."

Winthrope turned away, crimson with indignation. Blake paused only for a parting word with Miss Leslie. "If you want something to do, Miss Jenny, try making yourself a pair of moccasins out of the scraps of skin. You can't stay in this gully all the time. You've got to tramp around some, and those slippers must be about done for."

"They are still serviceable. Yet if you think—"

"You'll need good tough moccasins soon enough. Singe off the hair, and make soles of the thicker pieces. If you do a fair job, maybe I'll employ you as my cobbler, soon as I get the hide off one of those skittish antelope."

Miss Leslie nodded and smiled in response to his jesting tone. But as he swung away after Winthrope, she stood for some time wondering at herself. A few days since she knew she would have taken Blake's remark as an insult. Now she was puzzled to find herself rather pleased that he should so note her ability to be of service.

When she roused herself, and began singeing the hair from the odds and ends of leopard skin, she discovered a new sensation to add to her list of unpleasant experiences. But she did not pause until the last patch of hair crisped close to the half-cured surface of the hide. Fetching the penknife and her thorn and catgut from the baobab, she gathered the pieces of skin together, and walked along the cleft to the ladder-tree. There had been time enough for Blake and Winthrope to set up the signal, and she was curious to see how it looked.

She paused at the foot of the tree, and gazed up to where the withered crown lay crushed against the edge of the cliff. The height of the rocky wall made her hesitate; yet the men, in passing up and down, had so cleared away the twigs and leaves and broken the branches on the upper side of the trunk, that it offered a means of ascent far from difficult even for a young lady.

The one difficulty was to reach the lower branches. She could hardly touch them with her finger-tips. But her barbaric costume must have inspired her. She listened for a moment, and hearing no sound to indicate the return of the men, clasped the upper side of the trunk with her hands and knees, and made an energetic attempt to climb. The posture was far from dignified, but the girl's eyes sparkled with satisfaction as she found herself slowly mounting.

When, flushed and breathless, she gained a foothold among the branches, she looked down at the ground, and permitted herself a merry little giggle such as she had not indulged in since leaving boarding-school. She had actually climbed a tree! She would show Mr. Blake that she was not so helpless as he fancied.

At the thought, she clambered on up, finding that the branches made convenient steps. She did not look back, and the screen of treetops beneath saved her from any sense of giddiness. As her head came above the level of the cliff, she peered through the foliage, and saw the signal-flag far over near the end of the headland. The big piece of white duck stood out bravely against the blue sky, all the more conspicuous for the flocks of frightened seafowl which wheeled above and around it.

Surprised that she did not see the men, Miss Leslie started to draw herself up over the cliff edge. She heard Winthrope's voice a few yards away to her left. A sudden realization that the Englishman might consider her exploit ill-bred caused her to sink back out of sight.

She was hesitating whether to descend or to climb on up, when Winthrope's peevish whine was cut short by a loud and angry retort from Blake. Every word came to the girl's ears with the force of a blow.

"You do, do you? Well, I'd like to know where in hell you come in. She's not your sister, nor your mother, nor your aunt, and if she's your sweetheart, you've both been damned close-mouthed over it."

There was an irritable, rasping murmur from Winthrope, and again came Blake's loud retort. "Look here, young man, don't you forget you called me a cad once before. I can stand a good deal from a sick man; but I'll give it to you straight, you'd better cut that out. Call me a brute or a savage, if that'll let off your steam; but, understand, I'm none of your English kinds."

Again Winthrope spoke, this time in a fretful whine.

Blake replied with less anger: "That's so; and I'm going to show you that I'm the real thing when it comes to being a sport. Give you my word, I'll make no move till you're through the fever and on your legs again. What I'll do then depends on my own sweet will, and don't you forget it. I'm not after her fortune. It's the lady herself that takes my fancy. Remember what I said to you when you called me a cad the other time. You had your turn aboard ship. Now I can do as I please; and that's what I'm going to do, if I have to kick you over the cliff end first, to shut off your pesky interference."

The girl crouched back into the withered foliage, dazed with terror. Again she heard Blake speak. He had dropped into a bitter sneer.

"No chance? It's no nerve, you mean. You could brain me, easy enough, any night—just walk up with a club when I'm asleep. Trouble is, you're like most other under dogs—'fraid that if you licked your boss, there'd be no soup bones. So I guess I'm slated to stay boss of this colony—grand Poo Bah and Mikado, all in one. Understand? You mind your own business, and don't go to interfering with me any more! . . . Now, if you've stared enough at the lady's skirt—"

The threat of discovery stung the girl to instant action. With almost frantic haste, she scrambled down to the lower branches, and sprang to the ground. She had never ventured such a leap even in childhood. She struck lightly but without proper balance, and pitched over sideways. Her hands chanced to alight upon the remnants of leopard skin. Great as was her fear, she stopped to gather all together in the edge of her skirt before darting up the cleft.

At the baobab she turned and gazed back along the cliff edge. Before she had time to draw a second breath, she caught a glimpse of Blake's palm-leaf hat, near the crown of the ladder tree.

"O-o-h!—he didn't see me!" she murmured. Her frantic strength vanished, and a deathly sickness came upon her. She felt herself going, and sought to kneel to ease the fall.

She was roused from the swoon by Blake's resonant shout: "Hey, Miss Jenny! where are you? We've got your laundry on the pole in fine shape!"

The girl's flaccid limbs grew tense, and her body quivered with a shudder of dread and loathing. Yet she set her little white teeth, and forced herself to rise and go out to face the men. Both met her look with a blank stare of consternation.

"What is it, Miss Genevieve?" cried Winthrope. "You're white as chalk!"

"It's the fever!" growled Blake. "She's in the cold stage. Get a pot on. We'll—"

"No, no; it's not that! It's only—I've been frightened!"

"Frightened?"

"By a—a dreadful beast!"

"Beast!" repeated Blake, and his pale eyes flashed as he sprang across to where his bow and arrows and his club leaned against the baobab. "I'll have no beasts nosing around my dooryard! Must be that skulking lion I heard last night. I'll show him!" He caught up his weapons and stalked off down the cleft.

"By Jove!" exclaimed Winthrope; "the man really must be mad. Call him back, Miss Genevieve. If anything should happen to him—"

"If only there might!" gasped the girl.

"Why, what do you mean?"

She burst into a hysterical laugh. "Oh! oh! it's such a joke—such a joke! At least he's not a hyena—oh, no, a brave beast! Hear him shout! And he actually thinks it's a lion! But it isn't—it's himself! Oh, dear! oh, dear! what shall I do?"

"Miss Genevieve, what do you mean? Be calm, pray, be calm!"

"Calm!—when I heard what he said? Yes; I heard every word! In the top of the tree—"

"In the tree? Heavens! Miss—er—Miss Genevieve!" stammered Winthrope, his face paling. "Did you—did you hear all?"

"Everything—everything he said! What shall I do? I am so frightened! What shall I do?"

"Everything he said?" echoed Winthrope.

"You spoke too low for me to hear; but I'm sure you faced him like a gentleman—I must believe it of you—"

Winthrope drew in a deep breath. "Ah, yes; I did, Miss Genevieve—I assure you. The beast! Yet you see the plight I am in. It is a nasty muddle—indeed it is! But what can I do? He is strong as a gorilla. Really, there is only one way—no doubt you heard him taunt me over it. I assure you I should not be afraid—but it would be so horrid—so cold-blooded. As a gentleman, you know—"

"No; it is not that!" broke in the girl. "He is right. Neither of us has the courage—even when he is asleep."

"My dear Miss Genevieve, this beast instinct to kill—"

"Yes; but think of him. If he is a beast, he is at least a brave one. While we—we haven't the courage of rabbits. I thought you called yourself an English gentleman. Are you going to stand by, and not lift a finger?"

"Really, now, Miss Genevieve, to murder a man—"

"Self-defense is not a crime—self-preservation. If you have a spark of manhood—"

"My dear—"

"For Heaven's sake, if you can't do anything, at least keep still! Oh, I'm sure I shall go mad! If only I had been drowned!"

"Ah, yes, to be sure. But really now, what you ask is a good deal for a man to risk. The fellow might wake up and murder me! Should I take the risk, might I—er—expect some manifestation of your gratitude, Miss Genevieve?"

"Of course! of course! I should always—"

"I—ah—refer to the—the—bestowal of your hand."

"My hand? I— Would you bargain for my esteem? I thought you a gentleman!"

"To be sure—to be sure! Who says I am not? But all is fair in love and war, you know. Your choice is quite free. I take it, you will not consider his—er—proposals. But if you do not wish my aid, you have another way of escape—that is—at least other women have done it."

"Now, Don't Get Mad. Worst Thing in the World for Malaria."

The girl gazed at him, her eyes dilating with horror as she realized his meaning.

"No, no; not that!" she gasped. "I want to live—I've a right to live! Why, I'm only just 22—I—"

"Hush!" cautioned Winthrope. "He's coming back. Be calm! There will be time until I get over this vile malaria. It may be that he himself will have the fever."

"He will not have the fever," replied the girl, in a hopeless tone, and she leaned back listlessly against the baobab, as Blake swung himself up frowning and sullen, and flung his weapons from him.

"Bah!" he grumbled. "I told you that brute was a sneak. I've chased clean down to the pool and into the open, and not a smell of him. Must have hiked off into the tall grass the minute he heard me."

"If only he had gone off for good!" murmured Miss Leslie.

"Maybe he has; though you never can count on a sneak. Even you might be able to shoo him off next time; but, like as not, he'd come along when we were all out calling, and clean out our commissary. Guess I'll set to and run up a barricade down there where the gully is narrowest. There're shoals of dead thorn-brush to the right of the pool."

"Ah, yes; I fancy the vultures will be so vexed when they find your hedge in the way," remarked Winthrope.

"My! how smart we're getting!" retorted Blake. "Don't worry, though. We'll stow the stuff in Miss Jenny's boudoir, and I guess the birdies'll be polite enough to keep out."

"I must say, Blake, I do not see why you should wish to drag us away from here."

"There's lots of things you don't see, Win, my b'y—jokes, for instance. But what could you expect?—you're English. Now, don't get mad. Worst thing in the world for malaria."

"One would fancy you could see that I am not angry. I've a splitting headache, and my back hurts. I am ill."

Blake looked him over critically, and nodded. "That's no lie, old man. You're entitled to a hospital check all right. Miss Jenny, we'll appoint you chief nurse. Make him comfortable as you can, and give him hot broth whenever he'll take it. You can do your sewing on the side. Whenever you need help, call on me. I'm going to begin that barricade."

TO BE CONTINUED.

Analysis of Good Temper.

The good temper is born in natures of low vitality, iron nerves and thick skin. These are insensitive to change of moral atmosphere, and what would wound another soul mortally barely inflicts a scratch on them. The rest of their emotions are usually on a par with the temper—placid, imperturbable and sluggish. Those incapable of the passion of anger must be incapable of any other great passion.—Exchange.

The Trial of Peter and John

Sunday School Lesson for Jan. 31, 1909

Specially Arranged for This Paper

LESSON TEXT.—Acts 4:5-20. Memory verses 11, 12.

GOLDEN TEXT.—They were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and they spake the word of God with boldness.

TIME.—The same afternoon as the last lesson, and the following morning. A few weeks or months, possibly a year or more after Pentecost.

PLACES.—Solomon's porch in the temple court; a prison; the hall of the sanhedrim near the temple; a private room in the city.

Comment and Suggestive Thought.

The miracle of healing the well known lame beggar; Peter's sermon proclaiming Jesus as the expected Messiah, and charging the Jews, especially their rulers, with the crime of murdering him, but calling on them to repent and be saved; and the fact that thousands became the disciples of Jesus and joined the new, enthusiastic community, all this aroused the leaders to put a stop to this religion which was "turning the world upside down."

(1) The Jewish authorities found that the new religious movement was the "installation of a new station for the distribution of currents of influential opinion," and they determined to cut the wires, and stop the flow of the current; but the only results were a shock to themselves, and more power and more lights. (2) "Fools! they thought if they could but wring the neck of the crowing cock it would never be day."

While these 5,000 were all Jews, they were something more; a new stamp was on them (Suffer), a new perfume, a new atmosphere was around them, a new light shone in their characters. They became new forces in the world. There was some such change in them as transformed Peter and John, the fishermen, into apostles who changed the face of the world.

The Comfort of the Imprisoned Apostles.—"The speakers went to prison; their words took wings, and flew to the uttermost parts of the earth. Here is a beautiful marvel. What vitality is in a spoken word! No wonder that men like Joubert and Emerson toil like slaves to put a thought into perfect language! Who would not be content to go to prison, or to death, if he could leave something like the Twenty-third Psalm or the Beatitudes, or the thirteenth chapter of 1 Corinthians, as his legacy to the world? Behind those prison bars the apostles comforted themselves by remembering that they had uttered words which would not return to Jesus Christ void, but would accomplish the work whereunto he had sent them."—Charles Frederic Goss.

The hall of the sanhedrim, according to both the latest great cyclopedias, was within the temple court. The sanhedrim sat in a semi-circle, with the president in the center, while opposite were three benches for the scholars of the sanhedrists, who thus practically learned law.

V. 8. "Then Peter, filled with the Holy Ghost." In fulfillment of Christ's promise (Matt. 10:19, 20). Thus Peter was given courage to speak the truth, and guided to the choice of the right things to say, and the best way of saying them. This was his first experience in speaking before this august assembly, and he, an unlearned fisherman, may well have quailed before such a tribunal with such power over his fortunes, even while he rejoiced at the opportunity to preach the Gospel to them. "Peter, 'filled with the Holy Ghost,' is a thousand Peters: Peter multiplied by the very Deity. Peter—a straw blown away by the mocking wind, by himself. But Peter 'filled with the Holy Ghost' was a man of war, a mighty captain, a soldier not to be put down; clothed with heavenly panoply, eloquent with heaven's thunder, gracious with heaven's love." "Ye rulers . . . and elders." Peter is respectful, but these very titles imply that they should be leaders in every good work, and favor all that would help the people.

V. 11. "This is the stone which was set at nought of you builders." Peter applies to the sanhedrim the Psalm (118:22), which he had heard the Master use to a deputation from this same sanhedrim. This symbolic imagery "seems to have been drawn from one of the stones, quarried, hewn, and marked, away from the site of the temple, which the builders, ignorant of the head architect's plans, or finding on it no mark, had put on one side as having no place in the building, but which was found afterward to be that on which the completeness of the structure depended, "the head of the corner"—on which, as the chief corner's one, the two walls met and were bonded together."—Plumptre.

V. 23. On their return "to their own company," they all joined in a hymn of praise, quoting Psa. 146:6 and Psa. 2:1, 2, perhaps singing the whole of these psalms. Past deliverances of God's people gave assurance of triumph now.

Friendly Enemies.—In a sermon by Rev. W. C. Pigott in the London Sunday School Chronicle, on "Friendly Enemies," I find these words: "Sorrow, pain, trial, are real enemies of man, and the perfect life which he hopes for cannot come till these are banished; but often those things in life which seem most evidently hostile to our peace may be our protection against greater evils."

We learn not only obedience, we learn joy itself through the things which we suffer, and as a modern writer has said, the fear of the Lord is the beginning of pleasure.

AROUND THE HOUSE

SOME IDEAS WORTH A LITTLE CONSIDERATION.

Easy Method of Keeping Closet Floors Clear of Accumulation of Dirt—Providing Individual Towels for the Family.

Closet Floors—Even fine housekeepers have difficulty in keeping closet floors clear of accumulation of some kind. This is easily done. Provide for every closet and hang nearest to the door a sensible, convenient and wide-mouthed laundry bag. Then watch out for a small, good-shaped wooden box with cover. Tack on a pair of hinges made of strips of leather from an old shoe; tack a tab of leather on to the front edge to lift the cover by and you have a convenient place to hold all the old shoes. A ten-cent can of paint and a ten-cent brush will give the box one coat. New shoes should be on shoe-trees and stand in rows on the top shelf. Every closet should be free from clothes and ready for a Friday sweeping every day in the week. There is just one thing that it is well to leave on the floor, and this is a folded piece of woolen blanket or cloth. Many have found this to be the cheapest insurance against moths. It attracts them, traps them and saves the clothing. It should not be shaken out every week.

Towels—One mother of a large family, although she had provided a tape running lengthwise of the hem for each and every towel, and has two hooks for each member of the family with his or her name neatly printed and pasted above, yet there was occasional friction as to the questionable ownership of a towel. Without any comment the mother neatly posted, where all could read, a lettered line, saying:

HONOR IN TOWELS IS NOT TO BE DESPISED.

Nothing further was said and all friction has ceased.

Old or Rancid Butter—Any amount of old butter can be restored by pouring over it boiling water in proportion of one gallon of water to the pound of butter. Let the gallon of water boil down to a quart. Pour both water and butter into a pan of ice-cold water, and when all the butter has hardened, skim it out, work out the water, salt to taste and it is ready to either eat or be used for cooking.

Marking Laundry—Collars and cuffs go unmarked to the laundry, are missent, lost and the ownership questioned because one does not get around to buy and keep in a convenient place a new pen and a bottle of indelible ink. Now, the initials or full name can readily be lettered just above the back buttonhole in common, ordinary ink, with the regular writing pen. It stays, does not run and is highly satisfactory. One way of getting the best of procrastination and at the same time always be sure of having your own collars. Mark the cuffs in the exact middle and the wrong side.

French Fried Steak.

Take a nice cut of round steak one inch thick, cut in pieces any size desired; take a knife and cross bar it on both sides; salt, pepper and flour; fry to a nice brown, drain most all the fat out of your pan and put your meat back in the pan so it will not rest flat on the bottom. Then almost cover with boiling water, cover tight and let boil slowly until tender. Always replenish with boiling water, and when done have enough water on meat so you will have a nice brown gravy. You may add onions chopped fine if desired.

Potato Soup.

Pare and cut into dice three potatoes, cover with water, add a piece of butter and a little onion if liked, and boil until done. Then add a quart of sweet milk. While this heats make a dough by rubbing one tablespoonful of lard into a small cup of flour with a half teaspoonful baking powder in it; add milk to make a stiff dough, roll thin, cut into strips or small squares, drop in when milk comes to a boil, cover and boil ten minutes, season with pepper, salt and a little finely chopped parsley or thyme.

Pumpkin Marmalade.

Take ripe yellow pumpkins, pare and cut them in large pieces; take out the seeds, then weigh, and to each pound of pumpkin take a pound of sugar and an orange or lemon. Grate the pieces of pumpkin on a coarse grater and put in kettle with sugar and juice and grated rind of the lemon. Let it boil slowly, stirring often, until it forms a thick, smooth, marmalade. Put it in glasses and when cold cover with a paper in alcohol and a paper over that again.

Jumbel-i.

It is a favorite dish in the sou Take a teacup of bacon cut into di one large onion sliced, fry together until brown; then add one can of tomatoes and a cup of rice; salt, pepper and a little water; cover and cook slowly until rice is done. The oftener you warm over the better it gets.

Nut Grape Jelly.

Dissolve one-half package of gelatin in half a cup of water, pour same into one pint of boiling grape juice sweetened to taste. When half congealed stir in five cents' worth of shelled walnuts, then pour in mold and set in cool place till fully congealed. Serve with whipped cream.

THE REPUBLICAN
Job Printing Department

WITHIN the past year the increased made upon the Job Printing Department of The Republican necessitated many improvements, and to meet the requirements of our rapidly increasing business an addition of considerable proportions to our present building is in contemplation; new type and improved machinery must be purchased—but in the meantime all orders will be executed in a most satisfactory manner.

The products of our Job Printery are all models in the class—our customers are numerous and well satisfied, and wnen ordering

Statements, Vouchers,
Envelopes, Cards,
Sale Bills, Posters,
Bank Forms, Billheads,
Letterheads, Tags,
Programs, Folders,

and

Letter Press Printing of all Kinds

They are confident that the work will be Satisfactory in every particular---in WORKMANSHIP, PRICE and PAPER.

WE MAKE A SPECIALTY OF PRINTING

Lumber AND Coal Companies' Forms
Bank Stationery, Hotel Prospectus,
Lodge and Society Laws,
Reports, Etc.

It will cost you nothing to submit your Printing to us. Estimates will be cheerfully furnished you free. It must be borne in mind, however, that we do not do "cheap" printing, but we do Good Printing which has a par value of one hundred cents for every dollar invested in the product of THE REPUBLICAN PRINTERY.

THE REPUBLICAN
Job Printing Departm't
OAKI AND, MARYLAND.

The Y Ranch Short Count

By FRANK H. SWEET.

Copyright, 1908, by Frank H. Sweet.

THE Y ranch outfit was rounding up, with the cowboys scattered over twenty miles of territory hunting stray bunches. It had been a good season, with plenty of water and grass, and Sam Bell, the owner, was confident of passing the 10,000 mark, the stockman's ambition.

But as the territory narrowed and the truant bunches were hurried in under the eyes of the counters and added to the main herds the estimate, conservative as it had seemed, was apparently much too high. When all were in the count was still considerably under 9,000.

"There's a gate down somewhere," said Bell to the foreman emphatically. "We haven't made the increase we did last year, when the season was bad. Are you sure there weren't any strays left in some out of the way coulees or sink holes?"

"Oh, there may be a few scattering ones here and there, but a thousand! Good land! Where'd they hide themselves?"

"That's so." Bell's gaze swept impatiently across the sea of tossing, clashing horns, and a hand dropped involuntarily to his belt. His thoughts had flown to the same solution as the foreman's. One-half of the count, 5,000, he had intended to send to market and then spend the winter in Europe, his first relaxation in ten years of ranching.

ON ACROSS THE PLAIN HE SWEPT.

"What's your idea?" he snapped.

The foreman made a significant motion of lifting, then swung his arm toward the foothills.

"There's no hiding place this side o' the bigger hills and ravines," he said, "an' that number o' cattle wouldn't stray so far from home without inducement. Then, ag'in, no cattle lifter would dare to steer straight for market with our brand showin' plain."

"Just what I think. Now, boys," glancing about at such of the cowboys as were in hearing and his voice growing quick and decisive, "we'll run this thing into the ground right here and now. Just enough of you remain to keep these cattle in the neighborhood and the rest scatter round to all the surrounding ranches and find out who have lost cattle. Then we'll organize a quick hunt of recapture and extermination. Who has the V ranch now, forty miles to the north, toward the foothills?"

One of the cowboys guffawed.

"Pitty little girlie lost away from mamma," he lisped. "Looks jest like a picter an' ain't never rode a hoss nor heered 'bout original sin. Sure"—at the frown on his employer's face—"that's jest as I pumped it from her head man an' all round man. I've met him two or three times while roundin' cattle up that a-way, an' he's a whole Sunday school book in colors an' big print. He ain't never swore nor smoked nor stole nor drinked nor anything like that, an' "—

"About the girl and the ranch?" interrupted Bell.

"Jest what I'm a-tellin'," imperturbably. "The story's like this: 'My friend the German's big as any six an' a half foot man could be an' as innercent as any two foot boy ought to be, an' he knows all about ranchin', for he was raised on a down east farm, where they allers keep a cow an' some pigs an' hens an' gener'ly have a boss for plowin' an' sich an' drivin' to meetin', an' he's the only man folk on the V ranch. An' the second chapter goes on to say that when old Peebles was gored last spring the only heiress an' legatee an' kin was this same picter girl, who was studyin' books in a village high school. But she was jest as plucky 's innercent, an' 'stead o' sellin' she come straight on to run the ranch herself an' brung this German, who 'greed to look out for everything for one-third the profits. He told me all this himself, jest like a baby would.'"

"And these two are running the V ranch by themselves," said Bell incredulously. "Why, a veteran cowboy couldn't look after a herd of any decent size, such as I suppose old Peebles owned. Did he tell you their number?"

"Don't guess he knows," grinning. "His great drawback is weak head. He talks big as a 10,000 man—'bout what they've done an' are doin' an' are goin' to do an' 'bout their roundups an' brandin's an' sich. But one time when I pinned him down to real numbers he flung his shoulders back an' looked proud as a peacock an' said he guessed as much as seventy an' spoke like 't was printed in big letters. Ye see, at home he'd never been used to but one.

"Now, my idee's this," looking about the group which had closed in to listen. "Old Peebles himself wa'n't much of a cattle man an' got more an' more shiftless 'fore he was gored. He never had only 500 or 600 head, I guess, an' half these slipped away or died 'fore his end come. Then between the gorin' an' the girl reachin' there the herd must 'a' thinned consider'ble. I wouldn't wonder if the weak herd was reasonably close to the mark, though mebbe the count 'll run to a hundred or more. One man could look after that many in any place an' up where they are could care for 'most any number. The V ranch is jest a long valley that ends in a p'int, with the only entrance this way, an' it has the best grazin' I know. Almost any size herd could feed there, an' a man at this end could look out for 'em all. If 't wa'n't for that the two innocents couldn't 'a' herded a dozen a week without a stampede. That valley's jest honey an' peaches for the little girlie."

"It's one of the most exposed ranches in the whole country," declared Bell, with considerable uneasiness in his voice. "If there are cattle stealers in the mountains, as seems a sure thing now, the V ranch is right at their hands, and, from what you say about the owners, there wouldn't be much opposition. I question if even now any cattle are left on the ranch. What'd you say the girl's name was?"

"Didn't say. But I guess it spells out Katherine, for the man spoke of her as Mees Kat'in', though likely her schoolgirlie name is Kitty. Shall I ride out that away?"

"No; I'll go myself. It's time I was showing neighborliness. Besides, I don't mind confessing I'm a little anxious. The rest of you visit all the ranches within thirty or forty miles and invite every man who has lost cattle to join in the hunt. I will cover the territory in my direction."

There were two ranches on the way out, and these he visited. But the owners seemed incredulous as to his loss. The year had been the most prosperous in their experience, they declared, and neither of them had missed a hoof. And yet their cattle had strayed in all directions, many even penetrating into the foothills.

On across the plain with long, easy undulations he swept, making rapid progress, but so easily as to seem in no hurry, himself and horse as one, a machine for speed.

The V ranch owner was swinging in a hammock under one of the trees that were scattered about the dugout. Old Peebles had been shiftless financially and industrially, but he had been an artist for beauty and comfort. Other ranchers had raised cattle; he had grown trees and arranged hammocks and seats under them and boxes for birds' nests in them. Within the dugout he had more easy lounging places and entrances for birds and a profusion of books. And while he had read and dreamed and slept the herd had scattered and decreased.

To this place had come the girl from the east, young in years, but with the dreaminess of centuries in her blood. And she had found the place good.

She had scarcely thought of loneliness or visitors, but now, as she saw the last one sweep into her valley and straight on to the dugout, she found that interest of the outside world surpassed that of the book in her hand, and she rose and stood awaiting his approach with a flush of anticipation on her face.

She was more than merely pretty, and the consciousness of it thrilled Sam Bell even before he swung himself from his horse and stood before her with doffed hat. Since his college days he had seen little of women, but this one struck him as being more suited to a drawing room than to a dugout. He had thought to pay his compliments and state his errand while holding to his bridle reins, but before a half dozen words were spoken he made a turn with the reins about a limb and accepted the camp chair beside her hammock, which she hospitably indicated. Then he pushed the chair aside and sprawled at full length upon the ground, which custom had made a more natural and comfortable position.

"So you don't think you've lost any cattle?" he asked after some minutes' conversation. "Are you sure?"

"No, for I never found out how many I own," she answered. "They keep coming in, sometimes singly and sometimes in greater flocks. It keeps poor Hans busy holding tally sticks. You see, my uncle was very, very careless in business, and I suppose his cattle strayed into all the wild places in the mountains. His agent wrote me he didn't know how many he owned, as they were never counted. Hans and I are now rounding them in, I think you call it."

"I should think you would find it rather difficult, only two of you," gravely.

"No; it isn't any trouble at all. I remember our cow at home used to come up to the barn every night. I suppose it's a sort of cattle nature. Of course some of these have been off a long time—five or six months very likely—and perhaps it might seem a little odd they should come home. You see, it's what we call animal instinct. The poor cattle have discovered in some way that people are living here now and that they'll be cared for. So they're coming home. Don't you think the idea is very beautiful?"

"Yes, indeed," he assented earnestly. But he was looking into her eyes and watching the changes of expression on her animated face. And he was already congratulating himself that his ranch was only thirty miles away and that the two intervening ones were owned by family men. He would be more neighborly in the future. A girl like this ought not to be very much by herself in such an exposed place.

"Hans is a very competent man," he said.

"Yes, indeed. He does everything nearly. The branding came hardest to him at first, but he is getting accustomed to it now, as he has done so much. He is out branding a new lot now. I always stay near the house when he does that, it seems so cruel. But it's necessary, I suppose."

"Yes, it's necessary. But I don't quite understand. I thought your uncle's cattle were already branded."

"So they were—in his way. But you've heard how careless he was. Even his branding is—is—well, shiftless. Why, some of them have one of the lines dropping nearly half an inch below the other. Just think of it!" flushing with something very like shame. "I told Hans all the country would be laughing at us, and he's made a new branding iron, larger than the other, of course, to cover the extra length of that line. All our new branding looks neat and regular now, and—but won't you come and look at it?" rising suddenly from the hammock and looking at him shyly. "I'm so new to it all, and I want to learn. Please tell me all you can. I hope you'll come over real often now. I didn't suppose I was a bit lonesome, but just talking with some one from outside shows me I am."

Bell rose almost dizzily, so great was the sudden agitation which sent the blood rushing to his face.

But when they came to the narrow pen into which Hans drove the cattle for branding the color left his face as suddenly as it had come, and in its place was an expression which carried his gaze swiftly from the cattle to the girl and then to Hans. But the girl looked at him trustingly and Hans with stolid simplicity.

"That animal instinct for coming home has been a lot of assistance to you in rounding up the cattle," he could not forbear saying.

"It certainly has," the girl agreed, "for Hans wouldn't even have had to leave the valley but for driving other ranchers' cattle home. He laughs at me, though, and says the fine grass in the valley is the instinct that draws the cattle here. I suppose that does help some, but—ugh!" as Hans applied the white hot iron to another flank and the odor of burning flesh filled the air. "It's horrid, cruel! Let's go away from here soon as we can." Then as they walked back toward the hammock: "What is your brand and how many head do you own? That's the proper question out here on the plains, I believe. And of course we ranchers ought to know each other's mark. I've learned Bergmann's and Olson's already. And, oh, yes, I've got about 2,000 head branded now. Poor Hans doesn't know figures, so I have to keep count."

WHEN THEY CAME TO THE PEN THE COLOR LEFT HIS FACE.

Bell did not hesitate, and he had given up all thought of going to Europe.

"My count is between 8,000 and 9,000," he answered, "and my brand"—he took an envelope from his pocket and made on it a Y with a very long tail, so long that he scarcely recognized it himself—"is something like this. Now please tell me something about your life in the east."

When he reached home it was late in the night, but the foreman and several of the cowboys were awaiting him. They had brought no one back with them, for no one but themselves had lost cattle. Bell listened gravely.

"Maybe a few of our cattle strayed off into the mountains," he said when all had given in their reports, "but the rest must be set down as a miscount. Now we'll turn in."

THE REPUBLICAN

BENJ. H. SINCELL, EDITOR.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 28, 1909.

FARMERS' INSTITUTES. ARE THEY WORTH WHILE.

The above question was asked and answered by one of our eastern Maryland exchanges last week in the following language:

The department of Farmers Institutes, of the Maryland Agricultural Colleges is coming in for a good share of quiet discussion and there are many good farmers who are not enthusiastic over the plan. In general it is regarded as highly advantagous to hear well-informed speakers discuss matters pertaining to agriculture but there is a good deal of indifference and many believe it is due to either inadequate provision for the proper expenses incident to these meetings or that the community is approached in the wrong way. A cursory reading of the announcement of the meetings proposed conveys the idea that the Institutes are a great boom to the farmers, but if he does not recognize in advance and show his interest by providing a part of the expenses for hall rent, livery, dinner, etc., the Institute will not tarry at his town but will go to more appreciative neighborhoods. A really good thing may be greatly handicapped by going about in the wrong way and thereby arouse resentment. We hold the view that Institutes for the discussion of live subjects of interest to farmers can be productive of much good but the farmers must be interested and if they are not, either the meetings are not organized along practical lines or the work is not worth while. To test the matter the State should provide adequate funds for holding general meetings in every county in the State regardless of any local demand; these meetings should be well advertised in advance and if there is a field of usefulness it will be shown, and if the farmers are not interested, the Institute work should be discontinued. It is a fact that in some sections of the State the Institutes are well attended but in many others the faces of some of the most successful farmers are conspicuous by their absence.

E. H. Warner To Run Again.

Brainard H. Warner, of Kensington, has announced his intention of seeking the Republican Congressional nomination in this district, to succeed Col. Geo. A. Pearre, and his friends have already begun activities in his behalf. Mr. Warner contested for the honor last summer and succeeded in carrying Montgomery county in the primaries against Colonel Pearre. He will this time have to contest with Mr. Thomas C. Noyes, of Sligo, for the control of the county's delegation to the nominating convention.

As a preliminary to the Congressional contest, Mr. Warner will seek this spring or summer to have elected a county organization favorable to his Congressional aspirations, and will back his son, Brainard H. Warner, Jr., for county chairman. Willis P. Burdette, a member of the State Central Committee for the county and who held the position of county chairman two terms, will oppose young Mr. Warner.

Marriage Licenses.

The following named persons have been granted licenses to marry since last Wednesday by Clerk of the Court Tower:

George Lester Harbert and Fannie Earle Michael, both of Clarksburg, W. Va.

Lawrence Moffatt and Zella Knight, both of West Union, W. Va.

Georg Frank Willard and Edna Flossie Gidley, both of Morgantown, W. Va.

Adolph Michael Luck and Carrie E. Bickel, both of Wilson, Md.

Leslie Burgett Allman, of Buckhannon, W. Va., and Lena Brane, of Newlon, W. Va.

Patrick Thomas Mullen and Alice Evans, both of Monongah, W. Va.

Joseph Anthony Holobeck and Edith Mash, both of Monongah, W. Va.

Milton O. Friend and Icie Friend, both of Friendsville.

Fred William Shevel and Clara Florence Becket, both of Cove.

Simon Clinton Morgan, of Farmington, W. Va., and Nellie Miller, of Fairmont, W. Va.

Teachers' Institute for Selbysport.

The following program has been prepared under the direction of Garrett County Teachers' Association for a local teachers' institute to be held at Selbysport on Saturday, February 6th, 1909, in the school building at that town.

Address of welcome, N. R. Selby; response, L. F. Green. The subjects following will be discussed: Tardiness and Co-Operation; Arithmetic, including the mental branches; English and Literature, Orthography, in which all teachers present will be expected to participate. A literary program will be rendered by the school on Friday evening preceding the institute which will be followed by an address to be delivered by Supt. E. A. Browning.

H. A. LORADITCH, Pres't.

STORIES OF THE UNITED STATES SECRET SERVICE

Entertaingly Recalled and Recorded by Mrs. John A. Logan.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 24.—The recent discussion of the United States Secret service is but a small part of the detective and police organization maintained by the government. They are not called police or detectives. Inspector is the more euphonious name applied, but their duties and methods are the same.

No city in the country can boast of as large or active a force, and the government sleuths have the advantage over municipal detectives in that they are never worried about their expense accounts.

The county sheriff is always worried about his fees when hunting a fugitive. If he takes a false scent he pays for the mistake out of his own pocket.

The government emissary is not hampered that way. Uncle Sam is behind him with his strong chest; he demands of his servants ceaseless toil, till his journey ends with the shackles around the quarry, and when that is accomplished he doesn't growl over the expense.

There's a story of the service that a revenue agent wired from a station in the Tennessee mountains that Bent Elverson, a daring moonshiner, "had gone De Functe." Whether the orthography was that of the agent or the operator matters not; Washington looked up the geography, decided that it was in Gaul, and instructed the sender to hold his ground and it would secure French extradition papers.

In 1884 John R. Cason, an agent under Dan McSweeney, chief of the Washington department, joined the Boss Buck gang of counterfeiters, operating about Edensburg, Pa., and remained with them nearly a year before he secured the evidence necessary to convict every one of the band, which was scattered over several countries.

A lieuteraut of the boss was an influential member of the church, and his daughter, who did not dream her pious dad got the money for her gowns by making the "queer," sung in the choir. The agent was a good baritone warbler, and he was soon raising his voice alongside that of Miss Daisy's, and later he became engaged to her. Cason always carried about him a letter purporting to be from his sister, who begged him to give up his wicked ways and become a law-abiding man. This saved his life on one occasion. Three of the counterfeiters ambushed him and demanded the privilege of searching him. They read that letter and concluded he must be all right, which through the law's eyes would mean "all wrong." When Cason and McSweeney finally made their debut in the court with Boss Buck and his clan, the defendants were tremendously aggrieved at the conduct of the recruit, but Miss Daisy, whose papa was there in irons, took it the hardest.

"I never would have though you guilty of such meanness, Sam," she said with tearful eyes, addressing her fiance; "you could sing so beautifully."

A few years ago William J. Reed, postoffice inspector, with headquarters at St. Louis, stalked into the postoffice of an Arkansas hamlet unannounced. It was his first visit to the place, and when he explained who he was the postmaster extended a warm hand.

"Glad to see you," he said. "Been looking for you for some time. Here's the money and thar's the books. Excuse me for a minute while I go out to get a drink."

The inspector suggested it would be better if he would remain while he ran over the books. He did this, figured how many stamps had been ordered, how many on hand, and then estimated how much money there ought to be.

"It's all thar—right in that sack," said the postmaster, nervously.

"Great Scott!" he exclaimed. "Where the blazes did you get all them pennies?"

"Took 'em in. Ain't they good?" asked the postmaster.

There was nothing but pennies, over a quart of them. The inspector began counting, not observing the postmaster edging toward the door. Next minute he heard the door shut and the postmaster was gone. The inspector took out after him and after a half-mile chase caught him.

"What you running for?" demanded the inspector.

"You ain t got no right to arrest me till you count up and find out whether I'm short or not," said the postmaster.

"Are you short?"

The man trembled a bit and then broke down.

"Yes," he said. "I've been borrowing—stealing—money from the government for a year. I got to speculating, and went on deeper and deeper, always thinking I could pay back before you came. At last I saw I couldn't do it, and I got them pennies so as to skip out while you were countin' 'em."

"How much are you behind?".

"Well, sir," said the postmaster miserably, "the first of last month it was $5, but since then I've blowed in another $5. It's fully $10.

The inspector laughed, and yet he knew it was a serious matter, and that the man would have to be reported the same as if he had stolen $1,000. He was removed from office and a small fine imposed.

The National Red Cross is a subject of justifiable pride to all right thinking Americans. It is the institution before all others that shows the progress of civilization, and it is good to live in an age when such an organization is possible. Lately it has taken a new impetus and under young and enthusiastic directors is increasing its field of usefulness, adding to its revenues, and so furthering its power for good. But whatever the Red Cross accomplishes under comparatively new management, it must not be forgotten that Clara Barton was its mother and that through her devotion and faithfulness the American branch of the society was founded and has been maintained.

The exact character of the Red Cross is generally misunderstood. It is looked upon as a local organization, while it is in fact a treaty between many powers, including Great Britian, Germany, France, Belgium, Russia and other governments, numbering some forty in all, which binds its signers to regard all sick and wounded persons in times of war as neutral and to care for each others' disabled and wounded soldiers no matter to what army they may belong. This treaty was the direct work of the Geneva Society of Public Utility, which conceived, developed and formed the famous treaty, but it is to Henry Dunant of that society, who had witnessed the terrible and needless suffering in the battle of Solferino in 1859, to whom the greatest credit belongs. With the memory of that dreadful battlefield ever before him, Mr. Dunant worked with ceaseless zeal for the establishment of an institution that would be considered neutral in time of war and whose agents could work, protected by its own flag, among the sick and dying on the battlefields. The Red Cross was the result and the articles forming it were signed in Geneva in 1864.

Its first practical work was in the war between Germany, Austria and Italy in 1866, and since then it has played a conspicuous part in every war, but it does not confine its work to war times. It reaches suffering humanity everywhere. In 1896, during that terrible riot of blood in Armenia, when thousands of men, women and helpless children were despoiled of everything and wandered about without a roof to cover them, without proper clothing or food even, every other organization had failed through the enmity of the government to reach the scene of distress, but the National Red Cross, protected by its treaty rights, was able to carry succor to the unhappy people. In the Russian famine the American Red Cross was one of the first on the ground to bring and distribute supplies. At the Johnstown flood, the California fire, the earthquake last year, and now in the recent great tragedy it is the Red Cross that is the first on hand with practical help and succor.

HOYES.

Well, here we come again after a prolonged silence, but are very glad that Hoyes was still heard from. The writer of last week wishes to know if we were skating while we were so silent. How could we refrain from participating in such a fascinating sport, and especially at the leap year party when so many of our fairest young ladies were to meet their bachelor friends on the ice. However, the skating is spoiled now and we will try to give a few of the latest happenings of our town.

Messrs. Jeff DeWitt, of Connellsville, Pa., and Able Browning, of Thayerville, spent Saturday evening and Sunday with M. Mattingly and family. Mr. DeWitt returned to his home Monday. He had been called to the bedside of his brother Colonel at Cranesville, W. Va., who is suffering with a very severe attack of pneumonia.

Mrs. Charles Johnson and little daughter Lorene spent last Saturday with Mrs. Ellen Wilburn.

We are glad to see Jacob Knox out walking around again after being confined to the house for nearly four months.

Miss Bertha Custer and brother Arthur had as guests last Sunday Misses Ethel and Freda DeWitt, Pearl Bishoff, Hallie and Grace Friend, and Messrs. Harry Lowdermilk, Arthur Schlossnagle and Charles Callis.

Rev. H. E. Friend and Rev. A. S. Wolfe, who are conducting protracted services at Dodge, came to their homes Saturday to fill their regular appointments Sunday and returned to their work Monday.

Wm. Callis, agent for Hooper Weyman & Co., of Rochester, N. Y., is out hustling this fine weather making numerous sales of fruit trees for them both in Maryland and West Virginia.

Willie Frazee, of Selbysport, made a business trip to Oakland Tuesday, and stopped in Hoyes with W. A. Smith Tuesday night on his return home.

Merlie, the five year old daugther of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Callis, died at their home of membranus croup Wednesday last and was buried in the M. E. cemetery at this place Thursday afternoon.

ROY POWELL GIVES BAIL.

Under $2,000 Bond to Answer Charge of Robbing the Mail.

Roy Powell, of Gormania, W. Va., the postal clerk running between Cumberland and Durbin on the Western Maryland railroad, who was arrested several weeks ago at the postoffice in Cumberland charged with lifting and rifling letters in the mail, was released on $2,000 bail by order of United States Commissioner Thomas J. Anderson. Attorney Walter C. Capper appeared for the prisoner, and it is understood that he has had the case continned over until March by agreement with U. S. District Attorney Rose, of Baltimore. Mr. James A. Grove, of Hagerstown, Md., an uncle of Powell, furnished the required bond.

MOUNTAIN LAKE PARK.

Our people are much worried over the outlook for ice this winter. Our only hope is that the usual March freeze will give us enough, at least, for home consumption.

Rev. Bolton closed the special services at Deer Park last Sunday night and commenced at Bond last night. He expects to commence his meeting here in about two weeks.

"The Invincibles," the name adopted by the young men's class in the M. E. Sunday School, now numbers forty-six, and is probably the largest adult class in the county. The young ladies have determined to have a like organization and now have over twenty members.

A very enjoyable dinner was served by Mr. and Mrs. Sperry yesterday, the guests being Rev and Mrs. Bolton and their two sons, Mrs. Laughlin, of Deer Park, Miss Helms, Miss Anna DeBerry and Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Hayden.

Miss Helms, a deaconess, is visiting at the parsonage. She goes to Morgantown, W. Va., tomorrow to visit a sister for a few days and will then go to her field of work among the Indians of New Mexico.

Mrs. J. A. Hayden expects to leave the Park tomorrow morning to visit relatives and friends at Kingwood and Morgantown, W. Va., and Point Marion and Greensboro, Pa.

Rev. L. A. Rudisill will preach in the M. E. church here Sunday morning at 11.00 o'clock.

BITTINGER.

Weather conditions have been very unusual during the past week. Temperature mild and this week some farmers are plowing.

On last Monday afternoon a party of good people of the Lutheran church cemented the cellar at the parsonage and thereby made the parson's heart glad.

Mr. and Mrs. T. J. Lohr made a business trip to Grantsville last Saturday.

Mrs. Peter G. Stark and son, George, were visiting relatives and friends near Beckman last Sunday.

Rev. Alvin Yugel, of the Lutheran church, organized a congregation at Fort Hill last Sunday and is arranging to build a church at that place in the near future.

C. J. Yoder, of Springs, Pa., was in this section last week selling lime to the farmers.

Clarence Brenneman made a business trip to Oakland this week.

Messrs. Cleaver Brenneman and Leonard Stark took a trip to the lumber regions of West Virginia this week in search of employment.

Martin Rush, of Accident, was in this neighborhood last week buying horses.

Joel Orendorf has been on the sick list for a week past.

GORTNER.

Messrs. Harvey and Frank Gortner spent several days this week with relatives at Frostburg.

J. L. Shettler had a steam heating plant placed in his home last week.

Mrs. J. B. Foreman and children left last Saturday morning for Washington, D. C.

Misses Laola Schlosnagle and Nora Warnsley were calling on relatives at Brookside, W. Va., last Saturday.

Ed. Miller, of Springs, Pa., was a business caller at J. L. Shettler's one day last week.

William Sanders was a pleasant caller at the Mountain View Farm last Saturday night.

WILLIE.

SHORT RUN.

The last week's snow has changed to mud of about the same depth.

I think the farmers were a little hasty in taking possession of their easy chairs for winter as we have had no winter yet.

Our school is still progressing nicely under the skillful management of Miss Emma Harvey.

Misses Nellie Harvey and Scintea Wilson were visiting Mr. C. B. Harvey Sunday.

Mr. G. W. Moon was the guest of Mr. J. H. Wilson Sunday.

Some of the farmers were unloading a car of lime last Monday.

Miss Jane Wilson was calling on Miss Lois Harvey one day last week.

Messrs. Layman Harvey and George Moon, of Kitzmiller, were visiting Mr. Daniel Wilson Saturday and Sunday.

Ray and Delma Harvey are visiting their grandparents at this place.

Miss Delca Wilson spent the latter part of last week visiting friends at Kitzmiller.

Mr. S. E. Wilson is on the sick list at present.

Rev. McCauley preached a very interesting sermon at this place last Sunday.

ASHER GLADE.

The candidates for County Commissioner have commenced early in the year so they will have good time for working the field.

Mr. F. T. Fike traded horses with Mr. Jack Frantz.

Mr. L. K. Fike and A. T. Fike were at church at Fearer, Md. Mr. A. T. Fike is almost 80 years of age and attending church about three miles from home.

Mr. A. M. Chisholm, one of our most successful fox hunters, has killed 11 foxes already this season and W. H. Thomas has bought all of them.

Mr. Norman Sterner, of Markleysburg, Pa., was about the middle of November stricken with paralysis and was then taken with fever and last Tuesday morning, Jan. 19, 1909, died. The funeral was preached on Jan. 21st by Elder Jeremiah Thomas. Interment was made in the M. N. Thomas' cemetery. The deceased is survived by a wife and six children who mourn his loss. We all extend our sympathy to the bereaved ones.

CARTER.

ACCIDENT.

At this writing we are having nice weather and the farmers are plowing and getting ready for spring.

Mr. Fred Hoffman has finished sawing lumber at Spoerline's and is moving his saw mill to Wm. Zinkin's to do some sawing. Mr. Zinkin is getting ready to erect a new barn the coming summer.

Mr. Ed. Diehl is wearing a smile that means it's a girl, the first.

Mr. Leonard Shartzer is going to build an addition to his barn this spring.

Some of the people met at the schoolhouse here on last Saturday evening for the purpose of organizing a Grange, but concluded not to organize for the present.

Quite a number of young people were callers at Gust Garringer's on Friday night last. They report a good time.

Since hearing at the Farmers' Institute a splendid talk on raising alfalfa, some of our farmers are going to try it this coming year.

Mr. H. M. Spiker is at Kingwood, Pa., with a fine horse taken from H. J. Spiker's stock farm.

Mr. Arthur Schlosnagle was a welcome caller at the home of George Bishoff Saturday night.

M. J. Miller's Sons distillery has begun operation again with Jacob Meyers gauger and storekeeper.

Mr. Fred Reicher and John Fresh are cutting out a bill of lumber with which they expect to erect a new roller flour mill at this place the coming summer.

FIRE AT CRANESVILLE.

Destroyed Store of Messrs. Lakin, Offutt & Browning Monday.

The store of Messrs. Lakin, Offutt & Browning, at Cranesville, just over the State line in West Virginia, was entirely consumed by fire of a mysterious origin last Monday morning about five o'clock.

The building was owned by Mr. Dan'l Browning, one of the partners in the business, and was insured for $500. The stock of merchandise was valued at $5000 on which an insurance of $2000 was in force.

SEED CORN FOR SALE—Pure bred Yellow Dent selected seed corn. First prize winner at Maryland State Corn Show at Fifth Regiment Armory, Baltimore, Md., Dec. 3, 1908. Also pure bred Boone Co., white corn, the variety that produced the first prize winner in white corn. Early maturing. A. B. Twining, Forest Hill, Md. 46-8t.pd.

GIVING MEDICINE

When the illness first appears is the easiest and surest way to cure. A supply of simple remedies of recognized merit should be in every household. We carry a full assortment of such remedies. We shall be glad to assist you in selecting those most effective in the early stages of the most common ailments.

OAKLAND PHARMACY
JOS. E. HARNED, Proprietor,
OAKLAND, MD.

ORDER NISI.

In re Estate of Ellen Bradley, deceased.
In the Orphans' Court for Garrett County.

Ordered, this 7th day of January, in the year 1909, by the Orphans' Court for Garrett county, that the sale made and reported in the above cause by William E. Walsh, Executor, be ratified and confirmed, unless cause to the contrary thereof be shown on or before the 9th day of February, 1909; provided, a copy of this order be published in some newspaper published in Garrett county, once a week for three consecutive weeks before the 29th day of January 1909.

The report states the amount of sales to be $550.

E. E. FRIEND,
True Copy, Test: Register of Wills.
E. E. FRIEND, Register of Wills.

The Lonaconing Savings Bank Of Allegany Couuty.

Capital Stock . $20,000
Surplus and Undivided Profits . $60,000
Deposits . . $625,000

3 PER CENT. Interest Paid Upon all Savings Accounts.

GIVE THEM A START

Tne New Year is rapidly approaching. This would be a good time for you to start your young folks on the road to Success.

Early training in the practice of self-denial; instruction as to the use and value of money; opportunities for earning and saving money; all these tend to fix and fasten the children in the ways of thrift and prosperity.

We most gladly assist the young people in getting started.

One Dollar opens an account and entitles the depositor to one of our Savings Banks.

We shall be pleased to have our Garrett County friends call and receive a 1908 Calendar.

DAVID SLOAN, President. R. R. SLOAN, Treasurer.

The First National Bank
FRIENDSVILLE, MD.

Capital, $25,000. Surplus and Undivided Profits, $24,000.

OFFICERS:

L. E. Friend, President. J. W. McCullough, V. P.
R. C. McCandlish, Cashier.

DIRECTORS:

L. E. Friend, Merchant,
J. W. McCullough, Lumber and Coal.
W. W. Savage, Merchant.
D. S. Custer, Merchant.
H. M. Rumbaugh, Farmer.
W. H. H. Friend, Pension Agent and Surveyor.
Horace R. DeWitt, Treasurer of Garrett County, Md.
R. C. McCandlish.

We will issue time or demand certificates of deposit and pay you 4 per cent. interest if your money is left with us.

In all its dealings this Bank combines absolute safety with satisfactory service and never loses sight of either.

SAFETY DEPOSIT BOXES FOR RENT.

A Meritorious Institution

Established as a State Bank in 1888 with a capital of $25,000.00; changed to a National Bank in 1903 and capital increased to $50,000.00; TODAY with a capital and surplus of $85,000.00 and total resources of over $500,000.00 we are

BETTER, BIGGER AND STRONGER

than ever. During the 20 years of our existence, our aim has been to extend to our patrons the best possible service. Our steady growth is evidence that the banking institution, which throws the greatest safeguards around its business in order to protect its depositors merits the confidence of the public. If you are not a customer of this Bank let this be your invitation to become one; our relations will be mutually profitable.

Garrett National Bank

Of Oakland, Maryland.

Mrs. Bennet Conningham, of Pittsburg, is visiting friends at Dodge.

Mr. Sidney C. Shirer, of Grafton, spent Sunday in Oakland with relatives.

Miss Emma Helmas, of Parkersburg, is the guest of Dr. and Mrs. R. B. Ward.

Mrs. Flora Ferguson spent several days recently with relatives at Keyser, West Va.

Miss May Hocking, of Meyersdale, Pa., is here on a visit to her sister, Mrs. W. A. Sturgiss.

Mr. James S. Lakin, of Terra Alta, was in Oakland Monday afternoon for an hour or two on business.

Mr. D. Y. Morris, of Kingwood, is here for an indefinite stay as the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Benj. H. Sincell.

Mr. and Mrs. E. Z. Tower and little son spent Tuesday and yesterday in Cumberland, returning to Oakland last night.

Mr. Wellington Crane, after spending a week with Parkersburg relatives, returned to his home in Oakland Sunday night.

Mr. J. Wilson Humbird, of Cumberland, spent Sunday in Oakland where he was the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Will Offutt.

Mrs. Alderson White, of Loch Lynn, is spending this week with her mother, Mrs. Mary Browning, at her home on Oak street.

Miss Ignatius White has recovered sufficiently from her recent illness to resume her duties as teacher of the public school at Bayard.

Miss Corinne Manges left Oakland last Friday night for a visit of two or three weeks to friends in Washington and relatives at York, Pa.

Messrs. Ed. Shaffer and John R. Murphy were in Clarksburg last Friday attending a meeting of the Telegraphers' Union held there that evening.

Dr. Henry McComas was called to the home of Mr. Noah Pysell last Sunday afternoon to visit Mr. Pysell, who has been extremely ill for some time.

Eleanor, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Townshend, is quite ill at the home of her parents on Water street suffering with an attack of pneumonia.

Wm. Whorton and Young Lohr returned to their respective homes in Oakland Friday night, after several days absence seeking employment in the East.

Mr. John King and Miss Lepha Werner, of Eglon, were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Louis Bush, going from here to Grafton where they attended the funeral of Dr. J. P. Miller.

Miss Marion Hoyes was taken ill very suddenly on last Sunday morning and for a day or two she suffered a lapse of memory of things which occurred prior to her illness. She is somewhat better today.

Mrs. Lizzie Crim-Murphy arrived in Oakland the latter part of last week from Philadelphia, Pa., accompanied by her brother, being called here by a message announcing the serious illness of her nephew, Willie Menhorn.

Mrs. Leah Sincell, who has been spending the past two or three months with her sons and daughters in Cumberland and Keyser, is in Oakland on a short visit. She was accompanied here by Mrs. John T. Sincell, of Keyser.

Mr. Scott T. Jones has disposed of his Maxwell automobile, which he purchased last year and in its stead will operate a 1909 model of the same make the coming year. He expects the new machine to arrive here some time during the early spring.

Col. A. G. Sturgiss, who was unable to attend to business recently owing to a recurrence of an attack of rheumatism with which he has suffered for a year or more, was out for the first time Monday afternoon. His appearance on the street gave his many friends a pleasurable surprise.

Sarah Riddle, aged about sixty years, of Accident, was placed in jail in Oakland Monday on a commitment issued by Justice Kahl, of Accident. The woman is of unsound mind and is being held here prior to being committed to some institution where she will be cared for by the State.

The funeral of Mrs. Ellen Hughes, of Hutton, whose death was noted in these columns last week, was conducted on last Friday morning from St. Peter's church where a requiem mass was said by her pastor, after which the interment was made in the Catholic cemetery here. The funeral was very largely attended by friends and relatives of the deceased lady.

Special Prices on Sleighs and Sleds.

A. D. Naylor has a few sleds and sleighs left over upon which he will give a special low price to close out. Easy terms.

CAPITAL 50,0 0.00 — THE — SURPLUS AND PROFITS $20,000.00

First National Bank

OAKLAND, MD.

GOVERNMENT DEPOSITORY.

One of the Largest and Best Equipped Banking Houses in Maryland.

Vaults absolutely Fire and Burglar proof.

Safety Deposit Boxes for Rent

Pays 3 Per Cent. on Time Deposits—Compounded Semi-Annually

Every courtesy extended consistent with sound banking.

Home Savings Banks Free. $1.00 will start an account.

The Depositor with a Dollar account receives the same consideration as the largest depositor. COME IN AND GET ACQUAINTED

BERGMAN WAS BATTED

Also Battered Sunday Afternoon for An Insulting Remark.

John Bergman, the tailor, who has figured to some extent before the public during the the past few months as a result of his habits of drink, was pretty badly bruised last Sunday afternoon by a young man hailing from Crellin.

From what can be learned of the affair Bergman was under the influence of liquor and when the man from Crellin appeared with considerable mud on his clothing as a result of his ride across country, the tailor attempted to brush it off, resulting in spreading the sticky substance over the cloth. The wearer of the clothing did not like the manner of the tailor and told him so when Bergman made an insulting remark. In less time than it takes to tell it the man of the goose had measured his length on the ground with a badly cut and rapidly coloring optic. That was the end of the chapter. Bergman won't insult that individual again.

THE PARSON AS A POET.

A Local Minister Tries His Hand and Makes Good.

On a recent Sunday morning Rev. Nicola de Stephano, the Italian missionary of this District of the M. E. church, came to Oakland and from here intended going to a point near Hutton for the purpose of preaching to his fellow countrymen. No trains running on Sunday to that point he was compelled to use other means of conveyance and hence hired a horse from a local liveryman. Rev. J. B. Workman, of the M. E. church, who was an eye-witness to what followed after the little Italian preacher mounted his steed, tells of the occurrence in the following manner:

It was a quiet Sabbath Day,
The autumn breezes swept the land;
And "Nick's" appointment lay
Up where they manufacture sand.

No train from Oakland could be had,
So Nick went out to get a steed;
The hostler said, "My little lad,
I'll give you Ned"—so 'twas agreed.

The preacher, Workman, led him down,
While Nick would finish his attire;
The steed was large, a Chestnut brown,
With eyes that glowed like fire.

They lifted Nick with easy grace.
Who landed safe astride.
But scarcely had he reached his place,
Until his eyes were opened wide.

Old Ned wheeled round
With lightning quickness, too;
Nick's derby rolled upon the ground
While toward the stable Neddy flew.

With clinging grasp to bridle rein,
And vice-like grip of knee,
Nick went as on the fastest train;
His plight was pitiful to see.

His eyes bulged out in wild surprise,
His coat tails flaunted high;
He seemed almost to touch the skies,
And one would think he tried to fly.

Old "Ned" plunged straight into the barn
While Nick held on with deathly grip;
He looked around and said forlorn,
"I makey quickey trip,"

* * * * * *

The heroes of the saddlebags,
Some think, perhaps, have passed away;
But one at least behind still lags,
His name I'm told is Nichola.

Local Teachers' Institute.

A local teachers' institute will be held in the High School building in Oakland on Saturday, January 30th, when the following program will be rendered: Address of welcome, W. E. Bishoff; response, A. W. DeWitt; A Lesson in Primary Reading, Miss Jennie Miller; A Lesson in Primary Numbers, Miss Olive DeWitt; The Uses of the Globe, Prof. U. G. Palmer; Orthography, Miss Jessie Conneway; Mental Arithmetic, Miss Anna DeBerry; tardiness, Miss Cora Weimer; Factoring in Algebra, A. W. DeWitt; Question Box, conducted by Misses Zaidee Browning and Lizzie Leary; A Lesson in Geography, Miss Dunham; Examinations and Reviews, Miss Marion Leary.

The program will be interspersed with music, etc., rendered by the pupils of the Oakland school.

H. A. LORADITCH, Pres't.

The editor of this paper on his way home from Baltimore Tuesday night spent an hour or two very pleasantly with Mr. A. W. Clary in the Y. M. C. A. rooms of the Terminal Station, Washington, D. C., where Mr. Clary holds the position of assistant secretary. The rooms of the Association are on a much more extensive scale than one would imagine. Floor space approximating 15,000 square feet containing bed rooms, locker rooms for members, baths, office, billiard room, parlor, reading rooms and a gymnasium has been set aside by the railway officials and is being utilized by the members of the association who are made to feel at home with all the comforts found in hotels catering to railway men Beds are provided the members at the nominal charge of 10 cents and there are several hundred of them in use daily. Friend Clary is pleased with his new position and is very attentive to his duties.

The Republican for Job Work.

A TOUGH PROPOSITION

From West Virginia Struck Oakland Last Friday and Was Landed in Jail.

Last Friday morning a crowd of five young men from the vicinity of Kingwood, West Va., arrived in Oakland and proceeded to indulge in that which does not cheer but inebriates and imbues the partaker with the idea than he is a Solomon, whereas the fact remains he is nothing more nor less than an ordinary fool so long as the "likker" is getting in its work among his brain (?) cells.

These five festive young bloods paraded the streets and attracted more attention by their swaggering walk and devil may care actions than a cage of monkeys at a country circus. They kept within the bounds of the statutes, however, until nearly time for the train to carry them back to their native hills, when two of the number, Peter Fizer and John Kelley, who gave their home addresses as Albrightsville, on the winding banks of the Cheat River, broke loose at the railroad station and made the air assume an azure tint with their swearing and obscene language.

Policeman Browning happened to be at the station at the time and after repeated warnings to the men to cease their unseemly language but without avail, placed them under arrest. He turned Kelley over to Deputy Sheriff Brown and was taking Fizer along Railroad street on the way to jail when the prisoner put up a terrific struggle for his liberty. Before the man was gotten into a wagon which had been pressed into service by the officer, eight men were kept pretty busy handling the tough proposition from the West Virginia hills. He kicked, scratched, fought and bit; cussed, cajoled, prayed and finally the "likker" and men overcame him and he was safely landed in Castle Brown where he sweetly rested along with his partner, Kelley, until the next morning when the pair were fined an amount approximating $20 for their few minutes' recreation with the officers of the law.

DEATH RECORD.

MRS. SUSSANNAH WARD.

Mrs. Sussannah Ward, sister of Messrs. G. A. and S. E. Shirer, died at the home of the former in Oakland yesterday morning at 10:15 o'clock after an illness of a few days, aged more than sixty-nine years. The deceased lady was stricken with paralysis Friday afternoon last and suffered a second stroke Sunday night. From the first she was entirely helpless and death came as a pleasant relief. She was born November 24, 1839; was married twice, first to James Smouse in January, 1868, who died a few years later. Her second marriage took place in March, 1875, when she was wedded to James W. Ward. Mr. Ward died in April, 1906, after which Mrs. Ward returned to her old home in Oakland where she continued to reside until her death. She was a member of St. Mark's Ev. Lutheran church and was highly esteemed by her pastor and fellow church members. Her funeral will take place tomorrow afternoon as two o'clock from her late home.

Church Services.

ST. MARK'S LUTHERAN.

Services next Sabbath as follows: Sunday school at 9.30 a. m.
Preaching 10.30 a. m., and 7.30 p. m.
Luther League every Wednesday at 7.30 p. m.
Everybody welcome.

E. MANGES, Pastor.

ST. PAUL'S M. E.

Services next Sunday as follows: Preaching 10.30 a. m.; Sunday school at 2.15 p. m.; preaching at 7.30 p. m.
Junior League Wednesday 4.15 p. m.
Everybody cordially invited to attend these services.

J. B. WORKMAN, Pastor.

BAPTIST.

Services next Sunday as follows:
Ferndale—Preaching at 11 a. m.
Loch Lynn—Preaching at 3 p. m.
Deer Park—Preaching at 7.30 p. m.
Everybody invited to be present.

C. W. HUDSON, Pastor.

$25 Reward.

I will give twenty-five dollars reward to any person for the arrest and conviction of the party or parties who on the night of Jan. 16, 1909, unlocked and entered my corn-crib, and took out and carried away several bushels of corn.

LLOYD K. FIKE,
Fike, Md.

Shot His Wife.

The town of Fellowsville in Preston county, W. Va., was stirred up to just wrath by the act of Wesley Runner, who shot and seriously wounded his wife with a revolver, while in a state of rage over some trivial matter. Runner had, in company with Mrs. Runner, been attending services at the church, and the shooting occurred shortly after they had returned from worship. Several months ago they had domestic troubles and it is assumed that the shooting last evening grew out of a repetition of the family differences. Runner was arrested at once and taken to jail at Kingwood to await the outcome of the injury to his wife.

Take me out to the Gold Mine.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER

Absolutely Pure

The Only Baking Powder made from Royal Grape Cream of Tartar

—Made from Grapes—

A Guarantee of Pure, Healthful, Delicious Food

REAL ESTATE DEALS

Properties Exchanged and Purchased in Oakland and Near Deer Park.

Deeds have been admitted to record in the Clerk's office in Oakland whereby Mr. A. D. Naylor, of Oakland, transfers his Crook Crest property to Mrs. E. Fundenberg, of near Deer Park, and the latter transfers to Mr. Naylor her farm of more than four hundred acres. Both properties are very valuable. Mrs. Fundenberg expects to occupy her lately acquired home home here at an early date.

Another deed recorded is that in which the heirs of the late Benj. Ison transferred to Mr. Naylor the brick residence property located near the old court house which was Dr. Ison's home up to the time of his death. Mr. Naylor will move into his property shortly.

Coal! Coal!

The undersigned have leased the Diehl Coal Mine and are now prepared to furnish the best quality of coal at the mines north of Oakland at $1.00 per ton at the mine. Money must accompany order.

UPTON CUPPETT.
46-3t ROY WINTERS.

Livery Removed.

Messrs. Maroney Bros., the Quality Hill liverymen, have removed from their old location to the Helbig barn which was recently vacated by Mr J. A. Kelly. The equipment of the Maroney Bros. stable compares very favorably with that of other liverymen and they aim to please their patrons.

CASTORIA

For Infants and Children.

The Kind You Have Always Bought

Bears the Signature of Chas. H. Fletcher

List of Letters.

Mrs. Julia Artist, Miss Nellie Callis (3), Mrs. J. McComlille, Mrs. Edith Gobsom, Albert Harner, Mrs. Leota Hixon, Sylvester McCrobie, Miss Margaret Merrick, Miss Alice Weiver.

ARTHUR TOWNSHEND

Happy New Year

BARGAINS

TO BEGIN WITH.

FOR THE NEXT

Thirty Days

we will in order to

CLOSE OUT

GIVE YOU BARGAINS IN

Ladies Outing

AND

Flannel Skirts,

Flannels & Winter Goods

MEN'S AND BOYS'

OVERCOATS, CAPS and Heavy Coats.

ARTHUR TOWNSHEND

Mortgagee's Sale

OF VALUABLE

Real Estate

Near Loch Lynn Heights, Garrett County, Md.

Under and by virtue of the power of sale contained in a mortgage from George P. White and Rachael R. White, his wife, and Benjamin F. Crane and Civilla C. Crane, his wife, to J. Gilbert Selby, bearing date the 5th day of September, 1901, and duly recorded in Liber E. Z. E. No. 41, folio 91, etc., one of the Mortgage Records of Garrett county, Maryland, default having occurred under the covenants contained in said mortgage, the undersigned attorney named in said mortgage hereby gives notice that on

SATURDAY,

30th Day of January, 1909,

at the hour of eleven o'clock a. m., in front of the First National Bank Building, in the town of Oakland, Maryland, he will offer at public sale to the highest bidder all that part of

MILITARY LOT NO. 947,

situate, lying and being in Garrett County, Maryland, containing

SIX ACRES AND 75 PERCHES

of land, and fully described by courses and distances in a deed for the same to the said George P. White and Benjamin F. Crane, from Annie J. Phoebus, dated the 8th day of August, 1898, and duly recorded in Liber E. Z. E., No. 34, folio 526, etc., one of the Land Records of Garrett county, Maryland.

This Property is improved by an Ice Pond and Ice House and contains several eligible Building Sites.

TERMS OF SALE—As prescribed by said mortgage, cash on the day of sale.

EDWARD H. SINCELL,
Attorney for Mortgagee named in said Mortgage.

Notice to Creditors.

This is to give notice, That the subscriber, of Garrett county, hath obtained from the Orphan's Court of Garrett county, in Maryland, letters of Administration on the personal estate of

CIVILLA C. CRANE,

late of Garrett county, deceased. All persons having claims against the deceased are hereby warned to exhibit the same, with the vouchers thereof legally authenticated to the subscriber, on or before the 14th day of July, next; they may otherwise by law be excluded from all benefit of said estate. All persons knowing themselves indebted to said estate are requested to make immediate payment.

Given under my hand this 12th day of January, 1909.

B. F. CRANE,
Administrator.
Mt. Lake Park, Md.

Commissioners' Meeting.

OFFICE OF THE COUNTY COMMISSIONERS FOR GARRETT CO., OAKLAND, MD., Jan. 14, 1909.

The County Commissioners for Garrett county will meet at their office in Oakland on

Tuesday, Feb. 2nd, 1909,

to hear appeals and make transfers.

By order of the Board.
A. G. ROSS, Clerk.

THE BALTIMORE NEWS

Daily and Sunday

¶ A live, independent newspaper, published every afternoon in the year.

¶ Covers thoroughly the news events of the city, State and country.

¶ A newspaper for the home—for the family circle.

¶ Enjoys the confidence and respect of its readers.

¶ One cent everywhere.

Subscriptions by Mail:

DAILY.

One month	$ .25
Three months	.75
Six months	1.50
One year	3.00

SUNDAY.

Six months	.25
12 months	.50

The Baltimore News

BALTIMORE, MD.

A Burglar in Bed

By Robert Carlton Brown.

(Copyright, by Daily Story Pub. Co.)

"Beefsteak and onions," I ordered, as I slipped onto a high stool in the all-night lunch-room and continued reading my paper.

"Up or over?" demanded a surly voice from a dim corner. Something in the voice seemed familiar. I glanced up.

"As I live! Not Bloke Brady!" was my astonished cry.

"No, Susan B. Anthony! Who'd you think I was, you fool?"

"But—but," I stammered, "what on earth is a respectable second-story, old-line porch-climber like you serving hairless hash in this here beanery for?"

"Me bein' in dis sea-goin' lunch wagon ain't exactly in my line," he says. "But I've cut it all out. I'm good now. Why, if that there cockroach had a diamond in his mouth an' was running' fer that there corner this present minnit I wouldn't reach out my foot to stop him an' pinch de spark."

"But who converted you? Don't tell me with a tear in your eye that it was a revival, or your old mother."

"Not on your life," he gurgled deep. "I aint good at lyin', an' nothin' like that could stop me. But, here, we're alone; step back in th' vivisectin' parlor an' I'll tell you all about it. How'd you say you'd have your raw? Up or over?"

"Over, Bloke," I told him, as I made my way around the counter and accompanied him to the little smelly kitchen.

"You see, it was just like dis," he began, as I selected a soft part of the stove to sit on. "I was up against it right. Didn't have no lays spotted nor nothin', an' I needed th' coin. Well, I starts out one night, with my kittie in me pocket, lookin' fer trouble. It was a dark night; blacker'n that skillet. All of a sudden I comes up against a nice lookin' house, without a light. I stands off an' surveys it. Then I looks around quick, sees everything is safe, an' makes a quick sasshay for th' back porch. There was a nice trellis, just waitin' fer me, an' I'm on th' back roof in a minnit. Of course th' window was open. They never locks them in th' bath-room. So I sails in.

An' Pulls th' Covers Over Me Head.

"Well, th' first room I struck happens ter be empty. I picks up a few souvenirs an' begins ter feel quite gay. Den I hikes fer th' next room. Th' door was open an' soon as I gets in I hears breathin' an' knows I'm in a lady's budwar. That don't stop me none. I takes a peek at her an' finds she's sleepin' O. K., an' den I waltzes t'rough th' dresser. Wasn't much there; an' I was just beginnin' to investigate a side door when I hears th' lady turn over in bed. My hand bein' on th' knob gives a slight twitch an' th' latch flies back.

"She starts up in bed, an' quick as a wink I ducks t'rough to th' udder room. No sooner am I dere den I sees I'm up against it. Dere ain't no other door out but th' one I come in. I hikes for th' window, but there ain't no porch roof, it bein' on th' side, an' th' jump's too high.

"By dis time she's out of bed an' I hears her sneakin' for th' door between us. All of a sudden I seen a bed. There ain't nobody in it, but it's all mussed up as though somebody should be there. I was kinder scared, so I makes a high dive without thinkin' an' lands on th' bed an' pulls th' covers over me head.

"No sooner'n I done that I makes out th' light of a candle enterin' th' room, an' I begins sayin' what prayers I know frontwards an' backwards, at th' same time.

"A voice pipes up out of th' dark an' I feels th' lady sit down on th' edge of th' bed. Th' voice is hers, an' it says: 'My! My! Still delirious, I must tell th' doctor in th' morning. Poor man! Poor man! He'll catch his death of cold jumpin' up an' runnin' about th' house like this, at all hours.'

"Th' voice was soothin', an' I t'inks she must be a nurse, as I seen a striped dress in th' room she was in.

"Well, she sits there fer a few minutes, an' den she reaches under th' bed-clothes an' pulls out one of me hands. I didn't resist. She felt th' pulse an' then she says: 'Ah,' his fever's worse, too. We'll have to strap him to the bed so he can't get up an' roam around th' house, or he'll never recover.'

"My heart was beatin' some, an' that accounted for my pulse bein' so high.

"She next smooths down me pillow, an' then she tries to pull th' covers away from my head. But that weren't no use. I hung on' an' finally she gives it up, takes th' candle an' goes back ter bed.

"Whew-w-w! It was some relief. Just like expectin' ten years, an' gettin' only two. I breathed steady again an' started a little laugh at how easy it all was.

"Th' laugh died in infancy, fer just then I heard a wabbly step down th' hall, an' I knew th' sick man was returnin'.

"Believe me, I did some tall thinkin' in them few seconds, an' some tall movin', too. Jerkin' off th' sheets, I tied one around th' bedbost an' th' end of that to th' other. Then, just as th' steps was comin' through th' nurse's room I heard her jump up an' say: 'What! Out of bed again, so soon. Dear, dear, what shall I do with him?' I t'rows up th' window an' dives out, shinnin' me way down de sides with th' help of them sheets tied together.

"I'd made good me get-away, an' I was chucklin' ter meself when I drops to th' ground. I sneaks 'round to th' front of th' house, still laughin', an' starts to hike up th' front walk, when th' moon comes out from under a cloud an' I catches a glisten on th' side of th' front door.

"Well, me heart just done a double flipflop an' landed wrong side up on th' tip of me tongue. There, bo, right there, tacked on the house, was this sign."

Brady paused in frying the steak, and, moistening a stubby pencil, looked at me with awful eyes and printed the following sign on the kitchen table:

: SMALLPOX. :

"H—!" I cried, starting up from my seat on the stove.

"Yes, that's what it was, all right," he agreed. "An' there I'd been rollin' about in that there smallpox patient's bed fer ten minutes."

"Why am I workin' in dis here beanery?" he goes on, kind o' sad-like. "Say, bo, de game's too excitin'. De wages is all right, but de risks is gettin' ter be somethin' fierce. It's a blame sight safer to be fryin' sausages. No, I didn't get th' smallpox; but I got th' most life-sized scare that ever come to me, an' I think it'll stay by me fer awhile. There's your steak, bo; yes, 15 cents, that's right. It ain't much money, but it's pretty safe, an' there's others that ain't."

ONE HANDBAG, TWO MEN.

And Two Vacations That Overlapped —The Answer Found to Be Easy.

"So many seemingly impossible things there are that are really easily possible," said Mr. Slimmintower, "if you only know how and you are disposed to take a cheerful view.

"Now, for instance, you might not naturally think that one traveling bag would do for two men, friends though they might be, if they both wanted to use it at the same time. You'd think that one or the other would simply have to take the bag and the other do without it, wouldn't you? Why, certainly. But now see how in such circumstances two young men managed so that each had the bag.

"These two young men, living together and not yet grown rich, had, however, so far progressed in their accumulations that they had acquired this one handbag between them. They expected to go on their vacation together, and what did they want of more than one bag? It would do easily for both. And then came the bombshell.

"When the vacation schedules in the two places where the two worked had been made up the young men, each to have two weeks, found that one of them would have to start a week ahead of the other. And that was a bombshell to throw into the camp! How about the bag? Which one of them should have the bag? But in two minutes the bombshell dwindled into a hand grenade and then into a firecracker and then to nothing at all.

"'Why, Tim,' said Jim, who was going to start first. 'I'll take the bag and when I get there I'll just empty it and send it back to you by express.'

"And that's what Jim did; and so when Tim started out on his vacation he had the bag. And then when Tim got there he emptied the bag, and at the end of the week, which was the end of his two weeks, Jim took the bag again and brought it home with him and emptied it again and once more sent it to Tim. And so, though they were both away at the same time they had but one bag between them, yet each had a bag all to himself."

The Well of St. Plegmund.

A service was held at the quaint church in Plemstall, near Chester, England, for the dedication of the well of St. Plegmund, friend and tutor of Alfred the Great. The spring is remarkable for the fact that its water has been used in baptisms at Plemstall church for fully 11 centuries. The archdeacon of Chester, who conducted the service, reminded the congregation that while living there as a hermit Plegmund acquired such a reputation for learning that King Alfred in 890 appointed him archbishop of Canterbury.

Gossip of Washington

What Is Going On at the National Capital.

Sets New Record for Cabinet Members

WASHINGTON.—When Theodore Roosevelt retires from the presidential office, on March 4 next, he will have made a record for numerous cabinet appointments. The last cabinet meeting he presides over will be composed almost solely of comparatively new men. There will be but one man, Secretary Wilson, who attended the first cabinet meeting that Roosevelt held in the autumn of 1901. There will be only one other, Secretary of the Treasury Cortelyou, who was at the cabinet table in March, 1905, when Mr. Roosevelt entered upon his present term.

In the seven and a half years of his tenure, Mr. Roosevelt will have had 29 different cabinet officers, but not as many different men, for Mr. Root has served under him first as secretary of war and then as secretary of state. Mr. Cortelyou has had three cabinet positions under Roosevelt—commerce and labor, post office and treasury. Attorney General Bonaparte first came into the cabinet as secretary of the navy.

No other president has made so many changes. There have been six secretaries of the navy since Mr. Roosevelt entered the White House—Long, Morton, Moody, Bonaparte, Metcalf and Newberry; and five postmasters general—Smith, Payne, Wynne Cortelyou and Meyer. There have been two secretaries of state—Hay and Root. The recent announcement that Secretary Root is to resign as soon as he is elected to the senate from New York and that Assistant Secretary of State Robert Bacon of New York and Boston will succeed him assures three secretaries of state during President Roosevelt's time. Mr. Roosevelt has also had three secretaries of the treasury, three secretaries of war, three attorneys general, three secretaries of commerce and two secretaries of the interior.

Grover Cleveland, the only other president since Grant's time who has served two terms, had but 23 cabinet officers. They were in two administrations, separated by a four-year period. In each of his administrations most of the men who came into office with him remained at his cabinet table till the close of the four years for which the president had been elected. But one of the changes in Mr. Roosevelt's cabinets has been on account of death, and that was in the state department.

When Mr. Bacon becomes secretary of state three of the nine members of the last Roosevelt cabinet will be men who were favorites at tennis and have been counted as members of the tennis cabinet.

To Embark Again on Matrimonial Sea

ANOTHER interesting Washington romance is disclosed in the announcement of the engagement of Preston Gibson, millionaire clubman, athlete, author and playwright, to Miss Grace McMillan Jarvis, a niece of Lady Harrington and one of last season's most attractive and charming debutantes.

The engagement was announced by Miss Jarvis' grandmother, Mrs. James McMillan, wife of the late senator from Michigan, who was one of the wealthiest men in the Wolverine state.

Mr. Gibson is a son of the late Senator Randall Lee Gibson of Louisiana and a nephew of Associate Justice Edward D. White of the United States supreme court. He is also closely related to Mrs. William F. Draper, whose husband was former ambassador to Italy, both of whom are now prominent in Washington society.

This is Mr. Gibson's second venture on the sea of matrimony. In 1900 he married Miss Minna Field, daughter of Henry Field of Chicago and niece of Marshall Field, the merchant dry goods prince. Their wedding eight years ago was the result of a romance dating from their meeting in school, but the marriage turned out unhappily and two years ago Gibson and his first wife were divorced. Shortly afterward she married Algernon Burnaby, a member of the British "smart set," and they are living in Licestershire.

After his divorce Preston Gibson took up his residence permanently in Washington and at once became popular in the set which comprises some of the best known beaux and belles of the capital. Besides being a well-known author of Kentucky stories, Gibson has dramatic talents, and took a prominent part in social theatricals. But it was as an athlete and lover of open air sports that Miss Jarvis came to know him, and their love of athletics soon ripened into the romance which was announced recently.

The debut of Miss Jarvis last winter was regarded as one of the smartest events of the season.

Amusing Stories on Tariff Revisers

A GOOD deal of amusement was created at the hearing of the committee on ways and means the other day, when a newspaper article was brought to the attention of the committee, stating that "the ways and means committee, which is now engaged in the task of framing a bill to protect American industries, had purchased toweling bearing the mark, "Made in Great Britain." The clipping was passed along to the committeemen, and finally one of them sent this word down to a member of the press.

"When the session is over turn up the chair upon which you are sitting and read the mark." This was done, and it was revealed that the chair was "Made in Vienna."

Further inquiry disclosed that the gypsum upon the walls of the committee room was imported from Canada, that the carpets on the floor came from Brussels, and that the woodwork of the imposing "throne" upon which the committeemen sit at hearings, was brought over from Italy.

"In fact," said a Democrat, "the only article of domestic production around the committee room these days is the hot air supplied by the witnesses who appear before us."

All of this recalled to Democratic members of the committee a ludicrous incident that occurred during the consideration of the Dingley bill in the house, 11 years ago. Nelson W. Dingley of Maine was in charge of the tariff measure at that time. He was speaking to the theme, "We should encourage American industries."

Mr. Dingley was followed on the floor by Jerry Simpson of Kansas, whose nimble wit and comic stories are a part of the traditions of the house. Mr. Dingley wore a high hat, and invariably brought it into the house with him, laying it on the chair adjoining the one he occupied.

"The gentleman should practice what he preaches," shouted Mr. Simpson, moving toward the unsuspecting Mr. Dingley. Picking up Mr. Dingley's headgear, Simpson continued: "I find a label in the gentleman's hat, reading thus: 'Made in London.'"

Katherine Elkins to Become a Nurse

THE end of the romance of Katherine Elkins and the duke of the Abruzzi is to be like the final chapter of an old-fashioned novel, in which the heroine flees with her memories to convent walls and the hero betakes himself and his wounded heart to the wilderness of the world to seek forgetfulness.

The authoritative announcement that there would be no marriage between Miss Elkins and the Italian prince and cousin of a king was hardly cold when the cable brought from Rome the report that the duke was planning to be off to the unexplored mountain fastnesses of India.

Subsequent dispatches have confirmed that report, and ever since Washington has been wondering what the young woman would do, it being assumed that her affections had been as deeply wounded as her royal suitor's by the breaking of the engagement.

It is now learned that Miss Elkins' attitude toward society for the next six months at least, and perhaps longer, will be more serious than was anticipated.

Arrangements have been made by Miss Elkins to begin the serious work of study in the homeopathic general hospital in Washington.

The course which Miss Elkins will have to follow, under the rules of hospital training, will include attendance at all lectures, clinics and operations. She will have to spend a certain number of hours each day in various wards observing the treatment of patients and fitting herself to take temperatures, dress wounds, apply bandages and do all which a nurse must perform for the sick.

A MODERN-DAY VICTORY.

"Finished!"

As the Man came into the room it was quite evident that the great crisis through which he had been struggling for so long with unequal success had passed. His end had been attained.

His wife, noble woman that she was, regarded him with that joy and pride that comes from the knowledge of the immense difficulties that sometimes rear themselves in front of the man pursuing an almost helpless quest.

"You don't mean to say," she asked, "that you have been successful?"

"Absolutely! My task is over; the midnight vigils past."

She smiled brightly up at him as she took his hand, in her face the full consciousness of his wonderful powers of concentration—how for days he had gone without his meals, how his supreme self-control had ever held the mastery of him.

"In three days?" she asked, vaguely, as if it could not be.

"In three days!"

Then she arose and clasped him in her arms.

"And to think, dear," she cried, rapturously, "that not a single person in this hotel has ever before been able to do that picture puzzle in less than a week."—Life.

Proved.

"Ah, but how can I be sure," she said, with a far-away look, "that you really love me?"

"Darling," he replied, "I am willing to do anything to prove it. Stay, I am, as you know, the head of the great publishing firm of Printem & Sellum."

"Yes. But what has that to do with our love?"

"You have written some real poetry. To show you that I love you beyond reason I am willing to publish it in book form for you."

Then she gladly ceased to doubt.—Chicago Record-Herald.

Leap Year.

John Hancock Smith—Martha, I—I'd like to ask you somethin', but I's don't know just in what words or form to put the question.

Martha Washington Jones (vivaciously)—Don't get discouraged! We'll go straight home and I'll get the grammar and the dictionary!—Judge.

HOW ABOUT THE DIAMONDS?

Manager—Hurry up or you'll miss the train.

Actress—I can't find my diamonds nor my pocketbook.

Manager—Let 'em go.

Actress—But my pocketbook had nearly seven dollars in it.

Can't Be Done.

You can't cure hams with a hammer,
Nor open a clam with a clamor;
Pick plums off a plumber,
Do sums with a summer,
Nor shear an old ram with a rammer.
—Chicago Daily News.

Teacher's Orders.

"Here, ma!" requested the boy hurrying in from school before time; "hang my jacket up behind the stove."

"Is it wet?"

"No; but teacher sent me home to tell you to warm my jacket for me."—Judge.

A Good Reason.

"Pa's a great admirer of the secret-ballot system."

"Why?"

"Because it affords him a great chance to say afterward that he voted for all the winners."—Detroit Free Press.

True to Life.

Photographer (to father)—To have the picture more natural, you better have your son put his hand on your shoulder.

Father—It would be more lifelike if he put his hand in my pocket.—Judge.

Ability.

"He doesn't seem to know much law."

"He doesn't need to. I never knew a lawyer who could beat him weeping before a jury."—Chicago Record-Herald.

He Led the Class.

Teacher—When the war broke out, all the able-bodied men who could leave their work joined the army. Who can tell what motives took them to the front?

Bright Boy—Locomotives.—Judge.

Unanimous Decision.

Mamma—Marion, I am surprised that you should suffer a man to kiss you!

Marion—But, mamma, it wasn't suffering.—Chicago Record-Herald.

Probably.

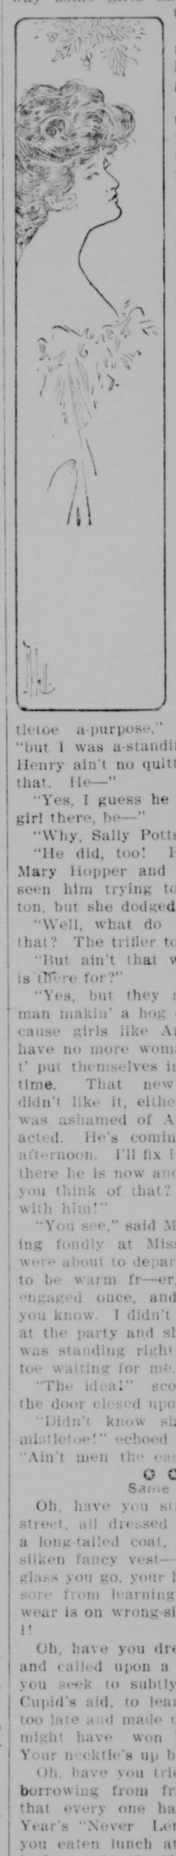
"Papa, why do brides wear long veils?"

"To conceal their satisfaction, I presume, my son."

VISITS WITH UNCLE BY

Under the Mistletoe.

"Ain't it awful," said Mame, "the way some girls hang around under the mistletoe?"



"Perfectly terrible," agreed Sally, shifting her gum.

"Did you see the way Amy Briggs acted at the party last night?"

"Scandalous!"

"One would think she had never been kissed before."

"I don't believe she ever had," echoed Sally.

"Just as soon as that Mr. Morehouse was announced, she moved her chair right over by the chandelier and when she got up to be introduced to him, she had to stand under the mistletoe and—"

"Wasn't that good? He never kissed her a' tall!"

"And when Henry came in, she was right in the way. Of course I wouldn't go under that mistletoe a-purpose," explained Mame, "but I was a-standin' right there and Henry ain't no quitter on a game like that. He—"

"Yes, I guess he kissed most every girl there, he—"

"Why, Sally Potts, he did NOT!"

